Mr. MASON. If this were an original question as to the plan to be adopted for these water-works and the appropriation to be made for them, I do not know that I should sanction so large an operation as the plan which has been agreed upon, but I do not feel that the Government can now change the policy which it entered upon some two years ago in reference to this subject, without incurring a wasteful expenditure. I understand the history of the subject to be this: some two years ago Congress appropriated $5,000 to enable the President to have the necessary surveys made, and to ascertain from what point and at what cost an abundant supply of water could be secured to the city. The President employed certain officers of the engineer corps to make the examinations. Those examinations were made. The reports were made to the President. He submitted them to Congress. They were upon various scales, proposing to bring water from various points. One, I think proposed to bring it from the stream which divides this city from Georgetown—Rock Creek; another from the Potomac, at the Little Falls; and a third from the Potomac at the Great Falls. The expenditure necessary to do it would be proportionate in each case. Congress referred the subject back to the President of the United States with the reports, and left it at his discretion to adopt that plan which he should think most advisable and best, and appropriated $100,000 to commence the work. The President exercising the discretion vested in him, adopted the plan to bring the water from the Great Falls upon the statement which was laid before him, and which had been before Congress. He has expended the $100,000 to commence the work; and now it is proposed to cut this off. I readily agree with gentlemen in saying that it seems a very large sum of money to be appropriated in aid of the city of Washington, which honorable Senators say ought to take care of itself, or at least contribute something towards it; but, sir, the city of Washington, we know very well, stands in a peculiar relation to the other large cities of the country. It was planned and laid out, not by the people of Washington, but by the Government of the United States, and most extensively planned and laid out for a city. The streets were made very large and wide. There are large Government reservations which cannot be filled up. The jurisdiction of the city extends over these streets and reservations, and their expenditures, therefore, are very largely increased, not by their own act, but by the act of the Government. The Government property is exempt from taxation; and it owns not only the ground on which its buildings are erected, but a large amount reserved. In that condition of things the apparent jurisdiction of Washington extends over a large space over which they have no jurisdiction in fact. It thus results that their taxation is inordinately increased in proportion to the amount of property; and I think there is a great deal due to the city of Washington as a consideration. But there is another thing to be considered. Public men are brought here from all parts of the Union, and are now required to stay here nine or ten months in each alternate year in the discharge of their duties. Now, we know that nothing is so necessary for comfort and health as an abundant supply of cold water; and I submit to honorable Senators, who are dispersed all over the city, whether, in their respective quarters, they have that abundant supply? I, for one, in my experience, live in a part of the city where the supply is much diminished; and I know another thing. I know that there are nuisances in this city necessarily existing, which are confined to the surface because, if they were sunk below the surface, the water which we drink would be polluted. As long as we are in that condition, the health of the city cannot be preserved. It is perfectly idle to propose to divide the expense. The city of Washington, with its present large debt—and it is large in proportion to its means—cannot supply one third or one fourth of the amount of money necessary to bring the water in. I shall not detain the Senate; but really it seems to me, whether Senators considered it prudent or imprudent at the commencement to sanction the thing, as we have already entered upon it, and expended $105,000, it would be bad economy now to stop it.

Mr. BUTLER. I have heretofore objected to this appropriation, thinking that primarily the city of Washington, having a much greater interest in it, ought to have moved in the matter; and it does seem to me very strange that a city of its magnitude, with its resources, and with so many inducements as those which have been depicted here, should be so indifferent to its own interests as to be a metropolitan dependent on the public Treasury. Sir, I have every sympathy for the people here, but they ought to set an example; and if we embark in this undertaking, and pay money out of the public Treasury, what interest will they have to take care of it? None at all. The repairs must be bestowed from our funds; and, therefore, I say—and I am going very far when I say so—I am perfectly willing to vote with the honorable Senator from Louisiana to incorporate into this appropriation what will operate as a security upon the city authorities, that they will have some interest, and will exercise some degree of diligence in relation to the matter. They ought to have originated it, and not, like dependents, ask the public Treasury for everything. There are clever men, men of talent, men of enterprise here, whose property is interested, and, if my friend from Virginia will allow me to say so, if the people of the city can put up with nuisances without moving to put them aside until we wash them out with water from the Potomac, I do not think they come forward with very good grace to Congress for the appropriation. I am willing, however, to vote for the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. HAMLIN. I feel disposed to vote for the appropriation, but I want to add to it the amendment offered by the Senator from Louisiana, that this city and Georgetown shall contribute a portion of the fund. Whether the amount proposed by the amendment of the Senator as the proportion which they should contribute, is more or less than would be right and equitable, I am not prepared to say. But, sir, there is one other limitation to which I invite the attention of the Senate. If I understand the reports in this case, they provide that the main aqueduct is to be nine feet in diameter. The Croton works have an aqueduct of but seven feet in diameter, and it supplies a population of more than half a million, perhaps three quarters of a million—a population probably greater than ever can inhabit this city. If I understand it, it is now proposed to build an aqueduct here nine feet in diameter, which would compare with one of seven feet as forty-nine to eighty-one—almost twice as large—and the expenditure would be very nearly double, in consequence of the increase in the size. The volume of water, the head which it would have, and the force which it would exercise upon the aqueduct, would necessarily require one of very great strength to resist the power of the water in it. I apprehend that the expenditure, in that portion of the work, for an aqueduct nine feet in diameter would be at least double that for one of seven feet; and when we reflect that so large a city as New York is supplied, and amply supplied, by an aqueduct of only seven feet, I think we shall only do justice if we restrict and limit this aqueduct to the same dimensions. I therefore offer a proviso to that effect, which I hope my friend from Louisiana will accept as a part of the one which he has already offered.

Mr. SLIDELL. I have here another amendment of a similar character to the one which I have offered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Chair understand the Senator from Louisiana to modify his amendment according to the suggestion of the Senator from Maine?

Mr. SLIDELL. I am about to offer a substitute for that amendment. The one which I have offered was drawn up very hastily by me since I came into the Senate to-day. One has since been put into my hand. It is more artistically and carefully drawn, but on the same principle. I will offer it as a substitute for the amendment. It is suggested to me, however, that it would be better to have the sense of the Senate taken separately upon the proposition which is suggested by my friend from Maine. I therefore offer the following as a substitute for the amendment of the committee:

"For continuing the work of bringing water into the city of Washington, on the plan adopted by the President of the United States, in pursuance of the act of Congress of the 3d of March, 1853, $500,000: Provided, That no part of the sum hereby appropriated shall be expended until the corporations of Washington and Georgetown, or either of them, shall appropriate and pay an amount equal to one third of the said sum for the said purpose; and full power and authority are hereby given to the said corporations respectively to raise by loan, or otherwise, any sum of money that may be necessary to enable them, or either of them, to make the appropriation herein required; and said corporations of Washington and Georgetown, and the inhabitants of said cities respectively, or the corporation making the appropriation, and the inhabitants of said city, shall be authorized to use the surplus water which may be brought by the Washington aqueduct, after supplying the Government establishments in Washington, under such general rules and regulations as may hereafter be provided by Congress; and each of said corporations shall have the right to charge and to collect on the inhabitants of the said city such reasonable tax or rents for the use of the water as will provide for the regular payment of the interest, and gradual payment of the principal, of any money which may be raised under the authority hereby given.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on the substitute offered by the Senator from Louisiana, for the amendment of the committee.

Mr. HUNTER. I shall agree entirely with the substitute, if, instead of one-third, the Senator will insert one-fourth, as the sum to be assessed on the city. I believe if we should insert one fourth instead of one third, the two cities would cooperate cheerfully and heartily; we should have the amendment carried through the other House, and we should be able to secure water, which is certainly a great necessity in this city. I do not think when we appropriate money to bring water into the city that we are appropriating it merely for the use of the city. I think the Government is deeply interested in it. We, who are brought here annually for the purpose of legislating for the country, are interested in having a supply of pure and wholesome water—a plentiful supply for the uses of all who are in the city. We are interested, too, on account of the public buildings; and for that reason I look with more favor upon an appropriation of this character, in which, it seems to me, we are more eminently interested, than upon any others for the city. All the people of the Union, who are interested in this Government, are interested in providing it with the necessary means and facilities to conduct its operations with comfort to the members of the two Houses. I would, therefore, if it is in order, in order to test the sense of the Senate, move to strike out "one third," and insert "one fourth;" and then I will go for the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana with all my heart.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will suggest to the Senator from Virginia, that that will not be in order. The proposition pending is an amendment to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. HUNTER. Then there is no way in which we can test the sense of the Senate on my proposition.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No, sir.

Mr. BADGER. The Senate can vote down this proposition, and then the Senator from Virginia can renew it with the modification he suggests.

Mr. PRATT. The Senator's object can be obtained by voting down this, or, if this is adopted it can be amended.

Mr. HUNTER. I cannot offer an amendment to it after it has been agreed to. In order to get at my object, then, I shall have to vote against the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana, with the view of offering it again with "one fourth" instead of "one third."

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. I trust the Senator from Virginia will make up his mind to sustain the very wholesome amendment offered by the Senator from Louisiana, (for the difference between one third and one fourth is not so great,) and especially when I had made up my mind to go for the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana, and when it would appear to be more proper that each of the cities should give one third, and the Government only one third. I believe the population of this city is about fifty thousand, and I apprehend the Government employees, from the President down, would not number two thousand. But I wish to call attention to the fact that $2,319,000 have been appropriated for buildings in this city since 1850.

Mr. HUNTER. If we could get a general vote of the Senate for the proposition putting one third of the expense on the cities, I should prefer it as an amendment to the original proposition; for I want something that we can carry; but I believe one-fourth would be about the right thing, and I believe the cities would go into that cheerfully. I hope, therefore, the Senator from Iowa will agree to making it one fourth, and then we will go together.

Mr. PEARCE. I hope the Senate will not adopt the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana. I will ask what is the object of the liberality of this Government in the supply of a city like this with an abundance of pure and wholesome water? Every one knows that a great deficiency of water exists here, and that what we have is generally bad. All nations, I think, have expended more judiciously the money which they have laid out for a supply of water, perhaps, than that which they have expended for anything else. I cannot conceive of the reasons which will justify such a proposition as that of the Senator from Louisiana. We want to supply water in the public buildings for our own accommodation, and not for the accommodation of the city of Washington. Sir, we are not making this magnificent extension of the Capitol for the benefit of the city of Washington. It is for our own accommodation, and for the honor of the country. This great nation would be disgraced by having buildings mean, and not corresponding to its greatness and power; and so it is with all the public buildings. Almost all the expenditures which the Senator from Iowa has alluded to, are not made for the benefit of Washington at all, but for the credit of the Government, and the accommodation of the public officers. It seems strange that the city of Washington should be asked to take this burden upon itself. The supply of water is needed for the Government, for the protection and security of the public buildings, and the accommodation of the officers of the Government who are here. But it is very manifest that if you appropriate the whole sum for the erection of this aqueduct and the construction of the reservoir which may be necessary, there must still be a large expenditure entailed upon the city of Washington, which they must bear themselves altogether. The Senate know how widely extended the city is; how much more ground it occupies than almost any city in the world, which has no greater population. It occupies more ground than the city of Boston. That is a compact city, and the laying down of the pipes and necessary fixtures for taking the water into the houses of that city cost $1,800,000. Now, can anybody suppose that the city of Washington could be watered for less? Surely not. And all that expenditure will be required of the city of Washington, even after the aqueduct has been constructed. That will be a very heavy expense, and it will be for the benefit of everybody who resides here to get pure water.

Why, then, should not the Government, which requires this supply of water for the use of its public buildings and their safety, construct the aqueduct itself, and leave it to the city to supply the means of distributing the water? It would be a work worthy of the Government then; and it would be disgraced by calling upon the poor city of Washington to bear a part of the expenses of the aqueduct. This is not a wealthy city; it is not inhabited by capitalists; there is no trade to build up large fortunes. It is the creation of the Federal Government; it has its existence dependent upon the Federal Government; and if the Federal Government were to withdraw from it, it would languish. Those who live here are compelled, from the nature of things, to change their residences very frequently. The greater portion of those who are citizens of Washington are poor people, living from hand to mouth; and when you consider the immense expenditures of the city, I hardly think it is consistent with liberality, in carrying on our great public works, to insist upon saddling on them any portion of the expenses of the aqueduct and reservoir. I hope the Senate will not agree to such a proposition at all; or if it is disposed to put any of the expenditure upon the city, then that it will at all events take the more reasonable proposition of the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. SLIDELL. It has been suggested to me that the amendment, in the form in which I offered it, simply imposes the obligation upon the city of Washington to contribute two thirds of the actual appropriation made by this bill. I have, therefore, modified my amendment by inserting in the proper place the words, "and agree to pay in like manner the same proportion in all future appropriations."

Mr. COOPER. There is a good deal of justice in the remarks of the honorable Senator from Maryland; but, notwithstanding, I think that the amendment proposed by the Senator from Louisiana ought to be adopted. I admit that the United States ought to do all that is necessary in the way of appropriations for all purposes connected with the public business and public wants of the Government in this city. But the citizens ought to do something for themselves, and I think it would be better for them that they should know that they were compelled to rely upon their own resources. Now, as the Government is contributing thus largely to the comfort, and security, and health of the city, it is not at all unreasonable that the city should be asked to aid, as far as the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana proposes, in this great work intended for its own convenience, as well as for that of the Government. Appropriations are asked for by the city from year to year, and very exorbitant appropriations have been made, to such an extent that the people of the District begin to rely entirely upon Congress, and complain if Congress does not appropriate all the money which is necessary for their local purposes. Now, sir, while Congress ought to do all that is necessary for its own credit, for the erection of buildings consistent with its extent of territory, and its own greatness and power, it is no reason why the citizens, as the citizens of all other portions of the country do, should not contribute at least a proportion of the money necessary to beautify, adorn, and render convenient this great city of the nation.

Mr. RUSK. I shall vote against the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana. I do not think it would be a matter of economy, so far as this expenditure is concerned. It would be a sort of indefinite partnership between the Government and the city of Washington; and I think the end of it would be that the principal expenditure would fall upon the Government, and perhaps the difficulties that would grow out of this not very well defined partnership would belager. I think the expense ought at once to fall upon the Government. This city has none of the means that other cities have for the purpose of raising money to make these improvements. It is not a manufacturing town; it is the seat of Government; and a large portion of its citizens are those who are employed by the Government to do the duties of the different offices belonging to it; and as it is important to the health and comfort of the city, and to that of the employees of the Government, who number thousands, and as it is a matter of necessity for the protection of the public property, I think we should at once go to the expense of erecting the water-works, and I shall therefore vote against the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. JOHNSON. I am inclined, for my part, to support something like the amendment offered by the Senator from Louisiana; but there is one point which, it seems to me, has escaped attention. The matter is treated in the course of debate very much as a matter of favor entirely to the city. It is, however, by a good many admitted that the Government has a very deep interest in the erection of these water-works, not only for the facilities which it would give to the transaction of public business, but also for the security which it will afford to the public records. It is treated by gentlemen as if this were a favor entirely to the city; but I call upon gentlemen of the Senate to reflect for one moment upon the immense amount of public property owned within this city by the Government, not one particle of which is taxed to defray any portion of the expenses of the city—not one particle of which is subject to taxation. This I understand to be the case. All the public buildings here are relieved from taxation; all the public lands that are within the limits of the city, in the shape of lots, are also exempt from any description of taxation, and the value of these amount to millions of dollars. Cast up that item, if you please, in your mind, and look back through the great number of years during which all this property has been here, and during which the city has gone on in the discharge of its duty in all other respects, and yet has not received into the Treasury one cent of revenue from taxation on this public property. Suppose that the proportion which each individual pays, and has paid all the time, in the shape of taxation upon the property which he owns, were taken as the ratio, and applied to the public property—suppose you were to estimate what this Government would have paid if it had had to contribute the same proportion of taxation that the individual citizen has already paid; and then suppose you were to compare that with the sum now asked to be appropriated for a purpose not exclusively for the city, but also for the benefit, the protection, and the security of the public property here, and for further facilities in the transaction of the public business, what case would that present you with? Sir, I do not look upon the matter entirely and exclusively as one that we are doing for the city, or as a matter that we have a right to draw ourselves back from entirely, in consequence of the fact that the city has some interest in it. I cannot but think that the Government, which has so very large a portion of its public property here, property of such a very great value exempt entirely from taxation, should take one of two courses—either contribute something towards its protection, its security, and its facilities, or else subject the public property to its share of taxation; so that that tax might go in aid of these necessary objects. This Capitol alone has cost millions of dollars; the President's House has cost immense amounts—how much I cannot say, for I have never seen an estimate made upon this point. Then there are your State, your Treasury, your War, your Navy, your Interior, and your Patent Office buildings. You have vast numbers of buildings all through the city. You have large amounts of landed property, and none of it pays anything at all in the shape of taxation into the city treasury. I imagine that it would be falling short of the mark to say that within the limits of this city there are $20,000,000 worth of public property.

Then, sir, these twenty millions pay no tax whatever to contribute anything towards embellishing or improving the city, or towards throwing around it those guards and that protection which, unquestionably, every city is compelled to maintain.

Now, my honorable friend from Iowa, [Mr. DODGE,] for whose judgment I always have the highest regard, and in whose integrity I have the most implicit confidence, as well as whose generosity I am always prepared to expect, and know I shall find, a full and fair amount, alludes to the sum which, since 1850, has been expended by the Government within the limits of this city. There have been expended $2,500,000 or $3,000,000. As he asserts it, I have no doubt of the correctness of the statement. But how have they been expended. Were they expended in this city for the benefit of the city? If I should ask him myself, he would readily reply, no, that it was not expended for the benefit of the city, but for the erection of public buildings, and other matters in this city that were material, and absolutely necessary for the transaction of the public business, and the protection of the public property. If, on the contrary, we were to charge each of these expenditures as an obligation conferred on the city, why, then, this city is under a load of obligation which no one has seemed heretofore to estimate, because the very same declaration and extent of obligation must exist towards each individual citizen within the city who has ever expended a dollar on his own account.

I cannot help but look at it, then, that the expenditures made in this city, and for the interest of the public, are matters that carry with them no obligation upon the city itself, although it may be an incidental benefit to the city in that it gives employment to a population which has come here, and consequently yields the amount of business done by those transacting business in the limits of the city. If the Government being here is a benefit to the city, and the city is therefore under obligation to the Government for the amount of money which may be expended by the Government in its buildings, then every individual in the city, who builds a house or performs the slightest act that leads to an expenditure of money, becomes a public benefactor; and an obligation exists on the part of the city towards him; and you therefore announce an amount of obligation that renders the whole argument an absurdity to me. It seems to me that is clear beyond all contradiction.

The simple question then would be, what is the equitable proportion for the city to pay? And if you desire to arrive at strict equity, go back and estimate from the beginning the amount of money which you should have paid, if you had paid taxation on your property in the proportion that each citizen has done. What would it have accumulated to, if you had paid the same tax, through all the time that has passed, upon the Government property? Would it be $500,000? I imagine, sir, it would be very far above the whole appropriation that is now proposed. Still I am inclined to support the view and principle adopted in the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana, with a slight exception. I should prefer the proposition suggested by the chairman of the Finance Committee, to make the amount contributed by the city one fourth instead of one third; and therefore I shall vote against the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana, in anticipation of the Senator from Virginia offering the proposition in its modified form.

Mr. MALLORY. The amendment of the Committee on Finance is based upon the presumption that the entire work will cost $2,500,000, and that it will take five years to complete it. The discussion thus far seems to assume the necessity of the work, and no dispute exists as to whether it shall be completed or not; but the dispute simply is as to the proportion which the city of Washington shall bear in its completion, or whether it shall bear any portion of it at all. The proposition of the Senator from Louisiana is, that that proportion shall be one third of the whole amount, which would be $833,333, distributed through five years; or, in other words, the city of Washington, by that proposition, would be called upon to contribute $166,666 per annum. As a general proposition relative to Government improvements here, the Government has always been bound, and always will be bound to make its public improvements which are connected with the administration of its own affairs. The providing of water here is of a mixed character, however, and is much more wanted by the city, with its large population, than by those connected with the Government; and no good reason can be given why the city should not bear part of the expense. As a general rule, it is better for the healthful administration of justice here; it is better in every point of view, that the city itself should always be made to bear a fair proportion of the public expenditures of this mixed character.

What is the effect of every public expenditure here? It is to increase the value of all the city property. There is no city in the Union whose city property has gone on increasing with such rapidity as in the city of Washington. It is the result alone of the public improvements here. If you examine the city rents, and the value of the real estate through the course of five years, you will find that it is the immediate result of these improvements. Will not that go on increasing by the adoption of this improvement? Has there ever been any public work here which has caused a greater influence over the value of private property and taxable property than such a provision as this will cause? Certainly not.

Then, on looking at this thing, we ought to calculate its effect upon private property. Its effect upon the Government itself is comparatively trifling, in comparison with the increasing value of the private property of the city. The city ought to bear a portion of the expenses, and I have no doubt that if the common sense of the community could be taken to-day, that common sense would dictate that they should—and they really would—shoulder a portion of the burden for an improvement of this immense character. The difference between one quarter and one third the entire expenditure of $2,500,000 will be $208,000 to the city; and that, distributed through five years, will be a very small proportion. I shall, therefore, in the first place, vote for the proposition of the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I think there are some considerations which have been overlooked in the discussion of this matter, and to which I wish to call the attention of the Senate. We ought, Mr. President, in examining the question as to the obligation and duty of the General Government towards this city—to look back a little to the history of its origin. It is well known that when the General Government was formed, it was thought expedient that the seat of Government should not be in any State—that the Government of the United States should build up this city for its seat of government; and consequently this District, ten miles square, was chosen, and the site selected where there then existed, I believe, not a single dwelling. The Government was established here, and persons were drawn around it whose sole occupation is in ministering to and supplying the wants of those engaged in the administration of the Government. The city, as has been well said by one of the Senators who has already spoken on the subject, was laid out on a scale not adapted to the wants of the small population included in its limits, but upon a scale commensurate with the anticipation of the future greatness of the country. We have, therefore, in this city wide avenues, large public squares, numerous points where no buildings can be found, which are mere ornaments to the city, and triangular spaces at the intersection of almost every avenue with every street in the city.

Over these wide spaces, the corporation of Washington is obliged to spend its care, and keep the city in order, by paving and lighting, and guarding, by all the expenses incident to a municipal corporation. Of what classes is the population of the city composed? It is not composed of commercial classes any further than you can call commercial classes the shopkeepers who keep shops to supply the wants of the officers of the Government and the members of Congress. It is not a manufacturing city. It derives no profit from agriculture. It is not a great market for any product whatever. The population of Washington, irrespective of the public officers, is then composed almost exclusively of those engaged in supplying the wants of the public officers and members of Congress, and a few inhabitants of fortune who choose it as a place of agreeable residence.

It is perfectly obvious that, under these circumstances, any expensive scheme for bringing water into the city, anything that will involve a large expenditure, is utterly beyond the means of the inhabitants. It is, however, said that, although the Government has established this city, and requires an aqueduct for the supply of water for its own purposes, and for the public offices, yet the corporation ought to contribute a part to the expense, because the people who live here will require a portion of this water for their own comfort, health, and convenience. But, in reply to that, it has been well stated by the Senator from Maryland, [Mr. PEABODY], that the corporation of this city, from the very circumstances of the case, will be compelled to contribute towards the work for supplying the city with water, and the expenditure which he has calculated as that which has been incurred in the city of Boston, will be something like $1,800,000. He thinks this enormous amount will be required, because the plan on which the city has been laid out has been such as to scatter the population over a much larger space than would otherwise be required for that population. Here, then, the city is taxed for the convenience of the General Government with a very large sum of money, in addition to what it would have been subjected to, if it had not been laid out on such a scale and for such a purpose.

But this is the consideration to which I wish to draw the attention of the Senate: Washington is supported by the expenditures of the General Government and of the officers of the General Government. Take them away, and to-morrow there will be no city here. Now, sir, if the General Government imposes upon the corporation one third or one fourth of the prime cost of these water-works, and levies a tax upon the citizens of Washington to make up that sum, where will the burden of that tax fall? I wish you to consider that. If the landed proprietors, if those who own real estate about Washington are subjected to an additional tax for a purpose of this kind, everybody knows, that, according to all the rules of political economy, they will seek to increase the rent of their property to enable them to bear the increased burden. From whom will that increased rental come? It will come from members of Congress who hire houses; it will come from your secretaries, your clerks, the officers of your Army and Navy, who are obliged to remain in Washington in the discharge of their official duties; or, in other words, the result of making the corporation of Washington pay this contribution, will be, in the end, to tax the already inadequate salaries of the public officers of this Government. We, therefore, by doing that shall throw the burden off the Treasury of the United States, to which the contribution is made by the whole people of the United States; we should throw the burden off that Government which it was originally intended, under the Constitution, should build and sustain a city here, and throw the proportion of it which we now endeavor to put upon the citizens of Washington, in point of fact, upon the members of Congress who meet here for the time being, and the public officers who reside in the city.

I see no justice or propriety in this. I think it will result in nothing. It appears to me that the large works required by the Government ought to be built at the Government expense; and when we consider, as I have already said, that after this heavy sum for the construction of the aqueduct shall have been expended, that then a further heavy sum will be required of the corporation of Washington far beyond their means at present, for distributing the water, we shall find that, although the Government should consent to pay the whole cost of this improvement now, yet that some six, or eight, or ten years would elapse before the city would be supplied with water in all its parts; because even then the corporation will not have the means of extending the pipes all over the city. Let us leave them, therefore, their resources for that purpose. It is equally essential with the construction of the main aqueduct. Then we shall, in some reasonable time, construct an aqueduct to supply the city with water—to supply the public buildings as well as the citizens themselves. I shall, therefore, vote against the amendment of my colleague.

Mr. CASS. I shall vote against the proposition of the Senator from Louisiana, for the reasons given by the Senator from Virginia—believing that the amount which the Senator from Virginia proposes will be sufficient to assess on the city. I shall still further vote for the amendment of the Senator from Maine, reducing the aqueduct from nine to seven feet in diameter, which I consider sufficient for this city, or any city. That, I understand the Senator from Maine, in his estimate, would reduce the expense nearly one half; and, therefore, bring it down to a sum within the reach of the corporation, and would make it not an extravagant sum for the Government, considering the great object to be obtained.

Mr. WELLER called for the yeas and nays on Mr. SIDELL's substitute; and they were ordered; and, being taken, resulted—yeas 20, nays 30; as follows.

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Atchison, Butler, Cooper, Dodge of Iowa, Fitzpatrick, Gillette, Hamlin, James, Jones of Iowa, Mallory, Sebastian, Sidell, Thompson of Kentucky, Thomson of New Jersey, Toombs, Toucey, Wade, Walker and Weller—20.

NAYS—Messrs. Allen, Badger, Bayard, Bell, Benjamin, Bright, Brodhead, Cass, Clay, Clayton, Dawson, Dodge of Wisconsin, Douglas, Fessenden, Fish, Foot, Geyer, Gwin, Houston, Hunter, Johnson, Jones of Tennessee, Mason, Peabody, Pettit, Pratt, Rockwell, Rusk, Shields, and Stuart—30.

So it was rejected.

Mr. HUNTER. I now renew the amendment which has just been rejected, but substituting "one fourth" instead of "one third."

Mr. CASS called for the yeas and nays; and they were ordered.

Mr. BENJAMIN. Is the question divisible? I wish to have a separate vote on the proviso reducing the size of the aqueduct to seven feet diameter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that that is not now part of the amendment.

Mr. BRIGHT. I voted in committee to put this amendment on the bill as it is, that is, to make the water free, and I can find reasons full and ample to justify that course. I am willing, however, to vote for the amendment now offered by the honorable Senator from Virginia, provided it is likely to insure the passage of the appropriation in the other House. Nevertheless, I look upon it as unnecessary, for I have no doubt that, if we should divide the tax in this way, the Government paying three fourths, and the citizens one fourth, the first Congress which meet after the water-works are in operation would release to the citizens the amount paid by them, and our officers would have to undergo the trouble and expense of making the calculations, and refunding the money. I apprehend there is not a Senator here now who doubts that. The effect, therefore, will be, that we shall enter into this partnership, we shall require the citizens here to advance one fourth the expense, and the first Congress which meets after the water-works are built and in operation, will refund the money. Though I know this will be the effect, I shall vote for the amendment to the amendment now, if the Senator insists upon it.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. President, I shall vote, if I vote at all, in favor of this amendment, on the same ground on which the Senator from Indiana announces, that he will act. I not only think it unnecessary to put this tax on the citizens, but I regard it as unjust. This aqueduct, worthy of the capital of this great nation, was commenced by the Government proprio motu, not at the instance, or pressure, or demand of the citizens of Washington. It was for our benefit; it was for the benefit of the Government; and now, after we have started the work and expended over $100,000 upon it, we ask the citizens here to pay one fourth. I think it would be very unjust; but I suppose that the motive of the honorable mover of this proposition is to secure the passage of the original amendment in the other House, and on that ground, like the Senator from Indiana, I shall acquiesce in it.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I voted for the amendment proposed by the Senator from Louisiana, [Mr. SIDELL], requiring the citizens of this city and of Georgetown, to pay one third the expenses of this work, not that they were interested to the amount of one third, but that the whole thing is for their benefit. The Government has no interest whatever in it. It is for the District of Columbia, disguise it as you will, that you are taxing your constituents millions upon millions. It is for the convenience of the citizens of the District of Columbia. When it is proposed to reduce the amount which they shall contribute to one fourth, I will not vote for that excuse, for it is nothing else.

Sir, Senators upon different sides of the House say that the work has commenced, and we must, therefore, complete it. Why, sir, have you not heard that song upon every extravagant appropriation which has been asked of Congress? They first come forward, and, as an entering wedge, ask for a very small appropriation. In this instance five thousand dollars was asked for a survey. The very moment five thousand dollars or one thousand dollars, or one dollar is obtained, the work is commenced, and the cry is raised, "We must go on with it." Every Senator who has spoken on the subject admits that the plan now adopted is extravagant and unnecessary; and yet it is said because we have commenced it we must continue. That, sir, has been the song of every extravagant appropriation which has been asked from Congress from the foundation of the Government down to the present time, and I have lost patience with it.

There is but one mode by which it can be stopped; and that is, whenever it is ascertained, to the satisfaction of Congress, that appropriations which have been made are being extravagantly used, to stop the work at once, however important it may be. I would stop it if it were within one hundred dollars of completion, if I found that those interested—for I say that, in my judgment, the Government is not interested in this case—were unnecessarily expending the money.

I shall vote against the amendment to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Virginia. If this Government desire to appropriate this money for the purpose of water-works in this District, let it be as water was intended to be—free of charge. Tax your constituents openly for the convenience of the District of Columbia, and learn the people of the District that they are not to rely on themselves for all the improvements necessary, because the Federal Government may happen to have some property here, and therefore none of their internal police is to cost them anything.

They are not to be content, as your constituents or mine would be with good pump wells on every square in the city furnished to their hand; but your constituents and mine must be taxed millions of dollars for the convenience of the District of Columbia. This is the effect of it. I shall vote against the amendment.

Mr. BRODHEAD. It seems to me, sir, that my friend from Virginia, and other Senators, are yielding the question a little too soon. A majority of the Senate is decidedly in favor of the appropriation reported from the Committee on Finance, of $500,000, to continue this work, to give water free. Although I voted against the commencement of the work originally, I am for proceeding with it for the reasons indicated by the Senator from Michigan. I do not like this idea of a partnership. I do not think it proper for this great Government to enter into a partnership with any city or town corporation. If we are going to give the citizens here water, let us do it upon a pretty large and magnificent scale. In making large buildings in the city of Washington, we gratify a reasonable and just pride of the American people; and I am in favor of it, as we can do it constitutionally, and at the same time get rid of some money in the Treasury, which is lying idle, and which some gentlemen seem to be so anxious to dispose of. I am, therefore, opposed to this amendment of the Senator from Virginia, and hope that we shall not yield the original proposition, unless we find that the House of Representatives are inflexible. For my part, I wish to give them another chance.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. President, I think my honorable friend from Delaware [Mr. CLAYTON] labors under somewhat of a mistake, when he says that this work was commenced without any application from the citizens of the cities of the District. I am not quite sure that they ever presented any formal application to Congress, though I think they did, for the appropriation to introduce water into the District. I am sure, however, that there are very few Senators on this floor who have not been frequently beset within the last three or four years, to exert their influence in order to bring about this very thing.

Sir, I voted for the amendment proposed by the Senator from Louisiana, and I shall vote for the amendment now proposed by the Senator from Virginia. I apprehend none of the difficulties about corporations and partnerships which my worthy friend and colleague [Mr. BRODHEAD] sees in this amendment. There is no such thing as a partnership designed or created by the amendment. It merely proposes that, for the construction of this work, the cities of Washington and Georgetown shall appropriate one fourth part of the expense necessary.

Now, sir, I think it would be better that these people should know that they must rely, to some extent, on their own resources, and not look to the Federal Government for everything. I cannot agree that it was ever designed by those who located the Government at this place, that it was to be built up into a national city, in contradistinction to an ordinary municipal city. It was to be the seat of Government; but it was not to change in that respect the relations of those dwelling in it to the municipality. They were to live upon their labor as the people of other cities. As was remarked this morning by the Senator from Iowa, there are hundreds of cities and towns that would be willing to take the incidental advantages derived from the establishment of the seat of Government in their midst without asking for everything at the hands of the Federal Government, in addition to those incidental advantages, which are very large.

My worthy friend, the distinguished Senator from Louisiana, [Mr. BENJAMIN], seems to apprehend that, if we impose this burden upon the cities of the District, it will come back upon us. I cannot agree with him. I admit that those who come here, either temporarily as visitors, or to remain here in the discharge of their official duties, will have to pay heavily and largely, but I think that already the people here measure the means of members of Congress and every body else pretty well, and they come up just to the standard that they can pay. It will not, therefore, increase the expenses at all. I think that the Government of the United States is going beyond its appropriate sphere when it undertakes to do everything of a police and municipal kind for the inhabitants of any particular city. There is no reason for it. There is no right in it, whatever plausible arguments may be made about it.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. Mr. President, I am quite sure that this appropriation is to pass, and I presume without any amendment of any sort or kind; but I wish to call the attention of the Senate to some of the future difficulties and expenses that will attend it. First, I wish to inquire of the honorable Senator from Maryland whether the Great Falls of the Potomac are not in the neighboring State of Maryland, some ten or fifteen miles from this city?

Mr. PRATT. Yes, sir.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. If I remember aright, when the first appropriation of $5,000 was made, it attracted no attention whatever. That was the entering wedge of this large expenditure. It commenced just precisely as that internal improvement system which fell under General Jackson's veto; first commenced upon every harbor, and every river, and every lake shore in the United States. First, the parties would make interest with the topographical bureau to get a survey; or they would come to Congress and ask for an appropriation of so small an amount as not to attract attention, and get the topographical corps to make a survey. Upon that, a claim would be based for appropriations of thousands, and perhaps millions of dollars. So, in this case, the original appropriation of $5,000, for the purpose of a survey, attracted no attention, and created no debate; but when it was proposed to appropriate $100,000, I think the yeas and nays were called; it passed in a very great hurry, and under the same pressure by which we are now surrounded. No consideration was given to it. The millions which it was to involve were not thought of; and because that appropriation was made, we are now asked to continue the work.

But the object of my rising at this time was to make this statement. I learn, not from an inspection of the petitions, but from a Senator on this floor, that already the citizens of Maryland are petitioning Congress for damages which have inured to their property, because of the construction of this work, so far as it has proceeded. One of them was laid upon our table this morning, and I now hold it in my hand. The Senator from Indiana, [Mr. BRIGHT], who is an advocate and supporter of this appropriation, knows that, upon Pennsylvania avenue, between this and Georgetown, for the grading of which we have made a large appropriation, there is a very considerable number of applicants urgently pressing him and other Senators for payment for damages which have been done their property, because of the grading upon the avenue. I believe the petitions have been referred to my friend from Indiana, as a member of the Committee on the District of Columbia. He is cognizant of the fact that, in the opinion of the Attorney General, large claims are justly due against this Government on account of the damages done to the property by the grading of Pennsylvania avenue between this and Georgetown. If this be the fact, I undertake to say we shall have claims ad infinitum, from Georgetown to the Great Falls, for damages done by this work.

Again, I understand that the people along the route raise a question of constitutional power, and deny the right of the Legislature of Maryland to pass the act which they did pass, allowing us to tap the Potomac at the Great Falls. They assert that nothing but a convention of the people could confer power on the Legislature to enable them to pass such an act.

But whether this be so or not, Mr. President, this is the entering wedge of an amount of expenditure which will fall but little short of that which has attended the establishment of the magnificent water-works in New York city. Here we are told that, because of the property of the Government, we should not contribute a portion, but pay the entire expense of the water-works, as we have paid for the grading of the avenues, for construction of the city hall, for court-houses, and everything else in this city. And why? Because, forsooth, we own the Capitol and the buildings for the Departments. Do we not own custom-houses and a vast amount of other property in New York and Philadelphia free from taxation, and yet have we heard of any claim from those cities or anywhere else for large appropriations because our property is located there? No, sir; they thank us for placing it there. Philadelphia fights New York whenever it is proposed to give her such a boon as a Mint. But neither of them comes here to ask us to contribute towards the erection of water-works for their cities.

But, Mr. President, if that argument be good, I ask you what can you say when we come here and demand an appropriation for harbors, not for speculation, but for refuge, which have been partially completed, upon those great inland seas, where the lives of our people are exposed to the tempests and waves? What will many of the peculiar friends of this appropriation say then? Many, perhaps, go for this because of its proximity to the Old Dominion, and the advantages which will inure from it to this section of the country. They tell us that we have the constitutional power to go on with this vast expenditure of money; but they will fight to the death an appropriation, though the work may be half done, or three fourths done, for a harbor of refuge at Sheboygan or elsewhere on the most stormy inland seas, where human life is exposed to such imminent perils. Where, sir, is the man, woman, or child, that has died for want of water in Washington or Georgetown? Hundreds of your neighbors and friends, Mr. President, [Mr. SWART in the chair,] and mine have found a watery grave on these inland seas. Our harbors are uncompleted, and we are now struggling to get through a bill to preserve their lives. This is the difference between the two cases.

I know we are beset here by the people of the District for this appropriation: it is urged and pressed by them. Towards them I have none other than the kindest feelings, and am ready to contribute the fair proportion of the Government to this work; but I do not think it is proper to require us to pay the whole cost, and to let them have the water for nothing.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, I rise to say to the friends of the District of Columbia that they had better accept the amendment offered by the honorable Senator from Virginia; for I think a very fair statement of the proposition would at once show that, if by an appropriation of $3,000,000, we bring water into the city of Washington, and thereby enhance the price of land and real estate twenty-five per cent., or fifty per cent., or one hundred per cent, those who receive this bounty by the enhancement of the value of their property, are in justice bound to make some contribution towards it. Are we to be a bountiful dispenser of the public money for their benefit?

I know, sir, that we are under very strong obligations to take charge of our public buildings, and, perhaps, we have an interest in bringing water into this city, but nothing like the interest of those who are at our doors asking for the appropriation. If the city of Washington had not been built up by rapid settlement—respectable settlers, I grant—there would have been water enough for all the purposes of the public, without the erection of these water works. But, sir, if we are to bestow this money by way of bounty to bring gold in the form of water upon the lands of the proprietors here, it is nothing but right that they should contribute a proportion of the expense, and a larger proportion than one fourth; but I will go for that proposition; and if gentlemen are disposed to pass this appropriation in good faith, they can, by my consent, do it in no other way.

The question being taken by yeas and nays on Mr. HUNTER's amendment to the amendment, resulted—yeas 26, nays 19; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allen, Bell, Bright, Butler, Cass, Clay, Cooper, Dodge of Iowa, Douglas, Fitzpatrick, Gillette, Gwin, Hamlin, Hunter, James, Johnson, Jones of Iowa, Mallory, Mason, Slidell, Sumner, Thompson of Kentucky, Thomson of New Jersey, Toucey, Wade, and Weller—26.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Badger, Bayard, Benjamin, Brodhead, Chase, Clayton, Dawson, Fessenden, Foot, Geyer, Houston, Jones of Tennessee, Pearce, Pratt, Rusk, Shields, Stuart, and Walker—19.

Mr. HAMLIN. I now renew the motion further to amend the amendment, by adding to it—

And, provided further, That the main aqueduct shall not be more than seven feet in diameter.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I merely wish to say that, by the report in relation to this aqueduct, it appears that the difference in cost between a seven and nine feet aqueduct, is only $380,000. The reason of that is, that the general estimate for the whole work comprehends, not alone the aqueduct, but the basins and all the other portions of the work. The difference in supply will be thirty millions of gallons.

Mr. PRATT. It will be one half.

Mr. BENJAMIN. Yes, sir, I believe it will be over thirty millions of gallons; for a seven feet aqueduct would supply about thirty-one millions of gallons, and a nine feet aqueduct sixty-seven millions. The difference is thirty-six millions of gallons; while the difference of cost is only $380,000. It appears to me that this simple statement is sufficient to satisfy Senators that there is no necessity for this amendment, and that it will be a very injurious one, indeed.

Mr. JAMES. I would ask the honorable Senator, what is the necessity for a nine feet aqueduct? It is well known, that the aqueduct which leads the water into New York city is but seven feet in diameter, and the fall there is very much less than it is from the Great Falls of the Potomac to this city; and there is water enough brought through that aqueduct to supply two millions of inhabitants. Now, if there is any necessity for an aqueduct giving twice that amount of water, I should like some Senator to say so. I am willing to vote for it if there be any necessity for it; but not otherwise.

Mr. PRATT. In the first place, Mr. President, I doubt the power of Congress to alter the plan which has been adopted. This water is to be taken from the State of Maryland. The original appropriation required the assent of Maryland antecedent to the commencement of the work by which the water was to be taken. The act of the Legislature of Maryland giving that assent recites that:

"Whereas, The Congress of the United States have appropriated the sum of $100,000 for the purpose of supplying the city of Washington with water, upon such plan as the President of the United States may approve."

The preamble continues, and then the first section is:

"Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Maryland, That if the plan adopted by the President of the United States for supplying the city of Washington with water, should require the said water to be drawn from any source within the limits of this State, consent is hereby given," &c.

So the Senate will perceive that the assent of Maryland to the taking of the water from within her limits, was given exclusively upon the condition that it should be taken upon the plan adopted by the President of the United States. Now, it is known to every one who has looked at the report of the engineer who made the surveys for this work, that the President has adopted a plan by which the aqueduct is to be of nine feet diameter.

In addition to this, the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BENJAMIN] has shown the Senate, by figures furnished by the engineer, (than whom I venture to say, notwithstanding the suggestions thrown out that there may be a mistake in his estimate, there is not one more skilled in the country,) that a nine feet aqueduct will give double the supply of water which a seven feet aqueduct will give, while the additional cost of the nine feet aqueduct will be only $380,000.

When, therefore, I look to the consent of Maryland, given upon the hypothesis that the nine feet aqueduct was to be the one adopted, (because the assent was given on condition that the plan adopted by the President should be the one on which this work should be carried on,) and to the fact that the only increase of expense will be $380,000, I can see no reason for the adoption of the amendment of the honorable Senator from Maine, [Mr. HAMLIN.]

Mr. President, the part of the District of Columbia now owned by the Federal Government was ceded by the State of Maryland. Her great object in passing the law authorizing you to take the property of her citizens for the purpose of bringing water to the District, was, not that the individual citizens of the District of Columbia should be supplied with water, but that this city, built upon the territory which she had conveyed to the United States, should be worthy of the important object for which it was designed.

But, sir, the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. JAMES] tells us that an aqueduct of seven feet diameter would be sufficient, and that the aqueduct at New York is but seven feet in diameter. Does that Senator know that during the present summer there is not a single one of the fountains in the city of New York having a sufficient supply of water to play?

Mr. JAMES. Allow me to say to the honorable Senator that that grows out of the want of a sufficient supply of water at the Croton. The aqueduct itself is not filled, nor half filled, now.

Mr. PRATT. Well, sir, I learn from authority in which I have implicit confidence—the authority of the engineer appointed by the President to make this survey, and therefore the authority on which Congress should rely—that what I have stated is correct. Isay this is authority to which Congress should look, instead of the mere opinions of Senators on this floor, who, however scientific they may be, and though they may esteem themselves superior in scientific attainments to this engineer, have never made the survey, and do not know the fall or flow of water, or anything of that kind, except as furnished by him.

Now, the great object of having a nine feet aqueduct, at an additional cost of only $380,000, is that this city may have its magnificent fountains with an abundance of water, to be played at all times for the comfort and convenience of the citizens of the United States who may visit the national metropolis. I would greatly prefer that no appropriation should be made at the present session, rather than that you should alter the magnificent plan adopted by the President, for the mere purpose of saving $380,000. If we have no money now in the Treasury to devote to this purpose, let us wait until we have. If we have now such an economical spirit as to prevent us from carrying on this great work as it should be carried on, in accordance with the plan adopted by the Chief Magistrate of the nation, let us wait until this spirit of economy shall have left us. It is certainly unusual in this body, and this is the first time I have seen it attempted to be displayed. I think it is now displayed for a very improper and unworthy object.

Therefore, sir, I conclude, in the first place, that the act of assent of Maryland was an assent to the plan adopted by the President, and Congress has no power to alter the plan to which Maryland assented; and, in the second place, according to the argument of my friend from Louisiana, there is no object in saving this mere pittance, and thereby getting one half less water than otherwise.

Mr. JAMES. A question has been raised between the seven feet and the nine feet aqueduct, and it is said there will be but $380,000 difference in cost. Even if that be so, it should be borne in mind that the seven feet aqueduct is much less liable to get out of repair; and for that reason the New York aqueduct was made with seven feet instead of a larger diameter. It is known to every gentleman that a large cylinder, particularly a brick cylinder, is very difficult to construct, so that it can be kept in its position, and it is much better to have a seven feet aqueduct than a nine feet one, even at the same cost, for the reason that one is not as liable to get out of order as the other.

Mr. COOPER. The Senator from Rhode Island has said part of what I designed to say. I should make no difference whatever between the seven and the nine feet pipes, on account of the difference in the expense. We are told by my friend from Louisiana that the difference would be but $380,000, and I presume it would be no more; but it would be greatly better, I am satisfied, that the city and the Government should be supplied with seven feet pipes, which can be easily constructed, various establishments in the country being of capacity equal to casting that kind of pipes, but perhaps not a single one in the country is of capacity enough to cast pipes of the dimensions proposed.

Mr. BENJAMIN. Allow me to say to my friend that the question is not as to the size of the pipes. The question is as to the size of the brick aqueduct. It is the brick aqueduct, the diameter of which it is proposed to reduce to seven feet instead of nine feet. It is already partly built with the diameter of nine feet.

Mr. COOPER. How much of it is built?

Mr. BENJAMIN. I do not know how much, but it is partly built.

Mr. COOPER. Sir, there is no kind of doubt that the supply of water which will be conveyed to the city through a seven feet aqueduct will be more than necessary for all the purposes which have been referred to by several Senators who have spoken. You can have your fountains played with the water that will be brought to the city through a seven feet aqueduct, as well as through a nine feet aqueduct. There is no necessity for such a large aqueduct. As has been remarked by the Senator from Rhode Island, New York city is supplied, and supplied abundantly, with water through a seven feet aqueduct, and there is nothing like the amount of fall between the head of the Croton aqueduct that there is between the Great Falls of the Potomac and this point; and that makes, as you are perfectly aware, sir, a vast difference in the amount of water pressed through, the amount of head operating very largely in increasing the amount of water that flows through the aqueduct or pipes. Now, sir, when we see by the experience of a city already containing half a million of souls, and probably more than that number, that a seven feet aqueduct supplies water for more than is necessary for all their wants, why is it that we should expend one cent more, making the work less perfect, than by expending the amount that would be required for the smaller class of aqueduct, have a perfect work? There is no reason for it whatever.

Mr. PRATT. My friend from Pennsylvania is altogether mistaken, as I learn, in the fact on which his argument is predicated. The slope or fall of the Croton aqueduct, New York, is one foot.

Mr. COOPER. To how much?

Mr. PRATT. I will give the Senator all the information which I possess. The fall in New York is as one foot compared with nine inches here. That is to say, it is one foot to the mile, and here nine inches to the mile; and, therefore, the slope here is less, and consequently the larger dimension of aqueduct is required. This I learn from the engineer.

Mr. BADGER. Mr. President, I desire to state very briefly the reasons which induce me to vote against the amendment proposed by the Senator from Maine, in addition to what has been so well and satisfactorily said by my friends from Louisiana and Maryland. We authorized, by an act of Congress, this whole work to be constructed on such a plan as the President of the United States should approve. A judgment as to the propriety of the plan depends on a knowledge of science, of mechanics. The President of the United States had access to the very best means in the country to ascertain what was the best plan on which this work should be constructed. Therefore, if he sought for the best plan, he had the highest probability of obtaining it. The President could have had no motive under Heaven but to adopt the best plan; and, therefore, I presume that the plan adopted was the best.

Now, sir, I have not the skill and acquaintance with such matters that some Senators have. I am not a scientific person. I do not understand the operation of mechanical forces. I do not understand any of the elements which would enable me to decide whether a nine feet or a seven feet aqueduct is preferable—whether the larger is necessary or whether the smaller will do. Under such circumstances, I shall not take upon myself to undertake to decide this question, but I shall presume upon the argument ad verecundiam that it is proper for me to suppose that the Chief Magistrate, under all the advantages he has had to adopt the best plan, without a possible motive to adopt other than the best, has adopted it.

Sir, as to the suggestions given by those who hang around this Capitol, experimentors, men who have plans for every thing, I for my part do not trouble myself with them. I have no doubt that if you were now to reduce the diameter of this aqueduct to seven feet, you would at the next session of Congress find plenty of scientific persons who would show you that it would be a great deal better to have it five feet, and I have no doubt that ultimately they would get it down to one foot. Nine feet has been selected. It has not been demonstrated, because we have not here the materials from which demonstration could be obtained, and if we had the materials, I have not got information and capacity to enable me to decide, that that character of work is not the best. Why then change it? Why run the risk of losing the great benefits of this work for the purpose of saving a comparatively small sum of money, and with the necessity, in the first instance, of pulling down a part of the work which you have already built? It is already up. Why interfere with it? Suppose the diameter of the aqueduct be two feet more than is necessary, what harm will it do? Is it not a great deal better to have four feet of aqueduct more than is necessary, than to have six inches less than may be required? Therefore, I shall vote against the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. JAMES. I was in hopes that I should not have anything more to say on this subject; but the honorable Senator from North Carolina has referred to outsiders. Sir, no outsider has spoken to me on this subject. I speak in regard to the seven feet aqueduct from my own knowledge, and I say from my own practical knowledge, that it will furnish water enough, if well constructed and well built, to supply two millions of inhabitants with all the water which they can properly consume.

Mr. BADGER. I had no doubt, sir, that the honorable Senator from Rhode Island did not derive his information from persons outside the Chamber. I had no reference to him. I know he is skilled in the kind of knowledge necessary to enable him to come to an accurate conclusion, and needs no help; but I said what I did because I have heard from the beginning of the session from various quarters, of persons here who professed to have skill in these matters, who had thrown out suggestions that they could give plans, magnificent in their operation, and comparatively cheap in expense. It was that to which I alluded. I have not the skill which the Senator from Rhode Island has, and, therefore, I cannot decide for myself. Then the question is, what shall I do? Take the opinion expressed here, or take the decision pronounced by the President? Sir, I shall take the latter.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, I shall vote against this amendment, not that I have any knowledge of the relative merits of a seven feet or a nine feet aqueduct as the proper diameter, but the Congress of the United States, adhering to what I suppose to be the appropriate functions of the legislative body, determined to have these works erected, and they authorized the Executive to adopt such plan as he might deem most advisable; and after full inquiry into the matter, he did adopt a plan. Now, I think we are too much disposed here to trench on administrative duties. I would rather see each of the Departments of the Government confined to its appropriate functions. This body is not fit to decide as to the details of the construction of a work of this kind. For my own part, when I think a work ought to be erected, I am willing to trust to Executive discretion to see that it is properly done, particularly when the plan has been confided to him for the purpose of execution. It is a more appropriate mode for the construction of all public works. Further, I may be allowed to say, Mr. President, that I do think we might save some loss to the country, and secure some benefit to ourselves, if we adhered a little more uniformly to the maxim of ne sutor ultra crepidam, and did not undertake to decide things of which we have no adequate knowledge.

Mr. RUSK. There are two or three reasons which satisfy my mind to vote against the amendment to the amendment. The one stated by the honorable Senator from Delaware, would be conclusive in the absence of any other. This is a matter of detail which requires scientific knowledge. The responsibility of determining the size of the aqueduct was thrown on the President of the United States. As a matter of course, from his position he must have availed himself of the best scientific information at his command, and he has determined upon an aqueduct of nine feet diameter.

Then, sir, there are one or two other reasons which are very conclusive. The additional expense, as stated by the honorable Senator from Louisiana, who I presume speaks from correct information, is but $380,000, while the supply of water secured by a nine feet aqueduct is about double the other. This city will grow. This is a permanent work. It may, and I trust it will, last for ages to come. It may turn out, after a while, that an aqueduct seven feet in diameter would place us in the condition in which I see by the newspapers New York is now placed. I perceive that it is discussed in the newspapers there, whether or not they should do the work over again, in order to get a sufficient supply of water.

All their papers which I have seen complain that the supply is not sufficient.

When we have such strong reasons as these, I shall certainly vote against this amendment. In the first place, this plan has been determined by the President, on his responsibility, after we threw the responsibility upon him. In the next place, the expense of the larger diameter over the one proposed, being but $380,000, and the supply of water more than double, I think it would certainly be bad economy to change it at this time.

The amendment of Mr. HAMLIN to the amendment of the committee, was rejected; and the question recurred on the amendment of the committee as modified.

Mr. MASON. After that amendment is disposed of, with the assent of the honorable chairman of the Committee on Finance, I shall ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of Executive business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Inasmuch as the amendment has been somewhat modified in its phraseology, the Chair will have it read again to the Senate.

It was read, as follows:

For continuing the work for a supply of water to the cities of Washington and Georgetown, $500,000: Provided, That no part of the sum hereby appropriated shall be expended until the corporations of Washington and Georgetown, or either of them, shall appropriate and pay an amount equal to one fourth of said sum for the same purpose; and full power and authority are hereby given to said corporations respectively to raise, by loan or otherwise, any sum of money that may be necessary to enable them, or either of them, to make the appropriation herein required. And the said corporations of Washington and Georgetown, and the inhabitants of said cities, respectively, or the corporation making the appropriation, and the inhabitants of said city, shall be authorized to use the surplus water which may be brought to the Washington aqueduct, after supplying the Government establishments in Washington, under such general rules and regulations as may hereafter be prescribed by Congress; and each of said corporations shall have the right to charge and collect of the inhabitants of said cities, such reasonable tax or rent for the use of the water, as will provide for the regular payment of the interest and gradual payment of the principal of any money which may be raised under the authority hereby given.

Mr. DAWSON. I wish to make a suggestion to the Senator from Virginia, as to the phraseology of the amendment. These works were proceeding, but for some time past they have been partially stopped, and part of the hands have been removed, and I see an indication in the amendment which will continue that state of affairs, and leave the work already finished subject to dilapidation and ruin. There is a limitation contained in the amendment that no part of this money shall be employed for the construction of the aqueduct until the amount required to be raised by the cities of Georgetown and Washington shall be raised by them. Now, is it not better to change that and give to those corporations time enough to levy the tax, and to the people to pay it, without suspending the work, and losing by the delay more than their share will perhaps amount to?

I merely suggest this; and I will also take occasion to say, as I said once before here, that I have been up and down these works. I went as a member of the Committee on the District of Columbia, with my friend from Louisiana, [Mr. BENJAMIN.] We looked at the works, and felt proud, as American citizens, that they were being constructed; but we saw that the portion already executed, was subject to ruin from floods, rains, and other causes; and there were not hands enough to protect it in its unfinished state.

Now, sir, can we tell when this sum of money will be raised by these corporations? Let us rely on the corporations until the next meeting of Congress, and let the work go on during the summer and fall; and when we return in the winter, we shall be enabled to put such regulations and restrictions on this matter as shall be desirable. All that I ask is, that the work shall be permitted to go on. The leading hands connected with it are still retained, and about twenty-five laborers with them. This expense is going on daily, without the ability to remove the dirt, and have it carried off in wheelbarrows. I hope the Senator will look to that fact, and make the necessary modification.

Mr. HUNTER. I understand it is not in my power to modify the amendment. It has been voted on.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It requires unanimous consent to modify it.

Mr. ADAMS. I object.

Mr. HUNTER. I should be unwilling to modify the amendment, because it was drawn up on consultation. The provision, as I understand it, was designed to secure the coöperation of the cities of the District. I believe the cities will be willing to agree to it. I believe that, with such an amendment, the appropriation will probably pass. I think it will work well. The cities will raise the sum required, and we can go on, both parties being satisfied, and finish the work. This was designed as a security, to give evidence that the cities would raise the money before the work was accomplished, in order to satisfy Congress that they would contribute their share before the work goes on.

Mr. PEARCE. I am inclined to think it would be better not to act on this amendment immediately. There is a provision in the charter of the corporation of Washington which forbids the corporate authorities from adding anything to their present debt, or from laying taxes for that purpose, without the consent of two thirds of the citizens, given at an annual election. I have just looked at the charter, and find that to be the case. It would, therefore, require the amendment to be so modified as to give authority to the corporation, either to incur this debt without consulting the citizens, or—

Mr. HUNTER. The amendment does give that authority to the corporation.

Mr. PEARCE. But suppose the corporate authorities should not be willing to incur the debt without the assent of the citizens? They might desire to have the assent of two thirds, at a special election. I think it would be best, perhaps, not to press the amendment now, particularly as it is proposed to go on with some other business.

Mr. BELL. I understand that all these questions are to be put over again in the Senate after the bill shall be reported from the Committee of the Whole.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that the bill is under consideration in the Senate now, and not in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MASON. In accordance with the suggestion of the honorable Senator from Maryland, I move to postpone the further consideration of this bill until to-morrow, with the view of considering Executive business.

The motion was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

On motion by Mr. MASON, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of Executive business; and after sometime spent therein, the doors were reopened.

REPORTS FROM STANDING COMMITTEES.

Mr. GWIN, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the petition of Lewis Warrington, jr., a purser in the United States Navy, praying for the difference between the pay of a purser of a frigate, and that of a first class steam frigate, while thus employed on the steamship Mississippi, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for his relief; which was read, and passed to a second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom were referred the following memorials and petitions, asked to be discharged from their further consideration, which was agreed to.

* A memorial of Stewart Sanderson, of Westport, New York, proposing a plan for harbor defense by means of a floating battering ram.

A petition of E. C. B. Thompson, widow of Charles B. Thompson, praying to be allowed the pension to which her husband was entitled at the time of his death.

A memorial of John D. Gibson, praying for commissions on his disbursements as acting purser of the United States schooner Enterprise.

A memorial of Josiah Tatnall, junior, a purser in the United States Navy, praying Congress to indemnify him for losses sustained whilst purser of United States ship Dale, on the coast of Africa.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred certain statistical information in reference to a line of mail steamers proposed to be established by Christian Hansen, between Brooklyn, New York, and certain ports in Europe, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads; which was agreed to.

Mr. SLIDELL, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was recommended the bill for the relief of Henry S. Sanford, reported it back, with an amendment.

Mr. JAMES, from the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office, to whom was recommended the bill to amend the several acts now in force relating to the Patent Office, reported it back with sundry amendments.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Mr. GWIN asked and obtained the unanimous consent of the Senate to introduce a bill for the relief of David F. Douglass, late marshal of the northern district of California; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

LANDS IN INDIANA.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. I am directed by the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the bill to amend an act entitled "An act for the relief of the inhabitants of the reserved township in Gibson county, in the State of Indiana," approved August 11, 1842, to report it back with amendments. It is a very unimportant bill to the United States, and I ask that it may be put upon its passage now.

Mr. BADGER. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and
The Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, July 24, 1854.

The House met at eleven o'clock, a. m. Prayer by Rev. HENRY SLICER.

The Journal of Saturday was read and approved.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The business first in order is a motion holding over from last Monday, to suspend the rules for the purpose of enabling the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. COBB] to report the following bill:

House bill (No. 34) "granting the right of way and a donation of land to the State of Alabama in aid of the construction of the Coosa and Tennessee railroad, in said State, leading from Gadsden to the Tennessee river, at or near Gunter's Landing."

Mr. COBB obtained the floor.

Mr. DAVIS, of Indiana. Will the gentleman from Alabama yield me the floor a moment?

Mr. COBB. I hope no friend will ask me to yield the floor, if so doing will affect my motion at all.

Mr. DAVIS. It will not affect it.

Mr. COBB. There have been thirty applications to me this morning to yield the floor for various purposes.

Mr. DAVIS. Do you object.

Mr. COBB. No, I do not; but I want to state this if the gentleman will allow me: Last Saturday, I suppose, we did the largest business Congress has ever done since the organization of the Government. The committee at last found itself without a quorum, and were thereby prevented from proceeding further, and reporting the bills to the House. I want to state to the House, before this measure of mine is considered, if it is the pleasure of the House to resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House, in order to report the action of Saturday, I have not the least objection to their doing so, provided my motion shall come up immediately after, and that the business of the House remain precisely as it is now until that business shall have been disposed of.

Mr. HOUSTON. We can accomplish the same purpose by a much shorter method. I will move, if the House will allow me, that the Committee of the Whole House be discharged from the further consideration of the bills laid aside to be reported to the House on Saturday last, and that they be brought into the House. I will then move that the House, by one vote, concur in the report of the committee; and we can thus dispose of the whole business without consuming but very little of the time of the House.

Mr. DAVIS, of Indiana. I rise to a question of order. I understood the Speaker to recognize me before he did the gentleman from Alabama.

The SPEAKER. That would not alter the state of business at all; for no motion would be in order except to adjourn, and no discussion would be in order upon any question. The Chair might have recognized the gentleman, not knowing but he wished to move to adjourn.

Mr. DAVIS. Well, sir, is it not true that the Chair recognized me?

The SPEAKER. The Chair did recognize the gentleman, but no motion was in order except to adjourn.

Mr. DAVIS. I asked the gentleman from Alabama to yield to me to enable me to move to report a Senate bill from the Committee for the District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman from Alabama refused to give way for that purpose.

Mr. DAVIS. I propounded the question distinctly to the gentleman whether he objected to my proposition, and he replied that he did not. The proprietors of the Glenwood Cemetery wish to dedicate the cemetery to-morrow, and I hope there will be no objection to passing this act for their incorporation.

Mr. COBB. Certainly, I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will set the gentleman from Alabama and himself right then by propounding the question, whether there be any objection to the gentleman from Indiana reporting a bill?

GLENWOOD CEMETERY.

There was no objection, and the bill was reported, and read by its title, as follows:

An act to incorporate the proprietors of the Glenwood Cemetery.

Mr. DAVIS. I will just state to the House that the bill is in the usual form of acts of incorporation, with all the guards that are usually contained in such acts. I have examined the bill very carefully, and so has the chairman of the Committee for the District of Columbia. I do not think it is necessary to have it read.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I call for the reading.

The bill was read in extenso.

The amendment of the Committee for the District of Columbia was read and agreed to, as follows:

Add as an additional section:

SEC. 13. And be it further enacted, That each of the stockholders in said company shall be held liable in his or her individual capacity for all the debts and liabilities of said company, however contracted or incurred, to be recovered by suit as other debts or liabilities before the court or tribunal having jurisdiction of the case.

The bill was then ordered to be read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

PRIVATE BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. HOUSTON,] by unanimous consent, proposes that the House shall discharge the Committee of the Whole House from certain bills passed upon by the committee on Saturday last; and further, that the House shall act upon them en masse, as reported from the committee. Is the unanimous consent of the House given to that course?

Mr. MILLSON. I desire to ask the Chair if it would not be competent for the House to take a separate vote upon any bill upon which it may be desired?

The SPEAKER. There is no doubt about the propriety of passing each bill upon its own merits, unless the unanimous consent of the House be given to the proposition made by the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. MILLSON. If the gentleman from Alabama will modify his motion, and allow the bills to be reported to the House and placed in the position in which they would have been placed, had the chairman of the Committee of the Whole reported them to the House on Saturday, I should have no objection. I will go further than that: I will agree that a single vote shall be taken on all those bills upon which a separate vote has not been demanded. There are some of the bills upon which I wish a separate vote.

The SPEAKER. Is it the pleasure of the House that the Committee of the Whole be discharged from the further consideration of these bills, and that they be brought before the House for their action?

[Cries of "Agreed!" "Agreed!"]

Mr. HOUSTON. If the gentleman from Virginia objects, he will defeat my proposition; for it requires the unanimous consent of the House. My object is to get the speediest action possible upon these bills. I will modify my motion, and move only to discharge the committee from the further consideration of these bills, and bring in the bills as they are ordered to be reported by the committee.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, such will be the order of the House.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I hope the gentleman from Alabama will withdraw his motion for a moment, in order that I may submit a motion to take from the Speaker's table a bill to construct a road in the Territories of Nebraska and Washington. The bill makes an appropriation, and it therefore, by the rules, must go to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. My object is to take it from the table, so that we may get action upon it.

There being no objection, the bill was taken from the table, and read a first and second time by its title, as follows:

Senate bill (No. 435) "making appropriation for the construction of certain military roads in the Territories of Nebraska and Washington."

Mr. RICHARDSON. The bill contains an appropriation, and will have to go to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. I move that it be referred to that committee.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that, by unanimous consent, the bills upon the Private Calendar, reported by the Committee of the Whole, are before the House for their action. The Chair proposes to the House that the bills be read by their titles, and be voted upon en masse, except such bills as a separate vote may be demanded upon by a member rising in his place and doing so.

[Cries of "Agreed!" "Agreed!"]

The SPEAKER. That will be a convenient mode, and a safe one also.

The following Senate bills were therefore read by their titles:

No. 303. An act for the relief of James M. Goggin.

No. 147. An act for the relief of the legal representatives of the late Thomas Chapman, formerly collector of the port of Georgetown, South Carolina.

No. 199. An act authorizing a patent to be issued to Peter Poucin for certain lands therein described.

No. 234. An act for the relief of Conrad Wheat, jr., or his legal representatives.

No. 154. An act for the relief of Richard King.

No. 136. An act for the relief of William Sena Factor.

The SPEAKER. The following amendments have been reported to this bill:

In the third line strike out $3,707, and insert $2,000.

At the end of the bill add the following proviso:

Provided, Said sum shall be received in full of all claims or account of the property herein mentioned.

The amendments were agreed to.

No. 62. An act for the relief of Richard M. Bouton, George Wright, and the widow of Marvin W. Fisher.

No. 183. An act for the relief of Passed Midshipmen George P. Welsh and Clark H. Wells.

No. 113. An act for the relief of the widows and orphans of the officers and seamen of the United States schooner Grampus, who were lost in that vessel, in March, 1843, near the coast of the United States.

No. 275. An act for the relief of Andrew J. Deckerhoff.

No. 133. An act for the relief of Lavinia Taylor.

No. 743. An act for the compensation of James W. Low and others, for the capture of the British private armed schooner Ann, during the late war with Great Britain.

Mr. MILLSON. I ask a separate vote upon that bill.

No. 229. An act for the relief of Thomas S. Russell.

No. 308. An act for the relief of A. G. Bennett.

No. 144. An act for the relief of Purser T. P. McBlair.

No. 224. An act for the relief of the representatives of Joseph Watson, deceased.

No. 146. An act for the relief of Samuel H. Hempstead.

No. 365. An act for the relief of John W. Kelly.

No. 374. An act for the relief of Sylvester T. Jerauld, assignee of the interest of Henry Richard.

No. 329. An act for the relief of Thomas D. Jennings.

No. 167. An act for the relief of Joseph Cam-pau.

No. 296. An act for the relief of Manuel Hernandez.

No. 189. An act for the relief of Mrs. Sally T. B. Cochrane, widow of the late Lieutenant R. E. Cochrane, United States Army.

No. 250. An act for the relief of William Claude Jones.

No. 108. An act for the relief of Rebecca Freeman.

No. 241. An act for the relief of James Wormsley.

No. 223. An act for the relief of Mary Carlton.

No. 340. An act for the relief of Sarah Crandall.

No. 71. An act for the relief of Joseph Gonder, jr., and John Duff.

No. 231. An act for the relief of William Miller.

No. 185. An act for the relief of the legal representatives of Samuel Prioleau, deceased.

No. 248. An act for the relief of William Harris, of Georgia.

No. 203. An act for the relief of James Edwards and others.

No. 240. An act for the relief of Thomas Snodgrass.

The said Senate bills, on which separate votes were not asked for, were then ordered to be read a third time, and were read a third time, and passed.

The following Senate bills was then read:

No. 206. An act for the relief of the executrix of the late Brevet Colonel A. C. Fanning, of the United States Army.

Mr. MILLSON. I call for a separate vote upon that bill.

The following House bills were then read by their titles:

No. 265. A bill for the relief of W. D. Porter, of the United States Navy.

No. 272. A bill for the relief of Daniel Bedinger's heirs.

No. 281. A bill for the relief of Brigadier General John E. Wool.

No. 323. A bill for the relief of J. C. Buckles, of Louisville, Kentucky.

No. 325. A bill for the relief of James S. Graham and Walter H. Finnall.

No. 364. A bill for the relief of William A. Duer, John Duer, and Beverly Robinson, trustees of the estate of Sarah Alexander, widow of Major General William Alexander, commonly known as Lord Sterling.

No. 367. A bill for the relief of the legal representatives of John Rice Jones.

No. 368. A bill for the relief of Robert F. McGuire and Louisa, his wife, late Louisa Lamy.

No. 371. A bill for the relief of Lieutenant George H. Paige, of the United States Army.

No. 257. A joint resolution for the relief of Captain J. H. Lendrum, of the United States Army.

No. 373. A bill to provide a pension for Oliver Brown, of Chemung county, New York.

No. 374. A bill to provide a pension for Edmund Mitchell, of Carroll county, in the State of Kentucky.

No. 376. A bill for the relief of James Butler.

No. 377. A bill for the relief of John H. Hicks, of Indiana.

No. 378. A bill for the relief of John Brown, second, of New Hampshire.

No. 379. A bill for the relief of Mrs. Anne W. Angus, widow of the late Captain Angus, United States Army.

No. 380. A bill for the relief of Betsey Nash.

No. 381. A bill for the relief of Thomas Ellis.

No. 382. A bill for the relief of Charlotte S. Westcott.

No. 383. A bill for the relief of Thomas Bronaugh.

No. 384. A bill for the relief of Anna E. Cook.

No. 385. A bill for the relief of Abraham Ausman.

No. 388. A bill for the relief of Titian R. Peale.

No. 389. A bill for the relief of Sylvester Humphrey, and the heirs of Alexander Humphrey, deceased.

No. 393. A bill for the relief of Jacob McLellan.

No. 396. A bill for the relief of Charles J. Davis, administrator of Captain John Davis, an officer in the war of the Revolution.

No. 402. A bill for the relief of Charles H. Wilgus.

No. 26. A joint resolution for the settlement of the claim of Don Juan Jesus Vigil, of New Mexico.

A bill for the relief of Stephen Lutz, of New York.

No. 410. A bill for the relief of the legal representatives of Everard Meade.

No. 411. A bill for the relief of the heirs of Larkin Smith.

No. 414. A bill for the relief of George Mattingly.

No. 415. A bill for the relief of Nathaniel Reddick, administrator of Richard Taylor, deceased.

No. 416. A bill for the relief of John McVen and John F. McNeely, of Louisiana.

No. 417. A bill for the relief of William Curran.

No. 418. A bill for the relief of Enoch S. More.

No. 419. A bill for the relief of Patrick Gass.

No. 420. A bill for the relief of Rosalie Caxillo.

No. 421. A bill for the relief of A. S. Laughery.

No. 423. A bill for the relief of J. McElhiny, E. P. Mathews, and Lawrence Cribben.

No. 424. A bill for the relief of township forty-five, range one, in Warren county, Missouri.

No. 299. A bill for the relief of the Pine Grove Academy, in Louisiana.

No. 426. A bill for the relief of the legal representatives of Lieutenant Francis Ware.

No. 429. A bill for the relief of James Capen.

No. 431. A bill for the relief of Thomas Ap Catesby Jones, surety for a former postmaster at Norfolk, Virginia.

No. 433. A bill for the relief of James Wright, jr., of the State of Tennessee.

No. 434. A bill for the relief of Captain Lewis E. Simonds.

No. 435. A bill for the relief of Daniel Morse, of Essex, Chittenden county, Vermont.

No. 436. A bill for the relief of Ira Call, of Huron county, Ohio.

No. 437. A bill for the relief of Isaac M. Sigler, of Putnam county, Indiana.

No. 438. A bill for the relief of John Frazer, and the administrator of the estate of John G. Clendenin, deceased.

No. 442. A bill for the relief of Mary H. Cushing.

No. 443. A bill vesting the title of the United States to certain lands in the city of Cincinnati.

No. 448. A bill for the relief of William H. Weirick.

No. 446. A bill for the relief of the civil township of Marion, in the county of Mercer, Ohio.

No. 447. A bill for the relief of the legal heirs of Benjamin Metoyer.

The Committee of the Whole recommended an amendment, to add at the end of the bill the following:

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That the Commissioner of the Land Office be authorized and required to issue to said heirs and legal representatives patents for lands heretofore confirmed to them by acts of Congress.

Mr. JONES, of Louisiana. I move to amend the amendment by inserting after the words "to them" the words "or under whom they claim," so that it would read—

That the Commissioner of the Land Office be authorized and required to issue to said heirs and legal representatives patents heretofore confirmed to them, or to those under whom they claim by acts of Congress.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The question then recurred upon the amendment as amended; and being taken, was decided in the affirmative.

So the amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. BENNETT. I wish a separate vote to be taken on House bill (No. 280) for the relief of Betsey Nash, so that I may submit an amendment to it. Without the amendment it will be of no avail.

There was no objection; and the bill was laid aside for a separate vote.

Mr. McMULLIN. There was a bill passed by the Committee of the Whole House, proposing to release a certain individual from the payment of a thousand and upward of dollars lost overboard in the Ohio river.

The SPEAKER. According to the unanimous order of the House, the bills acted on by the Committee of the Whole House on Saturday last were to be taken up and read by their titles; that on those designated by a member rising in his place, separate votes should be had, and that the remainder should be voted on en masse.

Mr. McMULLIN. The bill to which I refer sets a very dangerous precedent. The amount of appropriation is small, it is true, but the principle is an important one, and should be well looked to.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman will refer to the title of the bill, it will, by unanimous consent, be taken from the bills to be voted on en masse for a separate vote.

Mr. McMULLIN. I do not recollect the number or the title of the bill. I have only a recollection of the principle involved.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I object.

The bills on which separate votes were not asked, were ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

The SPEAKER. Shall the third reading of these bills be dispensed with?

[Cries of "Agreed!"]

The bills were then passed.

Mr. ABERCROMBIE. I move to reconsider the vote by which the last lot of bills were passed, and that that motion be laid upon the table.

Mr. ROBBINS. I would suggest that the gentleman embrace in his motion the Senate bills which were previously passed.

Mr. ABERCROMBIE. Very well. I include all the bills which have been passed this morning, of those reported from the Committee of the Whole House.

The motion to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table was agreed to.

The next bill in order was Senate bill (No. 143), "for the compensation of James W. Low and others for the capture of the British private armed schooner Ann, during the late war with Great Britain," on which a separate vote had been asked by Mr. MILLSON.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time; and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

The next bill in order was Senate bill (No. 206) "for the relief of the executrix of the late Brevet Colonel A. C. W. Fanning, of the United States Army," reported with amendments.

The first amendment was to strike out "$7,230," and insert in lieu thereof "$5,980."

The amendment was agreed to.

The second amendment was to strike out the following words:

As commissions for disbursements made in 1827 and 1828, at the United States arsenal in Augusta, Georgia, and

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was then ordered to be read a third time; and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

The next bill in order was House bill (No. 380) "for the relief of Betsey Nash."

Mr. BENNETT. I offer this amendment: to strike out in the eighth line the words "for five years," and in the ninth line the words "fifty-four," and insert the following words at the end of the bill: "thirty-one, and to continue for ten years."

I wish to state to the House what the trouble about this bill is. The husband of this Mrs. Nash held a commission in the Army, and she was, at his death, entitled to a pension. This matter has been here since 1822, but a bill for her relief has never passed. She is now an old and infirm lady, and the probability is that she will not live much longer. The pension committee have given her a pension, to commence from the 1st of January, 1854. The amendment which I have introduced does not propose to change the amount, but merely that the pension shall com-commence from the time that the proof of her title to it was made perfect, and let it run on from that time for a period of ten years. That is all that the amendment proposes, and I hope it will be adopted.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I suppose that the committee, in reporting the bill, did not understand the facts of the case thoroughly. The committee is satisfied with the amendment proposed by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. BENNETT.]

Mr. SMITH, of New York. I would say, in addition to the remarks of my colleague, [Mr. BENNETT,] that Mrs. Nash is a very worthy woman. She lives only a few miles from my home. The pension is a small one, and I hope the amendment will be adopted.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ENGLISH. There is on the Private Calendar a joint resolution reported from the Committee on Military Affairs, for the relief of Francis M. Gwyn. I desire to ask the unanimous consent of the House to have the committee discharged from the further consideration of the joint resolution for the purpose of having it passed. I am certain that no gentleman in the House will object to it when they have heard the statement of facts on which that joint resolution was founded.

Mr. McMULLIN. I was going to suggest to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ENGLISH] and to the House, that instead of taking this joint resolution and acting upon it, we take up the Private Calendar and dispose of the bills that are on it. I am perfectly willing to have the joint resolution, to which the gentleman refers, acted on; but I think it better for us to take up the Private Calendar so as to do justice to every bill upon it. If the House consent, I will make a motion to that effect. I would say to my friend from Indiana, that I am as much inclined to indulge him as any other member of the House can be. But the question is, whether it is not better to act on my suggestion, take up the Private Calendar, and dispose of all the bills upon it. I throw out this suggestion for the consideration of the gentleman from Indiana, and of the House.

Mr. ENGLISH. I hope the House will indulge me for two minutes only, in order that I may state the facts on which the joint resolution in question is founded. When the State of Indiana—

Mr. PENNINGTON, (interrupting.) I feel constrained to object to the proposition of the gentleman from Indiana. I have as much interest in some private claims on the Calendar, as that gentleman has.

RAILROAD LANDS TO ALABAMA.

The SPEAKER. Then the question is on suspending the rules for the purpose of enabling the gentleman from Alabama to move to discharge the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union from the further consideration of the following bill:

House bill (No. 34) granting the right of way and a donation of land to the State of Alabama, in aid of the construction of the Coosa and Tennessee river railroad, in said State, leading from Gadsden to the Tennessee river, at or near Gunter's Landing.

Mr. COBB. Would it be in order, in the peculiar position I occupy, to ask the indulgence of the House, to make a personal explanation, not to consume five minutes, and with the understanding that the Chair may interrupt me at the expiration of that time, if I do not finish speaking before? I trust the House will indulge me.

Mr. WALSH. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made, and the gentleman cannot proceed. The question is upon suspending the rules.

Mr. LETCHER. Upon that I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. BRIDGES. I call for the reading of the bill which the gentleman from Alabama proposes to suspend the rules for the purpose of introducing. I believe that is in order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair briefly stated to the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. COBB,] the other day, that no gentleman would have the right to have this bill read upon the motion to suspend the rules for the purpose of introducing that particular bill. Such has been the practice. The Chair doubts exceedingly whether a member cannot demand the reading of a bill under such inconsistencies and if the gentleman from Pennsylvania demands it, the Chair will thus far change his former decision, and decide that he has the right to have the bill read.

Mr. CLINGMAN. With reluctance I appeal from the decision of the Chair. It will readily be perceived, if such is the ruling of the Chair, that any member, or any number of members of the House, who choose to embarrass and delay its proceedings—

Mr. CAMPBELL. I object to all debate.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I appeal from the decision of the Chair. The point I make is this: that where a proposition is before the House, out of order, no one individual can apply to the House to have it read. A majority may order a proposition read, which is before the House in order; but where it is out of order—

The SPEAKER, (interrupting.) The Chair, however, holds that it is in order, for the reason, that otherwise members would be voting in the dark upon the matter before them. Gentlemen have a right to know what it is they are called upon to suspend the rules for. Such is the decision of the Chair, and from that the gentleman from North Carolina appeals. The question is, "Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the House?"

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I move to lay the appeal upon the table.

The motion was agreed to, and the appeal was laid upon the table.

Mr. BRIDGES. I now insist upon the reading of the bill.

The bill was accordingly read.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I rise to a question of privilege, a question affecting the records of this House. I charge that an alteration of an important bill of this House has been made since its engrossment. I wish to call the attention of the House to it, that they may take such action as they think proper in the premises. The bill of this House, No. 346, "to aid the Territory of Minnesota in the construction of a railroad," which passed this House on the 20th of June last, I charge has been altered in an important particular since its engrossment; and, Mr. Speaker, with the permission of the House, I will state briefly some of the circumstances as they appear on the records before me—the original bill, the printed bill, and the engrossed bill.

The bill as introduced here from the Committee on the Public Lands, was drawn up by a gentleman from Minnesota, with whom I am well acquainted. He consulted with me very frequently in regard to some of its provisions, and particularly in regard to the provisions which I charge have been attempted to be altered. The Territory of Minnesota had chartered a company with most extraordinary powers. The grant from that Territory gave it all the lands which had been or should thereafter be granted by Congress to aid that Territory in the construction of a railroad. The charter of itself was a somewhat extraordinary one. It carried with it all the lands which Congress might hereafter grant to the Territory of Minnesota for the purpose of constructing a railroad, and it was supposed by myself and others favorable to this road, and who desired to see a grant of land for that purpose, that Congress would never pass a bill whose provisions would inure to a railroad company directly instead of to the Territory. I, as well as gentlemen who had this matter in charge, thought it could never pass this House without a provision guarding against such a charter. Hence, a provision was inserted into the bill, as follows:

"Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That the said lands hereby granted to the said Territory shall be subject to the disposal of any future Legislature thereof for the purpose aforesaid, and no other; nor shall they inure to the benefit of any company heretofore constituted or organized."

In that way the original bill was framed, and for the purpose and with the intention of preventing this company from receiving the benefit of this land.

Well, sir, the first alteration—and it was made, I believe, by the committee—was to strike out the word "future." The next alteration, and, on the first glance, it may be thought immaterial—though it is far from being so, is the substitution of the conjunction "and" for "or." It is believed by many to be a vital alteration, and one that I charge has been made since the engrossment of the bill. This company, at the passage of the bill, not being so constituted and organized, they expect by this alteration to hold the land under it. Hence the object, as I charge, of the alteration. As altered, the section reads as follows:

And be it further enacted, That the said lands hereby granted to said Territory shall be subject to the disposal of any Legislature for the purpose aforesaid, and no other.

Between the word "any" and "Legislature" the word "future" was stricken out by the committee, as I understand.

"Nor shall they inure to the benefit of any company heretofore constituted and organized."

The word "or" is stricken out and the word "and" written over where it was in a different hand-writing. The bill as introduced, and printed, and passed here reads: "Nor shall they inure to the benefit of any company heretofore constituted or organized." I have the engrossed bill before me, and any gentleman by looking at it can see that the substitution of "and" for "or" has been made since the bill has been engrossed. I am told by a gentleman, and member of this House, who has examined the bill on parchment in the office of the Secretary of State, that the same erasure and change is made there.

Now, this is a matter vitally affecting the character of our proceedings. If our records are to be changed, altered, and mutilated in this way, if the object of our legislation is to be perverted as here in this case, there is no safety for any man, any bill, or any legislation.

I am asked if it makes any difference. It is contended by the parties who hold this charter, that it does, and that it gives them the benefit of this grant, but my own opinion is that it does not. That that was the object in view I have no manner of doubt. It is an alteration and mutilation of a record of this House, and I call upon the House to pass the following resolution.

Mr. HENN. Inasmuch as I am upon the Enrolling Committee, it is necessary for me to place this matter right by making the following statement. I have a distinct recollection that when the bill was compared by the committee, the word "future" was not in it. I was surprised that it was not, because I knew it was in the original bill. I then went and got the original bill, and found that the word was stricken out there. I do not know whether the word "or" or "and" was in the bill when we compared it. But I recollect distinctly about the word "future" not being in the bill, and on comparing it with the original, I found it stricken out.

Mr. WASHBURN. There is no question in regard to the word "future." It is only in relation to the other word "and," and the mutilation of the record.

Mr. HENN. I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois whether he understands the alteration was made since the bill was compared?

Mr. WASHBURN. I understand from the proper authority, that the alteration was made after the bill had been sent from this House to the Senate. It is a House bill, and, of course, it must have been engrossed.

Mr. HENN. The effect of this mutilation I do not exactly understand. I was somewhat surprised that the word "future" should be stricken out in the original bill, because I understood from the friends of the bill at the time it was originated that they desired that word to be retained. I supposed it passed in that way until I came to read the engrossed bill, and found the word "future" stricken out.

The resolution offered by Mr. WASHBURN was then read, as follows:

Resolved, That a special committee of — be appointed for the purpose of inquiring whether the text of House bill 342 "to aid the construction of a railroad in the Territory of Minnesota" was altered, or in any way changed in its language subsequent to its engrossment, or passage in this House, without the authority of the House, and if so, by whom and under what circumstances such change was made; and that said committee be empowered to send for persons and papers, and to examine witnesses on oath in the premises.

Mr. McMULLIN. I would inquire whether the gentleman from Illinois could not effect his object by referring this matter to the select committee of which my colleague [Mr. LETCHER] is

THE CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE.

THE OFFICIAL PROCEEDINGS OF CONGRESS, PUBLISHED BY JOHN C. RIVES, WASHINGTON, D. C.

33D CONGRESS, 1ST SESSION.

TUESDAY, JULY 25, 1854.

NEW SERIES... No. 119.

chairman? We are all aware that it is a difficult thing to keep a quorum here, as we found on Saturday last; and it strikes me, if I recollect aright, that by the wording of the resolution introduced by the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. LETCHER,] the select committee for the investigation of the charges in the Colt case is clothed with full and complete powers to cover all legislation of this Congress.

Mr. WASHBURN. My first intention was to have this matter referred to the select committee of which the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. LETCHER] is chairman; but, on consultation and after reflection, I was convinced that, with such an amount of labor before them, that committee could not well pay attention to this subject.

Mr. LETCHER. I do not know what the opinion of the committee is respecting the construction to be put upon the resolution on which they were appointed, as to the extent of power delegated to them. But it is certainly my own opinion that this matter does not come within the range of inquiry committed to us. Not at all. And then besides, I should like to see work properly divided and a committee appointed for the purpose specified by the gentleman from Illinois, with probably my colleague [Mr. McMULLIN] placed at the head of it. [Laughter.]

Mr. McMULLIN. My colleague knows that his colleague could not be put at the head of the committee without a departure from parliamentary rules.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I desire simply to suggest to the gentleman who has proposed to introduce this resolution, [Mr. WASHBURN,] that he so modify it as to embrace all interpolations which may have been made in any other papers on file, or in any other of the records of this House. My reason for this is the fact, which the Chair will well remember, that only four days ago an important interpolation had been made to a resolution that had been reported, fixing the compensation of some of the officers of this House. We get into a difficulty about it. The honorable gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CURTIS] had introduced a resolution, some week or two before, which was laid over. When the House came to act on that resolution, and when we were in the midst of the call of the roll on the yeas and nays on the passage of this resolution, it was discovered that an important interpolation had been made in it between the time of its introduction and the time of the vote being taken on it. The matter, however, was passed over.

Now, I know nothing about the merits of that alteration. I do not undertake to say that any fraud was intended. But certainly, sir, it is due to the integrity of this House, that this thing should be put a stop to. And I know no better way of doing so than to have this select committee—if it be instituted—instructed not to confine itself merely to the case now brought to our attention, but to investigate all the facts connected with these interpolations. Remarks were made on the occasion to which I have referred, which might have had a prejudicial effect on the reputation of the clerks. I have no doubt that they were entirely innocent—there was an interpolation in that joint resolution as it appeared to be evident there was. I know nothing of it. But I think it is due to them, as it is due to the members of this House, who do not tamper with the papers on file, that the facts should be known.

For one, I am unwilling that these things should go abroad to the country, casting an aspersion, to some extent, upon all the members of this House. Let us have the examination, and let the facts be made known. Let us understand who it is who make these interlineations, and what the purposes to be accomplished by them. I hope the gentleman will accept a modification of his resolution. I propose to offer the following amendment:

Add at the end of the resolution the following words:
And also in regard to all other cases of interpolations of bills of the House.

Mr. LETCHER. I do not rise to debate this resolution at all, but to give notice that to-morrow

I shall introduce a bill to repeal this bill—the Minnesota land bill.

Mr. McMULLIN. I trust that the gentleman from Illinois will not object to the amendment which has been introduced by the gentleman from Ohio. If it is right and proper to investigate the interpolation of the records in one case, it is so in another. And, sir, it has been well said by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. CAMPBELL,] that it is due to the character of the clerks of this body that this whole matter should be investigated. If I am right, or if the gentleman is right in saying that the select committee to which he referred has not the power conferred upon them to examine this case, I shall most cheerfully go for the adoption of the resolution, as submitted by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. WASHBURN,] for I am not disposed still further to encumber that select committee in the discharge of the duties they have to perform. If you investigate one case, investigate all, and therefore I hope the House will adopt the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio. Let the committee, to be appointed, investigate the first case, and report that to the House, and while the House is acting upon that, let them investigate the other, and make their report. These interpolations are unusual, and I regret that these things have occurred; but having occurred, they should be fully and completely investigated.

Mr. ORR. I believe the resolution should be adopted, and I demand the previous question.

Mr. MACE. I ask the gentleman from South Carolina to withdraw his call for the previous question, and allow me to submit to the House another resolution in reference to this matter.

Mr. ORR. I will hear it read.

The resolution was reported, as follows:

Resolved, also, That the select committee be instructed to inquire what quantity of land has been purchased, and by whom, at the proposed terminus of said Minnesota railroad since the bill passed.

Mr. ORR. As that resolution involves a collateral question only, which is not connected with this matter directly, and although I do not wish to be discourteous to the gentleman from Indiana, I must decline to withdraw my demand for the previous question.

The previous question was seconded; and the main question was ordered to be put.

The first question being upon the amendment offered by Mr. CAMPBELL, it was put; and the amendment was agreed to.

The blank in the resolution was then filled with the word "five."

The question was then taken upon the resolution as amended; and it was adopted.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I move to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. MACE. I now ask the unanimous consent of the House to allow me to offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That a select committee be appointed to inquire what quantity of land has been purchased, and by whom, at the proposed termination of the Minnesota railroad, since the bill passed.

Mr. STUART, of Michigan. I move to lay the resolution upon the table.

The SPEAKER. The resolution is not yet before the House.

Mr. STUART. Then I object to its introduction.

Mr. MACE. I move to suspend the rules.

ALABAMA RAILROAD BILL AGAIN.

The SPEAKER. That motion is not in order. A motion is already pending to suspend the rules, submitted by the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. COBB,] to enable him to move to discharge the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union from the further consideration of a bill granting the right of way and a donation of land to the State of Alabama, in aid of the construction of the Coosa and Tennessee River railroad, in said

State, leading from Gadsden to the Tennessee river, at or near Gunter's Landing.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. If the rules be suspended, and this bill taken up, will it be in order to move other railroad bills as amendments to this one?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will decide that question when it arises.

Mr. COBB. I do not know of any proposition to hitch on other railroad bills, other than these for Alabama, to this one, and I am sure that none will be entertained.

The yeas and nays were demanded and ordered on Mr. COBB's motion.

The question was then taken; and there were—yeas 96, nays 65; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abner, Allen, James C. Allen, Willis Allen, Ashe, Banks, Barksdale, Barry, Benton, Bliss, Breckinridge, Bugg, Campbell, Caruthers, Chamberlain, Chandler, Christian, Churchwell, Clark, Cobb, Cook, Culom, Curtis, John G. Davis, Thomas Davis, Dick, Disney, Dowdell, Eastman, Edgerton, Thomas D. Eliot, Everhart, Farley, Florence, Green, Greenwood, Sampson W. Harris, Harrison, Hunt, Houston, Howe, Hughes, Hunt, Johnson, Roland Jones, Knox, Lamb, Latham, Lindley, Macy, Maurice, Maxwell, Mayall, John G. Miller, Nichols, Norton, Oids, Andrew Oliver, Mordecai Oliver, Orr, Peckham, Pennington, Phelps, Phillips, Preston, Ready, Reese, Richardson, Riddle, Rowe, Russell, Sabin, Sapp, Seward, Shannon, Shower, Singleton, Samuel A. Smith, William R. Smith, George W. Smyth, Solles, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Hester L. Stevens, Stratton, Straub, John L. Taylor, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Thurston, Tweed, Upham, Vail, Elihu B. Washburne, Wells, Tappan Wentworth, Hendrick B. Wright, and Zollcoffer—96.

NAYS—Messrs. Bennett, Benson, Bocoek, Boyce, Bridges, Carpenter, Caskey, Colquitt, Corwin, Cox, Craige, Crocker, Dawson, Dickinson, Dunham, Ellison, English, Faulkner, Flagler, Franklin, Fuller, Giddings, Goode, Grey, Grover, Aaron Harlan, Haven, Hendricks, Hibbard, Hill, Ingersoll, Daniel T. Jones, George W. Jones, Kittredge, Kurtz, Letcher, Lilly, McCulloch, McMullin, McNair, Matteson, Millson, Morgan, Morrison, Murray, Noble, Packard, Parker, Bishop Perkins, Pringle, Puryear, David Ritchie, Ruffin, Shaw, Simmons, Skelton, William Smith, Andrew Stuart, John J. Taylor, Tront, Wade, Walley, Israel Washburn, Wheeler, and Daniel B. Wright—65.

So two-thirds not voting in the affirmative, the rules were not suspended.

ENROLLED BILLS.

Mr. HENN, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported the following Senate bills as correctly enrolled, which, thereupon, received the signature of the Speaker:

An act to confirm the claim of Dusuan de la Croix to a lot of land therein described;

An act for the relief of Charles Cooper and company;

An act authorizing Victor Morass to relinquish certain lands, and to enter the same quantity elsewhere;

An act for the relief of James Dunning;

An act for the relief of Joseph Mitchell;

An act for the relief of John Phagan;

An act for the relief of Ezra Williams;

An act for the relief of the legal representative of Joshua Kennedy, deceased; and

A resolution authorizing the Secretary of the Territory of New Mexico to adjust and pay to Juan C. Armigo, José L. Pereas, and James S. Collins, the amount by them loaned to the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of New Mexico, under the authority of a joint resolution of that body, approved June 17, 1851.

Mr. HOUSTON. I move that the rules of the House be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The question was taken; and, on a division, there were—yeas 86, noes 52.

So the motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. WALLEY in the chair.)

The CHAIRMAN. The first business before the committee is the consideration of House bill (No. 96) entitled "A bill making appropriations for the transportation of the United States mail by ocean steamers, and otherwise, during the fiscal year ending 30th June, 1855."

FORTIFICATION BILL.

Mr. HOUSTON. I ask for the consideration of House bill No. 116, entitled "A bill making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, and for repairs of barracks and quarters, for the year ending 30th June, 1855."

The motion was agreed to; and the bill was taken up for consideration.

Mr. HAVEN. I move to dispense with the first reading of the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The bill was then read by paragraphs for amendment.

Mr. HOUSTON, from the Committee of Ways and Means, offered the following amendment:

After line forty-two insert:

For armament of fortifications in the harbor of San Francisco, California, $130,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PHILLIPS. I move to insert after the amendment which has been just made an amount of $25,000 for carrying on the fortification of Fort Gaines, on Dauphin Island, Mobile harbor.

I hold in my hand a letter from the Secretary of War, recommending an appropriation of $25,000 or $30,000 for the construction of this work. A similar letter has also been presented to the Committee on Military Affairs, and I have their consent and approbation in offering this amendment.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I inquire if that is a new work entirely?

Mr. PHILLIPS. There has been a small appropriation heretofore made for the purchase of the site on Dauphin Island, and the balance to be applied to the construction of the work. Within the last few days the title has become perfect. The original appropriation was made many years ago, and the delay has been owing to the fact that until this time the title could not be perfected, in order to enable the Government to go on with the work. They have purchased one half of the island for a very small amount of money, and this appropriation is asked for to enable the Government to continue the work.

I will read a letter from the Secretary of War upon the subject, if any gentleman desires further information.

Mr. HAVEN. Will the gentleman now yield the floor to me?

Mr. PHILLIPS. I will.

Mr. HAVEN. I will move that the committee rise, for the purpose of closing debate upon this bill, and then I will move directly to go back again into committee.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. There will be no unnecessary debate upon this bill. I hope the question will be taken upon the amendment.

Mr. HAVEN. I submit the motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the Chairman (Mr. WALLEY) reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had the Union generally under consideration, and particularly the bill of the House (No. 116) "making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, and for repairs of barracks and quarters, for the year ending the 30th of June, 1855," and had come to no conclusion thereon.

Mr. HAVEN. I move the usual resolution to close debate upon the fortification bill in five minutes after its consideration shall again be resumed in committee.

The resolution was considered and adopted.

Mr. HAVEN. I move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. WALLEY in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of House bill (No. 116) known as the fortification bill, the pending question being upon the amendment offered by Mr. PHILLIPS.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I ask that the letters from the Secretary of War, to which the gentleman from Alabama alluded, may be read.

The letters were read, as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT, }
WASHINGTON, July 15, 1854. }

SIR: The United States having obtained a perfect title to the site of Fort Gaines, on Dauphin Island, Alabama, the Department is prepared to carry on the construction of the works. In addition to an unexpended balance of $13,000 available for the work, the chief engineer reports that $25,000 or $30,000 can be expended during the coming season with advantage.

I have, therefore, the honor to request that an amendment to appropriate either of the last named sums be made to the fortification bill.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,
JEFF. DAVIS, Secretary of War.

Hon. C. J. FAULKNER, Chairman Committee on Military Affairs, House of Representatives.

WAR DEPARTMENT, }
WASHINGTON, July 14, 1854. }

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 12th instant, asking such a recommendation from this Department as will enable you to move an amendment to provide an appropriation for the construction of a work on Dauphin Island, Mobile harbor.

In reply, I have to state that the operations on Fort Gaines, on Dauphin Island, have been delayed by the difficulty of obtaining a perfect title to the site, in consequence of which the balance available for the work, $13,000, has remained unexpended for some time.

A satisfactory title having recently been obtained, operations can be commenced, and an appropriation of $25,000 or $30,000, in addition to the balance on hand, can be advantageously expended on the work during the coming season; and I have sent to the Committee on Military Affairs a recommendation for that appropriation.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,
JEFF. DAVIS, Secretary of War.

Hon. P. PHILLIPS, House of Representatives.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. To me this seems to be a loose way of commencing so large a work as the one under consideration. We should have before us estimates and plans of some kind as to the particular kind of work which it is proposed to construct there. In my judgment, the more prudent course would be to let this matter go over to the next session, now only three or four months distant. In the mean time, let the Department make estimates of the entire cost—of course, fixing on a plan for the construction of the work—all to be submitted at the next session. The Secretary of War does not even say to us whether he deems the erection of this fortification necessary. Nor does he say anything in his communication as to the plan of the work, or anything as to the probable cost. He merely states that, in his opinion, $25,000 would be advantageously expended; and this statement he does not make of his own suggestion, or because he thought the work right and proper, but in reply to the request of the gentleman to make such estimate as would enable him to move an amendment in order to this bill.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Mr. Chairman, a few words, I think, will satisfy my friend from Tennessee. His last observation I shall answer first. He says that the Secretary of War has only sent in this requisition in answer to a request from myself. The Secretary states in his letter the reason why requisition was not made from his Department for this appropriation when the others were made. It was simply because of the fact that it was only within the few past days that the Government's title to the site has been perfected. The Secretary would not make a requisition on the Government for an appropriation while the title to the site remained under the shadow of a cloud. When the title was perfected, he then made the requisition; and it has been made within the last few days only, because the title to the site was only perfected within the last few days, and not because I, or any other member of the committee, asked him to do it as a favor.

Another objection. He says that there ought to be some plan fixed on before we go to work. Does the gentleman suppose that an appropriation would be asked for to construct a fortification unless a plan had been adopted by the Department of the Government to which this matter had been intrusted? Does the gentleman suppose that the Secretary could be so ignorant of his duties as to come to this House, and ask for appropriations for the construction of fortifications, the plan of which had not been agreed on? Certainly not. For years past it has been determined to locate a fortification at this important point, the mouth of Mobile harbor. The plan has been completed and adopted, and appropriation is now asked for the purpose of carrying it out.

This is not a new thing; and I will say to my friend, that if there is a point on our whole Gulf coast which requires defense, it is the very one for which we are now asking this appropriation. It is one of the most vulnerable and exposed ports of the whole coast; and in case of any difficulty arising between us and any maritime Power, and the seat of war were the Gulf of Mexico, Mobile would be the city most liable to attack from the enemy. An important trade and commerce find their protection there. We therefore ask the Government to carry out the recommendation which has been made by the Department, to which the construction of these works are intrusted. I ask for tellers on the amendment.

Tellers were not ordered.

The question was taken; and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HOUSTON. I am instructed by the Committee of Ways and Means to propose the following amendment, to come in after the last clause of the bill:

For contingent expenses of fortifications not herein mentioned, the preservation of their sites, the protection of titles and repairs of sudden damages to forts, $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was then laid aside to be reported to the House.

SENATE AMENDMENTS TO THE INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee next proceeded to consider the amendments of the Senate to House bill No. 46, "making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending June 30, 1855."

The first amendment was reported, as follows: Page two, line fourteen, after the word "dollars," insert the following proviso:

Provided, That the President may, from time to time, in his discretion, remove or change the location of any of the superintendencies now or hereafter to be established by law: And provided further, That whenever the President may order the transfer of the duties of superintendent of Indian affairs from the Governor of the Territory of Minnesota, the salary of said Governor shall thereafter be $2,500 per annum.

Mr. HOUSTON. I move that the committee do now rise, for the purpose of limiting debate on this bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. JONES, of Tennessee, having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, the Chairman of the committee reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration House bill No. 46, with the Senate amendments thereto, and had come to no conclusion thereon.

Mr. HOUSTON submitted the usual resolution closing debate on said bill within five minutes after its consideration should have been resumed by the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. HOUSTON. I now move that the rules of the House be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to.

The rules were accordingly suspended, and the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. WALLEY in the chair.)

The CHAIRMAN. The question pending, when the committee rose, was on the first amendment to the Indian appropriation bill, which has been reported.

Mr. HOUSTON. The first portion of that amendment provides that the President may from time to time, in his discretion, remove or change the location of any of the superintendencies now or hereafter to be established. In that portion of it the Committee of Ways and Means recommend a concurrence. But the committee recommend that the balance of that amendment be stricken out. That is, after the word "law," in the seventeenth line, strike out all down to the twenty-first line. That clause gives the President the power to make a division of the duties of the superintendent and Governor of the Territory of Minnesota. The committee recommend a non-concurrence in it.

The question was taken on striking out the following clause:

And provided further, That whenever the President may order the transfer of the duties of superintendent of Indian affairs from the Governor of the Territory of Minnesota, the salary of said Governor shall thereafter be $2,500 per annum.

The motion to strike out was agreed to.

The question recurred on agreeing to the amendment of the Senate, as amended, the amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The second amendment:

Page two, after line twenty-five, insert the following:
For pay of five Indian sub-agents for California, at an annual salary of $1,500 each, $7,500.
For pay of four Indian sub-agents in Oregon Territory, at an annual salary of $1,000 each, $4,000.

Mr. HOUSTON. The Committee of Ways and Means have recommended a concurrence in the second Senate amendment, with an amendment. They propose to reduce the number of sub-agents from five to three, and to reduce the amount from $7,500 to $4,500.

The amendment, if so amended, will read:

For pay of three Indian sub-agents for California, at an annual salary of $1,500 each, $4,500.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment of the Senate, as amended, was then concurred in.

Mr. ORR. I offer the following amendment, to come in immediately after the amendment which has just been concurred in:

For the pay of two Indian sub-agents in the Territory of New Mexico, at an annual salary of $1,000 each, $2,000.

The appropriation has been recommended by the Governor of the Territory of New Mexico.

The question being put upon the amendment, Mr. WHEELER called for a division of the House.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I hope the gentleman from New York [Mr. WHEELER] will withdraw his opposition to this amendment, when I assure him that it is the earnest wish of the Delegate from that Territory, who cannot speak a word of our language; and it is also exactly such a provision as is made for the Territory of Washington. There are numerous tribes of Indians in New Mexico, and I hope the gentleman and the committee will not object to the amendment. It is needful. There are no sub-agents there now. There are in that Territory three tribes of Camanches alone. The Delegate from that Territory went to the gentleman from South Carolina, [Mr. ORR.], who is the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, and assured him of its necessity, and desired him to attend to the matter.

There are four sub-agents allowed to Oregon Territory, three to California, and two to Washington Territory, and we ask for this new Territory of New Mexico, only two sub-agents.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. If my colleague will allow me, I will say that, independent of all statements of any individuals, the census shows conclusively that he is precisely right in his statements.

The question being on Mr. ORR's amendment, Mr. SMITH, of Virginia, called for tellers. Tellers were not ordered.

Mr. ORR. I stated to the committee—I do not know whether I was heard—that the Governor of the Territory of New Mexico had assured me that it was necessary that these sub-agents should be appointed to enable him to discharge the functions of superintendent of the Indians in that Territory. I have no feeling whatever in relation to the matter. If the committee do not choose to adopt the amendment they can let it alone.

The amendment was not agreed to.

EXPLANATION.

Mr. STEVENS, of Michigan. A circumstance has occurred in the House this morning which induces me to appeal to the committee to permit me to make a personal explanation.

Mr. WALSH. I object.

Mr. STEVENS. I appeal to the gentleman to withdraw his objection.

Mr. WALSH. If a charge has been made against the gentleman, I will withdraw my objection, but not otherwise.

Mr. STEVENS. A charge has been made against me, and it is for that reason that I desire to make the explanation. It has been stated to me that my name has been connected with the matter upon which a special committee has been appointed this morning, in reference to the alteration of the records of the House.

I, as the member of the committee on Public Lands who reported the bill to the House, feel myself called upon to make a statement of such facts as have come within my knowledge, or so far as I personally know them—and I do so upon my honor—in reference to these alterations.

After this bill had been sent to the committee of which I am a member, and after it had been referred particularly to me by that committee, gentlemen who were connected with the bill called upon me, and requested that before it was presented to the committee for their report, certain alterations should be made in the third section. They explained the alterations which they desired made—of the design and object of the alterations I was then, and am even now ignorant. One was to effect legislation in Minnesota in regard to lands which might be granted by Congress to that Territory. To do so, I myself struck out the word "future." The other alteration was in reference to the construction that might be given to the word "or" as it then stood in the bill. After hearing what was said on the subject, I thought it proper to strike out that word, and in its place to insert "and."

I knew, Mr. Chairman, that I had stricken out the word "future," and I thought that I had substituted "and" for "or." I presented the bill to the committee. It was adopted, and I was instructed to report it to the House. I did so. It passed this body, and went to the Senate. When in the other branch of Congress, my attention was again called to it; and it was remarked that, as it was before the Senate, the bill did not contain the alteration which I supposed that I had made. I then conferred with one or two members of the Senate on the subject. They rather spoke to me on the subject, and I told them frankly that when I reported the bill from my committee I had made the alteration. When I asked for leave to report the bill to the House, I told them, in addition, that I had stated the substance of it, and, as I thought, the alteration was made, and that, if it were possible, I should be glad if the change indicated were made. This was the last I heard of it while it was in the Senate. Subsequently one of the clerks of the Senate, General Patton, came to me in the lobby, just in front of the center door, and holding out the bill to me, asked whether it was right. On looking at it, I replied that I was of opinion it had passed this House different from what it was then. I think that I said: "General, you will find, by looking at the original draft, that the word 'and' is substituted for 'or.'" Asking me to go to the clerk's room, I went with him there, and to the desk of Mr. Sproule. The matter was talked over, and there I made the statement that I had supposed I had altered the original draft in the way indicated, and that when I voted for it on its passage, I was under the belief it contained that very alteration. The question then arose, Could the alteration be made? (And I might remark just here that several Senators, whose names I shall not mention, stated that these were mere verbal alterations, and might be made, as such alterations were frequently made.)

Mr. HUNT. Name them. It is your duty to do so as part of the truth.

Mr. STEVENS. I shall do what is honorable; and I shall do no more. The clerks referred to, at once said that they did not know that they had the power to make the alteration. After further conversation, the matter was adjourned to Mr. Forney's room. I went with General Patton and Mr. Sproule to Mr. Forney's room, and made a statement similar to the one which I have already given. The matter was discussed, and Mr. Forney asked General Patton how it was about such things? General Patton replied: "We frequently make such alterations." Mr. Forney then said that perhaps it had better be made, or something like that. I then left the room. I presume the alteration was made in consequence of what took place on that occasion.

I have stated this matter fairly and candidly. I wish to withhold nothing. I wish to state everything which took place, however much I may be implicated in the transaction. However much I may have erred as a member of this House and a gentleman, I wish gentlemen to know it. If I have erred, the error is one of judgment and not of the heart. I intended to do nothing wrong. I am fully convinced that Colonel Forney, in yielding his assent to the alteration, supposed that he was only doing that which was right.

I wish to say here, that that was the first and last interview I had with Colonel Forney upon the subject. I never had talked to him before about the bill, so help me God. I do not know what was the design of the gentlemen who spoke to me about having the bill changed from its original form. I allude to those who spoke to me before the bill was reported from the committee. I say that the word "further" was stricken out by me. I intended to have stricken out the word "or," and inserted "and" in its place. I was not aware it was left out until I was informed by some gentleman of the Senate, or by some person who had learned the fact from the Senate.

Mr. FAULKNER. I wish to ask the gentleman from Michigan if he has any local or personal interest in the matter?

Mr. STEVENS. I have none in the world, except that the road connects the waters of the Mississippi with the waters of Lake Superior by steam navigation, and thereby benefits my State. That is all the interest I have in the world, and the alteration of this bill cannot affect that general purpose at all.

Mr. McNAIR. Do I understand the gentleman as saying that he ordered this thing done?

Mr. STEVENS. I said this: If the thing could be done that I should be highly gratified to have it done.

Mr. HAVEN. Is the gentleman from Michigan through?

Mr. STEVENS. One word more. I was asked if I had any interest in this matter. I have endeavored to explain that I have not, except so far as it benefits my State; and in benefiting my State it benefits a great many other States. The alteration which has been made in this case, as I understand it, simply gives to the companies which are now organized, but were not organized at the time this bill passed, an opportunity to compete in the Legislature for a portion of this land. That is all the difference which the change makes.

Mr. HAVEN. I hope the committee will go on with the business before us. These statements will be embodied in the testimony to be submitted to us by the committee.

Mr. STUART, of Michigan. Will the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. STEVENS] state whether he was not accompanied by a Senator from Iowa at the time he paid his visit to the Clerk?

Mr. SOLLERS. I shall object to gentlemen asking any further questions. We have already appointed a committee for the purpose of investigating this matter, and reporting their action to the House.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL—AGAIN.

Fourth amendment:

For pay of three Indian agents in Washington Territory, for six months, ending June 30, 1854, $2,250.

Mr. HOUSTON. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a concurrence in that amendment.

The amendment was concurred in.

Fifth amendment:

For pay of two Indian sub-agents in Washington Territory, for six months, ending June 30, 1854, $1,000.

Mr. HOUSTON. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a concurrence in that amendment.

The amendment was concurred in.

Sixth amendment:

For salaries of six agents, authorized by this act, at the rate of $1,500 per annum each, the sum of $9,000.

Mr. HOUSTON. The committee recommend a concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

Seventh amendment:

For salary of five Indian agents, of the second class, according to existing laws, at the rate, in future, of $500 each per annum, $2,500.

Mr. HOUSTON. That is an amendment proposing to increase the pay of these officers. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a non-concurrence in it.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Eighth amendment:

For pay of six interpreters for the Indian tribes in Washington Territory, $3,000.

Mr. HOUSTON. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

Ninth amendment:

For pay of six interpreters for the Indian tribes in Washington Territory, for six months, ending June 30, 1854, $1,500.

Mr. HOUSTON. The Committee of Ways and Means recommended the striking out of the word $500 in this amendment, so as to make the appropriation $1,000. We did so in pursuance of an estimate submitted by Governor Stevens, which I hold in my hand. He estimates "for incidental expenses, $500; for six interpreters for half a year, $1,000." An examination, however, and also from having had my attention called to the fact by the Indian Bureau, I am satisfied that Governor Stevens has made a mistake in his estimate, and that the sum ought to be $1,500. The yearly salary of an interpreter is $500; and, therefore, the salary for half a year of six of them is $1,500. The Senate were right in their amendment, and the estimate of Governor Stevens was erroneous. The Committee of Ways and Means, therefore, recommend a concurrence in the Senate amendment.

The question was put; and the amendment was concurred in.

Tenth amendment:

For erecting buildings for Indian agents in Washington Territory, $5,000.

Mr. HOUSTON. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a non-concurrence in that amendment of the Senate, for the reason that they suppose the appropriation is premature, to say the least of it. Up to this time there have been no treaties made with the Indian tribes in Washington Territory; and no sites have been selected where the agents' buildings can be erected. I understand, however, that my friend from South Carolina has a communication on the subject, which I have no objection to hear read.

Mr. ORR. It is a communication from Governor Stevens, addressed to me as chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs. His views are in favor of the appropriation being made. He says:

"I also stated what seemed to me strong reasons for an appropriation for agency buildings. The best positions for the three agencies are: for Puget Sound, the south end of Whilby's Island; for the Central agency, the site of Walker's and Bet's mission; for the Eastern agencies, opposite Hell Gate, in the St. Mary's valley. There are absolutely no buildings whatever for these purposes. It is proposed they shall be plain and simple. But there will be required in each case accommodation for the agent and his interpreter, a room for Indian goods, a room for the reception and accommodation of Indians visiting the agencies on business. In addition to which, for the Central and Eastern agencies, a corral will be required for animals. "The sum asked of $5,000 has been based on a careful calculation of the minimum sum required to get simply comfortable shelter for the Indian officers, &c., where no buildings now exist. I think, by care in managing the business, buildings can be put up which will answer for several years; and it is probable that hereafter repairs and additions can be made at very trifling expense."

I concurred with the gentleman from Alabama, in the impropriety of making any appropriation until I had a conversation with Governor Stevens. The sum of $5,000 proposed will cover the expenses of the agency buildings; and it is necessary that there should be some buildings at these agencies.

Mr. HOUSTON. I desire to ask the gentleman from South Carolina one question. Is this sum of $5,000, intended to commence the erection of permanent buildings at the agencies, or is it necessary for providing temporary accommodations?

Mr. ORR. The $5,000 will be sufficient to complete the buildings as at present advised.

Mr. LANE, of Oregon. I am unwilling to ask money for anything which is not right. But I want to offer, now, an amendment to that amendment. The Indians in Oregon are more numerous than they are in Washington Territory, and they give us more trouble to take care of them. Agency buildings are necessary in Washington Territory, and will be more necessary in Oregon, and I therefore propose to amend the amendment of the gentleman from South Carolina, by adding an equal appropriation for the construction of suitable agency buildings in the Territory of Oregon.

Mr. PECKHAM. I wish to inquire of the gentleman from Oregon whether there have heretofore been any buildings of that sort for these agencies in his Territory?

Mr. LANE. There have been superintendency buildings. We have Indians in different portions of the Territory, but, up to this time, I think there has not been any appropriation for those buildings.

Mr. HOUSTON. Probably the gentleman from New York will be answered to his satisfaction if he will look to the item of the original bill which immediately precedes the place where this amendment comes in. He will find there an appropriation of $10,000 for the building of agencies and the repairs thereof. The amendment proposed applies to the Washington Territory alone. An appropriation of some amount for that purpose is usually made. We have made them in all Indian appropriation bills, sometimes more, and sometimes less; and the money is applied indiscriminately, to any Indian country, wherever the Department conceives a necessity for such an application exists.

The question was taken; and Mr. LANE's amendment to the amendment was not agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN then announced the question to be upon non-concurring in the amendment of the Senate.

Mr. HOUSTON. I would suggest to the Chair that if he will put the question directly upon concurring in the amendment of the Senate, it may be all done by one vote. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a non-concurrence; but if the motion to non-concur should be lost, the question would then have to be taken upon concurring in the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will adopt the suggestion of the gentleman from Alabama, and put the question upon concurring in the amendment of the Senate.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I desire to ask the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means if he still recommends a non-concurrence?

Mr. HOUSTON. That is the recommendation of the Committee of Ways and Means. I will state, however, that information is presented by Governor Stevens's letter, which certainly was not before the committee.

Mr. WALSH. I would inquire whether the Committee of Ways and Means has had a meeting since the letter has been received?

Mr. HOUSTON. Certainly not. The letter has only just been brought out a few minutes ago.

The question being upon concurring in the Senate amendment,

Mr. FLORENCE demanded tellers.

Tellers were not ordered.

The amendment was then non-concurred in.

Eleventh amendment:

For the reappropriation for expenses of the removal of the Catawba Indians to the west of the Mississippi river and of settling and subsisting them one year in their new homes, provided that a home shall first be obtained for them, and that they shall be removed only with their own consent, $5,000.

Mr. HOUSTON. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a concurrence in that amendment. I have a short extract from a letter from the Department, which I will read, if required.

The amendment was concurred in.

Twelfth amendment:

After "1852," in line one hundred and thirty-two, insert the words "as stipulated in the ninth article of said treaty;" so that the paragraph would read:

For payment to the Chickasaw nation in full of the expenses of their commissioners in negotiating the treaty of the 22d of June, 1852, as stipulated in the ninth article of said treaty, $1,500.

Mr. HOUSTON. That is to make more specific the reference to the treaty. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

Thirteenth amendment:

For first of ten installments for the purchase of goods, provisions, and agricultural implements, stipulated in the sixth article of the treaty of the 27th of July, 1853, $18,000.

Mr. HOUSTON. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a concurrence in the amendment. It is due under provision of a recent treaty which has not yet been published. We take it on trust that the Senate have done right.

The amendment was concurred in.

Fourteenth amendment:

For expenses of the transportation of the first of ten installments of goods, provisions, and agricultural implements, stipulated in the sixth article of the treaty of the 27th of July, 1853, $5,000; Provided, That the goods, provisions, and agricultural implements which may be purchased and transported, out of any moneys hereby appropriated, shall not be delivered until the said tribes of Indians shall have assented to the amendments of the Senate of the United States to the said treaty, on account of which they are procured.

Mr. HOUSTON. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a concurrence in the amendment.

The amendment was concurred in.

Mr. HOUSTON. I am instructed by the Committee of Ways and Means to move the following amendment, to come in after the fourteenth, which has just been concurred in. It is made necessary by treaties which were ratified by the Senate a few weeks since:

Delawares.—For the expenses of surveying the lands, as provided in the second article of the treaty of the 7th of May, 1854, $11,146 95.

For the first of eight equal installments for payment of five chiefs, per third and sixth articles of the treaty of the 6th of May, 1854, $1,250.

For the first of two installments per fourth article of the treaty of the 6th of May, 1854, $74,000.

For the purchase of four sections of land for the Christian Indians, per thirteenth article of the treaty of the 6th of May, 1854, $6,400.

For payment, under the direction of the President of the United States, the sum of $5,600: Provided, That the said Christian Indians shall relieve the United States from all claims or demands for lands or money arising under the third and fourth articles of the agreement of the 8th of November, 1823, made with said Indians, the payment of $6,400 and $5,600, as above provided, being in lieu thereof, and in full consideration of the same.

Iowas.—For the expenses of surveying, as provided in the third article of the treaty of the 17th of May, 1854, $1,987 20.

For the payment of a portion of the $157,500 due the Iowas, under the second clause of the second article of the treaty of the 19th of October, 1838, to be applied as an agricultural fund, per ninth article of the treaty of the 17th of May, 1854, $50,000: Provided, That the appropriation herein made "for interest on $157,500, at five per centum, stipulated in the second article of the treaty of the 19th of October, 1838," be reduced to the sum of $5,375.

For the payment in consideration of removal to their reservation, and of a release of all claims per twelfth article of the treaty of the 17th of May, 1854, $3,000.

Kickapoos.—For the expenses of selecting the reservation provided in the first article of the treaty of the 18th of May, 1854, and for surveying and making the exterior lines of the same, $1,000.

For the first installment of interest at five per centum on $100,000 for education, per second article of the treaty of the 18th of May, 1854, $5,000.

For the payment of this sum as the first installment in money, per second article of the treaty of the 18th of May, 1854, $25,000.

For the payment for improvements and the expenses of appraising the same on the land ceded, per fourth article of the treaty of the 18th of May, 1854, $15,000.

For removal and subsistence, and in consideration of a release of all claims, per eighth article of the treaty of the 18th of May, 1854, $20,000.

Sacs and Foxes of Missouri.—For expenses of selecting the reservation provided for in the first article of the treaty of the 18th of May, 1854, and for surveying and marking the exterior lines of the same, $500.

For the first of four installments per second article of the treaty of the 18th of May, 1854, $15,000.

For removal and subsistence, and in satisfaction of all claims and demands, per sixth article of the treaty of the 18th of May, 1854, $5,000.

For defraying the expenses of the Creek delegation now in the city of Washington, and with whom a treaty has lately been concluded, $1,100 55.

The amendment was agreed to.

Fifteenth amendment:

For the expenses of running and marking the eastern boundary line of the Creek country west of the Arkansas, $8,000.

Mr. HOUSTON. The committee recommend a concurrence in the amendment.

The amendment was concurred in.

Sixteenth amendment:

Navajos.—For fulfilling treaty stipulations with the Navajos, pursuant to the requirements of the tenth article of the treaty of September 9, 1849, $5,000.

Mr. HOUSTON. In submitting estimates in the early part of the session, this item was not included when it should have been; but it has been estimated for since. The committee recommend a concurrence in the amendment.

The amendment was concurred in.

Seventeenth amendment:

For fulfilling the stipulations contained in the fifth article of the treaty of the 16th of March, 1854, $41,000.

Mr. HOUSTON. This is an appropriation for carrying out the stipulations of a new treaty. The committee recommend a concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

Eighteenth amendment:

For surveying and marking the boundary of the reservation of land stipulated in the first article of the treaty of the 16th of March, 1854, $1,200.

Mr. HOUSTON. The appropriation here recommended is also for carrying out a treaty stipulation. The committee recommend a concurrence. The amendment was concurred in.

Mr. HOUSTON. My attention has been called to an omission which I had overlooked myself. The Senate amend the bill by striking out the following words, from line four hundred and four-teen to four hundred and seventeen:

For agricultural implements, during the pleasure of the President, stipulated in the fourth article of the treaty of the 15th of July, 1830, $500.

The last two amendments concurred in were substituted by the Senate in lieu thereof. The committee recommend the striking out of this clause.

The amendment was agreed to.

The nineteenth amendment was to strike out the following words:

Ottos and Missourias.—For education, during the pleasure of the President, stipulated in the fourth article of the treaty of the 21st of September, 1833, $500.

Mr. HOUSTON. The committee recommend a concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

Twentieth amendment:

For fulfilling the stipulations contained in the fifth article of the treaty of the 15th of March, 1854, $20,000.

Twenty-first amendment:

For surveying and marking the boundary of the reservation of land stipulated in the first article of the treaty of the 15th of March, 1854, $300.

Mr. HOUSTON. The committee recommend a concurrence in these amendments.

The amendments were concurred in.

Twenty-second amendment was to strike out of the following clause the words "twenty-seventh," and insert in lieu thereof the word "twentieth:"

For interest to be paid as annuity, on $200,000, at six per cent. per annum, stipulated in the resolution of the Senate of the 27th of May, 1836, $12,000.

Mr. HOUSTON. The committee recommend a concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

Twenty-third amendment:

Rogue Rivers.—For the first of sixteen installments in blankets, clothing, farming utensils, and stock, stipulated in the third article of the treaty of the 10th of September, 1853, $2,500.

Twenty-fourth amendment:

For the purchase of agricultural implements, clothing, and such other articles as may be deemed conducive to the comfort and necessities of said Indians, and for the expenses of such permanent improvements as may have been made by claimants to land on the reserve named in the second article of the treaty, stipulated in the third article of the treaty of the 10th of September, 1853, $5,000.

Twenty-fifth amendment:

For payment for the property of the whites destroyed during the late war, stipulated in the third article of the treaty of the 10th of September, 1853, $15,000.

Twenty-sixth amendment:

For compensation and expenses of commissioners, stipulated in the third article of the treaty of the 10th of September, 1853, $5,000.

Twenty-seventh amendment:

For the erection of three dwelling-houses for the principal chiefs of said tribe, stipulated in the fourth article of the treaty of the 10th of September, 1853, $1,500: Provided, That no payment shall be made to said Rogue River Indians, or to claimants referred to in these provisions, until said tribe shall have assented to the amendments of the Senate of the United States to the treaty, on account of which the several sums are appropriated.

Mr. HOUSTON. These amounts are all due under the recent treaty with Indian tribes, and the Committee of Ways and Means recommend a concurrence.

The question was taken on the twenty-third, twenty-fourth, twenty-fifth, twenty-sixth, and twenty-seventh amendments, and they were severally concurred in.

Twenty-eighth and twenty-ninth amendments:

Page thirty, line seven hundred and thirteen, strike out the word "third," and insert in lieu thereof the word "fourth," and after the word "installments" strike out the words "of interest;" so as to make the clause read:

For fourth of fifty installments, at the rate of five per centum, &c.

Mr. HOUSTON. The twenty-eighth and twenty-ninth, thirtieth and thirty-first, thirty-second, and thirty-third, thirty-fourth and thirty-fifth amendments, commencing at line seven hundred and thirteen, and going down to line seven hundred and thirty-four, are all of the same character. They are made necessary by the two Houses of Congress having anticipated the installment due to these Indians in the deficiency bill. The third installment was provided for in that bill as it passed the House. And these amendments are simply to make the number of the installments conform to that which is now due to the Indians. Let the vote be taken on the whole of them together.

Thirtieth and thirty-first amendments:

Page thirty, line seven hundred and eighteen, strike out the word "third" and insert "fourth," and strike out the words "of interest."

The clause, as amended, reads:

For fourth of fifty installments, at the rate of five per centum, &c.

Thirty-second and thirty-third amendments:

Page thirty-one, line seven hundred and twenty-four, strike out and insert as in the foregoing.

Thirty-fourth and thirty-fifth amendments:

Page thirty-one, line seven hundred and twenty-nine, strike out and insert as in the foregoing.

The question was then taken on the twenty-eighth, twenty-ninth, thirtieth, thirty-first, thirty-second, thirty-third, thirty-fourth, and thirty-fifth amendments; and they were severally concurred in.

Thirty-sixth amendment:

That the President be authorized to confirm to the Sioux of Minnesota, forever, the reserve on the Minnesota river, now occupied by them, upon such conditions as he may deem just. And further, that it be agreed between the United States and the Sioux bands of Indians, that should it, any time hereafter, be considered by the United States as a proper policy to establish farms among and for the benefit of said Indians, it shall be discretionary with the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to change the annuities herein provided for, or any part thereof, into a fund for that purpose.

Mr. HOUSTON. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a concurrence in that amendment.

The amendment was concurred in.

Thirty-seventh amendment:

For defraying the expenses of witnesses, marshal, attorney, notary, interpreter, and stationery, and copying evidence in the investigation of the official conduct of Alexander Ramsay, late Governor of Minnesota, $720.

Mr. HOUSTON. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

Thirty-eighth amendment:

For services of Robert A. Matthews, for copying the proceedings and evidence in said investigation, under employment of Richard M. Young, one of the commissioners, $250.

Mr. HOUSTON. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

Thirty-ninth amendment:

For paying the expenses and fees of witnesses summoned in said investigation, by the United States, at the instance of Alexander Ramsey, $350.

Mr. HOUSTON. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

Fortieth amendment:

For payment to Thompson Connolly and James Connolly, children of John Connolly, deceased, $200.

Mr. HOUSTON. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

Forty-first amendment:

Stockbridges.—For the removal of the Stockbridge Indians to the country west of the Mississippi river, which has been selected for and approved by them, and for subsistence for one year, stipulated in the eighth article of the treaty of 24th November, 1848, $7,000.

Mr. HOUSTON. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

Forty-second amendment:

Umpquas. (Cow Creek Band.)—For first of twenty installments in blankets, clothing, provisions, and stock, stipulated in the third article of the treaty of the 19th of September, 1853, $550.

Mr. HOUSTON. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a concurrence. The amount in this and the following amendment is due under the treaty of 1853.

The amendment was concurred in.

Forty-third amendment:

For the purchase of blankets, clothing, and goods, stipulated in the first clause of the third article of the treaty of 19th September, 1853, $1,000.

Mr. HOUSTON. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

Forty-fourth amendment:

For the erection of two dwelling-houses, plowing and fencing a field, and purchasing seed, stipulated in the fourth article of the treaty of the 19th of September, 1853, $1,000.

Mr. HOUSTON. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

Forty-fifth amendment:

Utahs.—For fulfilling treaty stipulations with the Utahs, pursuant to the requirements of the eighth article of the treaty of December 30, 1849, $5,000.

Mr. HOUSTON. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

Forty-sixth amendment:

In line nine hundred and forty-one, under the title "Winnebagoes," insert the words "fifth article of the," so as to make the clause read—

For twenty-third of twenty-seven installments, for pay of two physicians, stipulated in the fifth article of the treaty of the 15th of September, 1832, $400.

Mr. HOUSTON. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

Forty-seventh amendment:

For the expenses of holding a council with, and making presents of goods and provisions to, the Blackfeet, Gros Ventres, and other wild tribes of Indians, immediately within or adjacent to the eastern boundary of Washington Territory, $80,000.

Mr. HOUSTON. When this bill passed the House, I resisted that appropriation, and my opinion has not changed since that time, although the Senate has put it in; but the Committee of Ways and Means recommend a concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

Forty-eighth amendment:

To pay Andrew Taylor for his reservation of six hundred and forty acres of land at Clitico-Old town, on the waters of the Tennessee river, $14,720, with interest from the 23d day of August, 1843.

Mr. HOUSTON. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

Forty-ninth amendment:

For adjusting difficulties and preventing outbreaks among the Indians in Oregon Territory, $10,000.

Mr. HOUSTON. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

Fiftieth amendment:

For general incidental expenses of the Indian service in Oregon Territory, $10,000.

Mr. HOUSTON. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

Fifty-first amendment:

For expenses of insurance and transportation of annuities payable to Indian tribes, $3,000.

Mr. HOUSTON. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

Fifty-second amendment:

For general incidental expenses of the Indian service in Washington Territory, $15,000.

Mr. HOUSTON. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

Fifty-third amendment:

For general incidental expenses of the Indian service in the Territory of New Mexico, $25,000.

Mr. HOUSTON. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

Fifty-fourth amendment:

For general incidental expenses of the Indian service in the Territory of Utah, $20,000.

Mr. HOUSTON. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

Fifty-fifth amendment:

For general incidental expenses of the Indian service in the Territory of Utah, during the year ending June 30, 1854, $10,000.

Mr. HOUSTON. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

Fifty-sixth amendment:

For general incidental expenses of the Indian service in Washington Territory, for six months ending June 30, 1854, $5,000.

Mr. HOUSTON. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

Fifty-seventh amendment:

For payment of balance due for transportation of presents, goods, and provisions, to the Camanches, Kioways, and other Indians on the Arkansas river, $1,200.

Mr. HOUSTON. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

Fifty-eighth amendment:

To pay for certain goods borrowed by late agent, J. S. Watrous, to fulfill treaty stipulations with the Chippewas, to be replaced out of annuity goods, but which, with the agency building, were consumed by fire, in May, 1853, $1,136 03.

Mr. HOUSTON. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

Fifty-ninth amendment:

For paying to the Winnebago nation of Indians of certain unexpended balances of appropriations under various treaties, on account of annuities, education, provisions, goods, &c., $40,004 69.

Mr. HOUSTON. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a concurrence in that amendment with an amendment. They have instructed me to move to insert, in the one thousand and fourteenth line, after the word "payment," the words "in full;" so that the amendment will read:

For payment in full to the Winnebago Indians, &c.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was then concurred in.

Sixtieth amendment:

For payment of balance found due the Creek Indians for losses sustained during the war with Great Britain, by that portion of the tribe who were friendly to, and cooperated with the United States, in addition to the appropriation of the 30th of August, 1852, $258 10.

Mr. HOUSTON. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a concurrence in that amendment.

Mr. HOWE. I move to amend the amendment by adding the following:

Provided, That the proper accounting officers of the Department of the Interior be authorized and directed to audit and settle the claim of John Randon, deceased, a friendly Creek Indian, (of the half blood), for losses sustained and property destroyed by the hostile Creek Indians in the war of 1813-14 in such manner, and upon such terms as may be just and equitable, the amount when so ascertained to be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the heirs and legal representatives of the said John Randon: Provided, That the amount shall not exceed the sum of $5,925.

Mr. HOUSTON. I will ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania if this is the report of one of the standing committees of the House?

Mr. HOWE. It is not.

Mr. HOUSTON. I mean to say, has any committee of the House examined the claim?

Mr. HOWE. It has been examined by myself, but not by any committee. The reason why I propose this amendment at the present time is, that the Senate amendment is for a claim of the same description as the one for which I have offered my amendment.

Some days ago this claim was placed in my hands for examination as a member of the Committee on Military Affairs. It was upon the memorial of Peter Randon, the son and administrator of John Randon, deceased. The history of the matter is substantially this: It appears that during the Creek war of 1813 and 1814 a portion of the Creek nation remained friendly to the United States. They cooperated with us in fighting our battles. During the war depredations were committed upon the property of the friendly Indians by those who were hostile to us to a very considerable amount, and it was understood, at the time of the treaty between the Creek Indians and the United States Government, that the friendly Indians should be indemnified for their losses. No appropriation, however, was made for carrying this understanding or agreement into effect until a claim was presented in 1815, by a Creek Indian named Samuel Mannac, for $12,595, which was considered by Congress, and the War Department authorized and directed to settle the claim upon just and equitable principles; and his claim was paid in full in May, 1816. Congress, at the session of 1817, passed a law appropriating $85,000 to pay this whole class of claims. That was the amount indicated by Mr. Hawkins, the Indian agent, and was supposed to be sufficient to cover all that was due for depredations committed on the friendly Indians. The act passed, and the money was placed in the hands of General Mitchell for disbursement. He went to the Creek country, and while there claims to the amount of $300,000 were filed with him, which the chiefs cut down to $195,417 90. The appropriation of $85,000 was divided pro rata among the claimants, under the direction of the Secretary of War, leaving a balance unpaid of $110,417 90. After the $85,000 had been disbursed, other claims were presented, a list of which is to be found in a supplemental abstract furnished by General Mitchell, published in House Document No. 200, first session, Twentieth Congress, amounting in all to $9,770. These claims came in too late to receive any share of the $85,000. The matter rested until 1824 in this position, Congress, of course, being occasionally importuned to make appropriation for their satisfaction.

The subject was then again referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, and Mr. McLean, of Delaware, reported from that committee, that the $85,000 was considered in full payment, and that no further appropriation should be made. That settled the matter until 1852, when Congress made an appropriation of $110,417 90 to pay the balance of the liquidated claims, leaving then a half dozen claims, contained in the supplemental abstract, unprovided for, either by the act of 1817 or that of 1852.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have examined particularly into this claim of Peter Randon, and so far as I can see, it seems to be as just as any which have been provided for. I have moved the amendment here, because I found the sixtieth Senate amendment provided for the payment of a balance found due the Creek Indians. It may be that the Senate amendment is intended for one of these half-dozen claims; and being proposed by the Senate amendment to make provision for one of them, I thought proper to offer this amendment for another.

Mr. HOWE. I hope that I may have the unanimous consent to explain a little further.

There was no objection.

Mr. HOWE. By the amendment it will be seen that I do not propose to appropriate any specific sum of money. I simply propose to refer this claim of Peter Randon to the Department of the Interior, that it may be examined and compared with the claims which have already been audited and settled, and be adjusted on the same principles. I do not know anything about the price of the articles charged; but the Department is to examine and settle the matter, and when audited and settled, the money is to be paid; but the amount to be paid, it is provided, shall not exceed $5,925.

Mr. HOUSTON. I do not know anything about the claim to which the gentleman from Pennsylvania has referred. The amendment of the Senate, to which it is proposed to be attached, I understand him to say, provides for the same class of claims, yet that amendment was presented to us not only by the action of the Senate, but the action of the Committee of Ways and Means. It is indorsed also by the proper Department, which has investigated, and fully and distinctly reported on the subject. I am not prepared to say whether the claim is right or wrong; I have not had an opportunity to look into it. I would ask the gentleman whether it has been examined by any standing committee of the House? The course I have endeavored to pursue this session is, that where a committee examines a subject, and brings forward an amendment, to let it pass without remark, unless I understand the subject thoroughly, and am of the opinion that it is wrong.

In regard to the appropriation bills which are under my direction, I make no resistance to amendments, unless I know of some positive objection to them; and where I know nothing of the claim, as is the case in this instance, I let it pass without a word from me. It seems to me that this committee ought to require that these claims should be presented by the order of some standing committee of the House, and not by an individual member.

Mr. HOWE. Will the gentleman allow me to make an explanation? I have written a somewhat lengthy report, which I think I may say, without affectation, will be of some service hereafter, if it is reported and printed. I have drawn up a bill in this case. This subject was referred to me, as a member of the Committee on Military Affairs. I am persuaded that if this subject had not come up until to-morrow, so that I could have finished the report to-day, I should have had the unanimous instructions of the Committee on Military Affairs to report the bill.

Mr. HOUSTON. I do not feel it my duty to resist an appropriation which is recommended by one of the standing committees of the House, unless it happens to be some matter which is fairly within my jurisdiction.

Mr. HOWE. It is not to be expected that the honorable chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means can look carefully into everything which passes here. I know that he has a large amount of labor upon his hands, and I am sure that he is endeavoring to do everything that is best for the country.

Mr. HOUSTON. The gentleman misunderstood me. I did not mean to say that I would oppose everything that ought to be included in this bill which I had not examined. But I must have some rule to govern me in relation to the amendments that are proposed to the appropriation bills; and I have adopted the rule as the safest for myself, and the safest for the wholesome legislation of this House, that every committee shall take the responsibility of its own action as such. When amendments are proposed I put them upon the responsibility of the committee that makes a favorable report in regard to them, unless it may be in such cases as I have examined, and believed to be wrong.

Mr. HOWE. In reply to the gentleman from Alabama, I wish to remind him again that the amendment I have offered does not make an absolute appropriation, but it refers the case to the Department of the Interior to investigate it. If they find it an honest claim, then it is to be paid, but not otherwise.

The question was taken on the amendment to the amendment; and it was not agreed to.

The question then recurring upon the Senate amendment, it was taken, and the amendment was concurred in.

Sixty-first amendment:

For payment to certain Creek Indians for their individual reserves, sold with the approbation of the Secretary of War, in the year 1841, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs having received the consideration for the use of said Indians in certificates of deposit on the Planters and Mechanics' Bank of Columbus, Georgia, which failing while said certificates were in the hands of the Commissioner, became lost to said Indians, $2,600.

Mr. HOUSTON. I have a communication from the proper Department explaining that amendment. The amendment, however, explains itself. We received the money of the Indians, and kept the certificates till the bank failed. The result was, that the Indians lost their money. I think we ought to pay it to them.

The amendment was concurred in.

Sixty-second amendment.

For the expenses of making the necessary selections and surveys of land to accommodate the Indians residing within the State of Texas, agreeably to arrangements authorized by an act of the Legislature of that State, allowing the requisite jurisdiction of the Government of the United States for such purposes, and for concentrating and subsisting them, and furnishing suitable stock cattle, agricultural implements, seeds, and other necessary articles incident thereto, $86,430.

Mr. HOUSTON. The appropriation is intended to carry out an arrangement made between this Government and the State of Texas in relation to the Indians within that region of the United States. Texas, by a law of her Legislature, has authorized the selection of certain quantities of land there for the purpose of placing the Indians upon it and taking care of them. This appropriation is intended to enable the Department to make that selection of land, and to settle the Indians thereon.

The amendment was concurred in.

Sixty-third amendment:

For the second and third of ten installments of provisions and merchandise, in addition to former appropriations, for payment of annuities and transportation of some to certain tribes of Indians, per seventh article of the treaty at Fort Laramie, of 17th of September, 1851, $24,000.

Sixty-fourth amendment:

For the fourth of ten installments in provisions and merchandise, for payment of annuities and transportation of the same to certain tribes of Indians, per seventh article of the treaty at Fort Laramie, of 17th of September, 1851, $72,000.

Sixty-fifth amendment.

For surveying and marking boundary lines of such tract or tracts of land as may be provided under the stipulations of the amendments of the Senate to the treaties of 23d July and 5th August, 1851, with the Sioux Indians, $1,200.

Sixty-sixth amendment:

For expenses of negotiating treaties of the tenth of September, 1853, with the Rogue river Indians, and of the 19th of September, 1853, with the Cow Creek band of Umpqua Indians, $5,000.

Mr. HOUSTON. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend concurrence in those amendments.

The question was taken; and the sixty-third, sixty-fourth, sixty-fifth, and sixty-sixth amendments were severally concurred in.

Sixty-seventh amendment:

Page forty-five; at the end of the seventh line of the second section add the following words:

Or to prohibit the payment of any claim or claims (other than those of agents or attorneys for claims) for bona fide services rendered to any Indian tribe, in cases where the President may adjudge such service necessary, and the claim or claims therefor just and reasonable.

Mr. HOUSTON. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a non-concurrence in that amendment.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Sixty-eighth amendment:

For defraying the expenses of continuing the removal and subsistence of Indians in California, three military reservations, in accordance with the plan submitted by the superintendent of Indian affairs of that State, and approved by the President, the sum of $200,000: Provided, That no portion of this amount shall be paid over to the present superintendent of Indian affairs, until he shall account satisfactorily for the amount already drawn by him out of former appropriations. And that, hereafter, no more than $20,000 shall be drawn by the said superintendent, or be in his hands unexpended at one and the same time: And provided, The sub-agents created by this act shall be appointed by the superintendent, subject to confirmation by the Secretary of the Interior, not to exceed one for each reservation, nor three in all, said reservations to contain not less than five nor more than ten thousand acres; and the said superintendent is authorized to apply, out of the sum hereby appropriated, not exceeding $25,000, in the extinguishment of conflicting titles and rights to said reserved lands at a price not exceeding $1 25 per acre, for a valid and indefeasible title to the land so purchased: And provided, The State of California shall cede the necessary jurisdiction in such cases with regard to the land so purchased.

Mr. JONES, of New York. I wish to ask a question of the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means. I want to know why the proviso in that clause was inserted? I refer to the proviso which reads as follows:

"Provided, That no portion of the amount shall be paid over to the present superintendent of Indian affairs until he shall account satisfactorily for the amount already drawn by him out of former appropriations."

What is the necessity of that proviso?

Mr. HOUSTON. I was just going to explain it. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a concurrence in that amendment of the Senate, with an amendment, which is to strike out the proviso to which the gentleman from New York has referred, leaving in the word "provided," however, and excluding the word "appropriations."

At the time the Senate acted upon this bill, and amended it by the phraseology which is now before the committee, Lieutenant Beale was superintendent of Indian affairs in California. For some cause or other, the Senate saw fit—and I believe it was from the fact that his accounts had not been rendered, and no settlement had taken place between him and the Department for large amounts of money which had been disbursed by him for many months—I say, the Senate saw fit to put in that proviso for the purpose of keeping money out of his hands until he had made a settlement with the Department for the amounts of money which he previously had drawn and disbursed.

Before, however, the Committee of Ways and Means acted upon the Senate amendment, Lieutenant Beale was removed from the superintendency of Indian affairs in California, and another gentleman appointed in his place. The committee, therefore, as the reason which induced the Senate to introduce the proviso in question does no longer exist, recommend that the proviso be stricken out, and the amendment otherwise concurred in. The word "said," in the twenty-second line, before the word "superintendent," must, of course, be stricken out, to make the language conform to the clause when the proviso is stricken out.

The question was taken upon the amendment to the amendment; and it was agreed to.

The Senate amendment, as amended, was then concurred in.

Sixty-ninth amendment:

For general incidental expenses of the Indian service in California, embracing expenses of travel of the superintendent and agent, &c., $25,000.

Mr. HOUSTON. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

Seventieth amendment:

For payment to David Carter, as an emigrant, of the amount of his improvements, valued under the treaty with the Cherokee in 1822, in pursuance of the sixth article thereof, $2,826 50.

Mr. HOUSTON. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

Seventy-first amendment:

For payment to A. V. Brown and others, Chickasaw traders, for ransom of George W. and Meredith Wilson from the Comanche Indians, and to reward the services of persons engaged in that service, $1,000.

Mr. HOUSTON. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

Seventy-second amendment:

To enable the President to negotiate a treaty with the Indians in Michigan, and to change the terms of existing treaties, $10,000.

Mr. HOUSTON. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

Seventy-third amendment:

For a clerk to the superintendent of Indian affairs in the Territory of Washington, $1,800; and for a clerk to the superintendent of Indian affairs in the Territory of New Mexico, $1,000; to be allowed in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. HOUSTON. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a non-concurrence in that amendment. We did not believe these clerks were necessary for these Governors.

Mr. CHANDLER. I hope the House will not strike out that amendment. I speak particularly with regard to the Territory of Washington, where I know it is very necessary the Governor should have a clerk. I do not know so with reference to New Mexico, but I understand the same assistance is needed there. I hope the House will sustain the amendment.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I hope not.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Seventy-fourth amendment:

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That the President be authorized, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint a superintendent of Indian affairs for the Territory of Utah, who shall receive an annual salary of $2,000, and whose duty it shall be to exercise a general superintendence over all the Indian tribes in Utah, and to exercise and perform all the powers and duties assigned by law to other superintendents of Indian affairs.

Mr. HOUSTON. I have a word to say in reference to this amendment, and if any members of the Committee of Ways and Means are present, I desire their attention. The amendment proposes to separate the offices of Governor and superintendent of Indian affairs in the Territory of Utah. The Committee of Ways and Means have recommended a non-concurrence in the amendment of the Senate, and that is the reason why I desired the ear of the members of that committee. I confess that my judgment is for a concurrence with the Senate in the amendment. And my opinions are formed from the fact that the peculiar institutions which prevail in Utah are all of a character that should induce us to separate these important offices. I believe it to be the duty of the Government to take care of the Indians better than they will be taken care of by the Governor of Utah Territory.

I am opposed to separating the offices in the other Territories, but I believe that in Utah it should be done. The Committee of Ways and Means, however, think otherwise.

Mr. HAVEN. I hope the House will not concur in the amendment of the Senate. I am opposed to duplicating these offices in the Territories. The salary of the Governor of Utah was raised to $3,000, for the very reason that he performs the duties of both the offices which you now seek to separate. I am opposed to making any distinction between Utah and the other Territories.

Mr. WALSH. I desire to ask the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means what peculiar institutions exist in Utah to which he refers?

Mr. HOUSTON. I refer the gentleman from New York to a debate which took place a month or six weeks ago upon a motion of my colleague over the way [Mr. COBB] in reference the disposition of the public lands in Utah.

Mr. WALSH. That is a very obscure way of answering my question.

Mr. HOUSTON. That debate brings the whole matter up.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Independent of the objection of polygamy, there is another objection which should induce us to concur in the amendment of the Senate. The Governor of the Territory, who is now the superintendent of Indian affairs, is openly hostile to the whole race of Indians. I hope the amendment of the Senate will be concurred in. I think it is due to the Indians of that Territory that we should concur in it.

Mr. BERNHISEL. I hope the amendment of the Senate will be non-concurred in. The Governor of Utah has discharged his duties as superintendent of Indian affairs in a very able manner. He is a father to the Indians. [Roars of laughter.] Since he has been Governor, he has uniformly practised kindness to the Indians. I hope that the House will non-concur in the amendment.

Mr. HOUSTON. I wish to say a word. The Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of the General Land Office are pressing and urgent on this subject.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs are anxious that the superintendency of Indian affairs should, in all cases, be separated from the office of Governor. If you set the precedent in this case, the change will be made in all the other Territories. This is the first step to duplicate the offices in all the Territories. I hope the amendment may be non-concurred in.

If there be anything peculiar in Utah Territory why the superintendency of Indian affairs there should be separated in consequence of the present incumbent exercising both offices, the President of the United States and the Senate can correct it by appointing somebody else.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I demand tellers.

Tellers were not ordered.

The question was taken; and the amendment was non-concurred in.

Seventy-fifth amendment:

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That so much of the act to establish the territorial government of Utah, approved the 9th of September, 1850, as requires the Governor of said Territory to perform the duties of superintendent of Indian affairs, and authorizes him to receive a salary therefor, in addition to the salary allowed for his services as Governor, be repealed, and that the Governor of said Territory shall hereafter receive an annual salary of $2,500.

Mr. HOUSTON. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a non-concurrence in the amendment.

The question was taken; and the amendment was non-concurred in.

Seventy-sixth amendment:

SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized and required to cause to be fulfilled the stipulations of the ninth and tenth articles of the treaty with the Sacs and Foxes, and other tribes of Indians, concluded on the 15th of July, 1830, by causing said reserved tracts to be surveyed and allotted to the persons properly entitled to the same, in fee-simple, in such manner, and under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe; and to defray the expenses of the same, there be, and is hereby, appropriated the sum of $10,922 29.

Mr. HOUSTON. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

The seventy-seventh amendment:

SEC. 6. And be it further enacted, That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint two Indian agents for the Indians east of the Rocky Mountains, in addition to the eleven provided for by the fourth section of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian department," &c., approved February 27, 1851; one Indian agent for the Indians in the Territory of New Mexico, in addition to the four provided for by the fifth section of the same act; and such number of Indian agents, not exceeding three, as he may deem expedient for the Indian tribes in the Territory of Washington.

Mr. HOUSTON. This is an appropriation made necessary by appropriations made in the first part of the bill.

The question was put; and, on a division, there were—ayes seventy-four—

Mr. WHEELER demanded tellers, which were ordered; and Messrs. KEITT and CLINGMAN were appointed.

The question was taken; and the tellers reported—ayes 99, noes 19.

So the amendment was concurred in.

Seventy-eighth amendment:

SEC. 7. And be it further enacted, That the agents appointed under the provisions of the sixth section of this act, shall, before entering upon the duties of their respective offices, give bond in such penalties, and with such conditions and such security as the President or Secretary of the Interior may require. They shall hold their offices, respectively, for the term of four years, and shall receive an annual salary of $1,500.

Mr. HOUSTON. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a concurrence in that amendment.

The amendment was concurred in.

Seventy-ninth amendment:

Sec. 8. And be it further enacted, That to such Cherokees as were omitted in the census taken by D. W. Siler, but who were included and paid under the act of July, 1848, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs be authorized to pay them the same per capita allowance that was paid the other Indians under that distribution, provided the Commissioner shall be satisfied that they ought to be included in said per capita distribution, and that the sum of $5,000 be appropriated for that purpose.

Mr. HOUSTON. The committee recommend a concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

Eightieth amendment:

Sec. 9. And be it further enacted, That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized, by and with the assent of the Indian tribes, respectively, to be obtained in due form, to enter into treaties with the various Indian tribes, to redeem and extinguish the perpetual annuities, or the payment of interest perpetually upon sums of money required to be held in trust, or invested in stocks, by either paying to said tribes the par value or equivalent of the said annuities and perpetual interest, either in whole or in annuities, for a term of years, as he, in his judgment, may deem most advantageous to the Indians, respectively.

Mr. HOUSTON. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a concurrence in that amendment with an amendment. They recommend to strike out of the second line, after the word "authorized," the words "by and with the assent of the Indian tribes, respectively, to be obtained in due form," and make it so as to read:

And be it further enacted, That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to enter into treaties with the various Indian tribes, &c.

The object of the amendment, as proposed by the Committee of Ways and Means, is very evident. The amendment of the Senate proposed to obtain the assent of the Indian tribes, and in this way to change the mode of payment of their annuities. For instance, the annuities to be paid in money might be authorized to be paid in goods of one kind or another; or it might be agreed to pay larger installments, and so shorten the term of their payments. This, in the estimation of the Committee of Ways and Means, would be substantially a new treaty with the tribes. The committee, therefore, thought it better that, in so many words, the President should have power to enter into treaties with the various Indian tribes to accomplish this object.

Mr. HOWE. I am opposed to that amendment. After all our experience with the Indians, I am not in favor of this Government seeking now to make a better bargain with them. I am opposed to buying these perpetual annuities, because the day will never arrive when these Indians, these relics of former large tribes, will cease to need our aid.

I do not believe it is the policy of this Government, or that it is in accordance with the duty of the Government to the Indians, to extinguish these perpetual annuities for cash in hand, which they will soon use up and squander away. If we do that, we shall soon see them outcasts and wanderers.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I submit to the gentleman that he is not opposed to the amendment to this amendment.

Mr. HOWE. I am opposed to the purchase of these perpetual annuities.

Mr. JONES. But if it is to be done, you are in favor of having it done by treaty?

Mr. HOWE. Undoubtedly.

Mr. HOUSTON. The amendment requires that it shall be done by treaty, and that requires the consent of two thirds of the Senate, and, so far, it is a protection of the rights of the Indians.

The question was then taken on the amendment to the amendment of the Senate; and it was agreed to.

Mr. HOUSTON. During this session of Congress, this House has passed a bill, by a large majority, proposing, in some way, to accomplish the very end proposed to be reached by this amendment. I remember I opposed the bill—which was introduced by the gentleman from South Carolina, [Mr. ORN]—or some of its provisions, and they were discussed in the House.

But a bill of that character, proposing to have that general end in view, and authorizing the President of the United States to make propositions to change existing annuities, and existing treaties, passed the House by a large majority. The Committee of Ways and Means, taking that as the express judgment of the House, and in accordance with their own separate judgment, saw fit to recommend a concurrence in this amendment of the Senate.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I hope this amendment will not be adopted by the House. It seems to me it should be voted down. The effect will be to induce us to make treaties immediately with the Indians, by which we should be able to buy up these perpetual annuities, and pay them the money in hand, which will be wasted, in most cases, in a short time. The Indians will then be upon our hands, to be supported by us, or we will have to turn them loose upon the world. I call for tellers upon the amendment.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. MORGAN and SKELTON were appointed.

The question was taken; and the tellers reported—ayes fifty-seven—not a sufficient number, being less than a majority of a quorum.

So the amendment, as amended, was not concurred in.

Eighty-first amendment:

Sec. 10. And be it further enacted, That to enable the Secretary of the Interior to settle and pay the claims on file for reservations, and for rents and improvements, under the thirteenth and sixteenth articles of the Cherokee treaty of 29th of December, 1835, in pursuance of the stipulations of the third article of the treaty of August 8, 1846, the sum heretofore appropriated for those purposes, and carried to the surplus fund, is hereby reappropriated.

Mr. GROW. I move to make two or three verbal amendments to that amendment.

I move, in the second line, between the words "the" and "on," to strike out the word "claims," and to insert the words "awards of commissioners." In the third line, after the word "reservations," I move to insert the word "preemptions;" and in the fourth line, after the word "the," I move to insert the word "twelfth;" so that the amendment, as amended, would read:

That to enable the Secretary of the Interior to settle and pay the awards of commissioners, on file for reservations, preemptions, and for rents and improvements, under the twelfth, thirteenth and sixteenth articles of the Cherokee treaty of 29th of December, 1835, in pursuance of the stipulations of the third article of the treaty of August 8, 1846, the sum heretofore appropriated for those purposes, and carried to the surplus fund, is hereby reappropriated.

There are two or three awards for preemptions, and it is necessary that the word should be inserted in order to include them. This amendment is to cover the awards made by the commissioners who were appointed to examine the claims. I think, therefore, the words "awards of commissioners" should be inserted, instead of "claims;" for this appropriation is not to pay all the indefinite claims made, whether awarded by the commissioners or not.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was then concurred in.

Eighty-second amendment:

Sec. 11. And be it further enacted, That, for the payment of the balance of per capita due the Cherokee Indians residing in the States east of the Mississippi river, under the treaty of 1835, and supplemental treaty of May, 1836, according to the stipulation of the tenth article of the treaty of August 8, 1846, the sum of $92,625 18: Provided, That the same shall be reimbursed from the sums of money heretofore to be paid to the Western Cherokees, in such manner and in such amounts as the President of the United States may direct.

Mr. HOUSTON. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a non-concurrence in that amendment.

This is the item which was so ably discussed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GROW] when this bill was before the House a month or six weeks ago. The House then rejected the appropriation, and I hope they will again reject it now.

Mr. GROW. This claim has been before the Committee on Indian Affairs, and was very fully investigated, and reported unanimously by them. It was offered when the Indian bill was up on a former occasion, and adopted by the committee, but was lost in the House.

Mr. Chairman, I shall find it impossible, in the five minutes allotted to me, to state the merits of this claim. It rests upon treaty stipulations. The obligations which this Government is under to pay this money exist under two treaties. In 1835 a treaty was made between the Government and a part of the Cherokee nation, purchasing their lands, for which we agreed to pay $5,000,000. In 1836 a supplemental treaty was made by which the Government agreed to pay $600,000, making in all $5,600,000 as the treaty fund.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio. I would inquire whether the amendment which the gentleman advocates was recommended by the Committee on Indian Affairs?

Mr. GROW. It was fully examined by the Committee on Indian Affairs, and unanimously agreed to. I am now briefly stating the facts of the case.

A portion of the Indians emigrated under the treaty of 1835-'36 to what is now the State of Arkansas. By a subsequent arrangement, they were removed west of Arkansas. A difficulty grew up between the John Ross party and the treaty-making party. Ross refusing to remove under the treaty, General Scott was sent, in 1838, to remove them by force. He made a supplemental arrangement with John Ross, by which he was to pay $65 90 the head for the removal of these Indians, provided eighty days were occupied in the removal. If more time was occupied, he was to pay proportionately greater, and if less, then Ross was to refund in that proportion. From eighty to one hundred and fifty-five days was taken in the removal of different detachments of these Indians. The Cherokees, remaining in the States, claim that they are not to be prejudiced by any such arrangement as that. The Government, in 1846, made a new treaty with all the Cherokees. Owing to the large amount of the cost of their removal, difficulties arose in settling the amount still due per capita, and to settle these, the Cherokees east and west, and others in the States, entered into new stipulations with the Government in 1846. In that treaty, the Cherokee nation agreed to pay all the claims the Government had against them for removal and subsistence, including these large outlays under the arrangement with General Scott.

But the tenth article of the treaty of 1846 expressly provides that the Cherokees remaining in the States are not in any way to be prejudiced or injured in any of their rights under the treaty of 1835, 1836. By the treaty of 1846, these difficulties were submitted to the Senate of the United States, as umpire between the United States and the Creek Nation. Mr. Sebastian, chairman of the committee of the Senate, to which the matter was referred, reported $1,571,346 53 to be due the Cherokees. The treaty provided that it should be paid per capita. Whatever money, therefore, is now appropriated, is to be paid to these Indians per capita, and it cannot be paid to anybody else. I state this, for there are gentlemen who will not vote money when they have the impression that agents are concerned. They think that the money, instead of going to the Indians, is only swallowed up by the agents. No agent can touch this money; for it is to be paid by the treaty, to the Indians themselves, per capita. The Committee on Indian Affairs took the decision of the Senate, acting as umpire between the Cherokee Nation and the Government—add to it $22,212 76, expense of Cherokee committee, improperly deducted from the treaty fund.

Mr. GROW. I move a pro forma amendment, so that I may complete my statement.

[Cries of "Go on!"]

Mr. GROW. We took the decision of the umpire. We added to that $22,212 76 that was taken from their fund, and for which act we could find no provision in the treaty. By the treaty of 1835-'6, $600,000 of spoiliations and expenses of removal were to be deducted from the treaty fund; but the spoiliations and removals, so charged, amounted to $25,414 09 more than $600,000. The Cherokees claim that, under the treaty, it could not exceed $600,000. That would leave $1,638,973 38 due at that time. To whom was it due? Under the treaty of 1846, it would be due to all the Cherokees, taking the eastern and western Cherokees together, after deducting all the expenses that are provided for in the treaty of 1846, which would include the expenses of reremoval, as arranged by General Scott, the excess of which over twenty dollars per head cannot be deducted from the treaty fund, so far as the eastern Cherokees are concerned; for by the tenth article of the treaty of 1846—

"It is expressly agreed that nothing in the foregoing treaty contained shall be so construed as in any manner to take away or abridge any rights or claims which the Cherokees now residing in the States east of the Mississippi river had, or may have, under the treaty of 1835, and the supplement thereto."

Their rights are to be determined, then, by the treaty of 1835 and 1836, by which removal is fixed at twenty dollars per head, and no greater sum could therefore be charged to the treaty fund, so far as the eastern Cherokees are concerned. And that would leave the amount provided for in this amendment still due.

Should the Cherokees who remained in the States, and have become citizens under the laws of the States, be prejudiced in any of their rights secured by treaty, by any act of General Scott, acting as agent of the Government, or by any act of a portion of the tribe to which their assent was never given? The merits of the claim rest upon this brief statement of facts.

Mr. HOUSTON. I had had a very limited opportunity of examining this claim when I discussed the question before. I have since examined it, and I think I can satisfy even the gentleman from Pennsylvania that there is no foundation for the claim. As I have but little time, I will make my statements as brief as possible. In the report made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. Grow,] and also the report made by Mr. SEBASTIAN, of the Senate, they make a balance due the eastern Cherokees; and the calculation is made under the most favorable circumstances for them, the legitimate expenses being deducted, and nothing more. The very expenses which all admit ought to be deducted, are deducted, and this leaves $1,571,000 for the whole of the Cherokees. Well, sir, the error of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Grow] is this: He overlooks the $523,000, one half of that amount which is due under the treaty to the old settlers, the western Cherokees. Those Cherokees who left the States at an early period, and never did obtain any consideration for their lands, were just as much entitled to their share—every one of them—as the eastern Cherokees were. Every one of them was entitled to his proportion of the purchase money given for these lands. Well, sir, the gentleman goes on and makes out, and the Senate committee go on and make out, that the Cherokees east were entitled to have received $1,571,346 53; and they propose that all should be given to the eastern Cherokees.

But, sir, the gentleman from Pennsylvania forgot to deduct the $523,782 17 which is due to the old settlers—due to a branch of the tribe that had left the States, but who were as much entitled to a share of the purchase money as any other branch of the tribe. Now, if you deduct that $523,782 from the amount claimed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania to be due after deducting the proper expenses, you leave them $1,047,564 35. Take the gentleman's own positions, as laid down in his speech, and this leaves $10,153 due to the Cherokees east, and no more. I have no doubt, however, but that this is wrong. I have no doubt that if the settlement were fairly and honestly made, they would be found entitled to more than that.

Here is one thing further, however; and I have omitted a good many points which I think conclusive. Here is the opinion of Attorney General Crittenden on the same section of the treaty. My friend from Pennsylvania claims on the tenth section; and if that doctrine were so, he would have got no claim at all. I hold in my hand the opinion of Attorney General Crittenden, made in relation to these very Cherokees. They wanted a part of the appropriation made in 1850, and a part of the appropriation of 1851. And the question came up, and was presented to the Attorney General, whether, on their leaving the States, they could receive any part of this appropriation. Mr. Crittenden, in his opinion, goes on to consider that tenth article just precisely in the manner in which I regarded it when the matter was up before, and precisely in opposition to the construction given to that article by the gentleman from Pennsylvania. Here is what Mr. Crittenden says:

"The qualification required was expressed in these terms that they were 'qualified to take care of themselves and their property.' It may be that some not thus qualified did remain, contrary to the terms of the treaty, and have become mingled with those that were entitled to remain, and did remain. But as it would be difficult now to make any discrimination, or to enforce a forfeiture upon the very loose and uncertain terms of their not possessing the required qualification, and as to the tenth article of the treaty of 1846, which recognizes the right of those residing east of the Mississippi river, makes no discrimination, and excludes none on account of their having remained in supposed violation of the treaty, I think it is now too late to question their rights on that ground; and, consequently, they must be admitted among the distributees."

To the fourth question submitted to him, whether if any of the Cherokees who have never removed west of the Mississippi river were entitled, they might be required to emigrate, as a condition precedent to their being paid, he answers as follows:

"The treaty of 1835, article twelve, conceded the rights of individuals and families of Cherokees, who were averse to a removal to the Cherokee country west of the river Mississippi, to remain east, and to receive their due portions of the money to be distributed per capita. The treaty of 1846, article tenth, recognized these claims of the Cherokees, then, at the date of the treaty, residing east of the Mississippi. On this subject I have heretofore expressed my views. To require those Indians so residing east of the Mississippi river, at the date of the treaty of August, 1846, to remove to the Cherokee country west, as a condition precedent to their being paid their dividends per capita of the balance of the purchase money for the lands east of the Mississippi river never ceded by their nation to the United States, would be without any authority of law, and a breach of the faith of the treaties of 1834 and of 1846, as I firmly believe."

Mr. WHEELER. I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was not agreed to.

[Cries of "Question!" "Question!"

Mr. MATTESON called for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. EWING and WHEELER were appointed.

The question was taken; and the tellers reported—ayes 45; not a majority of a quorum.

So the amendment of the Senate was not concurred in.

Eighty-third amendment:

SEC. 12. And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of the Interior be authorized and required to investigate the claim of the Brotherton tribe of Indians against the United States, and report the facts to Congress at its next session, or earlier if practicable, together with an estimate for such amount as may be found justly due the said Indians.

Mr. HOUSTON. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

Eighty-fourth amendment:

Amend the title, by adding to the end thereof the following words: "and for other purposes."

The amendment was concurred in.

Mr. HOUSTON. I move that the committee do now rise, and report the fortification bill and the Indian appropriation bill to the House.

Mr. STUART. I ask the gentleman from Alabama to yield to me for a moment for a personal explanation?

Mr. HOUSTON. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. STUART. The gentleman gives way to me for a moment, and I rise to a personal explanation.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. You had better do that in the House.

Mr. STUART. I desire to make the explanation here. It will occupy but a minute.

I, this morning, asked a question of my colleague, [Mr. STEVENS,] when he was making an explanation in reference to the subject which had been brought to the attention of the House by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. WASHBURN,] which question seemed to implicate one of the Senators from Iowa. I asked the question under a mistake, from information which I had derived from an outside quarter. I did understand that one of the Senators from Iowa [General JONES] had gone to Mr. Forney, with my colleague from Michigan, and advised him to make the alteration. But I understand, upon inquiry from Mr. Forney, that I was entirely deceived, and that General JONES never called on him, or spoke to him on the subject. I desired to make this explanation when the question was asked.

The question was then taken on Mr. Houston's motion, and it was agreed to.

So the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the Chairman (Mr. WALLEY) reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had the Union generally under consideration, and particularly the bill of the House (No. 116) "making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, and for repairs of barracks and quarters, for the year ending the 30th of June, 1855;" and the bill of the House (No. 46) "making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1855," with the amendments of the Senate thereto, both of which they had instructed him to report to the House, the former with sundry amendments, and the latter with recommendations that the House non-concur in some of the amendments of the Senate, concur in others, and concur in others still with amendments.

Mr. HOUSTON. I move the previous question upon both these bills. I suppose I may include them both in the same motion.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I would propose that a vote be taken on concurring in the report of the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union in reference to the Senate amendments to the Indian appropriation bill. The committee have recommended to non-concur in some of the amendments, to concur in others, and to concur in others still with amendments. Now I propose that by one vote we concur with the Committee of the Whole in its action, and thus dispose of the bill at once.

Mr. HOUSTON. I have not the slightest objection to that course.

The question was then taken, and the report of the Committee of the Whole in reference to the amendments of the Senate to the Indian appropriation bill was concurred in.

Mr. HOUSTON. I move to reconsider the vote last taken, and to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

FORTIFICATION BILL.

Mr. HOUSTON. I now ask the previous question upon the engrossment of the fortification bill.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered to be put.

The amendments reported from the Committee of the Whole were then severally read, and adopted.

The bill, as amended, was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, was read the third time.

Mr. HOUSTON. I demand the previous question upon the passage of the bill.

Mr. DISNEY. I move to lay the bill upon the table.

Mr. HOUSTON. I ask the gentleman to withdraw that motion until the previous question has been seconded.

Mr. DISNEY. I will withdraw it for that purpose.

The previous question received a second, and the main question was ordered to be now put.

Mr. DISNEY. I renew the motion that the bill be laid upon the table.

Mr. McNAIR. I think that we should adjourn. We shall be better able to do the business to-morrow.

Mr. HOUSTON. We should have the yeas and nays first on the passage of the bill.

Mr. WHEELER. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was put; and, on a division, there were—ayes 49, noes 81.

Mr. WHEELER. I demand tellers on the motion.

Tellers were not ordered.

So the House refused to adjourn.

Mr. DISNEY. I withdraw the motion that the bill be laid upon the table.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I demand the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

Mr. STUART, of Michigan. I would like to know whether the gentleman from Ohio has not moved that the bill be laid upon the table?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has withdrawn his motion.

Mr. STUART. I renew it.

The question was taken; and the House refused to lay the bill upon the table.

The yeas and nays were ordered on the passage of the bill.

Mr. SOLLERS. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken; and the House refused to adjourn.

Mr. WHEELER. I move to lay the bill upon the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The motion is not in order, as no business has intervened since a similar motion was made and voted down. According to the decision of the regular occupant of the chair, there must be business changing the character of the bill before the motion to lay the bill upon the table can be renewed.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I move a call of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That motion is not in order, because the previous question is operating.

The question was then taken upon the passage of the bill, and there were—yeas 72, nays 68; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. James C. Allen, Willis Allen, Thomas H. Bayly, Belcher, Bell, Benson, Benton, Bliss, Boeck, Boyce, Bugg, Caskie, Chandler, Chrisman, Clingan, Cobb, Corwin, Crocker, Dick, Dickinson, Dowdell, Thomas D. Eliot, Ellison, Farley, Faulkner, Florence, Franklin, Fuller, Goodrich, Harrison, Hibbard, Houston, Howe, Hughes, Hunt, Roland Jones, Kidwell, Kittredge, Macdonald, McNair, Maxwell, Milson, Nichols, Andrew Oliver, Bishop Perkins, Phillips, Puryear, Riddle, David Ritchie, Robbins, Rowe, Seward, Shower, Simmons, Skelton, William Smith, William R. Smith, George W. Smyth, Sol-Jers, Frederick P. Stanton, John J. Taylor, John L. Taylor, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Thurston, Upham, Vail, Vansant, Walbridge, Walley, Tappan Wentworth, and Wheeler—72.

So the bill was passed.

Mr. HOUSTON. I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, and to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Upon the latter motion I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. LILLY. I move that the House adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and the House thereupon (at four o'clock, p. m.) adjourned till tomorrow at eleven o'clock, a. m.

IN SENATE.

TUESDAY, July 25, 1854.

Prayer by Rev. HENRY SLICER.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a report of the Secretary of the Treasury, and of the Attorney General, to whom was referred by a resolution of the Senate of the 3d August, 1846, the memorial of Kingsley B. Gibbs, executor of Zephaniah Kingsley, praying to be allowed interest on his claims arising under the ninth article of the treaty of 1819, between the United States and Spain, communicating their opinions on said claim, and the liabilities of the Government under the ninth article of the treaty aforesaid; which was read.

Mr. MALLORY. That is a communication of very great importance to a large portion of my constituents upon questions arising under the Florida treaty. I therefore move that it be referred to the Committee of the Judiciary, and printed.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORTS FROM STANDING COMMITTEES.

Mr. WADE, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred a bill from the House of Representatives for the relief of Joseph Gerard, reported it back without amendment.

Mr. CLAY, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred a bill from the House of Representatives for the relief of the administrators of Oliver Lee, deceased, reported it back without amendment.

Mr. MALLORY, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred a petition of lieutenants in the United States revenue marine service who were attached to the United States naval squadron in the West Indies during the Florida war in 1836, 1837, 1838, and 1839, praying to be allowed the same compensation as officers of like grade in the Navy, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill increasing the pay of certain officers of revenue cutters while serving in the Navy of the United States; which was read, and passed to a second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

HON. JARED W. WILLIAMS.

Mr. MALLORY (in the absence of Mr. Norris) submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

Whereas, the Hon. JARED W. WILLIAMS was appointed by his Excellency the Governor of New Hampshire, in the recess of the Legislature of that State, to fill a vacancy in the Senate of the United States, which had happened by the death of the Hon. Charles G. Atherton, a Senator, whose term of service would have continued till the 4th of March, 1859; and whereas, it is understood that, since that temporary appointment was made, the Legislature of New Hampshire has been convened at its regular session, and has adjourned to the last Wednesday of May next, without filling said vacancy; and that said State still claims a right of representation under said appointment, which the appointee is not at liberty to surrender by his act without the action of the Senate; at his request, therefore—

Resolved, That the subject be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, to inquire into the facts connected with it, and to make such report as they deem proper to enable the Senate to determine whether the right of representation under said appointment has expired.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message was received from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McKEAN, Chief Clerk, announcing that the House had passed the following bills from the Senate, with amendments, in which they requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill for the relief of William Senna Factor;

A bill for the relief of the executors of the late brevet Colonel A. C. W. Fanning, of the United States Army; and

A bill for the relief of the representatives of Joseph Watson, deceased.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker had signed the following enrolled bills and resolution:

An act to confirm the claim of Dusan de la Croix to a tract of land therein described;

An act for the relief of Charles Cooper & Co.;

An act for the relief of James Dunning;

An act for the relief of Joseph Mitchell;

An act authorizing Victor Morass to relinquish certain lands, and to enter the same quantity elsewhere;

An act for the relief of the legal representative of Joshua Kennedy, deceased;

An act for the relief of John Phagan;

An act for the relief of Ezra Williams; and

A resolution authorizing the Secretary of the Territory of New Mexico to adjust and pay to Juan C. Armijo, José L. Perera, and James L. Collins, the amount by them loaned to the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of New Mexico, under authority of a joint resolution of that body, approved June 17, 1851;

Which were thereupon signed by the PRESIDENT pro tempore.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to some and disagreed to other amendments of the Senate, to the bill making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with the various Indian tribes for the year ending the 30th of June, 1855, and for other purposes; and that they had agreed to other amendments of the Senate to said bill with amendments, in which they requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The Senate proceeded to consider their amendments to the above-named bill, disagreed to by the House of Representatives; and

On motion by Mr. HUNTER, it was

Resolved, That the Senate insist on their amendments to the said bill, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, disagree to the amendments of the House to the amendments of the Senate to the said bill, and ask a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

On motion by Mr. HUNTER, it was Ordered, That the committee of conference on the part of the Senate be appointed by the PRESIDENT pro tempore; and Mr. PEARCE, Mr. SEBASTIAN, and Mr. ADAMS were appointed.

A subsequent message from the House of Representatives, announced that they insisted on their disagreement to the amendments of the Senate, and on their amendments to the amendment of the Senate; that they agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and that they had appointed Mr. G. S. Houston, Mr. S. G. Haven, and Mr. G. A. Grow, as managers of the same on their part.

COLLECTION DISTRICT IN NEW YORK.

Mr. EVANS. I have had for a long time a desire to get before the Senate a bill which was reported from the Committee on Revolutionary Claims, and which was under consideration a long time ago, the fate of which, I think, is very important to be decided at once, as there are hundreds of people living at least in hope upon it.

Mr. HAMLIN. I ask the Senator from South Carolina to allow me to report a bill before his motion is put.

Mr. EVANS. I withdraw it.

Mr. HAMLIN. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred House bill "creating a collection district in New York, to be called the district of Dunkirk, and constituting Dunkirk a port of entry, and the ports of Barcelona, Silver Creek, and Cattaraugus Creek ports of delivery," to report it back without amendment, and recommend its passage. I also ask that it may receive action at this time. It is in the usual form of all such bills.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

It proposes to create the counties of Cattaraugus and Chautauque, in the State of New York, and the harbors and waters on the southern shore of Lake Erie, west of and including Cattaraugus Creek to the Pennsylvania line, and the islands contiguous thereto, heretofore embraced in the district of Buffalo, a new collection district to be called the district of Dunkirk. There is to be a collector appointed for Dunkirk, and deputy collectors for Barcelona, Silver Creek, and Cattaraugus Creek.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

Mr. STUART. Will the honorable Senator from South Carolina withdraw his motion for a moment, to enable me to make a report?

Mr. EVANS. I withdraw for that purpose.

Mr. STUART. The Committee on Commerce has instructed me to report back the bill of the House "making appropriations for the repair, preservation, and completion of certain public works heretofore commenced under the authority of law," with certain amendments. I am instructed by the committee to give notice that I shall ask the Senate to take up and consider that bill so soon as the civil and diplomatic appropriation bill shall be disposed of.

REVOLUTIONARY CLAIMS.

Mr. CHASE. I ask the Senate to take up the resolution which I presented a few days ago, for printing the votes and proceedings on the Nebraska bill.

Mr. EVANS. I have given place already to several gentlemen, and I must now insist upon my motion.

The PRESIDENT. The Senator from South Carolina gave way to receive reports, and other special matters. The question will now be taken on his motion.

Mr. CHASE. I was not aware that anybody was upon the floor. But, Mr. President, I must object to this mode of proceeding. A Senator takes the floor—

The PRESIDENT. The Chair will observe that it is not in order; but if a Senator surrenders the floor, the next person that addresses the Chair is entitled to it.

Mr. CHASE. I yield the floor with great cheerfulness to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. BENJAMIN. Will the Senator from Ohio allow me to present a report?

Mr. CHASE. I should prefer to have the resolution taken up. It will take but a single moment.

Mr. BROADHEAD. I should like to inquire what the resolution relates to.

Mr. CHASE. It is a resolution which I submitted in regard to printing certain votes and proceedings on the Nebraska bill.

Mr. BROADHEAD. Oh! I thought we had got through with Nebraska.

The PRESIDENT. The Senator from South Carolina is entitled to the floor.

Mr. EVANS. Then I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill to provide for the final settlement of the claims of the officers of the Revolutionary Army, and of the widows and orphan children of those who died in the service.

Mr. HUNTER. I will state in regard to that, that I shall consider it my duty to press the civil and diplomatic appropriation bill. I think we ought to give that the preference.

The PRESIDENT. The Senator from South Carolina has the right to have his motion put.

Mr. RUSK. That bill will evidently lead to a day or two's debate. I do not like to interpose any objection to the honorable Senator from South Carolina, for, if there is any one member of the Senate, over another, whom I would be willing to accommodate, it would be that honorable Senator, but I know that the bill will certainly lead to debate. I gave notice yesterday that I should this morning move, in the morning hour, to take up the bill in relation to the officers of the late Texan navy. It has been before Congress seven or eight years, and has always been thrown over to the last days of the session for its consideration. It is one of very considerable importance. The bill which the Senator wishes to take up involves a great many principles, and I feel satisfied it will lead to debate; and if taken up it will, as a matter of course, throw my bill out for to-day.

Mr. SLIDELL. This bill is one of more than doubtful justice, and one which I should think it my duty to oppose, very reluctantly, if no one else should. I am sure it will lead to a very protracted debate, and as time is precious, I hope the Senate will not take it up.

Mr. EVANS. I do not think it will lead to any debate. I do not propose to discuss it, and I suppose every Senator is prepared to vote upon it. I am willing to take a vote upon it without any discussion, and have it disposed of, so that those people who are petitioning Congress by hundreds should know their fate; and if they are to have nothing, if we are to squander away hundreds of millions upon wild schemes for the benefit of the present generation, let those who fought your battles in your Revolution know what is to be done for them. If it is the pleasure of the Senate not to take up the bill, let it be so, but I do not propose to discuss it myself. All that I desire is, that it may be acted upon one way or the other.

On a division no quorum voted.

Mr. FOOT called for the yeas and nays; and they were ordered.

Mr. EVANS. I hope this will be considered a test vote.

The yeas and nays being taken, resulted—yeas 23, nays 21; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Atchison, Badger, Bell, Bright, Brodhead, Butler, Clayton, Cooper, Evans, Fish, Foot, Geyer, Gwin, Hamlin, James, Mallory, Pettit, Shields, Thomson of New Jersey, Toucey, Wade, Walker, and Weller—23.

NAYS—Messrs. Allen, Bayard, Benjamin, Cass, Chase, Clay, Dawson, Dodge of Wisconsin, Fitzpatrick, Gillette, Houston, Hunter, Johnson, Jones of Tennessee, Rockwell, Rusk, Sebastian, Slidell, Stuart, Sumner, and Toombs—21.

So the motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill.

Mr. SLIDELL. I am sure, Mr. President, that it would be altogether superfluous for any Senator on this floor to disavow any intentional discourtesy towards the honorable Senator from South Carolina. As was said by my friend from Texas, there is no gentleman here to whom, under other circumstances, I should be more disposed to extend every possible facility for getting up the bill and having it acted upon. But I am very sure that it cannot be passed without a long and protracted debate.

I have examined the question with some degree of attention, but I am not now prepared to give my authorities to the Senate. I did intend, when the bill was brought forward for consideration, to address, at some length, my views to the Senate against its passage. I have not my memoranda with me now; and in order to test the sense of the Senate, whether they are willing to proceed with it now, (involving, as it does, very difficult principles, and an expenditure of $4,000,000,) to the detriment of matters of urgent importance before the Senate which we scarcely have time to pass, I move that the further consideration of the bill be postponed until the first Monday in December next. I shall consider that a test question, and upon it I ask the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and taken, with the following result:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Allen, Bayard, Bell, Cass, Chase, Clay, Dawson, Dodge of Iowa, Fitzpatrick, Gillette, Gwin, Houston, Hunter, Johnson, Jones of Tennessee, Rockwell, Rusk, Sebastian, Slidell, Stuart, Sumner, Thomson of New Jersey, and Toombs—24.

NAYS—Messrs. Atchison, Badger, Bright, Brodhead, Butler, Clayton, Cooper, Dixon, Dodge of Wisconsin, Evans, Fessenden, Fish, Foot, James, Pearce, Pettit, Pratt, Shields, Wade, Walker, and Weller—21.

So the motion to postpone was agreed to.

JUDICIARY BILL.

Mr. BUTLER. I have been somewhat reproached by those who are interested in the subject, for not bringing forward the bill for the reorganization of the judiciary. I rise merely for the purpose of saying that I could not heretofore ask the Senate to take it up, consistently with the state of public business; and I give notice now that it is my wish and desire, and I hope it will be the general understanding that it shall be taken up at the commencement of the next session.

CIVIL AND DIPLOMATIC BILL.

Mr. HUNTER. I move to postpone the prior orders, for the purpose of taking up the civil and diplomatic appropriation bill.

Mr. RUSK. I hope the Senator will allow me an hour this morning for the consideration of the Texas navy bill. It is but a little after half past eleven o'clock; and I think it would be better to postpone the appropriation bill for a short time.

Mr. HUNTER. There is no earthly chance of getting through with the Senator's bill in an hour.

Mr. RUSK. If the hour expires without its being disposed of, I will move to postpone it until to-morrow.

Mr. HUNTER. I dislike to be in the way of the Senator, but I must insist on my motion to take up the appropriation bill. If the Senate wish to take up the Senator's bill, they can vote down my motion.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate resumed the consideration of the bill from the House, "making appropriations for the civil and diplomatic expenses of the Government for the year ending the 30th of June, 1855;" the pending question being on the following amendment of the Committee on Finance, as amended:

For continuing the work for a supply of water to the cities of Washington and Georgetown, $500,000: Provided, That no part of the sum hereby appropriated shall be expended until the corporations of Washington and Georgetown, or either of them, shall appropriate and pay an amount equal to one fourth of said sum for the same purpose. And full power and authority are hereby given to said corporations respectively to raise, by loan or otherwise, any sum of money that may be necessary to enable them or either of them to make the appropriation herein required. And the said corporations of Washington and Georgetown and the inhabitants of said cities respectively, or the corporation making the appropriation and the inhabitants of said city, shall be authorized to use the surplus water which may be brought by the Washington aqueduct, after supplying the Government establishments in Washington, under such general rules and regulations as may hereafter be prescribed by Congress; and each of said corporations shall have the right to charge and collect of the inhabitants of such cities such reasonable tax or rent for the use of the water as will provide for the regular payment of the interest and gradual payment of the principal of any money which may be raised under the authority hereby given.

Mr. SLIDELL. I voted in the majority for the adoption of the amendment of the Senator from Virginia, [Mr. HUNTER.] I was under the impression at the time that the amendment contained the provision which I had incorporated into the amendment previously offered by me, making it obligatory upon the part of the corporations of Washington and Georgetown, not only to provide for the payment of one fourth of the sum now appropriated, but one fourth of all future appropriations for this work. I was surprised to find after the vote had been taken, that that portion of the amendment had been stricken out. Under these circumstances, I think that the provision to guard the Treasury of the United States is perfectly illusory. So far as I am concerned, I should prefer the appropriation to go to the House in its naked form, without any attempt to impose any obligations on the part of the corporations of Washington and Georgetown, such as are contained in the amendment as it now stands, which I am sure will not be enforced under it. I move the reconsideration of the vote by which that amendment was adopted, so as to allow such a provision to be inserted. Perhaps the Senator from Virginia will accept the amendment which I wish to make.

Mr. HUNTER. I cannot accept it, as the amendment has been voted on.

Mr. SLIDELL. Then I ask, if I have the assent of the Senator from Virginia, to incorporate that clause in the amendment?

Mr. HUNTER. I believe I shall have no objection to the Senator's amendment. If I understand it, it is to provide that the corporations of the District shall go on pari passu with the Government of the United States.

Mr. SLIDELL. Yes, sir; both as to this and all future appropriations, so that they may pass an ordinance which will bind them to contribute one fourth of all the expenditure for the water-works.

Mr. HUNTER. I have no objection to its being put in.

Mr. SLIDELL. Then I move to reconsider the vote for the purpose of putting in that proviso.

Mr. HUNTER. Perhaps it can be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. PRATT. It is not in order to vote the amendment without a reconsideration, and, therefore, I insist that it shall be done by a motion to reconsider, and in no other way.

Mr. SLIDELL. Then I move the reconsideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. BRIGHT in the chair.) The Senator from Louisiana moves to reconsider the vote by which the amendment requiring the citizens of Georgetown and Washington to appropriate one fourth the sum appropriated by the amendment, was adopted.

Mr. SLIDELL. I move to reconsider the whole amendment, as it now stands, in order to insert the provision to which I have referred.

Mr. HUNTER. The Senator from Louisiana moves to reconsider my amendment to the amendment of the Committee on Finance. He moves it with a view to offer an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. SLIDELL. My object is to insert after the word "purpose," the words "and shall agree to pay in like manner the same proportion of all future appropriations."

Mr. HUNTER. I think the Senator will attain his object better by moving to insert those words without moving to reconsider.

Mr. SLIDELL. I am not very familiar with the rules, but I understand that no motion to insert can be made until after the amendment be reconsidered.

Mr. WALKER. That is a mistake; it can be done.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is entirely in order to move to amend the amendment.

Mr. SLIDELL. Then I move to insert, after the word "purpose," the words "and shall agree to pay in like manner the same proportion of all future appropriations."

Mr. PRATT. I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment to the amendment. The effect of it, to my mind, is to defeat the whole of the project; and I would rather have it defeated openly. If that proposition be adopted, I shall vote against the whole amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 28, nays 19; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Atchison, Bell, Butler, Cass, Chase, Cooper, Dodge of Wisconsin, Dodge of Iowa, Evans, Fessenden, Fitzpatrick, Gillette, Hamlin, Hunter, James, Johnson, Mallory, Mason, Pettit, Sebastian, Slidell, Sumner, Thomson of New Jersey, Toombs, Toucey, Wade, and Walker—28.

NAYS—Messrs. Allen, Badger, Bayard, Benjamin, Brodhead, Clay, Clayton, Dawson, Fish, Foot, Geyer, Houston, Jones of Tennessee, Pearce, Pratt, Rockwell, Rusk, Shields, and Weller—19.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to

The question recurring upon the amendment of the committee as amended.

Mr. ADAMS called for the yeas and nays; which were ordered, and taken with the following result:

YEAS.—Messrs. Allen, Badger, Bayard, Bell, Benjamin, Bright, Brodhead, Butler, Cass, Chase, Clayton, Cooper, Dawson, Dixon, Douglas, Fessenden, Fish, Gwin, Hamlin, Hunter, James, Johnson, Mallory, Mason, Rockwell, Rusk, Shields, Stuart, Sumner, Wade, Walker, and Weller—32.

NAYS.—Messrs. Adams, Atchison, Dodge of Wisconsin, Dodge of Iowa, Evans, Fitzpatrick, Foot, Houston, Jones of Tennessee, Pearce, Pratt, Sebastian, Slidell, Thomson of New Jersey, and Toombs—15.

So it was adopted.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. I move to amend the provision just adopted by adding the following proviso:

Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended unless in pursuance of a contract to be made with the most responsible bidder, after first inviting proposals for sixty days in twelve or more daily journals for the furnishing of all the materials, labor, tools, machinery, etc., and the completion of the entire work, agreeably to the approved plan of Lieutenant M. C. Meigs, as embraced in his report, within two years from the date of the contract, the contract price for the whole work in no event to exceed the estimate of $2,500,000.

Mr. HUNTER. I do not exactly understand this amendment, unless the object be to transfer the management of the work from the control of the Secretary of War, where it now is.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. The object is, that it shall be done under the general direction of the Secretary of War, but by contract under the limitations prescribed.

Mr. STUART. I submit a question of order to the Chair, whether this provision can be amended now. The question has been taken by the Senate upon the amendment of the Committee on Finance, as amended, and that has been adopted. I submit that now it is too late to amend that.

Mr. HUNTER. I think the Senator from Michigan is undoubtedly right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Iowa is not in order. The final vote upon the amendment has been taken.

Mr. WALKER. I am inclined to think that, even after a proposition has been adopted, it may be amended, according to parliamentary law, by adding something to it. I think you will find it so laid down, sir. It would be singular, indeed, if, after you vote upon an amendment, you cannot afterwards amend the bill. That is this case, because an amendment when adopted becomes a part of the bill; it would be very strange indeed, if you could not amend by adding something to the bill, though it might be in conjunction with the immediate proposition last voted upon. I think you will find it so laid down in Jefferson's Manual.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is now in the Senate, and not in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WALKER. I am aware of that; but this, it seems to me, can be amended at any time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate have taken a final vote on the amendment of the committee, and it has been adopted.

Mr. WALKER. That is true; but it does not preclude a further amendment to the bill. This now becomes a part of the bill, and certainly, it seems to me, it would be in order to move the proviso.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Not the provision which has just been adopted as an amendment.

Mr. CHASE. The Chair will allow me to make a suggestion. The amendment which has been recently voted upon has now become a part of the bill, and the bill is liable to be amended precisely as it was before. The amendment moved by the Senator from Iowa is an amendment moved to the bill, and not an amendment to an amendment, and is, therefore, I think, clearly in order.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. If the amendment is not in order as a proviso, perhaps it can be moved in the form of an additional section.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No doubt it will be in order as an additional section.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. Then I offer it in that form.

Mr. CASS. If the honorable Senator from Iowa will add to his amendment a proposition to keep the superintendence where it is, and to allow the superintending officer, under the direction of the War Department, to reject the work if it is improper, so that we may be sure of having it well done, I shall vote for his amendment; but I think some provision of this sort is necessary.

And another thing I wish to suggest. Can this work be properly done within two years? Is not the time too short? I do not know how that is. This is not the material point with me; the other is. I desire that the work, as it goes on, shall be within the control of the superintending officer; so that, when the $2,000,000 are all expended, it shall not be lost by our receiving a work which is in a bad condition. It is a great deal better to check the errors as they go on, and to give the officer discretion to do so, than it is afterwards to bring up the whole proposition in dispute. I think the amendment of the Senator from Iowa should be modified in that way.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. I will make the time three years; and as there is nothing in the amendment which provides for any transfer from the War Department to any other Department, I hardly think it necessary to say anything on that subject; but I am willing to insert the provision which the Senator from Michigan suggests, if he thinks it necessary.

Mr. BRODHEAD. Mr. President, the Senator who offers the amendment, proposes to continue the work under the superintendence of the War Department, and the engineer now in charge. Does not that give them entire control over the subject? The engineer is to inspect the work: the War Department is to take charge of it. If so, why not give it to them entirely? Has not the system of contracts proved an entire failure? Has not the Secretary of the Navy reported to us in his annual report that it has been a failure in the Navy? I fear it will always be so. Sir, you cannot well carry on a great work of this kind by contract; and if you have not confidence in the head of the War Department, or in the engineer in charge, this amendment will be of no service. It will not restrain them at all. They are to give the contract to the "best responsible bidder." Who is to judge of that but the War Department?

Why, sir, in all these matters, if the work is to be constructed, we should make the appropriation, and leave the expenditures to the proper Department as a matter of administration. We cannot administer the fund here. All we can do, is to make the appropriation in this and other cases, and if we have not sufficient confidence in the persons who are to expend the money, we had better not make the appropriation at all. The right mode to make appropriations for the Army and Navy, or for any of the Departments of the public service, is for Congress to make the appropriation, and leave the question of expenditure as a matter of administration.

On these grounds, I object to this amendment. It is no restraint, in the first place, because it refers the matter to the discretion of the head of the War Department and the engineer in charge. I object to it, also, upon the ground that experience has proved that the contract system is a failure, and answers no useful purpose.

Mr. MALLORY. Mr. President, I trust my friend from Iowa will not press this amendment. Concurring as I do in everything that the Senator from Pennsylvania has just said, I would remind the Senate that our fortifications throughout the entire country, under the engineer department, are conducted apart from the contract system. The money is appropriated by Congress, and the Chief of the Engineer Corps and the Secretary of War are held responsible for the construction of the public works, by contract or otherwise, as they think best. In some portions of the country contracts, to small amounts, for the supply of particular materials, are necessarily made; but they are made upon the responsibility of the engineer officer in charge of the work, and we can hold him accountable; but, as a general thing, these funds are administered, and administered very economically by the engineer officers themselves, apart from contracts.

Now, sir, the contract system has been shown here very frequently to be entirely unsatisfactory. But a few days ago we had an example of it presented to us. In my own State, Congress has undertaken to construct a floating dock for naval purposes; it has expended under the contract system nearly $1,000,000 in the construction of that dock; and here is the fact staring us in the face that, for all public uses, that dock might just as well be in the middle of the Atlantic ocean. It is perfectly worthless. No ship of any size at all, either a frigate or a line-of-battle-ship, can be taken on it, and carried into the basin. There it stands; and as my colleague said, on this floor, in which expression of opinion I entirely concur, the Government would absolutely save money by cutting the dock loose and letting it go to sea. In three or five years it will be entirely destroyed by worms. An attempt to put a ship on it has entirely failed, and the board who examined it, so pronounced. That is an example of the contract system. Shall we continue it when we have such frequent proofs before us, that it cannot be carried out with advantage to the public service? I think not.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. The Senator from Pennsylvania who resisted this amendment, it strikes me, has made some most extraordinary assertions with regard to the contract system. I understood him to say that it had been repudiated by all the branches of the Government, and found to be a failure every where.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I did not intend to make the assertion quite so broad as that. I say in most instances it is a failure, and that you cannot carry on works of this kind as well by contract as you can otherwise. The engineer in charge and the Department now have power to make a contract if they choose, and to give it to the lowest bidder. Many portions of this work, no doubt, will be given to the lowest bidders; but I do not think we should make an imperative provision requiring the whole of it to be so given.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. I am happy, sir, to hear the correction of the Senator. I know that in regard to some very important works of internal improvement now being carried on on the Mississippi river, to wit, the removal of the obstructions of the Des Moines and Rock river rapids, for which Congress appropriated $100,000, the Secretary of War adopted the contract system, and has let the work. The supplies for the different Departments here are furnished by contract. It strikes me that we can have no better way to carry on these works. I apprehend that the officers of the Topographical Corps are most competent to conduct the general operations, and especially the scientific portion of a work like this; but the superintendence of the men who do the work and the proper judgment as to what they do, belongs to another branch and a different one entirely. I think the amendment will work well. I am willing to adopt any suggestion of any Senator which will carry out the object I have in view, which is to get the work completed within a reasonable time, and have a guarantee that the cost will not exceed the estimates.

Mr. SHIELDS. I should like very much to be able to vote for the amendment of my friend from Iowa, if I could do so, or if I thought it one which would conduce to economy; or to a more efficient construction of this work; but I am compelled, as far as I understand the subject, to agree almost generally with the Senator from Pennsylvania.

I think that the contract system has, in fact, failed; and I believe that is the general impression of the Departments. As far as I have been able to make inquiries into the subject, it has given rise to more roguery than any other system in the Government. I was reading, the other day, a letter from an English gentleman, writing home from Russia, in which he says that all the public works in Russia are constructed by contract. He says the Government will contract for oak, and the contractors will furnish pine, and that is one reason why their vessels are not able to go out and cope with their opponents. He says that, as a general rule throughout that whole Empire, the contractors make it a matter of conscience to cheat the Government.

I think, sir, that, as a general rule here, as well as in Russia, contractors make it a matter of conscience to cheat the Government. In regard to all Executive departments, as far as I have been able to investigate the subject, and as far as I have taken the opinions of men who have been connected with it, the conclusion to which I have come is, that we pay more for the work under contract, and that it is worse done, and the materials are more deficient, than under any other system. My opinion is, that it would be a very improvident thing to adopt it in this case.

Mr. PRATT. There is one view of this subject, sir, which I desire to present. This work, under the original law, was placed in the hands of the President of the United States. He sent an engineer to make the necessary surveys and estimates in regard to its cost. The report of that engineer was made to Congress a long time ago. Under the authority vested in the engineer, he has contracted for the delivery of the brick along the line of the work, and he has bought stone quarries from which the stone is to come for the purpose of the construction, and the whole plan, and the estimates in regard to the number of brick, and the number of stone to be purchased, and everything of that sort has been made by him. The manner in which the brick is to be placed, and where it is to be placed, and where the stone is to be placed, has already been fixed by him.

Besides this, Mr. President, as an engineer, he looks to this work as one by which his reputation is hereafter to be sustained, and with which his name is to be connected. It is a great work, a national work; and it is one in which this engineer will feel great pride. Now, is it right, in itself, to take from the hands of the party thus appointed by the United States, who has made all the surveys and estimates, the construction of the work, the management of it, and the superintendence of it, and advertise it out to contractors? I do not think so, Mr. President. You have now a certainty that the work will be completed under the management of this engineer, within the estimates which he has made, and constructed of the best materials; that it will be useful to the country and creditable to himself. Now, divide the responsibility, put it into the hands of contractors, and you may have the work of a perishing character—neither creditable nor useful. For the reasons suggested, that here are the estimates which have been made, that the contracts have been made for the materials to be furnished, with the assent of the President, that the engineer is responsible for them being good, and for the quantity which he has advertised for and agreed to purchase, it appears to me that here is a case, at any rate, in which the Democratic principle—if it may be termed one—giving to the civil service the employments which properly belong to the military and to scientific men, ought not to be carried out.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. I desire to modify my amendment by adding to it the following:

And the superintendence of the work to be continued under the control and direction of the Secretary of War, who shall have power to reject all the work which, in his opinion, may be improperly or badly done.

Mr. CASS. I consider this as a wise and economical plan. It contains no reflection upon the superintending officer. There is no transfer of the work. His superintendency is to be preserved. I know the officer personally; he is a very able and upright man, and among the most intelligent of our officers. I should hear no imputation cast upon him without defending him; for I know him. But there is no such idea involved in this proposition. What is the advantage of it? It has two very manifest advantages. You are sure now that you will not exceed the given sum, and you stand under a chance of having the work done for a less sum. I defy you, in the long range of appropriations made by the Government, to point out to me a single work which has been kept within the estimates. I do not know how much the Chesapeake and Ohio canal cost, but it cost millions upon millions. That is but an example; it is a reproach to nobody, because it is a very uncertain matter. And, sir, no superintending officer in his condition can manage such a work so far as respects the labor and material, as well as a builder and contractor. It is not human nature it is useless to expect it.

What is the objection to this? I cannot see any at all. The superintending officer is still to have the control of the work; his superintendency is to be preserved; he is, from day to day, to go on and witness the work, just as much as I should do, or any one else would do, if I made a contract with another to do a work for myself. If he now sees bad work done by his day laborers he will stop it, and if he sees bad work done by the day laborers employed by the contractors, he can do the same thing. He, and the officers under him, of whom, I presume, he will have enough, will, from day to day, go along the work and see that it is properly done. This proposition will not change that. They will do just as they do now, with the advantage that the cost of the materials and of the labor will be transferred to men who will take better care of it, and do it cheaper than your officers can do it. I acknowledge that there are public works, perhaps the building of ships, and others of that description, which should be exempted from this rule. The building of ships had better be done in your own ship-yards, that is of vast consequence; but, in regard to a work like this, under the superintendence of an officer who understands the work, I do not see why it should not be done by contract. There are thousands of works which are now being done by contract. Our works have been done by contract ever since the foundation of the Government, and I trust they will be so done hereafter. I repeat, this may be so guarded—and it is so guarded—by the complete control of the War Department, that no injury can arise; but I think very great advantages will be derived from it.

Mr. SHIELDS called for the reading of the amendment; and it was read as modified.

Mr. CASS. I would suggest that the words "cause to be rejected" be used instead of "to reject."

Mr. WALKER. That is implied in the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan move to amend the amendment?

Mr. CASS. No, sir; I do not care anything about that; but I will ask the Secretary to read the beginning of the amendment.

The Secretary read, as follows:

That no part of the appropriation contained in this act shall be expended, unless in pursuance of a contract, to be made with the most responsible bidder, after first inviting proposals, &c.

Mr. CASS. "Most responsible?"

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. "And lowest."

Mr. CASS. "Most responsible and lowest bidder" should go together.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. Let it be modified by inserting "lowest."

Mr. BENJAMIN. It appears to me that if there is any work on which it would be dangerous to experiment by constructing it under contract, it is precisely the work which is now before the Senate. The proposition is to build the work not as well, but as cheap as possible. We all know that in a work of this character not only ought the materials to be the best, but the workmanship also ought to be such as to give just reason for hoping that it would last for ages. According to the present plan by which the work is constructed, there is no interest, on the part of any workman, to put in inferior work. In relation to the materials, it is in the power of the superintendent to examine them as they are delivered, and to reject them if they are not precisely in accordance with what he requires for the construction. Now, you propose to continue the work by contract, under the superintendence of the Department; but the superintendent cannot have his eye upon every workman who is laying brick or stone. It will be impossible for him to be at all times, and on all occasions, at every part of the work which is to be done at different points. The moment you put the work under the contract system, you make it the interest of the contractor, when the eye of the superintendent is withdrawn from the work, to put in inferior materials and workmanship, to gain greater profits. On the other hand, when the workman is employed by the day, and when the materials are delivered to the superintendent himself, it is possible for the superintendent to exercise a proper supervision over the quality of the materials, and the workman has no interest, no temptation to slight his work.

This work when made is to be covered under ground, and in the greater portion of it defects may be concealed when it is the interest of the contractor to slight his work and conceal them. You may have the work done perhaps for $50,000, or $100,000, or $200,000, or $300,000 less than the estimate, but what will be the result? In a year or two a secret defect may be found, a deficiency in the supply of water will take place, leaks will occur in the aqueduct, and the whole aqueduct will have to be unearthed and repairs made, so that probably in the end it would cost double what it will if it is properly done in the beginning. This has been found to be the experience of the Government under all circumstances. It has been so in the Departments and in all the public buildings. The whole subject was discussed when the extension of the Capitol was provided for, and upon all occasions it has been found to be sound economy eventually, although a little additional cost may have been incurred at the beginning, to do the work under the superintendence of the public officers, and to eschew the contract system. If an experiment is to be made with the contract system, I hope it will be made on some other work. Let it be upon anything but this, because the expense for repairs on a work like this is frequently more than the original cost. We have an example in the case of the Chesapeake and Ohio canal. Many other striking examples might be offered. What is proposed to be gained by this change? If Senators have that confidence which they profess in the Secretary of War, and in the superintendent of the work, what is to be gained by this? It can be no great amount. As to limiting it within the amount of the appropriation, we have not only the report of the officer who has made an exact estimate of the cost of every portion of the work to be done, but we have the experience of the portion already done, which has been effected according to the report which we have before us this session, at something less than the estimate which he had originally prepared for that part. I think there is no reason to fear that the estimate will be exceeded, but that on the contrary, it will be adhered to. If our legislation on the subject is to vacillate with the changing opinion of every Congress, we shall expend a great deal of money, and finally have the work obliged to be kept in operation by constant expenditures for repairs. The work is now in safe hands admitting, at the utmost, that $100,000 or $200,000 should be expended more than the estimate, it is better to have it permanent, well constructed, and safe, than to run the risk, perhaps, by the adoption of the contract system.

Mr. HUNTER. I am not among those who believe that the contract system is entirely to be abandoned; I think there are some public works which should be executed by a mixture of the two systems—partly by contract, and partly by the personal superintendence of a public officer. In this case, I believe the work is under the charge of an officer of great fidelity, and great intelligence, who will make it a matter of pride to keep the expenditures within the estimate. I believe, sir, that it would be safe, and, in the end, we should probably have it better and more cheaply done, if we did not throw these restrictions around him; but if they are to be thrown around him, there are some matters for which it does not provide. You restrict him as to the estimate for the construction of the work; that is right enough; but he makes no estimate for land damages. He makes no estimate for suiting the portion of the work already accomplished to that which is hereafter to be performed. These things ought to be excluded from the estimate. The estimate was for the purpose of making a work necessary to bring water here. I think, therefore, that this ought to be excluded, if we are going to put this restriction upon him; and we ought to strike out the lowest bidder. If you require him to take a responsible contractor, and allow him to estimate, that is well enough; the estimate is limit enough; but as to requiring him to take the cheapest, you throw upon him the necessity of employing some one who will come here hereafter to be relieved of the contract.

Mr. SHIELDS. Will the honorable Senator, before he takes his seat, allow me to state another defect? There is no provision made here as to making the payments. As the work progresses the payment ought to be made pari passu, and some portion of the money be kept back until the final investigation. There is no provision of that kind proposed here. It is always contained in these cases.

Mr. RUSK. It would certainly be economical for the Government to look to the permanent and durable character of this work. It would be much cheaper to make it in a permanent and durable manner at first than to be compelled to make appropriations hereafter to repair it. I see that the amendment would be very likely to shift the responsibility. As the matter now stands, it is devolved upon the Secretary of War and an engineer selected from the Army, and we have the guarantee of their reputation against a failure.

There is another consideration. If we require it to be subjected to contract, the end, in my judgment, will be this: the contract will be let out at a price for the superintendence all the time, to the condemnation of the work, if it should not be according to the contract. The contractors will endeavor to make it at as little expense as possible; for in that will be found their profit. What will be the result? If the work is done in a manner not satisfactory to the engineer and Secretary of War, the contractors will forfeit their contract, and call upon Congress for relief.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. If the Senator will give way, I will withdraw the amendment.

Mr. HUNTER. I ask, by general consent, that I may be allowed to correct an omission in one of the amendments which have already been agreed to by the Senate. The amendment was:

To enable the Secretary of State to defray the expenses of releasing from captivity among the Indians of Queen Charlotte's Island, or so much thereof as may be necessary, $25,000.

It omitted to state for the releasing of whom. I propose to add "the crew and passengers of the American sloop Georgiana."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HUNTER. There is another amendment, to which the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. BRODHEAD] objected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon that amendment which is to insert in the bill the following:

To enable the Secretary of State to reimburse to Edward Riddle such sums as shall be satisfactorily proved to have been expended by him, or to which said Riddle may have obligated himself on account of his official position at the Industrial Exhibition at London, England, or so much thereof as shall be necessary, $26,000: Provided, That no portion of the payment made pro rata by contributors at said exhibition shall be regarded as within this appropriation.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I do not understand why this $26,000 is to be given to Mr. Riddle to reimburse him for expenses at the World's Fair, in London. That was a gathering of contributors, inventors, and gentlemen, who wished to display themselves in London. Some of them sent a memorial here a year or two ago, presenting a claim to be paid for the transporting of their goods as merchandise to London, for the purpose of exhibiting them there, and I made a report against it from the Committee on Claims. Now, it seems that Mr. Riddle, by virtue of his official position at this industrial fair, in the city of London, is to be reimbursed. What official position did he hold? Where is the law under which he was appointed to that official position? Who appointed him? Who gave him an official position? Certainly we had no law on the subject that I know of; and if this gentleman desired to assume the liability to help other people there, I do not know that he has any more claim on Congress than any other citizen who becomes indebted to his neighbors through an act of liberality. I may be wrong in these views. I hope I am. But such is the impression that I have received in regard to the claim.

I do not know what official position he could hold. Certainly he did not hold one by virtue of any law. I understand that the fair was a voluntary thing, and why we should pay Mr. Riddle $26,000, I do not well understand. It may be that there is a good reason for it. If there is, I should like to hear it. Who recommends the appropriation? Does any head of a Department assume the responsibility of it? If we pay this, we must pay all other contributors to that fair, and I know a good many of them. Those whom I reported against, from the Committee on Claims two years ago, of course must come forward and have their claim allowed. If I am wrong in these views, I, of course, will withdraw all objection.

Mr. PEARCE. There is another member of the Committee on Finance whom I do not see in his place, who could give a better explanation of this amendment than I can; but I desire to say this: When the Industrial Exhibition at London was proposed, the United States were invited to cooperate, and a communication in relation to it was made by the British authorities to our Executive. The President was without power to adopt any effectual measure on the part of this Government; but as far as he had authority he suggested that certain persons should be named as a sort of central commission. That suggestion was promptly carried out, I think, by the Secretary of State designating the members of the central commission. Afterwards the Governors of different States appointed State commissioners, and Mr. Riddle received his appointment to act as commissioner to represent America at this industrial exhibition. The Government went so far as to authorize a national ship to transport the products of American exhibitors to England, but made no provision for the necessary expenses, which I suppose every Senator is aware were defrayed by other Governments, whose subjects or citizens exhibited their products. Some of them, I believe, provided very liberally, one as much as $100,000; and no other Government, whose products were exhibited, gave less than $30,000. Well, sir, when the American goods arrived in London, it was found that it was expected from the United States that they should furnish the means of fitting up in proper style that portion of the Crystal Palace which was appropriated for the exhibition of American goods. There were no funds on hand to do this. There was no public functionary vested with authority to do it. Under these circumstances, Mr. Peabody, the American banker in London, advanced the sum of $20,000, which was expended; and Mr. Riddle also advanced, I believe, a considerable sum, the whole amount being about $26,000.

Now, sir, it is not proposed by this appropriation to pay Mr. Riddle any salary for his services. It is simply proposed to advance so much money as will repay the generous individuals who, for the interest and honor of their country, advanced the money which was necessary to fit up the portion of the Crystal Palace appropriated for the exhibition of American products, and to pay certain expenses charged by the Government of Great Britain. There were certain fees and charges made by that Government rather unexpectedly, I think, to the American commissioner and exhibitors. A portion of the contributors also advanced money, I suppose according to the value of the articles which they exhibited. It is not proposed to reimburse them anything; but this proposition is simply to reimburse these individuals who advanced the money necessary to enable our countrymen to participate in the exhibition. As my friend from North Carolina suggests, these gentlemen had nothing to exhibit for themselves; but they made these advances merely for the credit and honor of the country, which must have suffered if, after giving the national sanction to it so far as to send a national vessel to England with the goods, the means had not been furnished to fit up a portion of the Crystal Palace to exhibit them in. I think if the Government had been aware of the matter, it would scarcely have refused at the time to give the necessary funds for the purpose of exhibiting specimens of American ingenuity, skill, and industry to the best advantage, in this competition of industrial art with the principal nations of the Old World, who were represented in London; and it does seem to me that we should, for the credit of the nation, as we did not make the appropriation at the time, do what is asked of us now.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I shall ask for the yeas and nays upon this amendment. I cannot agree to it. These gentlemen went there voluntarily, and why we should pay them for exhibiting their goods, wares, and merchandise, I cannot see. They certainly had a motive for doing it. But, sir, patriotism is brought up here. Do you suppose that these inventors, wealthy men, who went to display themselves about the World's Fair, went there out of pure patriotism alone, to maintain the honor of the country? Sir, if the honor of the country were dependent upon that, I do not think it would be worth much, or that it would be much sustained. They went for the purpose of private gain. I take it that they were no better or worse than other people. They exhibited their merchandise and their inventions there; they had a motive in doing it. I suppose it was a very good motive. No doubt many of them sold their inventions, or brought them prominently before the public, by the exhibition of them.

Mr. BADGER. Will the Senator allow me to repeat a suggestion which was made by the Senator from Maryland? The amendment does not propose to pay any of the contributors one cent. It is not proposed to pay any of the persons who sent articles there to be exhibited. The state of the case is this: They sent a national ship, which the Government placed in a condition for the purpose, with the articles which were to be exhibited. When they arrived at London, it was found, in the first place, that the British Government expected the United States and all other nations to fit up the portion of the Crystal Palace which was assigned to the exhibition of their products respectively. Well, there were all these articles taken over by a national ship, and one of two things had to be done: somebody must advance the money to fit up the portion of the Crystal Palace which was allotted to the United States, and in which were to be exhibited the articles which were sent over in a national vessel, or they must be brought back. That was the state of the case; and now it is proposed only to reimburse the persons who had no more interest in the exhibition than the Senator from Pennsylvania himself, the money advanced by them to fit up that portion of the Crystal Palace. All other nations paid for fitting up the portions assigned to them. The proposition is not to pay the contributors to the exhibition, or the owners of the articles exhibited. They are not to be paid one penny.

Mr. BRODHEAD. Let us examine this statement as now made by the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. BADGER. It is the same that was made by the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. BRODHEAD. Very well; and repeated by the Senator from North Carolina. He says all the other Governments fitted up certain places in the Crystal Palace for the exhibition of their articles. Our proportion is over $26,000; that of England is $26,000; that of France, $26,000; and so on. Thus you have a very handsome sum; and yet every person who attended that Crystal Palace paid, I believe, a pound, or something near that, for admission. It was a private enterprise. It was got up by gentlemen who wanted to make money, as the Crystal Palace was got up in New York.

Mr. BADGER. In vindication of the propriety of this application, who built the Crystal Palace, who let the Crystal Palace, and into whose pockets the money went, are questions not to be considered. It is not proposed to pay them anything. The proposition is to reimburse the sum of money which was advanced by American citizens in London to fit up that portion of the Crystal Palace allotted to the United States, and those individuals had no concern in the building or in the articles exhibited.

Mr. BRODHEAD. If these American citizens—these patriotic citizens in London—chose to be cheated, chose to suffer this corporation thus to get $26,000 out of them after inviting them there, without giving them notice that they had to pay for fitting up a portion of the Crystal Palace, are we to reimburse it to them? Can this thing be done with any propriety? We are swelling our appropriations to a very great amount. I do not wish even to seem to be pertinacious against any appropriation; but when it gets up to $26,000 in a case like this, I feel bound by my sense of duty to resist it.

Mr. DAWSON. I desire to ask the Senator from North Carolina if the $26,000 were expended in improving the Crystal Palace in London?

Mr. BADGER. The honorable Senator will understand that when the Crystal Palace was built, there were certain portions of its interior assigned for the products of America, which were sent there for exhibition. It was found, when the articles were taken there from the various countries, that each particular department had to be fitted up with such interior arrangements as were necessary to display the articles to the best advantage; and the money was expended in doing that to the portion of the palace which was assigned to the United States.

Mr. DAWSON. For the benefit of the exhibitors?

Mr. BADGER. They did not advance the money to fit it up. Mr. Peabody and Mr. Riddle advanced the money. So far as Mr. Peabody advanced it, it was borrowed by Mr. Riddle, who was then in charge of the American products, and acting as commissioner. The money was borrowed in part, and advanced in part, by Mr. Riddle.

Mr. DAWSON. By whom was Mr. Riddle appointed?

Mr. BADGER. By the President, I believe. The difficulty was this: The articles were all there; they had been sent in a national ship, and unless somebody had advanced the money, they must have been brought back. Mr. Riddle consulted with the American Minister, and on his advice borrowed this sum of money to make the necessary arrangements for the proper display of the goods of the American exhibitors.

The yeas and nays were ordered upon the amendment.

Mr. PEARCE. I have a letter upon this subject from the then American Minister at London. He says:

Boston, July 14, 1854.

DEAR SIR: I have before me your letter of the 10th instant, and should have given an earlier reply, had I been at home. Every circumstance respecting the noble conduct of Mr. George Peabody in coming forward with a loan to pay the carriage upon the merchandise brought to Southampton, in the frigate St. Lawrence, and for fitting up the place allotted to the United States for the reception of the various articles, is fresh in my memory.

The Government of the United States promoted the exhibition, and did as much as could have been expected, with one exception, which was of more importance than anything else, viz: an appropriation of money to carry out the objects recommended. The commissioner came to me, and asked what he should do. I told him unless he would borrow the money to pay the expenses upon the American articles which had arrived, and were on their way to London, they must all be sent back to the United States, which would have proved a lasting source of mortification to every true American citizen, whether at home or abroad. Mr. Peabody called upon me to consult upon the matter, as did many of our countrymen who were then in London, all of whom, so far as I conversed with them, entertained the opinion that Congress would reimburse any one who should come forward and furnish the means to carry forward the great national object. Mr. Peabody, with that promptness for which he is distinguished, in his honorable and high purposes of action, offered to advance the money, which was accepted, to the great relief of every American citizen in Europe. It was deemed a matter of national honor that the United States should be represented in the Crystal Palace, after all that had been said and printed here upon the subject. Mr. Peabody assumed these responsibilities from the highest principles of patriotism. It was pure devotion to the honor and interest of his native land, that he proffered his money for her uses. I am free to say that I had no doubt, under the circumstances attending the exhibition, that Congress would meet the expenses incurred in London, and I cannot but hope that the committee, or whoever has charge of the claim, will make a unanimous report in favor of its payment. I advised to the course that was adopted in London, as you, perhaps, may remember.

I am, dear sir, very faithfully yours,

ABBOTT LAWRENCE.

EDWARD G. TUCKERMAN, Esq.,

National Hotel, Washington.

That is from Mr. Abbott Lawrence. It shows the circumstances under which these advances of money were made. They were not made for the benefit of individuals; they were not made for any pecuniary interest which the party making them had in the exhibition; but purely for the honor and credit of the country. I think that no one can doubt that it would have been discreditable to us in the highest degree, if, after our Government had so far patronized the exhibition as to send American fabrics and inventions to England in a national ship, as contributions to this exhibition, they should have been suffered to return without reaching the Crystal Palace at all. Allow me further to say, sir, that much more than individual interest was concerned in the exhibition. There was not only the national honor and credit involved; not only the introduction into European use of some of our most valuable inventions; not only the increase of trade which the exhibition of some of our products has enabled us to obtain; but our artisans brought back to the country useful practical knowledge and improved taste, which they borrowed from the European inventors and artisans, whose products were submitted to their inspection, thus benefiting the industrial and other classes of our community. It was not, therefore, without a national remuneration; and surely, any one who had any regard for the national credit would have been exceedingly mortified if the result had followed which Mr. Lawrence mentions as certain to have followed if the advances by Mr. Peabody had not been made. I admit there is no legal claim on Congress for these advances. Nobody ever pretended that there was; but we suppose that if Congress had known the facts at the time, an appropriation would have been made, and what would have been done at the time, ought, under all the circumstances, to be done now.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 24, nays 18; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allen, Badger, Bell, Benjamin, Butler, Chase, Clayton, Cooper, Dawson, Fessenden, Fish, Foot, Geyer, Gillette, Gwin, Hamlin, James, Pearce, Pettit, Rockwell, Shields, Sumner, Wade, and Walker—24.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Atchison, Brodhead, Cass, Clay, Dodge of Wisconsin, Dodge of Iowa, Evans, Fitzpatrick, Houston, Hunter, Jones of Tennessee, Mallory, Rusk, Sebastian, Shidell, Stuart, and Toombs—18.

And the amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment, which had been expected, was to insert the following:

Sec. 11. And be it further enacted, That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint or employ in his official household, the following officers, to wit: One private secretary, at a yearly salary of $2,500; one clerk, at a yearly salary of $1,600; one steward, at a yearly salary of $1,000, who shall, under the direction of the President, have charge of, and be responsible for, the plate and furniture of the President's Mansion; and shall discharge such other duties as the President may assign him; one messenger, at a yearly salary of $900; and one assistant messenger, at a yearly salary of $750. And for the payment of the compensation of the said officers, during the present fiscal year, the sum of $6,750, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Sec. 12. And be it further enacted, That a yearly appropriation be made for the purchase of stationery, binding public documents, and other contingent expenses of the Executive office, to be expended by the private secretary, under the direction of the President; and for that purpose, during the present fiscal year, the sum of $650 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I object to those sections. I do not suppose that any Senator will think that I am actuated with any desire but one for the public good. But, sir, when the question was started for the increase of salaries, I announced that I was willing to increase them all, and the record shows that I voted for the highest salary proposed by others for the members of this Administration. I should be perfectly willing now, sir, to vote for all appropriations for the President, if I could do so consistently with my convictions of duty under the Constitution. The distinguished Senator from North Carolina will doubtless make it perfectly clear to his own mind, and perhaps to that of the majority of the Senate, that this is not in violation of a constitutional principle; that it does not increase the President's salary. If he can satisfy them of that I shall be perfectly content. The Constitution says:

"The President shall, at stated times, receive for his services a compensation which shall neither be increased nor diminished during the period for which he shall have been elected; and he shall not receive within that period any other emolument from the United States, or any of them."

The Senator from North Carolina says that this is not increasing his salary. Well, sir, it does this; it certainly saves to him the amount of money embraced in this appropriation, giving him additional officers. What is it? It provides, in the first place, that he shall have "one private secretary, at a yearly salary of $2,500; one clerk, at a yearly salary of $1,600; one steward, at a yearly salary of $1,000, who shall, under the direction of the President, have charge of, and be responsible for, the plate and furniture of the President's Mansion, and shall discharge such other duties as the President may assign him; one messenger, at a yearly salary of $900; and one assistant messenger, at a yearly salary of $750." And then the twelfth section makes a provision of $650 for the purchase of stationery. Another section of the bill, Mr. President, makes an appropriation for the compensation of a doorkeeper at the President's House, $500; for an assistant doorkeeper, $365; and then, in another section, "for fuel for the President's House, $1,000;" and "for furnace keeper for the President's House, $365." Now, sir, the President is to have these servants, and the Government is to pay for them. If you can go on and make a provision for those servants, why not go through the whole catalogue? If you can give him a fireman, why not supply him with any other servant? If you can supply him with fuel, why not supply his wine cellars? In my judgment you may go on that way, and meet every possible expenditure that would come within the necessary calls of the White House. I repeat, if this proposition had been made at the proper time, I should have voted for it with pleasure; but I am not willing to do by indirection that which we cannot do directly. I am not willing to increase his salary in this way, by giving him all the servants that would be necessary, and then say that it is no increase of his salary. Suppose we force upon him the necessity of employing servants not provided for, is not that increasing his expenditure? If you may not do that, then I apprehend you cannot do what is asked by my honorable friend. I have no feeling about the matter; but these are my constitutional views, and I am acting under them.

Mr. BADGER. I should agree in the impropriety of this amendment, if it had the effect of indirectly increasing the President's compensation; but to my understanding there is not only no reasonable or probable ground for supposing that it has that effect, but it is demonstrable that it does not have that effect. My friend from Tennessee has referred to some other items in the bill. It might be sufficient to say, that whether those provisions are right or wrong does not affect the question about the amendment which I proposed; but I will dispose of the objections to these provisions.

First, he objects to the provision in the bill which assigns to the President's House a doorkeeper and assistant doorkeeper. My friend does not seem to consider that the President's House is not a private mansion. The President is not the head of a Department, who has a public office, separate and distinct in its location from his private residence, and who, when he goes to his private residence, has there his domestic servants to discharge the duties of domestic servants in his family apart from his public office. The mansion which the President lives in is a public building, opened in nearly the whole extent of it to visitors from day to day. Persons go there who come here from all parts of the United States. They think they have a right to go there; they think it is proper to go there. They look at this house not as the private house of the President, but as a mansion erected by the Government for the accommodation of the Executive head of the nation. We all, who know anything about the matter, know that there is a constant flow of visitors. The doorkeeper who is to be appointed is not to discharge duties relating to the President's private family. There are persons there, as all of us know who have been there, who receive and carry visitors through the public apartments of the house, who show them what they desire to inspect, who explain to them the arrangements of the house, and who give that satisfaction to them in regard to the President's Mansion, as a public building, which is given by the messengers or doorkeepers of the Patent Office, or any other of the public establishments in the city.

It would be exceedingly unfair to impose it upon the President of the United States to pay, out of the compensation given to him for his support, the charge of officers to superintend a building—because he happens to live in it—which is a public building, and which persons visit for the purpose of inspecting, as they do for the inspection of other public buildings. Now, sir, within a few years Congress made provision for extending the gas works to the President's House, and for furnishing it with gas. There might have been some pretense, some show of allegation, that that was an indirect method of increasing the President's compensation, because, undoubtedly, it relieved the President of the expense of lighting the mansion; but then it should be recollected in regard to that appropriation, that its primary object was not to light the private apartments. It was intended to light up those great public rooms which are constantly thrown open during the winter season of the year, to be visited by all the people of the metropolis, and by visitors; and for that reason it was not liable to objection.

Then in regard to the keeper of the furnaces. Congress has recently made provision for erecting furnaces for the purpose of warming the House. Well, sir, the necessity for those furnaces arises from those vast apartments which are for the public use, and not for the private or particular use or benefit of the President. There would have been no necessity for any such provision, if the private apartments of the President only had to be provided for; and, therefore, I do not see the ground of objection to that provision.

But however those things may be, with regard to the particular provision now under consideration, to my understanding it is demonstrable that it does not directly or indirectly affect the President's compensation. It is proposed, first, to give to him a private secretary and a clerk. Gentlemen may suppose—but if they do they are entirely mistaken—that the office of President of the United States is a sinecure; that he has nothing to do but to receive official visits and write "approved" at the foot of bills. Sir, he has a vast deal to do, and he requires clerical force and assistance to enable him to do it. He has public business to do, business in regard to which, if we now require him to pay for it out of the compensation given him, it would be just to remove the imposition from him. Why should the President be required to make payment for such things any more than the head of a Department? Each head of a Department has his clerical force to assist him in the discharge of his official duties; and if the head of a Department has it, where is the propriety in withholding it from the President, compelling him to pay for it out of his own compensation? But, sir, it has not heretofore been paid out of the private pocket of the President, and it will not now be paid out of his private pocket, whether we make this appropriation or not. The President is left in a situation always dependent for these things on the heads of Departments. I presume he always has been.

Then, with regard to the steward, to take charge of the public property in the mansion, I have explained what I thought was the necessity and propriety of having such an officer. It does not concern the President's private family. The steward, whom we propose in the amendment to take charge of the mansion, is not to be a man to wait upon the table, or to attend to menial services. He is to be an agent of the Government, to take charge of a large amount of valuable property, and to see that it is taken care of; and he is to be chargeable with and responsible for it.

Then with regard to the messengers. As I stated the other day, the messengers proposed to be given to the President are not to be his private servants—not a bit more than the messengers who are kept by the Secretary of War are his private servants. They are to assist the President in the transaction of his public duties. The President has to send to, as well as to receive from, the various Executive Departments, papers and documents of extreme importance, which ought not to be entrusted to the hands of domestic servants about the household. But if they might be trusted with them, where is the propriety of requiring the President to make his domestic servants go upon public errands? But, sir, in point of fact, whether this appropriation is made or not, the President will neither receive nor lose a penny. The services have been performed in a sort of helter-skelter manner, in a way not suitable to the dignity of the President's office—by extra calls upon other officers; and they will be performed without charge upon him, and without being paid for out of his compensation. Therefore, the passage of this amendment will in no way, either directly or indirectly, increase his compensation, and is, therefore, not unconstitutional.

Now, Mr. President, a few words as to these contingent appropriations. It is a curious fact, that until the time of Mr. Fillmore's administration, there was never a dollar appropriated for the purchase of a book of any kind for the Executive Mansion. Every head of a Department had a library; every head of a Department had a contingent fund, so that occasional additions might be made to his library. Every head of a Department had public documents; but up to the time when Mr. Fillmore was President of the United States, there never was a book, nor a public document bought under an appropriation for the presidential mansion. There was nothing in the presidential mansion obtained through an appropriation by Congress to which to refer for any information on any subject that might arise in the performance of public duties. Well, sir, in Mr. Fillmore's time, Congress made an appropriation for the purpose of commencing the formation of a library; and they made provision for supplying public documents, so that the President might have, at least, as much means for the obtaining of information in the prosecution of his duties as we have in the discharge of ours.

Now, sir, these matters are found to be necessary. The President is to have stationery. There are various incidental expenses of that kind connected with the President's House as a public Executive Mansion. To my mind, there is no constitutional difficulty in regard to making such a provision for the President. I do not seek this for the particular person who is President now. I should have moved it when Mr. Fillmore was President, but I did not think it was becoming in me to do so, I being a political friend of his. It is no new idea of mine. My mind has been settled upon it for four years past, and I seize this; the very first session of Congress which has been held when it could not be supposed that I was endeavoring to procure the provision for the personal dignity of the gentleman at the head of the nation whom I had supported for the Presidency, as the head of the political party to which I belong, to bring forward this proposition. I think it is judicious and proper.

Mr. PEARCE. I am very glad that this proposition has been introduced by the Senator from North Carolina, since no suspicion of political partisanship can attach to it. I think, too, that something of the sort has long been demanded by various public considerations. I recollect, sir, a conversation which I had with President Polk, about three days before he left the Executive Mansion. I think the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. BELL] was present. He said to us that he thought it highly important that Congress should organize something like an Executive office for the preservation of official presidential papers. He said that the President often had correspondence of great public interest and value which ought to be preserved, and in an organized Executive office, as the other archives of the Government are.

Now, when the President goes out of office, he must either take such papers with him, or they are destroyed. No place is provided by the Government for their preservation, and of course they disappear. Much that is interesting, and of the greatest value in our political history, is among such papers, and should be deposited in such an office. The amendment of the Senator from North Carolina proposes what will answer this end. I would suggest to him, however, to modify it, so that, instead of providing for a private secretary at $2,500, he shall provide for a secretary to the President, whose duty it shall be to take care of official papers, and perform such other duties as the President may direct.

Mr. CLAYTON. That is right.

Mr. BADGER. I agree to that willingly.

Mr. PEARCE. Then I think he should have a clerk, because I know, and I presume other Senators know, that the correspondence of the Executive office is exceedingly burdensome. I have seen the letter book of ex-President Fillmore, and I know that it contains matters of exceeding interest and public importance; and I think if this arrangement had been made, some of those letters would have remained on the Executive files for the information and benefit of the President's successors, who now find, on coming into office, that the letters addressed to their predecessors, which might be needed for reference, are either all destroyed, or else have been taken away. I am sure this would be of very great importance, and I think these public considerations demand that the President should have a secretary and clerk to record and preserve such papers, and relieve the President of a portion of his labors.

Then, as to the messengers, I do not see, as the Senator from North Carolina has suggested, why the President is not entitled to, and has not as much public necessity for, messengers as one of the Secretaries. The President has to communicate daily, or very frequently at least, with all the Secretaries, and he must have some one to go on these errands. They are not to be appointed for his personal convenience, but for the dispatch of the public business with which he is charged; and it seems to me that the Government ought to provide him with the means of performing his public functions with facility and promptness. As to the number of messengers, I do not know how many may be necessary, certainly one is, and it may be that two are. He may want both of them, and I do not think the number at all extravagant.

Then, the only one remaining is the steward. Now, I have already said that these employees are for official purposes, and they will not add a penny's increase to the salary of the President, nor to his emoluments, because they are not created for his private business. It is true that if we do not give him this additional officer, he may be compelled by our injustice to draw from the income which the law allows him to pay for services for which the Government should pay; but if you determine to pay him for those services which the Government require of him, you are simply doing that which you should have originally done. In regard to the stewardship, it may be more nearly allied to something for his personal benefit than the rest of the section; but the object, as stated by the Senator from North Carolina, is to take care of the plate and furniture of the Executive Mansion.

We appropriate large sums, whenever a President comes into office, for furnishing his mansion; and I suppose gentlemen know that there are a great many people who visit the Executive Mansion, who are no better than they should be, and who do not hesitate to help themselves to the public property when they find an opportunity. I take it that if the celebrated "gold spoons" had been really gold, they would have vanished long since, but it is known that they are only silver, gold washed. I know that from rich lace curtains enough have been cut off, and carried away, to make a dress. Now, we want some person charged with authority to look after the plate and furniture of the mansion, and a steward is the proper officer. The salary proposed is not an unreasonable one, and such a provision nothing unusual in the arrangements of Governments.

Why, sir, in my own State of Maryland, which does not contain the thirtieth part of the population of the Union, we used to have, and still have, I believe, a steward of the Executive Mansion, whose business it is to look after these things. I think it is right and proper that the President of the United States should have a steward, whose official duty it shall be to take charge of the furniture. I am sure that we do not mean that the President himself should make it a point to look about and see who steals the spoons and cuts off the curtains; and, therefore, he must have somebody whose especial duty it shall be to do it; and that is proposed to be provided for in this amendment. I am glad to see the liberal spirit in which my honorable friend from North Carolina has introduced the proposition, and I shall support it cheerfully. No personal intimacy or political favor towards the President influences me more than him; but I desire, whoever may be the incumbent of that office, that liberal appropriations shall be made for his comfort, convenience, and dignity, and this provision is necessary for that purpose.

Mr. CLAYTON. If I belonged to the Democratic party, like my friends on the other side of the Chamber, I might remain silent on this question; but, sir, I am at perfect liberty now to express my honest opinions in regard to this matter. I fully concur with my friends from North Carolina and Maryland. The President's salary itself is an insufficient one; but I do not propose to raise it by these means.

The proposition contained in the amendment of the committee is unexceptionable. The officers who are provided for in it are necessary; and, in my opinion, there is nothing more necessary than the establishment of some office for the purpose of taking care of those Executive documents which peculiarly belong to the Executive mansion. The President, at present, has no means of preserving any of those papers unless he sends them to the State Department, where they are deposited, and where, as we know from the past history of the country, they have not been faithfully kept. Nobody can tell who mutilated them, or carried them away; but the fact that they have been mutilated, after being sent down to that Department by the President, and that they have been carried away in years now long gone by, is unquestionable. These papers ought to be preserved in some office under the care of the President, and they should be delivered over to his successor in office.

I will not pursue the subject, for I have no doubt the Senate is tired of it; and I only rose for the purpose of adding my testimony to that of the honorable gentleman who preceded me that the provisions of this amendment are eminently proper.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I do not mean to debate this question, for I am perfectly willing that every Senator on this floor shall vote for the amendment; and I do not mean to be understood as entering into any competition with the Senator from North Carolina upon the score of liberality in appropriations—perhaps I had better call it profligacy. I do not know how near he and I may come together; but certainly, as to other Senators on this floor, I claim to be as liberal as any of them. At the proper time I should not hesitate to give the President every servant he wants, from the garret down to the kitchen, or to vote him whatever amount of money is necessary to make him comfortable, and to enable him to discharge his duties as a gentleman ought to do; but I wish to do it according to my understanding of the intention of the Constitution.

I will not say that the three distinguished gentlemen who have spoken [Messrs. PEARCE, BADGER, and CLAYTON] are actuated by any hope of getting to the White House; but if they have any such hope, I may say to them they need give themselves no sort of uneasiness about my vote; but when they are elected President, before they take possession of the White House, I will, under the provisions of the Constitution, vote them enough to pay for all their servants, and their wines in the bargain; but I will not do it after they have taken their seats. That is my position.

Mr. PRATT. I concur entirely in the argument of my friend from North Carolina, and my honorable colleague, so far as they go; but there are objectionable portions of the bill which they have not touched in their arguments. I understand that there is an appropriation of $1,000 to buy fuel for the President's House, and another appropriation of $1,000 to pay men to make fires at the President's House. I think the salary of the President is wholly inadequate, and I should be willing to vote to make it double what it is, if we had constitutional power to do so; but the constitutional provision is that the salary of the President shall "neither be increased nor diminished during the period for which he shall have been elected; and he shall not receive within that period any other emolument from the United States." I apprehend the President himself would suppose that this bill which gives him $1,000 to buy fuel for his family, and another thousand to pay for men to make fires for him, to be unconstitutional, and therefore would veto it. Now, I think we ought not to run the risk of losing this bill, making the necessary appropriations for carrying on the Government, by leaving in it provisions which I think the President will consider as conferring unconstitutional emoluments upon him, and which he will therefore feel bound to veto.

Mr. SLIDELL. I wish to know the exact state of the question. Has the Senator from Tennessee moved to strike out these sections?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. STUART in the chair.) The question before the Senate is on the motion made by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. PEARCE] to amend the amendment of the committee by striking out the words, "private secretary," and inserting "secretary who shall take charge of such official papers as shall be confided to him, and perform such other duties as may be directed by the President."

Mr. SLIDELL. I was under the impression that the Senator from Tennessee had moved to strike out section eleven. For the information of the Senate, I will present and have read by the Secretary, an amendment which I intend to offer at the proper time, in lieu of the eleventh and twelfth sections; and I will state briefly the reasons why I wish to offer it.

My amendment provides for two officers, who, I think, are necessary to perform duties in relation to this body, and the House of Representatives, and the Departments, which are purely official, and do not partake in any degree of the personal character of persons attached to the President's household, as such. I look to two such officers; that is to say, I propose to increase the salary of one, and to create the other office, as being essential to the discharge of the proper official duties of the President. That far I am willing to go, and no farther. My amendment is to strike out all after the enacting clause of the eleventh section, as proposed by the committee, and to insert

"That a yearly salary of $2,500 be, and hereby is, allowed to the Secretary of the President, from the commencement of the present fiscal year, which sum is hereby appropriated for that purpose; and that a messenger be assigned to the President's office with the same annual compensation as is allowed by law to the principal messengers employed in the Executive departments."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. These two sections are proposed as an amendment by the Committee on Finance, and therefore a motion to strike them out is not in order. The Senate may refuse to adopt them, and then the Senator can move to insert. The question is now on the amendment of the Senator from Maryland to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SLIDELL. I now move to amend the amendment of the committee as it stands by striking out the eleventh and twelfth sections, and inserting what has just been read.

Mr. CASS. I would suggest to the Senator from Louisiana that there can be no doubt about the propriety of paying for the stationery of the President for public purposes. We provide him with a library, and I can see no objection to furnishing him with stationery.

Mr. SLIDELL. I will act on the suggestion of the Senator from Michigan, and move only to strike out the eleventh section, leaving the twelfth, and to insert in lieu of it:

That a yearly salary of $2,500 be, and hereby is, allowed to the Secretary for the President, from the commencement of the present fiscal year, which sum is hereby appropriated for that purpose; and that a messenger be assigned to the President's office, with the same annual compensation as is allowed by law to the principal messengers employed in the Executive departments.

Mr. MASON. I wish to inquire of the Senator from Louisiana whether there is any officer now known as the "Secretary of the President?"

Mr. SLIDELL. I had the act authorizing such an officer to be appointed, in my hand a short time ago, and I can get it directly. The Secretary of the President was an office created by law, and to him was assigned the duty of signing land patents. I will state to the Senator from Virginia what my motive was in drawing the amendment in that form. I conceive that the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina, from the Committee on Finance, creates a new office altogether. My object was to give a salary of $2,500 to the Secretary of the President, an officer already known to the law, as I will presently show.

Mr. MASON. My impression was, that in order to provide the President with a Secretary, we gave a salary of $1,500 to an officer who should have authority to sign the President's name to land patents; and he is not, by law, the Secretary of the President. He is merely authorized to sign the President's name to land patents. The intention was to provide him with a Secretary in that way, and such is the practice.

Mr. SLIDELL. I will state that there is an assistant secretary, and he is called so in the Blue Book, who receives the same compensation as the chief secretary, $1,500, and I believe signs all the patents, for I do not believe that the President's secretary signs any patents at all. This is the law to which I referred:

"That it shall be lawful for the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint a secretary, with a salary of $1,500 per annum, whose duty it shall be, under the direction of the President, to sign his name for him to all patents for land sold by and under the authority of the United States."

By a subsequent law, an assistant secretary was appointed, who now in fact signs all the land patents, for I understand the secretary of the President does not sign them at this time.

Mr. BADGER. I hope the Senate will not adopt the amendment proposed by the Senator from Louisiana. I think the amendment in the shape I have proposed it from the Committee on Finance does only what is decent, and proper, and respectable for the President in his official capacity. If the Senate think it is not proper to give him any assistance, well and good. If they give him any, I hope it will be given with the liberality which the circumstances of the case require.

Mr. MASON. Mr. President, there was one feature in the amendment of the committee, which I understood originated from the Senator from North Carolina, which I really consider a very important and valuable one for the public interests. It is the provision for an officer called a steward, who shall have charge of the public property in the President's House. Now, I happen to have known what possibly may be known to other Senators, that there has occurred more than once in the city of Washington, a sort of interregnum between the going out of one President and the incoming of another; and the President's House and all its contents are, in fact, during that time, abandoned. I have heard from the residents of Washington, living in that neighborhood, that during that interregnum the President's House has been actually the subject of common pillage. There has been nobody in it, and nobody in possession of the property.

Mr. BADGER. Nobody had any authority.

Mr. MASON. As the Senator from North Carolina remarks, nobody had any authority there. I had thought it was the duty of the Commissioner of Public Buildings to take charge of any public building which was left, as the President's House undoubtedly has been in more than one instance, without any authority whatever, or any person in it able to exercise authority. I remember to have heard what was alluded to by the Senator from North Carolina that, at the time when General Harrison came into office, there arose, in some way, a misunderstanding—I do not mean any angry, hostile misunderstanding—but some misinterpretation as to when the outgoing President should go out, and the incoming President come in, and the result of it, as I understand, was that when President Harrison went to the President's House to take possession of that mansion, with the crowd which attended him, and the friends who were with him, when his family came to make arrangements for the night, there actually was not enough bed clothing in the house to accommodate them. It had been stolen or carried away. The rest of the public property there is subject to the same sort of pillage and depredation.

Mr. CLAYTON. I am inclined to think the same thing has occurred on several other occasions.

Mr. MASON. So I have stated. There is an awkward interval between the outgoing of one President and the incoming of another. When that portion of the public property is abandoned, and there is no authority exercised over it, I think that the provision for an officer to reside in the President's House as a public officer, under his control, of course, whose duty it should be to take charge of the public property, was the most valuable feature in the whole amendment. I submit, therefore, to the Senator from Louisiana whether it would not be better to retain that feature.

Mr. SLIDELL. I will suggest to the Senator from Virginia, that there is a very simple mode of getting over the difficulty which he has mentioned as to the danger of the public property in the President's House being carried away, during the time which elapses between the going out of one President and the taking possession by another. Why not provide against that difficulty by offering an amendment, that on all such occasions, when there is no person properly in charge of the Presidential Mansion, the Commissioner of Public Buildings shall be authorized to take proper charge of it for that purpose? This would save the trouble of creating a permanent office.

Mr. MASON. Will it be in order to offer an amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. BRIGHT in the chair.) It will not be in order, as the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana is an amendment to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. SLIDELL called for the yeas and nays on his amendment; and they were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 18, nays 26; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Benjamin, Bright, Dodge of Iowa, Fessenden, Foot, Gillette, Houston, Hunter, Johnson, Jones of Tennessee, Mallory, Mason, Pratt, Rusk, Sebastian, Slidell, and Thompson of Kentucky—18.

NAYS—Messrs. Allen, Badger, Brodhead, Butler, Cass, Chase, Clay, Clayton, Cooper, Dawson, Fish, Fitzpatrick, Geyer, Gwin, Hamlin, James, Pearce, Shields, Stuart, Sumner, Thomson of New Jersey, Toombs, Wade, Walker, Weller, and Williams—26.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected, and the question recurring upon the amendment of the committee, as it had been amended on the motion of Mr. PEARCE.

Mr. ADAMS called for the yeas and nays; and they were ordered.

Mr. MASON. I have every disposition in the world to make any arrangement by law that will conduce to the convenience or comfort of the occupant of the Executive Mansion; but I am not satisfied that we have the power to do it in the form proposed by this amendment. I recollect very well that at the time the President was allowed a secretary to sign his name to land patents, it was considered the only mode in which the President could have a private secretary, the clause of the Constitution, which has been referred to, being in the way. I am not satisfied in my own mind, by any means, of the constitutionality of giving the President, indirectly, the emoluments proposed to be given by this provision, and I must therefore, reluctantly, vote against it.

Mr. STUART. Mr. President, in considering this subject, I have been unable to come to any conclusion similar to that which has just been presented by the Senator from Virginia. It is by no express provision that we furnish any Department with a single material connected with its business. It is under the general power given to us by the Constitution to appoint necessary officers. Now, sir, can any man question that it is competent for the Congress of the United States to provide the President a house, and to furnish it completely; or they may refuse to provide him a house at all; and does it effect the question of raising or diminishing his salary? Not in the least. You may furnish any amount of service in that house that you deem necessary to protect the property of the Government; for it is, every dollar of it, the property of the Government. The President does not own a cent's worth of it. It is provided for by law, out of the Treasury of the United States.

Sir, it is conceded by every Senator who has spoken on the subject, that past experience has shown conclusively that the only way to protect the property of the United States in the Presidential Mansion is in this or some similar mode; and I submit, without detaining the Senate, that the mode of doing it is simply a question for congressional legal discretion. Anything Congress deems it important and proper to do by law to protect the property of the United States in the Executive Mansion, it has the power to do. Any number of messengers that Congress deems it proper for the head of a Department, or the head of a Bureau, or the President of the United States to have in the public service, is constitutional to provide for. This subject, I confess, is a new one to me, on the score of discretion. On that point I take the opinion and experience of older Senators who have gone before me, and who have occupied positions in connection with the Executive Departments, which enable them to judge of the expediency of the measure, and with them there is no difference of opinion. In respect to the question of constitutional power, I have no difficulty at all.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 30, nays 15; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allen, Atchison, Badger, Benjamin, Brodhead, Brown, Butler, Cass, Clay, Clayton, Cooper, Dawson, Dodge of Iowa, Fish, Fitzpatrick, Gwin, Hamlin, Houston, Hunter, James, Johnson, Mallory, Pearce, Shields, Stuart, Thomson of New Jersey, Toucey, Walker, Weller, and Williams—30.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Chase, Fessenden, Foot, Geyer, Gillette, Jones of Tennessee, Mason, Pratt, Rusk, Slidell, Sumner, Thompson of Kentucky, Toombs, and Wade—15.

So the amendment of the committee, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. GEYER. I now wish to call up the motion which I made yesterday, to reconsider the vote by which the Senate adopted the amendment reported from the Committee on Finance as the seventh section.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. BADGER in the chair.) The Senator from Missouri will allow the Chair to say there is an amendment reported by the Committee on Finance which has not yet been disposed of. After that his motion will come up properly.

Mr. GEYER. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is now on the following amendment of the Committee on Finance, which was reserved for a separate vote on Saturday last:

SEC. — And be it further enacted, That the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint a commissioner, at a compensation not exceeding $4,000 per annum, to ascertain the nature, character, extent, and value of all valid claims arising in Washington and Oregon Territories, under the treaty with Great Britain of the 15th June, 1846; and should said claims, or any part thereof, be deemed of sufficient public and political importance to justify or require the measure, the President is hereby authorized to direct said commissioner to agree with the claimants and the Hudson's Bay Company for the relinquishment of their claims on a just and fair valuation, and to pay over the amount so agreed upon, upon a full and entire surrender and relinquishment of all right, title, claim, interest, and demand therein, and thereto, to the United States: Provided, That none of the lands acquired under this section shall be subject to donation or preemption, but shall be sold at public auction, unless in cases where, in the opinion of the commissioner, the sum paid for any particular parcel or piece shall be less than a fair price therefor, to be ascertained by the commissioner aforesaid, said sales to be made for cash, and at such times and places, and with such postponements as may be directed by said commissioner; and for carrying into effect the provisions of this section, in case of purchase, a sum not exceeding $300,000 is hereby appropriated: Provided, That the amount to be paid for all the said claims, rights, and interests shall not exceed the sum herein appropriated; and for defraying the expenses of the commission, the further sum of — dollars is hereby appropriated, payable out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

SEC. — And be it further enacted, That in case it shall be deemed inexpedient to sell said lands and improvements immediately, or any part thereof, the President shall be, and he is hereby, authorized, on the extinguishment of the title as aforesaid, to direct the commissioner to take possession of the same for and in the name of the United States, and to lease the same on such terms and conditions, and for such sum or sums as he may deem proper and right, subject, however, to sale, when, in his opinion, it may be proper, after the United States surveys have been extended over the same.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will suggest to the Senator from Virginia that there is a blank in the amendment.

Mr. HUNTER. I hope it will be adopted with the blank. I have not the information yet to enable me to move to fill it. The blank is for the expenses of the commission. Before the bill is brought with, I will obtain the information from the Department.

Mr. CLAYTON. I would suggest to the chairman of the committee that he had better withdraw it for the present until he gets the information.

Mr. HUNTER. I will ask that it lie over until to-morrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be laid over. The next question in order is the motion of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. GEYER] to reconsider the vote by which section seven was agreed to, as an amendment reported from the Committee on Finance. The section is:

"SEC. 7. And be it further enacted, That the sum of $300,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, to be paid to the State of California for the expenses of the government of said State from its organization until its admission into the Union."

Mr. GEYER. Mr. President, I made the motion to reconsider the vote on that amendment for the purpose of testing the principle, rather than with any expectation that the Senate would reverse its votes given on former occasions. It proposes to pay $300,000 to the State of California for the expenses of her State government from the time of its organization until her admission into the Union; and the claim is founded, I believe, on this basis: that if a territorial government had been organized in California, the expenses would have been paid out of the Treasury of the United States, it being of late years the practice here to pay the whole expenses of the territorial governments out of the national Treasury. It is, therefore, a proposition to vote an appropriation for the support of a State government, on the ground that if it had been a territorial government, the expense would have been borne out of the national Treasury! I intend to make this a test vote, so far as I am concerned; and I desire to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that there are seven States of this Union which supported their territorial governments out of their own local treasuries, during the whole period of their second grade of government. They were Ohio, Indiana, and Illinois, of the old Northwest Territory; and Louisiana, Mississippi, Alabama, and Missouri. Missouri was the last. The Legislature, and the local judiciary, were supported out of the territorial treasury. The expenses of the convention that formed her constitution were borne out of the local treasury. The State was longer out of the Union than California, after the organization of the State government. Her constitution was signed on the 19th of July, 1820, and she was kept out of the Union (notwithstanding the act by which the contract was made, that she should be admitted upon an equal footing with the original States) until the 10th of August, 1821.

Now, sir, if we are to pay the expenses of the State government of California, because if it had been a Territory they would have been payable out of the Federal Treasury, then all the seven States which I have named have a right to demand that the expenses borne by them out of their local treasuries shall be refunded with interest, out of the national Treasury. I have made the motion to reconsider, as I have remarked, not with a view particularly of defeating this amendment, but for the purpose of bringing the attention of the Senate to the principle, and to make it a test vote; for if the amendment does pass, I will, on the part of Missouri, and I hope all the members from the seven States which I have named will, on the part of their States, press on the Government of the United States the claim which they will have as well founded as that of California, on the national Treasury now.

Mr. WELLER. It seems to me, sir, that if the Senator from Missouri desired to test the principle to which he alludes, the proper place for him to do so would be when an appropriation was asked for some of those Territories. Now, sir, it seems to have been the settled practice of the Government, from 1820 to the present day, to pay all the expenses of the territorial governments. That Senator during the present session has been voting money from the Treasury to pay the expenses of territorial governments. If he thought it a bad practice; if he preferred the precedent which had been observed anterior to 1820, that would have been the proper time and place to have raised this question.

I apprehend, if it is the practice of this Government to pay the expenses of Territorial Legislatures, and all the governmental expenses during the territorial existence of any people, then California is clearly entitled to this sum. She was left without any territorial government. The people were compelled themselves, for the protection of their persons and property, to organize a government. They chose to organize a State instead of a territorial government. If they had organized a territorial government, then, under the established practice of this Government, the Federal Treasury would have been held liable for all the expenses; but they established a State government; they established that from necessity, because of the failure of the Federal Government to give them any sort of institutions for their protection.

Mr. President, it does seem to me that this is not the proper place to test the propriety of that practice. I grant that anterior to 1826 the expenses of Territorial Legislatures were defrayed from the local treasuries of the Territories; out Congress, from that day to this, have seen proper to pursue a different practice. They have paid all the expenses of the territorial governments of this Union. If a government was organized in 1849 or 1850 in California, because of the failure on your part to take the initiative, then I hold that you are bound to defray the necessary expenses of that government. This question has been passed upon by the Senate heretofore. I believe it was then fully discussed. I regret very much that it is now brought up. I trust that the motion will not be agreed to by those who are satisfied, as I trust the Senate must be, that the people of California were compelled to form a State government in 1849-'50; and that, therefore, the just and proper expenses which were incurred by that organization should be a charge upon the Federal Treasury.

Mr. GWIN. Mr. President, although California had a State government, she was recognized by this Government as nothing but a Territory. She was a portion of the territory of the United States outside of any State organization.

Mr. CASS. Or territorial organization either.

Mr. GWIN. Yes, sir; she was left without a territorial or State government. There is another thing in connection with this matter. There was a de facto government established in California after the peace, which existed up to the time the State government was organized, and the Government of the United States, out of the "civil fund," which we claimed, but which has been paid into the Treasury of the United States paid every dollar of the expenses of the de facto government. That claim was recognized by act of Congress, and this provision was reported at the same time. That bill proposed to pay the civil fund into the Treasury; and it contained a provision for the payment of $300,000 as an outfit, as it was called by the Senator from Maryland, [Mr. PEARCE,] to the State of California, for the expenses of the State Government from the time of its organization until California was admitted into the Union. Upon the organization of the State government, the military authorities ceased to pay the governmental expenses. The de facto government went out of existence when the State government was organized. The actual expense during the period intervening between the State organization and our admission into the Union, as officially communicated to Congress, was $437,000; so that this amount will really not cover the expenses of the State by $137,000.

Mr. GEYER. I do not desire to prolong this debate, and I am very much disinclined at any time to occupy the attention of the Senate, and particularly at this period of the session; but it seems to me that this is an appropriate occasion to test the principle, whether the expenses of a government not previously organized by a law of the United States, are to be borne out of the Treasury of the United States. The territorial governments to which I have alluded were all governments imposed upon the people by the Congress of the United States, and at the same time they made no provision whatever for the support of those governments. California is a case in which a State government was organized by the people themselves, and with which the Government of the United States had nothing to do. Now, sir, what I contend for is, that if the people of California are entitled to be paid out of the national Treasury the expenses of a government organized by themselves at their own will, then we, whose Government was organized by the law of the United States, and who were required to pay out of our own Treasury the expenses of that local government, are entitled to have the amount of those expenses refunded.

I merely wish to bring the minds of Senators to bear upon the question, because if this appropriation passes at some future day, the question must be presented in regard to the States to which I have referred. There are seven States interested in it, and the amount is large. Missouri bore her own expenses from the year 1812, under the second grade of government, down to the period of her admission into the Union on the 10th of August, 1821. She never had a dollar of appropriation for a road during her territorial government. There never was a dollar appropriated for a library, or for a government house, or a prison, as there has been in all the Territories since 1820. What I claim is, that when we shall have voted to pay the expenses of a government organized by the people of California, we shall assume also to pay the expenses of a government organized by the Congress of the United States.

Mr. WELLER. There might be some force in the remarks made by the Senator from Missouri, if it were not for the known fact that the people of California were compelled to organize a government. I think that is a much stronger case than if Congress had established a territorial government for them. There was a part of the public domain—a portion of the territory of the United States. One hundred thousand Americans had gone there, knowing that it was a portion of American soil. They found themselves there without any government. Two sessions of Congress were permitted to pass without the organization of a Territory there. I need not allude to the causes which produced this result. They are well known to the country. It is enough for me to say, that such was the state of things in the American Congress, that this department of the Government utterly failed to give what those American people were entitled to—protection under an organized government. Now, sir, if this necessity did exist, if the people were compelled, because of the failure on your part to discharge your duties, to organize a government, it seems to me that it presents a much stronger case than if a territorial government had been organized in the first instance by Congress.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. President, after the notice which has been given to us by the honorable Senator from Missouri, I feel under some difficulty in regard to this appropriation. If we are to go back to make appropriations of this description for all the States and Territories, I suppose it must be something very unexpected to the Senate. At the same time, there is justice in the remark made by one of the Senators from California, that that State or Territory was for a considerable period of time unprotected by this Government, owing, as both these Senators know well, to the fact that Congress refused to make any appropriation to enable the Executive Department to protect it.

Now, sir, I should not like to vote on a question of this magnitude at this moment. I should like to have it in a separate bill. I am willing to do justice. This is a question now sprung upon us, and I have not reflected on it before. I can see a distinction very clearly between this and other States and Territories, but at the same time there is force in the remark of the Senator from Missouri, that the other Governments to which he referred were organized under law. I am anxious to do justice to California, and I prefer that this matter should be presented in a separate bill, so that we can have a fair understanding of it. I repeat, there was a period of time when California was treated shamefully by the General Government, that Government being bound to protect her, and not doing it; and, therefore, I feel disposed to be liberal to her; but I think this claim should be presented in a distinct bill.

Mr. GWIN. I hope there will be no further opposition to this amendment. It has passed the Senate each of the last three years in this very form; and the reason it did not get through the House was, that there was a contest between the State and the United States, in regard to the civil fund, which has been decided in the Supreme Court against the claim of the State. I hope the appropriation will be permitted to pass.

Mr. CASS. I shall vote for this appropriation as I have done before, simply on the ground that protection and taxation should go together. If there is no protection, there should be no taxation; and I think that is an extraordinary kind of government which exercises only one function, and that the function of taxation.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I have a suggestion or two to make about this amendment. I observe that the Army appropriation bill contains an appropriation of upwards of $900,000 to pay the California war debt; and we have now under consideration an item in this bill appropriating $300,000 for the expenses of the State government of California. I agreed to this proposition at the last session, but I agreed to it as a compromise. I supposed that it was a payment in full to California for the support of her government before she was admitted into the Union, and since. I do not exactly feel disposed to appropriate both sums, and I think the representatives of California ought to choose between the two. If we allow the $900,000 for the California war debt—

Mr. WALKER. What debt is it?

Mr. BRODHEAD. I understand it to be a claim which the State of California sets up for expenses to which she was put in order to defend herself against the Indians. I wish to deal liberally on this subject, and to come to some understanding in regard to it at this time, because if we allow this item of $300,000 in the civil and diplomatic bill, it may endanger the item of $900,000 in the Army appropriation bill for the payment of the California war debt, as it is called. I wish to hear what my friends from California have to say upon the subject. I am willing to allow one claim, but I do not know that I can go for both.

Mr. WELLER. There is no sort of connection between this appropriation and the one in the Army appropriation bill, to which the Senator from Pennsylvania has alluded. The State of California claimed that all the revenue collected there anterior to her admission into the Union, was collected without the authority of law, and that the civil fund, as it was called, which amounted to $1,200,000, belonged to that State. Suits were instituted in regard to it, and recently a decision has been made by the Supreme Court here, declaring that that fund belonged to the Federal Government, that it was rightly and properly collected; and, therefore, the State of California has no longer any claim to it. At the last session of Congress, the Senator from Pennsylvania, and several other Senators, said they were willing to vote an appropriation of $300,000 by way of outfit to the State of California in lieu of all her claims upon that fund. The war debt which has been referred to, is a debt that has been contracted by the State of California since her admission into the Union, in consequence of the failure of the Federal Government to provide the necessary troops to protect her people. It is well known that it is the practice of this Government, whenever it is found within the limits of a State that there are a large number of Indians, without a sufficient force to give protection to the people, to authorize the Governor of the State to call out the militia to defend the people, and the Federal Treasury is held liable for the expenses thus incurred. This has always been the practice of the Government. The war claim to which the Senator has referred is, therefore, a debt contracted by the State of California since her admission into the Union, in calling out her own people to give protection to person and property when the Federal troops could not.

Thus the Senator will discover that there is no connection between the two cases. This appropriation of $300,000 is for the civil expenses of the State of California, anterior to her admission into the Union, upon the ground that if she had been a Territory, that sum would have been paid out of the Federal Treasury. The war debt is for expenses incurred since her admission into the Union, for defending her people when the Federal Government could not do it. When the Army bill, containing that appropriation of $900,000, comes before the Senate, there will be an obligation resting upon the Senators from California to satisfy the Senate that it is a just and fair demand on the Federal Treasury, and that the Federal Government did not have a sufficient force there to give protection to the citizens, because we will not ask that the General Government shall pay two sets of men to do the same work. You have a military force there; you are compelled to defray the expenses of that force; and you will be unwilling to pay the war debt of California until you are satisfied that it was necessary for California to call out her militia to supply that which the Federal troops could not. Of these facts we shall satisfy you.

Mr. BRODHEAD. There are one or two other facts which I think it proper to state in connection with these large items, and which ought to be considered deliberately. I do not wish the Senators from California to infer, from anything I have said, that I have made up a judgment against the claim for the war debt of California. I have not. But, sir, the Senator from California, who has just taken his seat, informs us that this sum of $300,000 is for expenses of California while she was in the condition of a quasi territorial government, upon the ground that the General Government has been in the habit of paying the expenses of all territorial governments. Now, let us see how the facts are. Have we not already paid these expenses? Did we not allow them in the settlement of General Riley's accounts?

Mr. GWIN. No, sir.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I will state all the facts, for I do not wish to misrepresent any facts. We allowed General Riley, as I understood in the settlement of his accounts, the amount which he had disbursed for the payment of the expenses of the convention which assembled to form a constitution. That was one item.

Mr. GWIN. That was before the State government was organized. It was during the existence of the de facto government.

Mr. WELLER. It was during the military government of General Riley, but it was after he turned the government over to the State authorities that this debt was incurred; and it amounts to $437,000—a great deal more than is proposed to be appropriated.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I only wish to come to some understanding on this matter. I am willing to pay California, and to pay her liberally; but let us see what we have already paid. In the settlement of the accounts of General Riley, for the disbursement of the civil fund which he received, amounting to more than a million of dollars, we allowed him several hundred thousand dollars for the expenses of the convention, which assembled to form a constitution, and a number of other large items. We also directed a debt, incurred by Colonel Frémont, to be paid in London. He was sued for it in London, and we paid the amount. I believe that was $100,000.

Mr. GWIN. That was in regard to transactions during the Mexican war, in 1846.

Mr. BRODHEAD. Well, I am endeavoring to get all the items together. Now, we have another claim for beef. When was that furnished?

Mr. WELLER. In 1851, to the Indian commissioners.

Mr. BRODHEAD. As I said, I am willing to pay liberally; but I desire to know whether we are to pay the California war debt of over $900,000, and these $300,000 besides? Senators who are better acquainted with the subject than I am, will perhaps be able to enlighten me, but I confess I should like to have some further information before I vote on the amendment.

Mr. GWIN. When the Army appropriation bill comes up before the Senate, the war debt will stand on its own merits, and can then be discussed in order. The only question now before the Senate is, whether the appropriation of $300,000 which has been reported by the Committee on Finance, shall go into the bill. I can assure the Senator from Pennsylvania that, whenever the other item comes up, my colleague and myself can give a full and satisfactory explanation of it. If we do not, of course it will be voted down. The war debt rests on such a foundation of justice that I am sure the Senator will not vote against it. I hope this amendment will be adopted, but I ask for the question upon it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. BADGER in the chair.) The question is on reconsidering the vote by which the amendment was adopted.

The motion was agreed to; and the question recurring upon the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. CHASE. In view of the statement made by the Senator from Missouri, that this is to be a precedent, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 19, nays 27, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allen, Badger, Bell, Cass, Dodge of Wisconsin, Dodge of Iowa, Douglas, Foot, Gwin, Houston, Mallory, Pearce, Pettit, Rusk, Shields, Stuart, Thompson of New Jersey, Toucey, and Weller—19.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Atchison, Benjamin, Bright, Brodhead, Brown, Butler, Chase, Clay, Clayton, Cooper, Dawson, Dixon, Fessenden, Fitzpatrick, Geyer, Gillette, Hunter, Johnson, Jones of Tennessee, Mason, Pratt, Rockwell, Sumner, Thompson of Kentucky, Toombs, and Walker—27.

So the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on an amendment moved by the Senator from Maine, from the Committee on Commerce, which was objected to at the time, and reserved. It is to insert:

For life-boats and other means of rendering services to shipwrecked mariners and others on the coast of the United States, to be expended by the Massachusetts Humane Society, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, $10,000.

Mr. HAMLIN. Objection was made to this amendment, I understand, for the reason that it was connected with the Massachusetts Humane Society. Now, there have been annual appropriations for shipwrecked seamen ever since I have been in Congress. Such appropriations are wise expenditures. Vast sums of money are annually saved by them, and great numbers of lives are rescued from the perils of the sea. I apprehend that to the principle of making such appropriations there can be no objection in the Senate.

Sir, in 1848 an appropriation was made for this society in the same way as now proposed. The society is an aged one. It has now a fund from which it receives annually an interest of about $2,000; but that fund is inadequate to the purposes of rendering such relief as the climate and country require. Senators will recollect that it is in the higher latitudes of the Union, and all the se-verities of a winter climate are there known. It is proposed to grant $10,000 to be expended by this society under the direction and supervision of the Secretary of the Treasury. I believe that the expenditure in this mode will be much more beneficial to effect the object, and much more economical, than if it were left without any direction as to the manner in which it should be expended. Similar sums in different years have been appropriated to the Benevolent Life-Saving Association of New York, for the coasts of New Jersey and New York. Sometimes the appropriations have been expended by the Light-House Board, and sometimes in connection with these benevolent associations. I have no hesitation in declaring, myself, that where the Secretary of the Treasury acts in conjunction with these associations, which depend entirely upon contributions, the expenditures are much more beneficial to the country than where left to the Secretary alone. That is my view, and I suppose it is the view of the committee.

Mr. HUNTER. I believe, sir, this is the first instance, certainly it is the first with which I am acquainted, in which the Government has undertaken to appropriate money, and use the agency of a private society for its disbursement. I do not doubt the usefulness of this society; I agree that its objects are benevolent and praiseworthy; but it seems to me that it will be a most dangerous system to establish, to appropriate money to be put at the disposal of private societies.

Mr. HAMLIN. It is not so. It is to be appropriated under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury entirely.

Mr. HUNTER. The Secretary of the Treasury cannot direct these private associations. They are not officers of the Government. Whatever money is appropriated for this purpose ought to be entirely under the control of the Government and its officers. The kind of agency proposed in this amendment is one which is new, and which, I believe, will turn out to be dangerous and mischievous.

Mr. HAMLIN. Allow me to read from the memorial which has been sent to us from that society. Speaking of the various sums which have been appropriated, they say:

"The income of the society being quite inadequate for the support of their boats and huts, little could have been done but for appropriations made by the General Government and by the State. From the latter source $10,000 have been received at various times since 1840; and from the former $5,000 were received in 1848, from an appropriation in the light-house bill of the previous year."

On looking at the proceedings of the Benevolent Life-Saving Association of New York, I find that in 1851 they received from the General Government $8,467 50; on March 8, of that year, $9,585; and in 1852, $414. I find, therefore, that the Government has, on various occasions, availed itself of these societies to disburse appropriations like the present; and hence this does not set a new precedent. I am told further that nearly all the moneys disbursed among the Indian tribes are disbursed precisely in the same way, through such associations, but under the proper head of the Department here.

Mr. WELLER. I have no doubt that this appropriation is necessary and proper; but I do not see the propriety of connecting the Government with a humane society, or any other private institution. If the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to expend $10,000 for the relief of shipwrecked mariners on the coast, and finds a private society, organized for the purpose, and thinks that through that society he can disburse the money so as to promote the interest designed to be effected by the appropriation, undoubtedly he would be at liberty to use it in that way. I therefore propose to amend the amendment by striking out that portion of it which refers to the Massachusetts Humane Society. It will then be discretionary with the Secretary of the Treasury whether he will use that society as an instrument to expend the money, or whether he will seek some other instrumentality. I have no doubt, as I said before, about the necessity and propriety of the appropriation; but I desire to leave the Secretary of the Treasury unlimited as to the mode in which he shall expend this sum. I move to strike out the words "to be expended by the Massachusetts Humane Society."

Mr. CLAYTON. I hope the Senator from Maine, will accept the suggestion made to him by the Senator from California. I have no doubt it will do a great deal of good to make this appropriation, and I hope it will not be defeated in consequence of any peculiar mode of expression in the amendment. Let the Secretary of the Treasury employ the Massachusetts Humane Society if he pleases; but leave these words out, in order that there may be no objection foreign to the real merits of the amendment. I am decidedly for the amendment of the gentleman from Maine, but I hope he will accede to the suggestion of the Senator from California.

Mr. WELLER. My only object is to place the appropriation in such a position that the Secretary of the Treasury can use the Humane Society, or individuals, if he chooses, in the disbursement of the money. I have no doubt that, if he finds humane associations which are doing great good, and giving relief to numbers of shipwrecked mariners, he will disburse the money through that source; but I desire to leave it to the Secretary of the Treasury; or, in other words, that we should have no connection, unnecessarily, with any private or local institution.

Mr. CASS. There is one mode in which the object of the Senator can be obtained; that is to authorize the Secretary to expend the money, through this society, or otherwise, as he may think proper. We do the same thing in regard to the missionary societies for the Indians, and we have done it for many years. Let us put it in such a form that the Secretary of the Treasury may select this society, or use the money in any other mode he thinks expedient.

Mr. WELLER. I prefer my amendment.

Mr. HAMLIN. I wish to modify my amendment by inserting after the words "Massachusetts Humane Society," the words "or in such other way as the Secretary of the Treasury shall deem expedient."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will suggest to the Senator from Maine that he cannot modify the amendment, as it is offered by him as an amendment from the Committee on Commerce, and not in his individual capacity as a Senator.

Mr. HAMLIN. Then I desire to state to the Senate that if they shall not see fit to adopt the amendment of the Senator from California to the amendment of the committee, I will propose an additional amendment giving discretionary power to the Secretary.

Mr. GWIN called for the yeas and nays on the amendment to the amendment; and they were ordered.

Mr. MALLORY. Is it in order now to move to increase the amount of the appropriation?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is not.

Mr. MALLORY. I wish to ask the Senator from Maine whether this amendment includes the lake coast of the United States?

Mr. HAMLIN. It does not.

Mr. CLAYTON. The sum is altogether insufficient.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This motion does not affect the sum. An amendment can be afterwards moved to increase or diminish it.

The question being taken by yeas and nays on the amendment to the amendment, resulted—yeas 28, nays 18; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Allen, Atchison, Badger, Bayard, Bell, Brown, Butler, Clay, Clayton, Cooper, Dawson, Dixon, Dodge of Iowa, Fitzpatrick, Geyer, Gwin, Hunter, Johnson, Jones, of Tennessee, Mallory, Mason, Pratt, Sebastian, Slidell, Toombs, Toucey, and Weller—28.

NAYS—Messrs. Benjamin, Bright, Brodhead, Cass, Chase, Dodge, of Wisconsin, Fessenden, Fish, Foot, Gillette, Hamlin, Houston, James, Rockwell, Shields, Stuart, Sumner, and Walker—18.

So the amendment to the amendment was agreed to; and the question recurred on Mr. HAMLIN's amendment as amended.

Mr. WELLER. I desire to know precisely what is included in this amendment. It is an appropriation of $10,000 for the relief of shipwrecked mariners on the coast of the United States. I desire to know whether that means the Atlantic, the Pacific, or the lake coast, or whether it includes them all. If they be all embraced, of course the amount is wholly insufficient to accomplish the object. I move, therefore, to strike out "$10,000" and insert "$20,000."

Mr. HAMLIN. This appropriation follows another of $10,000 in like words already in the bill. I suppose the Senator is aware that life-boats are stationed at certain points all along our coast, and this is for their preservation and taking charge of them when there is occasion for using them. If, therefore, this amendment shall be adopted in its present form, there will then be $20,000 appropriated in this bill for this object, precisely the amount which the Senator wishes to have appropriated.

Mr. WELLER. I think that does not obviate the difficulty, for $20,000 appropriated in the manner indicated by the Senator from Maine will be wholly insufficient to afford the necessary relief to the vast number of persons who are shipwrecked on the extensive coasts of the United States. There is an immense amount of commerce now on the Pacific, making it necessary, of course, to increase the amount which has heretofore been appropriated for this object in order to extend relief to shipwrecked mariners on the Pacific coast. I therefore persist in my motion to increase the amount to $20,000.

Mr. HAMLIN. I think if the Senator had examined the matter, he would, and I think he will now, when I state all the facts in relation to it, withdraw his amendment. Ten thousand dollars are already appropriated by the bill for this object. Sometimes we have appropriated $10,000, and sometimes $20,000 in the civil and diplomatic bill. But there are $20,000 more appropriated for a like object in the light-house bill of the present year, so that if this amendment shall be adopted, there will then be $40,000 for this purpose.

Mr. WELLER. Then I withdraw my amendment.

The amendment of the Committee on Commerce, as amended, was agreed to.

The next question was on the amendment of the Committee on Commerce heretofore reserved, to amend the clause making an appropriation "for the relief and protection of American seamen in foreign countries," by adding, after the word "seamen," the words "and seamen belonging to American vessels."

Mr. HAMLIN. I do not know that I have anything to state in regard to this amendment in addition to what I said the other day when it was presented. It is known to Senators that the law now requires that our vessels shall be manned with a certain proportion of American seamen, and the others may be foreigners. I have a petition before me from the ladies of Honolulu, in the Sandwich Islands, in which they set forth the very great distress which our seamen suffer in those ports, in consequence of the existing law, inasmuch as the existing law does not allow our consul there (nor does it allow any of our consuls at any foreign port) to make any provision whatever for foreigners who are sailing under the American flag.

Now, sir, if we allow foreigners to sail under our flag, if we man our ships with them, I ask are they not entitled, in foreign ports where they are found in distress, to some of that protection which we bestow upon our own citizens in the same circumstances? Why, sir, they have the same interest in protecting the ship, in sailing it, and in preserving it from the hazards of the ocean, and they are subjected to the same regulations in foreign ports. They pay the same hospital money per month to the hospital fund that our own seamen pay.

Sir, we speak of our extended commerce; but with how much force and how much propriety may we speak of it, if we are unwilling to make any appropriation for the relief of those who sail our vessels, who happen to be foreigners, when they are found in foreign ports in distress? I hope the amendment will be adopted.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next question was on the amendment offered by Mr. HAMLIN, from the Committee on Commerce, on Saturday, and then objected to, to strike out "for the salary of the consul at Beirut, $500," and insert:

That the consul at Beirut, Syria, is hereby created a consul-general with a salary of $2,000 per annum from the 1st of July, 1853. The said consulate shall comprehend both Syria and Palestine, and $4,000 is hereby appropriated for the salary of the said consul.

Mr. HAMLIN. I hold in my hand a letter from the Secretary of State earnestly requesting this appropriation, and in it he alludes to the existing state of affairs in that country, and the absolute necessity of having some commercial agent, or some representative of this Government there. It is true there is very little commercial business at that place, but still it is highly important, in the unsettled state of that portion of the world, that there should be some agent of our Government there. The present compensation of the consul at that port is totally inadequate. The compensation now proposed was recommended by Mr. Webster, while he was Secretary of State. The recommendation was renewed by Mr. Everett when he was at the head of that Department; and it is again urged by the present Secretary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is next on the amendment of the Committee on Commerce to add the following additional section:

Sec. — And be it further enacted, That the county of El Paso, in the State of Texas, and the Territory of New Mexico, be, and they are hereby, made a collection district by the name of Paso del Norte, and Frontera shall be the place or port of delivery for said district; and a collector shall be appointed to reside thereat, with such other officers as shall be necessary, and the compensation of the collector shall be $2,000 per annum, including the fees of his office.

Mr. WELLER. That amendment, I believe, was laid over the other day in consequence of my objection. I have since satisfied myself that the public interest clearly requires that a collection district should be established at this point; and, therefore, as a matter of course, I now interpose no objection to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is another amendment, which was offered by the Senator from Maine, from the Committee on Commerce, on Saturday last, but which was then objected to. It will be read.

The Secretary read it, as follows:

Sec. — Be it further enacted, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause to be constructed the following buildings:

At Ellsworth, Maine, for the accommodation of the custom-house and post office, a building of brick, with fire-proof floors, constructed of iron beams and brick work, iron roof, shutters, sills, &c., twenty-five feet by thirty, and twenty-five feet in height from the foundation, to cost not more than $10,000.

At Belfast, Maine, for the accommodation of the custom-house and post office, a building of like materials, forty-five feet by thirty-two, and thirty-two feet high, and to cost not more than $20,000.

At Gloucester, Massachusetts; Toledo, Ohio; Burlington, Vermont; and Sandusky, Ohio, for the accommodation of the custom house and post office, a building of like materials, sixty feet by forty-five feet, and thirty-two feet from the foundation, and to cost not more than $40,000 for each building.

At Milwaukee, Wisconsin, for the accommodation of the custom-house, post office, and United States courts, a building of like materials, sixty feet by forty-five feet, forty-eight feet in height from the foundation, to cost not more than $50,000.

At New Haven, Connecticut; Newark, New Jersey; Buffalo, New York; Oswego, New York; Wheeling, Virginia; Chicago, Illinois; and Detroit, Michigan, each for the accommodation of the custom-house, post office, United States courts, and steamboat inspectors, a building of stone, of like floors, beams, roofs, shutters, &c., eighty-five feet by sixty feet, sixty feet in height from the foundation, to cost not more than $88,000 for each building. The building at Detroit to be erected upon a water lot belonging to the United States.

At Galveston, Texas, for the accommodation of the custom-house, post office, and United States courts, a building of brick, of like floors, beams, roofs, shutters, &c., forty-five feet, by seventy feet, forty-eight feet high from the foundation, with a portico on two sides, and to cost not more than $100,000.

At Petersburg, Virginia, for the accommodation of the custom-house and post office, a building of stone, of like floors, beams, roof, shutters, &c., sixty feet by forty-five feet, thirty-two feet high from the foundation, to cost not more than $62,000.

Sec. — And be it further enacted, That the several sums mentioned in the preceding section of this act, as the cost of the buildings therein authorized to be constructed, together with ten per cent. thereon, to cover the compensation of architects, superintendents, advertising, and other contingent expenses, and so much as may be required to purchase suitable sites for said buildings, be, and the same are hereby, appropriated for the purposes aforesaid, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated: Provided, That no money hereby appropriated shall be used or applied for the purposes mentioned, until a valid title to the land for the site of such building, in each case, shall be vested in the United States, and until the State shall also duly release and relinquish to the United States the right to tax, or in any way assess said site, or the property of the United States that may be thereon, during the time that the said United States shall be or remain the owner thereof.

Mr. HAMLIN. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce to modify the amendment by adding to it the following additional sections:

Sec. — And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause to be constructed the following buildings:

At New Orleans, Louisiana, a marine hospital, to cost not more than $248,000; and when said hospital, shall have been completed, the Secretary of the Treasury shall cause the old hospital at New Orleans to be sold, and the proceeds thereof to be placed in the Treasury of the United States;

At Detroit, Michigan, a marine hospital, to cost not more than $75,000;

At Pensacola, Florida, a marine hospital, to cost not more than $30,000;

At Burlington, in the State of Iowa, a marine hospital, to cost not more than $5,000.

Sec. — And be it further enacted, That the several sums mentioned in the preceding section as the cost of the buildings therein authorized to be constructed, together with ten per cent. thereon, to cover the compensation of architects, superintendents, advertising, and other contingent expenses, and so much as may be required to purchase suitable sites for said buildings, be, and the same are hereby, appropriated for the purposes aforesaid, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated; Provided, That no money hereby appropriated shall be used or applied for the purposes mentioned, until a valid title to the land for the site of such building, in each case, shall be vested in the United States, and until the State shall also duly release and relinquish to the United States the right to tax, or in any way assess said site, or the property of the United States that may be thereon, during the time that the said United States shall be or remain the owner thereof.

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. President, it seems to me that these appropriations for custom-houses, and especially for new custom-houses, are becoming so numerous, and the amounts so large, that they should be provided for in a separate bill. They ought to be appropriated, if at all, like the appropriations for rivers and harbors or fortifications, in a separate and independent bill. It seems to me that, in relation to these new structures, we ought to mature some regular system, and, like other new appropriations, they should be reported from the Committee on Commerce as a separate bill, like the light-house bill, to provide for new light-houses. It is manifest that if we encumber the civil and diplomatic bill, which already has run out to a very large number of pages, with such amendments as these, relating to systems involving expenditures to the amount perhaps of more than a $1,000,000, how much I do not know, we shall find it very difficult to get along with the general appropriation bills. I, therefore, suggest now that it would be better if the Senate would adopt it as a rule to appropriate in these bills for nothing but buildings which have been already commenced and purposes already sanctioned by law; and whenever new buildings are required to be put up, let them be proposed in a separate bill. We may get along in that way with some sort of order and consistency; but it is impossible that we can legislate in this manner with propriety and consistency. We know, sir, that this bill had a hard time of it in the House of Representatives with the custom-houses which are already upon it. What will it be when we send it back with all these appropriations embraced in it? I think it would be far better for the Committee on Commerce to present this proposition as a separate bill, and take the sense of the Senate upon it in that day.

Mr. ADAMS. I desire to offer an amendment, which, perhaps, should be offered before the further discussion of this subject. It is to add, as a proviso, at the end of the custom-house appropriations:

Provided, That no money shall be expended for a custom-house, under the provisions of this act, at any place where the customs do not equal the expenses of collection.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. President, the best statement which I can make to the Senate, will be one which I have in my hand, that has been prepared at the Treasury Department. It states the case, perhaps, better, and in fewer words, than I could state it. I will not read all of the letter, but only that part which relates to the expediency of erecting the buildings, and their cost. The Secretary of the Treasury says:

The cost of ground, where the Government does not own it, must be an addition to these estimates, and cannot be reduced to as much certainty; and there must be an addition, say of ten per cent., to cover compensation of architect and superintendent, advertising, &c. There are now in the United States one hundred and twenty-nine ports of entry and ports of delivery, having the authority and duties of ports of entry. Of this number custom houses have been constructed at twenty-five ports. Custom-houses are in progress at eleven ports, and custom-houses are about to be commenced, under appropriations heretofore made, at four ports, leaving eighty-nine ports unprovided for. Having carefully considered the question of authorizing, in districts not yet provided for, the erection of permanent and substantial buildings for the use of these public establishments, I am clearly of opinion that such provision ought to be extended, for the following reasons:

1. For the better accommodation of the officers and the better performance and dispatch of the duties, and for the security and preservation of the records and archives.

2. For the saving of the rents, otherwise to be paid, which, as the Treasury can spare the outlay, should be its policy even more emphatically than an individual similarly circumstanced, as its interests are more enduring than those of the latter.

3. From regard to that rule of equity towards the various portions and districts of the country which is a necessary principle of just government.

For these reasons I am of opinion that the Government should proceed, whilst its means continue to be abundant, to supply suitable buildings for the accommodation of the public business at the ports not yet provided for, selecting the points at which they appear to be most needed, and providing annually for as many as can, for the time, be conveniently constructed; and in expressing this opinion, I see no reason to except, from eventual provision, ports at which but little revenue is collected, and where a mainly preventive force is maintained. The revenue collected may, to some extent, regulate the size of the building to be provided, but to leave such points without revenue officers, requiring such accommodation, would be to invite illicit imports to such points, to the prejudice of the revenues at large.

These are the views of the Treasury Department, in which I say, I think, that the committee may entirely concur. All these appropriations will be less than one half, perhaps not one fourth, of what may have been appropriated in one of your large cities for a custom-house. Still, if the appropriations shall be made, they will furnish, at some fifteen or twenty points, ample buildings which will be safe for the public archives, and afford all the facilities required in these respective locations. It seems to me that it is a wise economy to adopt that system at this time.

Mr. DAWSON. What public archives are there in these places to be saved?

Mr. HAMLIN. Why, sir, all the original certificates which issue from the custom-house offices—all the papers that relate to the ownership of vessels—the registers, the enrollments, the licenses, the bills of sale, the records of the office, and the quarterly returns that are made to the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. DAWSON. My only object was to ascertain whether any revenue would be collected at some of these points, and to what extent? Take Toledo, for instance.

Mr. HAMLIN. I have not the table by me to state what amount is collected at Toledo; but if I am right in my recollection, about $70,000 are received there annually.

Mr. CASS. Between $70,000 and $80,000.

Mr. HAMLIN. But let me say to the Senator from Georgia, that the amount of revenue collected at a port is not by any means a certain and true indication of the necessity of public buildings there, as the Secretary of the Treasury has well said in his letter. Sir, I can show the Senator a district which has one hundred thousand tons of tonnage, and yet pays but very little revenue; but there are there all the papers relating to that tonnage, all the enrollments, all the licenses, all the bills of sale, and all the records which should be preserved and protected at least. Consequently, in districts where there is little or no revenue collected, but where they are actually necessary for a large tonnage, and are also necessary for the purpose of protecting the revenue, you must keep up a protective force, because a protective force is as necessary to enforce the revenue laws, as is a force to collect the revenue. At these places, the Secretary has well said that buildings of a less size, and at a less cost, will be required. The scale which he has adopted is one going down to $10,000, and ranging up to millions in your large cities, although $100,000 is the highest amount appropriated for here, that being the appropriation for a custom-house, with other offices in it at Galveston, in Texas.

The amendment also provides that the sums therein specified shall be in full for all these buildings, with the single exception of an additional appropriation hereafter to purchase sites. That cannot be known with certainty and accuracy; but the cost of each building, varying from $10,000 up to a $1,000,000, can be ascertained, and is ascertained by the Secretary, who has furnished us his estimates for every building he has recommended. Allow me to say, as I do not desire to repeat it, that what he says of the custom-houses applies also to the marine hospitals. All the marine hospitals provided for in the amendment are estimated for, and the limitations and restrictions contained in the amendment are, that they shall in no case cost a single dollar beyond the amount appropriated.

I think, sir, that for these reasons this amendment may well be adopted. I will further say, that the custom-house buildings, which must be in towns, are also to contain accommodations for the post offices; and if the United States courts sit in that place, then we provide that they shall contain rooms for those courts. If there be a board of steamboat inspectors, or any other board of officers for whom buildings are hired by the United States, they are to be provided for in these buildings.

I have but a few words to say in reply to the suggestion of the Senator from Virginia, that these appropriations might and should be made in a separate bill. It may be so, sir; but I think that Senator has himself offered amendments from the Committee on Finance which do not legitimately and appropriately belong to this appropriation bill. Still, as one member of the Senate, always anxious to accommodate that committee, whose duties I know are very laborious, I have voted, without an exception, to sustain their report. When I told that Senator that the Committee on Commerce have labored as industriously, if not intelligently, to consummate objects which are beneficial to the commerce of the country, I hoped he would not have interposed an objection here, particularly when the Senator knew the solicitude of some of his own colleagues for appropriations for the State of Virginia, which are contained in this amendment; although I suppose, of course, that that would not have any effect upon the Senator's mind, as it ought not to have. Now, sir, this amendment is as germane, as proper, as pertinent, as the amendment for bringing water into the city of Washington. My friend suggested that the adoption of this amendment would endanger the bill in the House. Why, sir, what is the history of the matter? The House have incorporated into the bill every amendment for custom-houses, some new and some old, which were asked to be appropriated for. Did they do that for the water-works?

Mr. HUNTER. I think this bill contains no appropriations for new custom-houses.

Mr. HAMLIN. I repeat, that I think I am justified in saying, that in every instance the House incorporated amendments for every custom-house for which they were asked to make an appropriation.

Mr. HUNTER. I think there is no appropriation for a new custom-house in the bill, and there will be none in it, unless the Senator gets them in.

Mr. HAMLIN. I think there is an appropriation in the bill for the purchase of a site for a custom-house at Providence, Rhode Island.

Mr. HUNTER. That is a continuation of a former appropriation for that purpose.

Mr. HAMLIN. I do not understand that it is a continuation of a former appropriation, but I learn that it is an absolute appropriation for the purchase of a site there; and the Senate have, very wisely, I think, added a proviso, giving to the Secretary of the Treasury the power to make a contract for the erection of a building on that site. There is also an appropriation for the purchase of a site in San Francisco; but I know appropriations have been made for a custom-house at that place.

Mr. HUNTER. The Senator knows—no man knows better—that we frequently begin by appropriating a certain sum, and we limit the expenditure to that sum; but it is afterwards found that the site costs more than was expected, and a subsequent appropriation is made; so that it is actually a continuation, though it may not appear to be so on the face of the bill.

Mr. HAMLIN. Well, Mr. President, it is hardly worth while, I think, to detain the Senate at length upon what I believe is not a well founded objection. Every appropriation for every public work must have an existence somewhere. Now, I appeal to the Senate if the public works provided for in this amendment are not as legitimate and as germane to this bill as appropriations that have been recommended by the committee who had the bill specially in charge?

Mr. CASS. The Senator from Maine has said everything that I could have wanted to say on the subject, and has said it better than I could; but I wish to say to him that I hold in my hand a list of these appropriations, which I requested one of the clerks to copy from the statute-book; and in that list I find but three cases for which special appropriations have been made for these objects.

Every one of the others has been commenced and continued by appropriations in appropriation bills.

Mr. HAMLIN. I was about to say, that I knew that for most of the works of this character which have been commenced, the appropriations were made originally in the civil and diplomatic appropriation bill.

Mr. CASS. All but the first three.

Mr. HAMLIN. I think, then, it is now too late to raise such an objection to the bill.

Mr. MASON. As this debate is to go on, I must ask the Senate to postpone the further consideration of the bill, with a view of going into Executive session.

Mr. HAMLIN. Let us take the vote on this amendment.

Mr. MASON. I have no objection to taking a vote; but it is very important that we should have a short Executive session, and the hour is getting late.

Mr. BELL. I should like to know from the honorable Senator from Maine what principle the committee adopted in limiting the number of ports of entry and delivery at which it is proposed to authorize the building of custom-houses and post offices at this time? Is it according to any rule of population, or is it regulated by the amount of revenue collected? What is the limitation? I observe that in the amendment provision is made for custom-houses, post offices, and United States court rooms, in a number of places, but I do not see any decided distinction between many of them and other places for which no provision is made. There are also some provisions in the amendment for the construction of marine hospitals. What is the limitation in regard to them? I inquire for the purpose of obtaining information to control my own course in some degree. I can readily see that it may be an object of public interest and importance, and that it may be true economy for the Government to go on, as rapidly as we have the means, and may find it to be convenient, to afford these custom-house accommodations to all our ports of entry and delivery, and post offices for our large cities; but I should like to know how soon certain other cities in the Union, unprovided for in this amendment, may expect to be dealt with in a similar manner?

But my object in rising was to ascertain whether any rule had been adopted in preparing this amendment, dependent on the population or the revenue collected at the different points. I admit that I do not make this inquiry disinterestedly, either as to the custom-houses or to the marine hospitals. There are in the State of Tennessee two places very much exposed, and where it would be a very great convenience, not only to the people of those places, but to the public in general, if we could have marine hospitals there. Conveniences for custom-houses would also be useful and advantageous there. The city of Memphis, on the Mississippi river, is one of the points most exposed to the diseases which annually affect passengers, particularly emigrants, on the Mississippi river. The town of Nashville is exposed in the same way. Sometimes yellow fever reaches us, and frequently the cholera comes up by the navigation from New Orleans. Neither of these places is a large city. Memphis is a growing city, and will be a large place in a few years. It is now a very considerable city. Nashville is also growing rapidly; but, perhaps, not so rapidly as Memphis. They are both ports of delivery.

Mr. HAMLIN. If the Senator will allow me to interrupt him, I will give him an answer to his question. He must see at a glance that it would not be practicable to commence marine hospitals at every point all over the country, where they may, perhaps, be now necessary, or where they may hereafter be necessary; nor would it be proper to commence custom-houses at every collection district, all at one time.

Mr. BELL. I inquired what was the limitation.

Mr. HAMLIN. If the Senator will allow me, I will answer him.

Mr. BELL. I agree to what the Senator has stated.

Mr. HAMLIN. I have read from the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury, in which he recommends distinctly the erection of a custom-house at every port of entry, and at every port of delivery, and suggests that those should be first built which are most important; and so of marine hospitals precisely.

Now, a word in relation to Memphis. There were some papers before the Committee on Commerce in relation to the construction of a marine hospital at Memphis. At the earnest solicitation of the Senator's colleague, [Mr. JONES, of Tennessee,] I went myself to the Treasury Department for the purpose of conferring with them in order to induce them to recommend Memphis as a point at which a marine hospital should be now built; but I was told that they had entered into an arrangement with the local authorities of that place by which provision could be made better for the sick, and cheaper for the Government, at present, and, therefore, they did not recommend that as a place where a marine hospital should be built at this time. At the solicitation of the Senator's colleague, I held an interview with the Secretary of the Treasury on that very point. As to Nashville, I will only say, that we had no papers before us, and we had no application asking for any appropriation at that place.

Mr. TOOMBS. I agree with the Senator from Virginia, that we ought to take up this subject by itself. It is a large subject, and the reply made by the Senator from Maine is not satisfactory. If, Mr. President, we are to justify any amount of appropriations, or expenditures, upon the ground that you have done such things before, there is no abuse for which you cannot find an excuse somewhere in the legislation of this Government. But here is a question which confessedly, according to the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury, and the chairman of the Committee on Commerce, looks to a wide spread, incalculable, and, as I believe, unnecessary expenditure of the public money. It has been the custom to establish custom-houses at the points where the revenue is collected. At most of these ports of entry and delivery, the business can be done in a house ten feet by twelve. Every book, every thing connected with the business, can be kept in a house for which we would have to pay only $500, and yet the Government is to commence building. But we are told now that in these custom-houses there will be provision made for a post office. You are already putting three or four millions upon the producing classes of this country for the benefit of commerce; and I trust the time will soon come in which there will not be a post office on the North American continent owned by the United States. It ought not to be so; for so long as you do take charge of it, you not only carry the great body of the commercial correspondence of the country for nothing, but you put the cost of it upon the industrious classes of the United States.

One argument for the erection of these custom-houses is the want of a place to keep the records. Sir, half the records grow out of an antiquated and absurd and restrictive system, which I trust will not live in the country two years longer—that is your navigation laws and registers. They ought to be abolished. It is in accordance with the principles of a large body of gentlemen on this floor; and I intend to bring the subject to the attention of the Senate, at a very early day, to cut off this artificial and restrictive system, which makes these records necessary. Your wrong system makes it necessary to build houses to keep records which are worse than useless, and have no other tendency than to injure a great portion of the people of this country. I do not see why we should do it.

The Senator from Maine has also proposed to amend a provision in the bill for the relief of American seamen in foreign countries, by proposing that all seamen sailing in American-built vessels shall be included, the use of which I do not see. If this amendment be adopted, and you enter into this system of protection to all who sail under our flag, the difficulty will be this: An Englishman or Dutchman, who has sailed in our ships, will ship in New York for Liverpool or a German port, and he will be carried there, and when you get him there you cannot bring him back; he will be in his own land, among his friends, and will have no reason to return; but if you find an American starving upon a foreign shore, you can send him here. I think it will be found better to take care of these latter, who are our own sailors, for we have not a similar power over foreign ones.

I therefore trust, after such difficulty in this country, and after seventy years have passed in which we have not done this thing, that now, when it is unnecessary, because four fifths of the revenue is collected in New York, and when, according to the laws of centralization, and from absolute, necessary, and uncontrollable causes, it will continue to increase as long as the Union lasts, custom-houses in ports at which little or no revenue is collected may bespeditly abolished. One half of the custom-houses in the West are wholly unnecessary. They are obtained through local influence, and not on account of any public interest. Our revenues ought to be collected at the mouth of the Mississippi, instead of at the little houses along the Mississippi and its tributaries. They are not necessary to collect the Government revenues; there should not be one of them. We ought not, from a sense of economy and of justice to the people, enter into them; and I hope that, perhaps in ten years, we shall not have a custom house of this kind. There ought not to be any now. The people should hold Congress responsible for this expenditure; for they never will be curtailed until they do.

Therefore, I say, this is a large question, involving, directly and indirectly, very great issues, and a vast expenditure of the public money. We ought to take it up, and consider it deliberately in the Senate, and not tack it on a money appropriation bill. Many questions are involved in it; therefore, even those who are in favor of it ought to bring it before us in such a manner that it might be deliberately discussed and considered.

Mr. MALLORY. What is the question before the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is on the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi, to add to the amendment moved by the Senator from Maine, the following:

Provided, That no money shall be expended for custom-houses, under the provisions of this act, in places where the customs do not equal the expenses of collection.

Mr. MALLORY. I trust that will not be agreed to. My friend from Mississippi will see that it ought not to be adopted. It is based upon the assumption—

Mr. MASON. This amendment is evidently to lead to a protracted debate, and I hope the Senator, therefore, will give way and permit me to move the postponement of the bill, in order that we may have an Executive session.

Mr. MALLORY. I shall occupy the floor but a few minutes, and I desire to proceed now while the matter is fresh. I say that it must be manifest to the Senator from Mississippi, that the provision which he offers ought not to prevail, because it is based upon the assumption that the only use of a custom-house is for the collection of the revenue; whereas, one of the most important uses, and one of the strongest arguments for the erection and establishment of them, is their use in preventing an infraction of the revenue laws, and in carrying out the legislation of the country upon the revenue, apart and separate from the collection of the revenue. Why, sir, the entire coasting trade of the United States makes up the larger part of the duties of customs officers. There are many of the most important custom-houses at which but a small portion of the revenue is collected, because their entire duties lie in the transaction of the business of the coasting trade.

In relation to the cost of the buildings, I would remind the Senate that, some years ago, when the Treasury Department in Washington was consumed by fire, all the Treasury circulars which had been written from 1794, or from the origin of the great commercial act establishing the collection of the revenue in this country, and which had accumulated in our custom-houses, and in the Treasury Department, and which constituted the law of the land on that subject, being the adjudications of the Attorney General and the Secretary of the Treasury upon the questions of revenue, were burnt; and had it not been for the fact that the Secretary was enabled to obtain copies of them from the custom-houses of the United States which had not been similarly consumed, the utmost confusion would have prevailed in the laws regulating the collection of the revenue. Hence it is necessary in the erection of custom-houses to provide buildings to secure their records.

In relation to those records, the Senator from Georgia seems to scout the idea of having any of them at all. He seems to favor the doing away with them all. Would he abolish all these distinctions between foreign and American vessels? Would he abolish all evidence of nationality in our commerce? Would he abolish all the means of ascertaining upon the high seas whether a vessel be American or foreign? If he is not in favor of this abolition, how can you provide for the discrimination, but by a register of enrollment, a license, or some other official record? One is kept at the Department here. The vessel takes one; one is kept here in the office at which the record is issued. I think that this is one of the most important of the duties of the custom-house. Independent of that, it is necessary for the protection of seamen. Our seamen obtain a protection with very little trouble, indeed, in our custom-houses; and let me say that one half or three fourths of the seamen of the merchant marine are foreigners, men who were never naturalized, and were not born in the country. A record of their naturalization, or custom-house naturalization, is their protection, and that is kept in the custom-houses of the country. But, Mr. President, I shall not detain the Senate further.

Mr. HAMLIN. I desire to say a few words in reply to the suggestions of the Senator from Georgia. I think he labors under very serious misapprehensions. In the first place, I have no idea that we shall see our revenue system abolished within ten or twenty years, or within his lifetime or mine. But conceding that we should see it entirely abandoned, and all our navigation laws repealed; conceding that we should see our whole system of revenue laws blotted out of existence, and foreign vessels admitted here to register upon precisely the same conditions that American vessels are now registered; admitting that we shall hereafter draw no distinction between American tonnage and foreign tonnage—admit it in its broadest scope, and then I ask the Senator from Georgia what solitary paper for the protection and safety of the revenue that is now issued could be dispensed with? Not one. You must have the name of the owner of the vessel, so that you may know to whom the penalties attach. You must have bills of lading, in order to know to whom the cargo belongs. You must have the vessel properly cleared; you must have, I again assert, every paper, every record for the protection of the revenue laws which you now have, if you admit foreign vessels on precisely the same ground as American vessels; and therefore the reasons which the Senator from Georgia has stated, to show that there is no necessity for these buildings, I think are wrong. The Senator is erroneous in his position.

The Senator took another ground, and that was, that ports of delivery are not necessary along the valley of the Mississippi. Sir, the Senator had not considered that well; I am sure he had not. Let me ask the Senator from Virginia if he believes that the people of Wheeling could be made to travel all the way to New Orleans for the purpose of paying their duties, and taking the security with them? Most assuredly not. But perhaps the Senator would say that he would allow goods to be imported directly into Wheeling and all interior ports, and to traverse two thousand miles inland. If he would, let me ask him what security there would be for the revenues of the country? Your laws require a vessel to enter at the first port that it reaches when it comes from a foreign country—and why? For the purpose of protecting the revenue. If you will allow a vessel to run down the Atlantic coast two thousand miles, without compelling her to enter a single port when she comes from a foreign country, I ask what would prevent her from discharging her whole cargo of goods, and thus keeping up a public illicit trade, without contributing one dollar to the revenue? It is obvious to every mind the revenue system of the Government is built on that necessity; and, consequently, you must compel a vessel to enter a port that is at the mouth of a river, or at the first port which she reaches. After she has entered and delivered her manifest, and been inspected, then, without breaking bulk, she may go direct to another port inland, where her cargo must conform with the manifest, thus preventing any opportunity of entering into an illicit trade, which would be as broad as the land, if they could run down all the coast, or two thousand miles up a river, without entering into a port. I think the objections taken by the honorable Senator are without foundation.

Mr. MASON. I move that the further consideration of the bill be postponed until to-morrow, in order to proceed to the consideration of Executive business.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

While the civil and diplomatic appropriation bill was under discussion, a further message was received from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McKean, Chief Clerk, announcing that they had passed the following bills and joint resolutions, in which they asked the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill for the relief of W. D. Porter, of the United States Navy.

A bill for the relief of Daniel Bedinger's heirs.

A bill for the relief of Brigadier General John E. Wool.

A bill for the relief of J. C. Buckles, of Louisville, Kentucky.

A bill for the relief of the inhabitants of township forty-five, range one, in Warren county, Missouri.

A bill for the relief of the Pine Grove Academy, in Louisiana.

A bill for the relief of Captain Lewis E. Simonds.

A bill for the relief of Daniel Morse, of Essex, county of Chittenden, State of Vermont.

A bill for the relief of Ira Call, of Huron county, Ohio.

A bill for the relief of Isaac M. Sigler, of Putnam county, Indiana.

A bill for the relief of John Frazer and the administrator of the estate of John G. Clendenin, deceased.

A bill for the relief of Mary H. Cushing.

A bill vesting the title of the United States to certain land in the city of Cincinnati.

A bill for the relief of the legal representatives of Everard Meade.

Also, that they had passed a bill from the Senate to incorporate the proprietors of the Glenwood Cemetery.

FORTIFICATION BILL.

The message also announced that the House of Representatives had passed an act making appropriations for fortifications, and other works of defense, and for repairs of barracks and quarters, for the year ending the 30th of June, 1855, in which they requested the concurrence of the Senate.

INVALID PENSION BILL.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the year ending the 30th of June, 1855.

GLENWOOD CEMETERY.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Before the Senator from Virginia submits his motion to proceed to the consideration of Executive business, the Chair will suggest that there are certain bills which have been returned from the House with amendments, and which might now be acted upon.

The Senate accordingly proceeded to consider the amendment of the House to the bill of the Senate to incorporate the proprietors of Glenwood Cemetery.

The amendment was to add the following:

SEC. 13. And be it further enacted, That each of the stockholders in said company shall be held liable in his or her individual capacity for all the debts and liabilities of said company, however contracted or incurred, to be recovered by suit as other debts or liabilities before the court or tribunal having jurisdiction of the case.

On motion by Mr. ADAMS, it was concurred in.

WASHINGTON AND ALEXANDRIA RAILROAD.

The Senate proceeded to consider the amendments of the House to the bill of the Senate "authorizing the extension of the Alexandria and Washington railroad into the District of Columbia."

The first amendment was to insert in the first section authorizing the extension of the road through such streets or avenues of Washington and Georgetown as the corporate authorities may approve, the words "except the Pennsylvania avenue."

The next was to add, as an additional section, the following:

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company be, and it is hereby, authorized to construct and extend the Washington branch of said road according to such route as may be most convenient through the said District, to some point on the Potomac river, opposite to, and near the city of Alexandria, in Virginia, for the purpose of forming a connection with said river, and the lines of railroad running south, subject to the provisions of its present charter; and the said company are hereby authorized to locate, construct, and operate the said extensions hereby authorized through such parts of the city of Washington or public reservations as the corporate authorities thereof, or the President of the United States, may consent to; and also to build a bridge or bridges over the eastern branch of the Potomac river, at some point above the navy-yard: Provided, however, That the same shall not obstruct the navigation thereof, and said company shall have power to locate and establish a depot, and erect the necessary buildings thereon, and also to erect such wharves and piers into said river as may be necessary: Provided, The same shall not obstruct the navigation thereof: Provided, further, That the said Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company be subject to the same conditions and restrictions in extending their road through any part of the city of Washington as are prescribed for the Alexandria and Washington Railroad Company.

The title was also amended, so as to read:

An act authorizing the extension of the Alexandria and Washington railroad into the District of Columbia, and conferring certain privileges on the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company.

Mr. WALKER. One of those amendments is somewhat lengthy. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PRATT subsequently said: I suggest to the Senator from Wisconsin that there is no necessity for the reference of the bill. Let it lie on the table, and be called up at some other time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If such is the understanding of the Senate, the order for its reference will be withdrawn, and the bill will lie upon the table.

WILLIAM SENNA FACTOR.

The Senate proceeded to consider the amendments of the House to the bill of the Senate for the relief of William Senna Factor.

The first amendment was to strike out "$3,707" as the amount to be appropriated by the bill, and insert "$2,000," and to add the following:

Provided, That said sum shall be received in full of all claims on account of the property herein mentioned.

On motion by Mr. SEBASTIAN, the amendments were concurred in.

JOSEPH WATSON.

The Senate proceeded to consider the amendment of the House to the bill of the Senate for the relief of the representatives of Joseph Watson, deceased.

The amendment was to strike out the words "Indian agent," and insert "secretary of the Indian department and store-keeper," denoting the position held by Mr. Watson while in the discharge of his duties.

Mr. WALKER. I would inquire if there is any such officer as "superintendent of the Indian department."

Mr. ADAMS. There was at that time.

Mr. WALKER. Then it is to conform to the law at that time?

Mr. ADAMS. Yes, sir. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

A. C. W. FANNING.

The Senate proceeded to consider the amendment of the House to the bill of the Senate for the relief of the executrix of the late Brevet-Colonel A. C. W. Fanning, of the United States Army. The amendment was to strike out "$7,230," and insert "$5,980," as the amount to be appropriated; and to strike out the words "as commissions for disbursements made by him in 1827 and 1828, at the United States arsenal in Augusta, Georgia."

On motion by Mr. SHIELDS, the amendment was concurred in.

SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTE REPORT.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate a letter of the Secretary of the Smithsonian Institute, transmitting the annual report of the Board of Regents.

On motion by Mr. PEARCE, it was ordered to be printed.

Mr. RUSK. I move that ten thousand additional copies be printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That motion goes to the Committee on Printing.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

On motion by Mr. MASON, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of Executive business; and, after some time spent therein, the doors were re-opened, and

The Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, July 25, 1854.

The House met at eleven o'clock, a. m. Prayer by Rev. HENRY SLICER.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

The SPEAKER appointed the following gentlemen as members of the committee to inquire into any alterations or mutilations which may have been made in bills of the House after their passage:

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois; Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky; Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio; Mr. BARRY, of Mississippi; and Mr. DAVIS, of Indiana.

RESOLUTIONS OF CONNECTICUT.

Mr. PRATT, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolutions from the Legislature of the State of Connecticut; which were laid on the table, and ordered to be printed:

Whereas, in obedience to the spirit of the Constitution of the United States, the early policy of the Government was to discourage, restrict, and repress slavery, and whereas the National Government has been swerved from its original course on this subject; and whereas, the compromise of 1820, by which slavery was prohibited in all the territory then held by the United States north of 36° 30', has been repealed by act of Congress; and whereas, it is proper, in view of this calamitous and unexpected event, that the State of Connecticut should proclaim her principles, and the line of policy she proposes to pursue, in relation to the subject of slavery; now therefore,

Resolved by this Assembly, in the name and in behalf of the people of this State, that we still cherish the great principles of the Constitution, and based upon these principles, the Union of these United States.

Resolved, That the Federal Constitution, ordained to form a more perfect union, to establish justice, and to secure the blessings of liberty, expressly denies to the General Government the power to deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law, and that the Government having no more power to establish slavery than to establish a monarchy, should at once proceed to relieve itself from all responsibility for the existence of slavery, wherever it possesses constitutional power to legislate for its extinction.

Resolved, That this General Assembly, in view of the fact that the compromises heretofore made on the subject of slavery, by act of Congress, have virtually been repudiated and deprived of their moral force and authority, by the repeal of the act preparatory to the admission of Missouri, approved March 6, 1820, do declare their determination to return to the original policy of the Government, founded upon the Constitution of the United States.

Resolved, That, in the opinion of this General Assembly, the people of Connecticut demand the repeal of that part of the bill for the organization of the government of Kansas and Nebraska, which declares the Missouri compromise inoperative and void, and will persevere in this demand until the restriction of slavery contained in the act of 1820, shall be restored to full force and effect.

Resolved, That the Hon. Isaac Toucey, a Senator of the State of Connecticut, in the Congress of the United States, having, by his vote on the final passage of the bill for the organization of the Territories of Kansas and Nebraska, disobeyed the solemn and deliberate instructions of the Legislature, and disregarded the wishes, the interests, and the principles of the people of this State, deserves to be, and hereby is, censured by this General Assembly.

Resolved, That the thanks of the General Assembly are hereby rendered to such of our Senators and Representatives in the Congress of the United States as have opposed, by all legal and constitutional means, and to the last extremity, the passage of the act by which the Missouri compromise has been repealed.

Resolved, That our Senators in Congress be instructed, and our Representatives be requested, to introduce into the Congress of the United States, and vote in favor of, such an amendment of the law commonly known as the fugitive slave law, as shall secure to every person claimed under said law, the right of trial by jury in the State where such person may be arrested and held to trial.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be transmitted to our Senators and Representatives in the Congress of the United States, to be by them laid before that body.

Mr. PRATT, in presenting the resolutions, said: Mr. Speaker, the resolutions relate to the recent action of Congress on an important subject; and inasmuch as an esteemed colleague in the other branch of this body [Hon. Mr. Toucey] comes in for a vote of censure, I had, until the introduction of them into the Senate, felt it to be my duty not to present them to the House without a few words of explanation.

Since, however, the honorable Senator has taken occasion to give to the Senate and the country his views upon the important questions involved in the resolutions, I shall refrain from saying anything further than simply to express my dissent from the course pursued by the majority of the Legislature, in assuming to censure a public servant for not obeying the instructions of a party which has uniformly repudiated the doctrine of instructions.

Had the Senator received instructions from a Legislature controlled by the party to which he is indebted for his seat, I take it for granted he would have obeyed, or resigned; if not, a vote of censure would, under such circumstances, be consistent, and, in my judgment, highly proper. That many, perhaps most of the members of the Legislature, who favored the passage of the resolutions, acted from conscientious motives, I entertain not the slightest doubt. With most of the gentlemen I have the pleasure of a personal acquaintance. I know them to be high-minded, honorable, and patriotic. While I would not question the motive, I have a right to question the consistency of the act.

Much as I regret that the honorable Senator saw fit to vote for the repeal of the Missouri compromise, I cheerfully concede to him the same freedom which I ask for myself, of voting according to the dictates of my own judgment; and I cannot concur in this vote of censure upon him for the free exercise of his undoubted right.

There are important principles involved in the resolutions, and remedies proposed for the grievance inflicted upon the country by the late act of Congress, which I do not propose in this connection to discuss. This is not the appropriate occasion to enter into a discussion of the questions to which the resolutions relate.

For myself, Mr. Speaker, I have always been opposed to the agitation of subjects connected with slavery, believing, as I do, that such agitation is fraught with mischief and danger, and tends only to harm. For this reason I helped to establish the Baltimore platform in 1852. For this reason, acting in conformity to the spirit of the Baltimore convention, I opposed the repeal of the Missouri compromise. In reviewing my course of conduct in relation to this question, I am sustained alike by the reflection that I have faithfully represented the sentiment of the great majority of my constituents, and the proud consciousness that I have discharged my duty in accordance with my own convictions of right.

Mr. Speaker, the resolutions under consideration contain a censure of my colleague, for the alleged reason that he saw fit to disregard certain instructions previously given. These instructions, as I have before remarked, were voted by a party which has heretofore uniformly repudiated the very doctrine of instruction. These instructions and this censure come, too, from a party whose political action in the Legislature has been inconsistent with itself; a party which at the outset, or rather at the commencement of the session, proclaimed the obliteration of old party lines of demarkation, and the sole issue of the Nebraska question: yet who, nevertheless, took the earliest opportunity of removing from office every Democrat, for the one reason that he was a Democrat, and without reference to his views on this subject. Moreover, they were originated by a few designing politicians in the Legislature, for the object of shaping certain party ends—men who, by ready professions, and the adroit appliances known to active demagogues, have secured positions from whence they derive a power to direct legislative action in a manner widely variant from the general sentiment of the people. I allude here to a few scheming political leaders, and not to the more honest members, who may have been made the unsuspecting parties to a covert political design.

If the resolutions referred to had simply repudiated the proposition to repeal the Missouri compromise, and there ended, they would doubtless have been almost unanimously supported in the Legislature, and would have received the sanction of an overwhelming majority of the people of Connecticut. On that question there is scarcely a division of sentiment in my State. But they went further, and involved propositions directly at war with the fundamental doctrine of State-rights. Under circumstances like these—coming, as the resolutions do, from a party who have exerted themselves to the utmost to prevent the election of Mr. Toucey to the honorable post which he now fills—it might reasonably be expected that he would hesitate to acknowledge their binding force and validity.

Mr. Speaker, I have long felt that the friends of the Republic have more to fear from political aspirants and demagogues, in our National and State Legislatures, than from any other source. If the people would select for their public servants men of tried patriotism, integrity, and firmness, men whose actions correspond with their professions, and who would accept office for the purpose of serving their constituents, and promoting the welfare of the country, instead of those who seek to obtain it by insincere professions, and fair promises: I say if such men controlled the councils of the States and nation, agitation would cease; the country would be quiet and prosperous—a result most sincerely to be desired by all true friends of the Union.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, permit me to say, in behalf of the patriotic citizens of Connecticut, that however deeply they may feel the violation of the good faith of the nation, which was effected by the repeal of the compromise of 1820, yet, notwithstanding some of the hasty acts of the late Legislature may indicate a spirit of nullification, I can assure this House and the country that the masses of that gallant old Commonwealth still cherish the Union, and will remain true to the Constitution.

The SPEAKER. The business first in order is the motion made by the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. Houston,] to reconsider the vote by which the fortification bill was passed, and to lay that motion upon the table.

PRIVATEER PENSIONS.

Mr. HOUSTON. With the permission of the House, I will withdraw that motion. While I still have the floor, I desire to call upon my friend from Pennsylvania, [Mr. Florence,] if he is in his seat, to withdraw his motion to reconsider the vote by which an amendment to the pension bill was passed in the early part of the session. The bill came into the House from the Senate with an amendment, in which the House concurred, and my friend from Pennsylvania moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to. I desire now that he shall call up his motion, so that we may act upon it, and the pension bill be finally disposed of.

Mr. FLORENCE. In accordance with the gentleman's request, I now call up the motion to reconsider, and I will state, as briefly as I can, my reasons for desiring that the motion may be acted upon, if it is the pleasure of the House. At the time I made the motion to reconsider the vote upon the passage of the invalid pension bill, there was a clause in it appropriating $2,800 to pay as pensioners those who had served in private armed vessels in the war of 1812. In the deficiency bill there was an item of some thousands of dollars—

Mr. CAMPBELL. I rise to a question of order. Is this proposition debatable?

Mr. FLORENCE. I have the floor upon a motion to reconsider, and I suppose I can debate it. I intended to state my object in making the motion to reconsider, and then leave the matter to the House to determine for itself.

The SPEAKER. That proposition involves, as the Clerk informs me, a question of order, raised by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. Orr,] at the time the gentleman from Pennsylvania made his motion. The Chair decided that the motion to reconsider was in order. From that decision an appeal was taken, and that question is now pending.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative.

So the decision of the Chair was sustained.

Mr. FLORENCE. I will state in one moment the object that I had in view. The deficiency bill, at that time, was under consideration, and had in it an item paying the deficiencies to privateer pensioners.

[HOMESTEAD BILL.]

A message was here received from the Senate, by the hands of ASBURY DICKINS, Esq., its Secretary, notifying the House that the Senate had passed the homestead bill, with amendments.]

Mr. FLORENCE, (resuming.) That item in the deficiency bill for paying these privateer pensioners for the fiscal year ending July 1, 1854, passed the Senate. The object of my moving to reconsider was to insert into the deficiency bill, which had received the sanction of the Senate, this item of $1,800 to pay for as many privateer pensioners as there are on the list for this fiscal year, beginning the 1st of July, 1854. The opposition that was made to it in the Senate—

Mr. COBB, (interrupting.) Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield me the floor for an instant?

Mr. FLORENCE. Yes, sir.

Mr. COBB. While the gentleman from Pennsylvania is breathing, I may accomplish the object for which I rose. I see that a bill has just come in from the Senate proposing to effect many objects—I mean the homestead bill. If the House be willing, I wish an order to be made directing the bill and amendments to be printed for the benefit of the House, so that when the matter comes up to be acted on in this body it may be thoroughly understood. I hope that order will be made.

It was so ordered.

Mr. FLORENCE, (resuming.) In order, Mr. Speaker, that the House may be able to vote intelligibly on this motion to reconsider, I will just read from the Congressional Globe some remarks made in the Senate by the honorable Senator from Maryland, [Mr. PEARCE], on whose motion this paragraph or item making provision for pensions due private pensioners, in the deficiency bill, was stricken out. On reconsideration, and on examination of the facts in the case, he concluded that it was unjust to withdraw the pensions from these private pensioners, and that the clause providing for their payment should be reinstated.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I desire to be informed by the Chair whether this matter is debatable? I have no objection to listening to a brief explanation, but am not desirous of hearing a long speech.

Mr. FLORENCE. I think I have a right to debate the motion that I have made.

Mr. CAMPBELL. But I do not think the gentleman has a right to read the report of a speech from the Congressional Globe.

The SPEAKER. The motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania is debatable. It is a motion to reconsider the vote by which amendments were adopted.

Mr. FLORENCE. I never disturb gentlemen who have the floor. I will not occupy the attention of the House more than a few minutes. Mr. PEARCE says:

"In regard to that amendment which reduced the sum appropriated to private pensions, I wish to make a brief statement to the Senate, and state the reasons why I shall take a different course from that which I pursued the day before yesterday. All the statements which I made to the Senate then were, as I find, perfectly correct. I find that the fund was exhausted by the application first of the interest, and then of the principal. It was safely invested, and not a dollar of it was lost by bad investments. On the contrary, the fund was absolutely increased by the amount of $8,000, when the stocks, in which it was invested, were sold out.

"But, sir, the fund was diminished by the action of Congress in a particular which I am inclined to think leaves an equitable claim on the part of these pensioners against the Government. The original acts pledged this fund to the payment of invalid private pensions, and pensions to the widows of those who were slain in the engagements of the privateers. Such were the pensions provided for by the act of 1814. By the act of 1818, I find that Congress added a new class of pensions, to wit, the widows of those who died by casualties during the period of their services. This was not contemplated by the original acts.

"On looking at the papers which have been sent to me since the debate, I perceive that the proper pensions have amounted in all to not more than $5,900 in any year; when by the act of 1818, which extended them to the widows of those who died of casualties, the Government paid in one year $19,000. This difference continued for a considerable length of time.

"The privateer pensions paid to invalids decreased rapidly; so that, in 1838, they amounted to only $2,850. They had never been more than about $5,900. The pensions to widows amounted to over $8,000 in 1817, and ran up, in 1820, to $19,471; so that it appears that it was the new class of pensions, introduced contrary to the pledge of the original act, which diminished and finally exhausted the fund.

"Under these circumstances, I give up the objection which I had to the original appropriation as it came from the House. I believe it is equitable in the Government to make good to the invalids the pensions which they would have continued to receive but for our own legislation. I hope, therefore, the Senate will not concur in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

"The amendment was not concurred in."

That amendment was to strike out of the House bill the paragraph or item which provided for the payment of the privateer pensions for the fiscal year. The Senator from Maryland made the motion to reconsider in order to reinstate the item making such provision in the deficiency bill. If I understand correctly, it was upon the motion of the gentleman from Maryland that the appropriation to pay pensions for the privateer pensioners was stricken out of the invalid pension appropriation bill for the coming fiscal year; and, as he now admits the claims to be equitable, the appropriation ought to be made.

Mr. HOUSTON. I move to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table. The remarks which the gentleman from Pennsylvania has read apply to another bill, and not to an item in the bill which he moves to reconsider. [Laughter.]

The question was taken, and decided in the affirmative.

So the motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

FORTIFICATION BILL.

Mr. CORWIN. I rise to a privileged question. Yesterday, after the fortification bill was passed, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Houston] made a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; but this morning he has withdrawn the motion. I desire to renew the motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I move the previous question upon that motion.

Mr. HOUSTON. Did the gentleman from Ohio vote in the affirmative?

Mr. CORWIN. I did.

Mr. HOUSTON. Then I move to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

JACOB MOYER.

Mr. ELLISON, by unanimous consent, reported a bill "for the relief of the heirs of Jacob Moyer;" which was read a first and second time by its title, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and ordered to be printed.

CLERK TO COMMITTEE.

Mr. DAWSON was here recognized by the Chair.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania will give way to me for a moment, I desire to say that I am instructed by the select committee which was appointed yesterday, to ask the House to allow them a clerk for three or four days only, at the usual rate of compensation.

Mr. ENGLISH. I object.

Mr. WASHBURN. Then I move to suspend the rules, to enable me to introduce a resolution to that effect.

The SPEAKER. The motion to suspend the rules is not in order to-day.

Mr. ELIOT, of Massachusetts. I rise to a question of order. I desire that the 137th rule may be read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will please read the rule.

Mr. ELIOT read the rule, as follows:

"Except during the last ten days of the session, the Speaker shall not entertain a motion to suspend the rules of the House at any time, except on Monday of every week," &c.

The SPEAKER. The practice of some of my predecessors, and my own practice, has been to count Sunday as one of the days of the session.

Mr. ELIOT. I desire to ask if this is not one of the ten days?

The SPEAKER. The Chair decides that it is not.

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky. There is another question involved in this point of order, which it may perhaps be as well to settle now. I understand the joint resolution fixing the fourth day of August as the day upon which the two Houses shall adjourn has not been finally acted upon by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The Chair decides that this question of order cannot, at this moment, come up legitimately, for the reason that the gentleman from Illinois has not the floor to make the motion to suspend the rules at all. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Dawson] was recognized by the Chair, and was upon the floor, and only yielded to hear what proposition the gentleman from Illinois would make. He asked that the select committee appointed yesterday might be allowed a clerk. It was objected to. And if it was competent to move to suspend the rules at all, the gentleman had not the floor to do so. The gentleman from Pennsylvania had the floor, and the floor cannot be taken from him except by a privileged question.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Is there not a privileged question pending—the motion to reconsider the fortification bill?

The SPEAKER. That is true; but the Chair has not yet heard what proposition the gentleman from Pennsylvania desires to submit. The Chair simply recognized the gentleman.

Mr. DAWSON. My object in rising is simply to give notice that to-morrow I shall ask the House to take up the homestead bill, as amended by the Senate; and if the House will do so, I will press it to final action.

FORTIFICATION BILL AGAIN.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon the motion to reconsider the vote by which the fortification bill was passed yesterday.

The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Jones] demanded the previous question upon the motion of the gentleman from Ohio, and at the same time the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Houston] moved to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table. Neither gentleman, however, had the floor to make any motion.

Mr. JONES. I was recognized by the Chair, and made the motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman could not have the floor, for the reason that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Corwin] was upon the floor.

Mr. JONES. The gentleman from Ohio made his motion, and took his seat.

The SPEAKER. Both motions are in order now, and must be put in their turn. The question will therefore be first upon laying the motion to reconsider upon the table.

Mr. JONES. Upon that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken upon Mr. Houston's motion; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 77, nays 70; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Aiken, James C. Allen, Willis Allen, Appleton, Barksdale, Barry, Bliss, Boyce, Breckinridge, Bridges, Caskie, Chandler, Chastain, Clingman, Craige, Crocker, Dick, Dickinson, Dowdell, Dunbar, Edmonds, Edmundson, Thomas D. Eliot, Farley, Faulkner, Florence, Franklin, Fuller, Goodrich, Harrison, Hibbard, Houston, Howe, Hughes, Hunt, Roland Jones, Kerr, Kittredge, Kurtz, Latham, McDougall, McNair, Maxwell, Millson, Packer, Phillips, Powell, Pratt, Puryear, Riddle, David Ritchie, Robbins, Rowe, Ruffin, Russell, Sabin, Seward, Shaw, Shower, Skelton, William Smith, George W. Smyth, Solters, Frederick P. Stanton, Hester L. Stevens, John J. Taylor, John L. Taylor, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Thurston, Upham, Vail, Vansant, Walley, Israel Washburn, Tappan Wentworth, Wheeler, and Wite—77.

NAYS—Messrs. Ball, Bennett, Bugg, Campbell, Carpenter, Chrisman, Churchwell, Clark, Cobb, Cook, Corwin, Cox, Cullom, John G. Davis, Thomas Davis, Dawson, Disney, Eastman, Edgerton, Ellison, English, Everhart, Ewing, Flagler, Giddings, Greenwood, Grow, Aaron Harlan, Hendricks, Ilem, Hill, Johnson, Daniel T. Jones, George W. Jones, Knox, Lamb, Lilly, Lindsey, McCulloch, Macy, Matteson, Maurice, Morgan, Morrison, Murray, Nichols, Norton, Andrew Oliver, Mordecai Oliver, Parker, Peck, Peckham, Phelps, Pringle, Reese, Sapp, Shannon, Simmons, Richard H. Stanton, Stratton, Andrew Stuart, David Stuart, Trout, Tweed, Wade, Elihu B. Washburne, Wells, Daniel B. Wright, and Zollcoffer—70.

So the motion to reconsider was laid upon the table.

SYLVESTER PETTIBONE.

Mr. WELLS. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to discharge the Committee of the Whole House from the further consideration of the bill of the Senate (No. 274) "for the relief of Sylvester Pettibone."

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I object, unless the bill be read.

The bill was read in extenso for information.

Mr. WELLS. Now, if the House will indulge me for a moment, I will state the circumstances connected with the case.

Mr. McMULLIN. I cannot consent that this motion be made, unless we agree to dispose of all the private bills upon the Calendar.

Mr. WELLS. I hope the gentleman will withdraw his objection.

Mr. McMULLIN. There are several private bills upon the Calendar, and I am willing to go into committee and dispose of all of them; but I object to special privileges being allowed to one gentleman unless the same privileges are allowed to others.

Mr. WELLS. I do not object to all the bills being taken up.

Mr. McMULLIN. I do not withdraw my objection.

PATENT TO CHARLES M' LARAN.

Mr. BARKSDALE. I ask the consent of the House to introduce a bill for the purpose of reference. It is a bill requiring the Commissioner of the General Land Office to issue a patent to Charles McLaran for a tract of land, upon certain conditions.

There was no objection; and the bill was received, read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

ASTRONOMICAL OBSERVATIONS IN CHILI.

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky. I rise to a privileged question. Some time since a communication was presented to this House from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting a report and certain astronomical and other observations of the late naval and astronomical expedition to Chili. A resolution was passed by the House instructing the Committee on Printing to inquire into the expediency of printing ten thousand copies of the report and observations. The committee have had the subject under consideration, and have instructed me to report the following resolution:

Resolved, That there be printed and bound by the public printer and binder of the House six thousand copies of the report and two thousand copies of the observations of the United States Naval and Astronomical Expedition to Chitt, five thousand copies of the report and observations for the use of the Secretary of the Navy, two hundred and fifty for the superintendent of the expedition, and the remainder for distribution by the members of the present House; the said work to be printed in quarto or octavo form, as the work will admit, and the Committee on Printing may direct.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I move to lay the resolution upon the table.

The motion was not agreed to.

The resolution was then adopted.

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky, moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted, and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

POSTAL SERVICE IN CALIFORNIA.

Mr. PHELPS obtained the floor, but yielded to Mr. McDOUGALL. There is on the Speaker's table, a bill of the House (No. 344) making provision for the postal service in the State of California, and in the Territories of Oregon and Washington, which has come from the Senate with several amendments, and I now ask the unanimous consent of the House to take it up, that the amendments of the Senate may be concurred in.

Mr. WHEELER. I object, and call for the regular order of business.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I am compelled to leave the city this evening, in consequence of illness in my family. This matter is in my charge; and as I may not again be in my seat during this session, I would be glad if the gentleman from New York would withdraw his objection, and let the amendments of the Senate be concurred in.

Mr. WHEELER. I withdraw my objection, and ask that the bill be read for information.

The bill was read in extenso.

The amendments of the Senate were then read and concurred in, as follows:

In the first section strike out "fifty cents," and in lieu thereof insert "twenty-five cents."

Add at the end of the first section the following:

Provided, That no letter or letters, or other mailable matter, shall be delivered by any postmaster to such carriers, unless requested to do so in writing by the person or persons to whom said letters or other mailable matter may be directed.

So that, as amended, the section will read as follows:

That the Postmaster General be, and he is hereby, authorized to empower the special agents of the Post Office Department in the State of California, and in the Territories of Oregon and Washington, to appoint letter-carriers for the delivery of letters from any post office in the said State or Territories, and to allow any letter-carrier so appointed to demand and receive a sum for all letters, newspapers, or other mailable matter, not more than may be recommended by the postmaster for whose office such letter-carrier may be appointed: Provided, That not more than twenty-five cents shall be charged for any letter, newspaper, or ounce of other mailable matter. All such appointments may be determined, and rates of compensation modified within the limits aforesaid, whenever the same is found expedient in the opinion of the appointing agent: And it is further provided, That all such appointments and contracts shall be subject to the approval of the Postmaster General; and upon notice to any carrier of his rejection by the Postmaster General, his appointment and contract shall be determined; and that all letter-carriers appointed in pursuance of this act shall be subject to the provisions of the forty-first section of the act entitled "An act to change the organization of the Post Office Department, and to provide more effectually for the settlement of the accounts thereof," approved July 2, 1836, except as herein otherwise provided: Provided, That no letter or letters, or other mailable matter, shall be delivered by any postmaster to such carriers, unless requested in writing to do so by the person or persons to whom said letters or other mailable matter may be directed.

Mr. LETCHER. Will the gentleman from Missouri yield the floor to me for a moment, to enable me to introduce a bill, of which I gave notice yesterday?

Mr. PHELPS. The gentleman must excuse me. I have yielded to the gentleman from California, and there are many others who desire that I shall yield to them, but I must insist on my motion.

RECEPTION AND REFERENCE OF BILLS AND REPORTS.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hopes that he will be indulged, in this immediate connection, in making a single remark. The Chair understands that there are a great many gentlemen seeking the floor, and often, to their great disappointment, not obtaining it, for the purpose of simply introducing bills, of which previous notice has been given, for the purpose of reference. The Chair begs to be indulged in suggesting that all such bills be now received and referred.

Mr. PHELPS. I have no objection to that course.

Mr. LETCHER. I shall not attempt to practice any deception upon gentlemen. My object in introducing the bill to repeal the Minnesota railroad grant is to put it upon its passage.

The SPEAKER. Then the proposition of the Chair does not cover the gentleman's case.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to report back from the Committee on the Judiciary, Senate bill supplementary to an act entitled "An act to authorize notaries public to take and certify oaths, affirmations, and acknowledgments in certain cases."

It is a short bill, and it will not take five minutes to dispose of it.

The SPEAKER. By the order of the House just made, only such bills are to be received as are introduced for the purposes of reference.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I will interpose no objection to the reporting of such bills as gentlemen wish to report for the purpose of reference.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has so decided.

Mr. JONES. With the understanding that none of them are to be put upon their passage, or brought back here by reconsideration.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN, in pursuance of previous notice, introduced a bill "for the relief of John Carpenter and others;" which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. ROWE, from the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions, reported back Senate bill (No. 357) "for the relief of Urban Stoll;" which was referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. WENTWORTH, of Massachusetts, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back Senate bill No. 425, "An act to constitute Tusculumbia, in the State of Alabama, a port of delivery," with amendments.

Mr. DAVIS, of Indiana. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. The bill reported by the gentleman from Massachusetts cannot be considered in the House at this time. The order of the House is that only such bills as shall not give rise to debate may be received and referred.

Mr. WENTWORTH. I do not ask for its consideration at this time; but I desire merely to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that the bill is reported with amendments.

The SPEAKER. What disposition does the gentleman desire to make of the bill?

Mr. WENTWORTH. To refer it.

Mr. DAVIS. My point of order is, that the order just established by the House only provides for the introduction of bills of which previous notice has been given, and not for the reception of reports from committees.

The SPEAKER. Such was the order of the House. The introduction of bills of which previous notice had been given, was only embraced in the proposition.

Mr. WENTWORTH. Well, then, I withdraw the bill.

Mr. WENTWORTH, of Massachusetts. I ask leave to introduce the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce be directed to inquire what legislation is necessary to regulate or prohibit the introduction into any port or place into the United States, by any foreign Government or individual, of any foreigner being insane, blind, or otherwise disabled; and to report by bill or otherwise.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. FENTON, in pursuance of previous notice, introduced "a bill to authorize the partition of the Alleghany and Cattaraugus Indian reservations, in the State of New York;" which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The provisions of the bill are as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Interior of the United States be authorized and directed to enter into a regulation with the owners and proprietors of the right of preemption of the Alleghany and Cattaraugus reservations, in the State of New York, now occupied by a portion of the Seneca tribe of Indians, with a view to a partition of the said two reservations between the said Indians and the said owners and proprietors, so that certain portions of the said two reservations which in the aggregate shall be equal in value to the interest now secured by treaty stipulations to the said Indians and their descendants, may be set off and confirmed to the said Indians, and so that all the interests and rights of the said owners and proprietors therein may be forever extinguished.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That no such negotiation shall be entered into by the said Secretary of the Interior until the said Indians, through their chiefs, or otherwise, according to the usages and customs of the said tribe, shall consent to such partition. Nor shall any arrangement that may be settled and agreed upon by the said Secretary of the Interior, and the said owners and proprietors, be obligatory until the said Indians shall, in like manner, have signified their approval thereof.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That in case such partition shall be made according to the provisions of this act, then the title of the portions of the said tracts so set off and confirmed to the said Indians shall become vested in the said Indians as tenants in common; and partition thereof shall be made among them on such principles as pertain to the several rights and interests of individuals, and on such terms and in such manner as may hereafter be prescribed by law.

Mr. WRIGHT, of Mississippi, in pursuance of previous notice, introduced a bill granting land in alternate sections to the States of Mississippi and Tennessee, respectively, to aid in the construction of a railroad from Grenada, Mississippi, to Memphis, Tennessee; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. SINGLETON. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to introduce the following resolution:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested, as far as in his judgment is compatible with the public interest, to communicate to this House, whether the progress of negotiation with Spain has removed the necessity for provisional action by Congress, as indicated in his message of March 13, 1854; or whether he still thinks it advisable that measures should be taken to augment the Executive power, to protect and secure the national honor, rights, and interests.

Mr. FARLEY. I object.

Mr. SINGLETON. Then I move to suspend the rules, to enable me to introduce this resolution.

The SPEAKER. Such a motion is not in order to-day.

Mr. HOUSTON. Is it in order for me to report a bill now for the purpose of having it referred to a committee?

The SPEAKER. It can be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. HOUSTON. It is a bill which ought to go to the Committee on Commerce.

No objection being made, the Committee of Ways and Means were accordingly discharged from the further consideration of a bill "for the relief of H. Southmayd & Son;" and the same was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. WENTWORTH, of Massachusetts. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce to call the attention of the House to the fact that a bill for the relief of Thomas Butler has passed the Senate, and been referred to the Committee on Commerce. The papers have been passed upon by the committee, but the bill has been mislaid, and the committee are unable to find it. The committee ask that the Senate be requested to furnish to the House a copy of the bill.

It was so ordered.

Mr. FULLER, from the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred the petition of Stephen Patterson and others, made a report thereon, accompanied by a bill to refund to the officers of the customs and others of the district of Passamaquoddy certain moneys; which bill was read a first and second time by its title, committed to a Committee of the Whole House, and the bill and report ordered to be printed.

Mr. FULLER, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the House (No. 216) "to repeal an act entitled 'An act concerning tonnage duty on Spanish vessels,'" reported the same, with a recommendation that it do not pass.

Ordered, That the Senate bill be laid on the table.

On motion by Mr. FULLER, it was Ordered, That the Committee on Commerce be discharged from the further consideration of the petition of John Connel, on behalf of sundry claimants for a return of duties under the tariff of 1823; of the papers in relation to the wreck of the ship Aberdeen, in San Francisco Bay; of Huntington & Brooks, for return of duties; of Knox & Shain, for return of duties; of A. Delmas, of Mississippi; of Edward H. Swift, of New York, for return of duties; of citizens of North and South Carolina, and other States, for a repeal of the prohibition of the carriage of turpentine, &c., by steamboats; of Anne Dudley; and of citizens of

New York and Illinois, in favor of the repeal of the duty on sugar and molasses.

On motion by Mr. FULLER, it was Ordered, That the Committee on Commerce be discharged from the further consideration of the memorial of Edward Robinson and others, of Thomaston, Maine, relative to a demand of redress from Peru; and that the same be referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs; that the Committee on Commerce be discharged from the further consideration of a petition of tobaccoists, residents of Louisville, Kentucky, and that the same be referred to the Committee of Ways and Means; and that the same committee be discharged from the further consideration of the memorial of the Common Council, and of the citizens of Evansville, Indiana, in relation to the location of a western armory at that place, and that the same be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back, with a recommendation that it do pass, Senate bill to amend several acts respecting copyrights; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. STANTON. I now ask the consent of the House to allow me to put a little bill upon its passage. It is a matter that requires immediate action, and to which there will be no objection. It is Senate bill (No. 320) supplementary to an act entitled "An act to authorize notaries public to take and certify oaths, affirmations, and acknowledgments in certain cases." The Committee on the Judiciary have instructed me to report it without amendment.

There was no objection; and the bill was reported and read in extenso. It authorizes notaries public to take depositions, and do such other acts in relation to evidence to be used in the courts of the United States, in the same manner, and with the same effect, as commissioners to take acknowledgments of bail and affidavits may now take or do.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. FAULKNER, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back, with a recommendation that it do pass, Senate bill (No. 368) "for the relief of Charles Merchant;" which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. DISNEY. I desire to call the attention of the House to a bill very important in its character, to remedy defects in certain land titles. The Supreme Court has decided that the titles to a certain class of lands granted by the General Government to the States are defective in their character, and will convey no valid right to the lands at all. These lands have gone out of the possession of the parties to whom they were granted into the hands of innocent purchasers, and it is a matter of the highest importance that the defect should be remedied. I make these remarks for the purpose of calling the attention of the House to the subject, and for the purpose of giving notice that on to-morrow I shall ask leave to take up the bill and put it upon its passage.

Mr. HOUSTON. I move that the House insist upon its disagreement, and concur in the request for a committee of conference.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. NORTON, from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, reported a bill "for the relief of John Frink;" which was read a first and second time by its title, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. STUART, of Ohio, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported a bill, which was read a first and second time by its title as follows, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed:

A bill granting compensation and bounty land to certain American seamen who were prisoners of war during the war of 1812.

Mr. S. also, from the same committee, reported a bill "for the relief of Jacob Baker, of Sandusky, Ohio;" which was read a first and second time by its title, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. S. also, from the same committee, reported back Senate bill (No. 381) "for the relief of William Brown;" which was referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. HENDRICKS, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported adversely on Senate bill

(No. 191) "for the relief of Thomas B. Parsons;" which, with the accompanying report, was laid upon the table, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. H. also, from the same committee, reported a bill "for the relief of Tunstall Quarles;" which was read a first and second time by its title, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

On motion by Mr. HENDRICKS, it was Ordered, That the petition and papers of William Stern be withdrawn from the files of the House, and re-referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions

Mr. CORWIN, from the Committee on Revolutionary Claims, reported a bill "for the relief of the heirs of Rignault, alias Nick Hillery;" which was read a first and second time by its title, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. LINDLEY, by unanimous consent, introduced "a bill granting to the State of Missouri the right of way and a portion of the public domain to aid in the construction of a railroad from Alexandria to Bloomington;" which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. NICHOLS, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, reported adversely on the petition of Jacob Kerr; which, with the accompanying report, was laid upon the table, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. N. also, from the same committee, reported back Senate bill (No. 288) entitled "An act supplementary to an act confirming claims to land in the State of Missouri, and for other purposes," with an amendment, and a recommendation that it do pass; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and the bill, as amended, ordered to be printed.

Mr. N. also, from the same committee, reported back Senate bill (No. 216) "for the relief of Joseph Smith," with a recommendation that it do pass; which was referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. N. also, from the same committee, reported back Senate bill (No. 423) "for the relief of Gaston T. Raoul," with a recommendation that it do pass; which was referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. N. also reported back Senate bill (No. 443) "for the relief of A. G. Penn," with a recommendation that it do pass; which was referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. N. also reported back Senate bill (No. 334) "for the relief of Francois Cousin," with a recommendation that it do pass; which was referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. ASHE, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported back Senate bill (No. 109) "for the relief of William P. Sanger," with a recommendation that it do pass; which was referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. EASTMAN, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported back Senate bill (No. 161) "for the relief of Theodore E. Elliott," with a recommendation that it do not pass; which was laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HUGHES, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, reported back House bill (No. 228) "for the relief of George McGirk," with a recommendation that it do pass; which was referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. TAYLOR, of New York, from the Committee for the District of Columbia, reported back a bill "incorporating the Mutual Fire Insurance Company of the District of Columbia;" which was referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. PHELPS. I now move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to.

The rules were accordingly suspended, and the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. FULLER in the chair.)

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

A message was here received from the Senate, by ASBURY DICKINS, their Secretary, informing the House that the Senate insist upon their amendments to the bill of the House (No. 46) "making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1855," disagreed to by the House, and that they disagree to the amendments of the House to the same, and ask for a committee of conference.

THE NAVY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PHELPS. I believe, Mr. Chairman, that the first bill on the Calendar is House bill No. 97, which I propose the committee shall now consider. It is a bill making appropriations for the naval service for the year ending 30th of June, 1855.

Mr. PHELPS. I move to dispense with the first reading of the bill. I hope no objection will be made to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PHELPS. I now move that the committee rise, with a view of enabling me to introduce a resolution for the purpose of limiting debate upon this bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the Chairman of the committee reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the Union generally, and particularly House bill No. 97, and had come to no conclusion thereon.

Mr. PHELPS submitted the usual resolution, closing debate on bill No. 97 within thirty minutes after the committee should have resumed the consideration thereof.

Mr. BRIDGES. I propose to amend the resolution by striking out thirty minutes, and inserting in lieu thereof five minutes.

Mr. PHELPS. I demand the previous question on the adoption of the resolution.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question was ordered to be put.

The question was taken on the adoption of Mr. BRIDGES's amendment.

The House was divided, and there were, on a count—ayes fifty; not half of a quorum.

Mr. WHEELER. I call for tellers.

The SPEAKER. The number of members voting in the affirmative is less than half of a quorum; and as there is evidently more than a quorum present, there is no necessity for tellers. The vote on a count is sufficiently decisive.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

The question was then taken on Mr. PHELPS's resolution; and it was adopted.

Mr. PHELPS moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to, and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table; which latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. PHELPS. I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly again resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. FULLER in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the Navy appropriation bill.

Mr. BOCOCK addressed the committee for half an hour in favor of a reform and reorganization of the Navy, and in explanation of various amendments which he designed to offer. His remarks will be found in the Appendix.

The hour having now arrived for closing the general debate on the bill, under the order of the House,

Mr. PHELPS, who, as the member reporting the bill, was entitled to the floor for one hour, replied at length to the remarks of Mr. BOCOCK, and explained the course of the Committee of Ways and Means with regard to the bill. His speech, which is withheld for revision, will be published in the Appendix.

The Clerk then proceeded to read the bill by paragraphs for amendment.

Mr. PHELPS. I offer the following amendment:

After the word "Navy," in the eighth line, strike out "$3,992,648," and insert in lieu thereof "$3,367,000;" so as to make the clause read:

For pay of commission, warrant, and petty officers, and seamen, including the engineer corps of the Navy, $3,367,000.

The object of this amendment is to provide for the increase of the wages of seamen. It is proposed to give authority to the Secretary of the Navy to increase the wages of the seamen employed aboard vessels of the United States.

Mr. SOLLERS. Does it leave the increase discretionary with the Secretary of the Navy?

Mr. PHELPS. It does.

Mr. FAULKNER. I understand, Mr. Chairman, that the object of the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. PHELPS,] is to appropriate $300,000 extra, for the increase of the wages of the seamen employed in our Navy. This makes it in order for me to compare the compensation given to seamen and that given to the enlisted soldiers in our Army. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BOCOCK] tells us that seamen now receive twelve dollars per month, and this amendment will raise their compensation to eighteen dollars per month. A seaman has the additional inducement to service, in the fact that, if he dies in the line of his duty, his widow and orphans will be pensioned. A private of infantry now receives but seven dollars per month—with no pension promised his widow and infant children, if he is killed in the service of his country. Still I do not complain of this increased pay proposed for our seamen. It is all right. I am gratified that the amendment has been offered. And I cannot permit the occasion to pass by without expressing my regret that the same impulse did not stimulate the Committee of Ways and Means, when the Army appropriation bill was under consideration a few days ago, to come forward with a similar act of justice to the rank and file of the Army.

Mr. HOUSTON. If the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER] will allow me, I want to state to the committee what my proposal was. I proposed to the gentleman from Virginia, that if he would let the amendment come in by general consent, we would allow the increase of pay to the non-commissioned officers and privates of the Army. That it was not adopted, is, therefore, certainly more the fault of the gentleman from Virginia than the fault of the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. FAULKNER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOUSTON] did say to me that if I would offer so much of my bill as increased the pay of the enlisted men, that he would make no opposition to such an amendment. But I said to him, that I was acting as the organ of a committee, and that I could not mutilate their proposition. He, or the gentleman from Missouri, could have done then what they have done now; but I could not do so without a betrayal of the trust confided to me.

Mr. CLINGMAN. Is this discussion legitimate?

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Will the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER] permit me to say a word?

Mr. FAULKNER. Mr. Chairman, I hope these points of order will not be further sprung upon me. If there is any branch of the public service which has been cruelly neglected by Congress, it is that with which I have the honor to be now officially connected, as chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs. Not a single opportunity has yet been allowed me to present, in any detail before this House and the country, the exigencies and necessities of that important branch of the public service. Until a comparative recent period, the principal duties of that committee devolved upon the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. BISSELL,] whose health disabled him from asking their consideration by Congress. Since the retirement of Colonel BISSELL from the duties of that committee, I have sought, in every form, to bring the wants and necessities of the Army to the consideration of this body. But I have been arrested, in every effort, by points of order. Railroad bills, private bills, everything seems to find a readier access to the ear of this House, than our suffering and dilapidated Army. I was absent when the Army appropriation bill was most unexpectedly taken up, and thus I was deprived of the opportunity, at that time, of presenting, in some detail, the present condition and necessities of the Army.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. If the gentleman will permit me, I will say that when the gentleman from Oregon, [Mr. LANE,] I think it was, proposed an amendment to the Army bill to increase the pay of the non-commissioned officers and privates, I rose in my seat and proposed that the question of order should be waived, that the House might decide upon that question, and, if I mistake not, the gentleman's colleague from Fairfax objected.

Mr. FAULKNER. It was not my colleague; it was I who requested the gentleman from Oregon to withdraw his amendment, and the reason was a very plain and palpable one, as I can explain to the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would remind the gentleman that he should confine his remarks to the question under discussion.

Mr. FAULKNER. I will endeavor to do so. It is important that the fact noticed by the gentleman from Tennessee shall be explained to the House. In the scheme devised to encourage enlistment and reenlistment in the Army, and embraced in my bill, the inducements held out to recruits are both pecuniary and honorary. There are some important inducements to enter the Army beyond the monthly pay. Thus, for example, the preferences of the Army are opened to the common soldier. There are provisions for his widow and orphan children, if he dies in the service. The increase of pay, as a mere pecuniary compensation, would have been inadequate to accomplish its object. I therefore objected to the simple transfer of the provision increasing the pay, as it would have mutilated the scheme, and have failed to accomplish any practical good. The result would have been deceptive, and left us where we now are, with our Army every day thinning to a mere skeleton.

I have availed myself of this, as I must of every occasion, to press this subject upon the consideration of this House, until it adjourns. I hope yet I may be allowed some full and fair opportunity to place before this body those facts which, when heard, I know will impress every member of this body with the necessity of action on the Army bills.

Mr. BOCOCK. I rise for the purpose of offering an amendment to the amendment. I offer the amendment in good faith. I have made no fancy speeches, and do not deal in fancy stocks.

I move to strike out the following clauses:

For pay of commission, warrant, and petty officers, and seamen, including the engineer corps of the Navy, $2,992,648.

For pay of superintendents, naval constructors, and all the civil establishments at the several navy-yards and stations, $115,350.

and insert the following:

For pay of commission, warrant, and petty officers and seamen, including the engineer corps of the Navy, $3,010,948, including the extra pay at the navy yard, California, of the following officers: One captain, $7,000; one commander, $4,000; one lieutenant, $3,000; one master, $2,000; one purser, $4,000; one surgeon, $3,600; one boat-swain, $2,000; one gunner, $2,000; one carpenter, $2,000; one clerk to purser, $2,000; one steward, $600.

For pay of superintendent, naval constructors, and all civil establishments at the several navy-yards and stations, $153,350, including the pay of the civil branch of the officers at the navy yard, California, as follows: One storekeeper $3,500; one civil engineer $4,000; one assistant engineer, to be also the inspector of lumber and building materials $2,500; one draughtsman and clerk to engineer $2,000; one clerk of the yard $2,000; one clerk to the commandant $2,000; one clerk to the storekeeper $2,000; one porter and messenger $900; one navy agent $5,000; one clerk to navy agent $3,000; one clerk (second) to navy agent $2,500; one master joiner $2,500; one master mason $2,500; one master blacksmith $2,500.

That adds a small amount to the amount now appropriated. The amount in the bill is $2,992,000, and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. PHELPS] moves to increase it about $300,000, and I move to increase it $100,000, for the purpose of covering the extra expenses at the California navy-yard.

Mr. PHELPS. I rise to a question of order. I desire to know whether that amendment is in order? It proposes, if I understand it, to provide that certain officers shall receive a certain salary over and above what the law provides. Its effect is to repeal or modify the law so far as these officers are concerned. I think it is clearly out of order.

Mr. BOCOCK. The proposition is to pay certain officers of the Navy more than they are now paid. Now, sir, no appropriation bill has ever passed this House in which amendments have not been incorporated, regulating the amounts that are to be paid to certain officers. That is what is proposed by this amendment; and if the committee will allow me, I think I can show to their satisfaction, that the amendment is, to some extent, necessary.

Mr. BRIDGES. How much does it propose to increase their pay?

Mr. CLINGMAN. I ask that the Chair shall decide the question of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the amendment is not in order, and so decides.

Mr. BOCOCK. Then I must appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia proposes an amendment to increase the salaries of certain officers of the Navy in California over and above the amount provided by law. The Chair rules the amendment not to be in order. The gentleman from Virginia appeals from the decision of the Chair; and the question is, "Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?"

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio. I demand tellers on the appeal.

Tellers were not ordered.

The question was taken; and the decision of the Chair was sustained.

Mr. HENN. I wish to oppose the amendment moved by the gentleman from Missouri; and in doing so I would ask him, in the first place, how much this bill appropriates to the Navy?

Mr. PHELPS. I have already stated it in the remarks which I made a few months ago. The bill as it came from the Committee of Ways and Means, appropriates $7,641,000. That committee have directed amendments to be offered which appropriate two million and odd dollars in addition. As originally introduced, the bill did not embrace the estimates for the improvement of the navy-yards. It was a subject-matter of conference between the Committee of Ways and Means, and the Committee on Naval Affairs, and we had not acted on it at the time the bill was reported. Hence the amendments we design offering.

Mr. HENN. I understand the gentleman to say, then, that the bill, with the amendment which will be proposed by the Committee of Ways and Means, will appropriate something like the sum of $9,000,000.

Mr. PHELPS. Nine million three hundred and ninety-six thousand dollars.

Mr. HENN. We have already appropriated this session $6,000,000 for the construction of six new steamships. That makes $15,000,000. Now, I would ask the gentleman, how much more is to be appropriated this session for the Navy?

Mr. PHELPS. The gentleman is mistaken as to the amount appropriated by the bill providing for the construction of six new steamships. Three millions of dollars, and not $6,000,000 was the amount appropriated; and that money was directed by the act to be for the construction of these steam frigates, and no other purpose. That does not diminish the amount of expenditure required to keep up your Navy.

Mr. MACDONALD. I rise to a question of order.

Mr. HENN. I am opposing the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri, and am in order.

Mr. MACDONALD. That amendment was opposed by the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. HENN. I have said all that I desired to say. My object was that the committee should know how much we have appropriated and are to appropriate to the Navy.

The question was then taken on Mr. PHELPS's amendment; and it was adopted.

Mr. SMITH, of New York. I move to amend the bill by adding after the following paragraph:

"For provisions for commission, warrant, and petty officers and seamen, including engineers and marines attached to vessels for sea-service, $636,200."

these words:

But no intoxicating liquors shall be provided for a beverage.

I hope, sir, that the committee will bear with me in my folly—my characteristic folly—of endeavoring to make things better than we find them. The most common objection to reforms is, that we should take things as we find them. I admit, that we should. But, I add, that we should labor to leave them better than we find them.

The armies and navies of the world are nurseries of drunkenness: and drunkenness is the cause, more than all other causes put together, of the insubordinations, troubles, crimes, which abound in armies and navies. To this appalling fact the American Army and Navy constitute no exception. Now, the bill before us proposes no change in this respect. On the contrary, it would have this evil go on, after the old fashion. But the amendment, which I have offered, proposes a radical change in this respect; and a change no less blessed than radical.

All are aware that, in every department and employment, sober men are more to be relied on than drunken men, and are better and happier men. This is as true of sailors and soldiers, as of any other men. How carefully, then, should Government refrain from whatever might encourage intemperate habits in their sailors and soldiers! How steadfastly should we refuse the folly and the sin of putting the cup of woe and ruin and death to their lips!

Would we have our armed vessel carry, wherever she may go, high evidence of the strength and wisdom of America? Then let it be a temperance vessel. Were the world to know, that the American Army and Navy are divorced from rum, the world would be impressed with the strength and wisdom of America, as it never yet has been. Would we make our Army and Navy a far greater terror to our enemies than they otherwise can be? Then let us make them a cold water Army and Navy.

But, sir, we do not wish our Navy to harm the world. We wish it to bless the world. We would rather have it exert a redeeming moral influence than find occasion to wield its physical force. Then, sir, let our ships of war, whatever lands they may visit, be to those lands temperance lecturers. Such temperance lecturers would move the world, and bless the world. Would that our ships of war might undergo this transformation! Little occasion would there then be for the ordinary offices of a navy.

Adopt my amendment, sir, and let it become a law, and five years will not pass away, before liquor rations will cease from the Army, as well as from the Navy: and ten years will not pass away, before both the Army and Navy will be purged of drunkards. For by that time, we shall, in that case, refuse to enlist drunkards either into the Army or Navy. And then, sir, thousands of fathers and mothers will bless God, and bless you, for the precious reform, which you shall this day have begun. They will remember you with gratitude and love. For they will then hope, that if their sons shall enter the Army or Navy, they will, nevertheless, escape drunkenness. And the hope that their children will not be drunkards, is a precious hope to every right-hearted parent—as precious to every good parental heart, as the apprehension, that they will be drunkards, is withering to such a heart.

And should it be so, sir, that our Army and Navy shall be freed from the curse of rum-drinking, our hope will then be quickened, that the whole country will be freed from this curse. Judges and law-makers will be ashamed to drink rum, when our sailors and soldiers have ceased to drink it; and who else will not, then, be ashamed to drink it? If only for the happy reflex influence upon ourselves of our attempts to introduce this reform into the Army and Navy, these attempts would be well paid for.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I would ask the gentleman from New York, if he does not know that liquor is sometimes used as a medicine?

Mr. SMITH, of New York. Certainly; and my amendment very carefully guards against prescribing it as medicine.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. The amendment, as I understand, denies all provision for the use of intoxicating liquors.

[Cries of "Not at all!" "Only as a beverage!" "Read the amendment!"]

The amendment was again read for information.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. Well, now, Mr. Chairman, let us take the amendment as it stands. It proscribes the use of intoxicating liquors as beverages. We know that beverages are provided for the sick. We know that it is very often the case, in instances of extreme debility, that these liquors are prescribed and given as beverages, in order to sustain sinking nature. In the shape of toddy, for instance. [Laughter.]

Now, I am very ready to concede, as all of us will be, that the honorable gentleman from New York has a most expanded benevolence. He really has endeavored, and most steadily endeavored, to violate the laws of God, as I conceive, in making inferior beings the equals of superiors. We can all, therefore, concur in opinion, and I do most heartily, indeed, concur in it, as to the benevolent field in which the gentleman delights to roam. I have no sort of doubt—none in the world, the honorable gentleman is animated by the purest motives and principles that can animate men. But, I ask him if he does not know that a little of these intoxicating liquors gives unwonted and powerful development to the physical energies of man? Does he not know that if he stops short of drunkenness, a man under the influence of generous drink, has double powers?

But, as on this subject, the gentleman has undertaken the work of reform. I ask him if from his experience, he is not perfectly aware, that there are in the world more gluttons than drunkards, and if he does not also know that gluttony is more destructive to animal life and morality than drunkenness itself?

However, I am perfectly willing myself to see the amendment adopted, although, in my opinion, the object is one of very questionable value and utility. Still, as the gentleman from New York, who is a peace man, proposes to make the Army and Navy of the United States terrors to the world, in that view of the subject the question is conclusive. And although I am opposed to interfering with the question, still I am willing to secure the end proposed by creating terrors to evil-doers in the shape of a temperance Army and temperance Navy.

I have made these remarks, Mr. Chairman, without any purpose of seriously engaging in the discussion. I would be very glad, however, to have a vote taken on the amendment of the gentleman from New York, so as that we may see to what extent the House is determined to carry these temperance doctrines.

[Cries of "Question!" "Question!"]

Mr. FLORENCE. I ask the gentleman from New York to modify his amendment in the manner which I am about to propose.

[Loud cries of "Question!" "Question!"]

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is not in order.

Mr. FLORENCE. I do not intend to debate it. I merely ask to modify the proposition of the gentleman from New York.

[Renewed cries of "Question!" "Question!" and "Move an amendment!"]

Mr. FLORENCE. I cannot get the chance of moving an amendment.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I move to amend the amendment by adding thereto the following:

And no officer shall be allowed to use intoxicating liquors except for medicine.

The amendment proposed by the gentleman from New York is simply to abolish the grog rations; but it does not prohibit the officers from carrying wine and liquors among their stores. If the first amendment is to be adopted—and I suppose it is not, judging from the feeling of the committee—it is unfair; because it is just as right and fair that "Jack" should have his grog, as that the officer in his cabin should have his wine. If the one is to be prohibited, it is but justness and fairness that the prohibition should extend to the officers, and prohibit them from filling their cabins with wine and liquors.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I am opposed to the amendment, and hope it will not be adopted.

The question was taken upon the amendment to the amendment; and it was agreed to.

The question recurring upon the amendment, as amended,

Mr. WHEELER called for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. WHEELER and FLORENCE were appointed.

The question was taken; and the tellers reported—ayes 71, noes 50.

So the amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. SOLLERS. I have an amendment which I am aware is a little out of order to offer at the point of the bill to which it applies; but it escaped my attention when the committee were considering that clause of the bill. I desire to offer, at the end of the following clause:

For pay of superintendents, naval constructors, and all the civil establishments at the several navy-yards and stations, $113,350,

this proviso:

Provided, That in settling the accounts of the late navy agent at Memphis, the sum of $2,964 59, already received by him, and passed to his credit upon the books of the Treasury Department, shall not be deducted from his salary as acting purser, provided for by an act making appropriations for the naval service for the year ending June 30, 1853.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman that the committee have passed the clause of the bill to which he alludes, and that it is not in order to go back.

Mr. SOLLERS. I am aware that it is not, but I hope I shall have the unanimous consent of the committee to offer it.

Mr. PHELPS. I rise to a question of order. That is evidently a private claim.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the amendment is not in order.

Mr. SOLLERS. Does the Chair rule the amendment out of order upon the ground that it is a private claim, or because it was not offered in time?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair rules it out of order upon the ground that it is for a claim not authorized by law.

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky. I do not understand that it is a private claim at all. It is to authorize the Auditor of the Treasury to settle the accounts of this navy agent under the law of 1852, without deducting the money which he has already received under that law.

Mr. PHELPS. I rise to a question of order. The Chair has decided this amendment to be out of order, and it is not debatable.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky was making a statement of facts upon which the Chair will judge whether the amendment is in order or not.

Mr. STANTON. The last Navy appropriation bill contained a provision giving the Navy agent at Memphis the pay of a purser. But, in settling his accounts, the Auditor decided that there must be deducted from his salary some commissions which he had received as navy agent. This amendment is simply to authorize the Auditor of the Treasury to settle his accounts without deducting these little commissions which he has already received, and to which he was entitled under the law passed two years ago. That is the effect of the amendment. It does not propose to appropriate a single cent.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Then its effect is to repeal the law passed at the last Congress.

Mr. STANTON. Not at all.

Mr. JONES. Then let us have the law read.

The CHAIRMAN. If the amendment be not to change existing law, the petitioner has his remedy before the proper accounting officers of the Treasury. If it be to change existing law, this is not the proper place, and the Chair decides the amendment to be out of order.

Mr. STANTON. According to my construction it is not a change of the law, but only to make the law effective. The law is as follows:

"And the navy agent at Memphis, for the time during which he has performed or may perform the duties of purser, in addition to his own, shall be allowed and paid the annual salary of a purser on duty at navy-yards of the second class, which shall not be in addition to his commission, but in lieu thereof."

Up to the time this law passed he was receiving commissions as navy agent. He had one per cent. on all moneys disbursed by him. The intention of the law was that he should receive the pay of purser, he doing duty in both offices at the same time. When his commissions were paid him, they were deducted out of what Congress allowed him by this law.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman take an appeal from the decision of the Chair?

Mr. STANTON. Certainly I do.

Mr. FLORENCE. I demand tellers on the appeal.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. STUART, of Michigan, and SOLLERS, were appointed.

The question was taken; and the decision of the Chair was sustained, the tellers having reported—ayes 78, noes 41.

Mr. PHELPS. I am instructed by the Committee of Ways and Means to move to strike out the words "one hundred and sixty" and insert in lieu thereof the words "five hundred and thirty-two" in the following clause:

For repairs of vessels in ordinary, and for wear and tear of vessels in commission, including fuel and purchase of hemp, $2,164,950.

I briefly explained the object of the amendment when I was addressing the committee before. This amendment is rendered necessary in consequence of the increased expenses of the Japan expedition. It proposes to increase the item in the bill $370,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

✓ Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I offer the following amendment:

And the Secretary of the Navy is hereby required to purchase supplies of hemp for the Navy by contract, for such periods, not exceeding five years, as he may deem expedient, giving such contract to the lowest responsible bidder, after due advertisement: Provided, That in all cases preference shall be given to persons proposing to furnish American water-rotted hemp at prices not exceeding those proposed for foreign hemp: And provided also, That the test, as now applied, shall be raised from four thousand pounds to four thousand four hundred pounds upon the rope of one and three-fourth inches in circumference.

It is hardly necessary for me to say anything more in reference to this amendment; but I will simply call the attention of the committee to the fact that it does not propose to purchase American hemp at a higher price than the foreign article can be bought for; but it proposes simply to give the preference to American hemp at the same price, and at the same time it proposes to raise the test from four thousand pounds to four thousand four hundred pounds. In the remarks I made a little while ago, I stated that when American hemp—

Mr. BOCKOCK. I am very sorry to interrupt the gentleman, but I desire to see the same rules of order applied to one gentleman that are applied to another. I raise the question of order, and ask if the amendment he proposes is not to change an existing law in reference to the purchase of hemp.

Mr. STANTON. Every appropriation that has been made, in reference to the purchase of hemp, has been made in an appropriation bill of this kind. This provision has express reference to an appropriation for the purchase of hemp. It is certainly competent for the committee to direct the mode in which hemp shall be purchased. It is by no means out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Tennessee state whether or not, under the existing law, the Secretary of the Navy is required to purchase American hemp?

Mr. STANTON. There is a law already existing, which authorizes him to purchase it in the open market. The only difference is, that I propose that he shall enter into a contract, after due advertisement, with the lowest bidder offering bids for all kinds of hemp, foreign and American; and giving preference to American hemp, at the same prices as foreign. That is perfectly legitimate in connection with this bill. It is not anything in the shape of a proposition to increase the pay of officers, which would not be in order. It is a very different proposition. It is one which connects itself directly with the appropriation for the purchase of hemp; directing the manner in which that appropriation shall be expended.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is inclined to overrule the point of order raised by the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. Bockock], on the ground that the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee merely points out the mode in which the hemp is to be purchased.

Mr. BOCKOCK. Overrules it on the grounds laid down by the gentleman from Tennessee, although the amendment does change the existing law in relation to the mode of purchasing hemp. [Cries of "Order!" "Order!"]

Mr. STANTON. I think that the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Bockock] was hardly respectful to the Chair in stating that this amendment was ruled in order because it came from me. I think it is just such a provision as has been over and over again adopted in Committee of the Whole on bills of this kind. It is such an one as was adopted within a few days past in the Army appropriation bill, changing the law in reference to the particular appropriation. I need refer only to the conditions adopted in relation to the superintendencies of the armories, and to the various other provisions which have been always adopted in bills of this kind.

But the question is here, whether we shall give to the grower of American hemp a fair chance with the grower of foreign hemp, or whether the trade shall be kept in the hands of several gentlemen in Boston, who may have influence over certain gentlemen in the Navy Department. I do not allude to the Secretary of the Navy, and I do not know whether improper influences have been exerted at all, only I have heard it. The question is, I say, whether we shall give the trade to those gentlemen who have influence enough to procure the purchase from them of hundreds of tons of foreign hemp at prices higher than have been ever given for American hemp; or whether, by fairly publishing for proposals, we shall give the American grower of hemp an equal chance with the foreign grower. That is the question submitted by this amendment; and I think no gentleman can find any valid objection to it.

Mr. PHELPS. The amendment, if I understand it correctly, provides that the contract for water-rotted hemp shall be made for five years. [To Mr. STANTON.] Is that the terms of the amendment?

Mr. STANTON. The amendment restricts the contracts to five years, within the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. PHELPS. Yes; for such period, not exceeding five years, as the Secretary of the Navy may deem expedient. In other words, the contract is to be given for five years. That will be the construction given to it.

And now I wish to call the attention of the committee to one fact in connection with this five years' contract. In consequence of the war that is now raging in Europe the price of hemp has been considerably increased. If, therefore, the Secretary of the Navy should advertise at this time for proposals for the supply of hemp for the term of five years, the contract would be taken at the present exorbitant price of hemp, notwithstanding that if peace should be restored within that time the price of hemp would be greatly reduced. I know that it has been for some years past the custom to have the Secretary of the Navy buy water-rotted hemp for the use of the Navy. I approve of that course. Yet with all the inducements that have been held out to the hemp-grower to supply water-rotted hemp for the use of the Navy, but a very small quantity has been ever purchased of that grown in this country. There is but a very small supply. There are but a few growers and manufacturers of water-rotted hemp; and if you make a contract at this time for five years, and make the contract with an American producer, you will give a much higher price for the hemp than that which would be paid by the Secretary of the Navy if he should purchase year by year, as the exigencies of the service might require. It is for this reason that I am opposed to the amendment.

But the object can be accomplished under the present law. If an American proposes to furnish hemp at as cheap a rate as foreign hemp can be procured, the Secretary of the Navy can make the contract with him under the existing law. Under that law he is required to award the contract to the lowest bidder. He is, of course, in making the contract, to take into consideration the strength of the hemp, and state where it is to be delivered. The advertisement is published in the papers throughout the country, and those who are disposed to compete in the furnishing of the Navy with water-rotted hemp have all the advantages under the existing law, that they would have under the proposed amendment. The American grower can come forward and make his bid, knowing that the proposition of the lowest bidder will be accepted.

Mr. SKELTON. I move to strike out "five" and insert "one," so as to make the contracts extend only for one year. I think that contracts from year to year are the best for the country under the circumstances. It is sufficient to test this experiment of growing hemp; and the reasons stated by the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. PHELPS], are sufficient to satisfy us of the propriety of the amendment which I have offered.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I am opposed to this amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey, for the reason that the proviso, as it now stands, gives to the Secretary of the Navy a discretion to contract for one year, or for any period between that and five years. I am willing to trust the Secretary of the Navy, believing he will do what is best and right.

I say now to the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. PHELPS], who comes from a hemp-growing region, that the reason, and the sole reason, why you find the singular fact that not a single pound of American hemp was purchased during the last year from the West, is, that persons manufacturing the water-rotted hemp have no assurance that it will be taken by the Department. But give them the assurance of a fair contract, and they will manufacture it, and in sufficient quantities to supply the wants of the Government. But a few years ago a quantity of water-rotted hemp was sent to Boston, and it was refused and rejected, in express violation of the contract under which it was delivered, when it was a better article than that which was afterwards purchased by the Government.

Mr. PHELPS. Does the gentleman allude to the David Myerle case?

Mr. STANTON. I do.

Mr. PHELPS. I know he came into the State of Missouri to induce the hemp-growers to embark in that business; but he failed in it?

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio. Will the gentleman from Tennessee state by whom the contracts to which he has referred are made?

Mr. STANTON. By the Bureau of Construction and Repairs, I presume.

Mr. FLORENCE. Was it the Myerle hemp?

Mr. STANTON. Yes.

Mr. FLORENCE. The contract was made by a board of navy commissioners.

Mr. STANTON. I think it is fair, and subject to no valid objection, to leave this matter, as to the length of time for which the contract shall be made, to the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy. If the condition of things at the present time is such as to make hemp unusually high, of course the Secretary will contract for a shorter time. He will do what the interest of the Government requires, so as fairly to carry out the objects of this bill.

Mr. BRIDGES. Which is best in quality, Russian or American water-rotted hemp?

Mr. STANTON. I will say to the gentleman, and the records of the Department will show, that specimens of American water-rotted hemp have been furnished, which, upon experiment, underwent a higher test than any foreign hemp.

The amendment to the amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I propose, before the vote is taken upon the amendment offered by my colleague, to amend by striking out from that amendment so much as proposes to advertise the purchase of the lowest bidder. I believe the whole system of low bidding for supplies to the Government is fraught with much evil. If you have officers who are trustworthy at all, it is much better to send them into the market and allow them to purchase such articles as are needed, than to undertake to purchase from the lowest bidder, judging from samples. Let them go into the market when supplies are wanted, and purchase such as are wanted at the market price.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The question then recurred upon the amendment, as amended; and being taken, the amendment was disagreed to.

When the following clauses of the bill were read:

For the purchase of nautical instruments required for the use of the Navy, for repairs of the same, and also of astronomical instruments, $10,500.

For the purchase of nautical books, maps, and charts, and for backing and binding the same, $12,500.

Mr. BOCKOCK said: I have a very simple amendment to offer. It is, that these two items be united in one. It would then read:

For the purchase of nautical instruments required for the use of the Navy, for repairs of the same, and also of astronomical instruments; for the purchase of nautical books, maps, and charts, and for backing and binding the same, $23,000.

I will briefly state the object of the amendment, which has been offered at the request of Lieutenant Maury, who has charge of the National Observatory. A certain amount is appropriated for the purchase of books for that institution, and a certain other amount for the purchase of nautical instruments. Now, sir, at the commencement of the year they cannot tell how many books they will want, how many will have to be bound, and how many backed. They do not know how many instruments they will want. It may turn out that more books and fewer instruments will be wanted than were estimated for; or it may turn out that more instruments and fewer books will be wanted; and without increasing the amount, I propose to lump both clauses into one. Then Lieutenant Maury can expend it for books or instruments, as he may deem proper. It does not increase the amount at all.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. It does not increase the amount at all, but it gives a large discretion to Lieutenant Maury. He can apply the whole $23,000 either for books, or instruments, and then come here and tell us that he has applied it for books, and has bought no instruments which are absolutely necessary, and ask for additional appropriations. Here are his own estimates, and if he finds that $12,000 is not enough for books, and binding, and backing them, let him make his estimate in the deficiency bill for what will be enough. If he finds that $10,500 is not enough for the purchase of instruments, let him send in his deficiency estimate for the deficiency bill.

Mr. BOCK. If the appropriation for books be not enough for the purpose, will he not have to come and ask for the deficiency, when, perhaps, there is an unexpended balance for instruments in his hands? If my amendment be adopted, he will not have to come here; he can take the unexpended balance for instruments and apply it for the purchase of books.

Mr. JONES. We always do best when we make our appropriations specific.

The question was taken; and the amendment was adopted.

Mr. HAVEN. I offer the following amendment, not by direction of the committee; for I take it that the committee is against me:

Insert:

To enable the Secretary of the Navy to pay the salary of Professor James P. Espy, for the current fiscal year, ending 30th June, 1855, $2,000; payment to be made in the same manner and under like control as former appropriations for meteorological observations.

Mr. PHELPS. I rise to a question of order on the amendment.

Mr. HAVEN. Let me state just why I think the amendment is in order. Similar appropriations are to be found in the Navy appropriation bills for the last three or four years. You will find it referred to in the report of the Secretary of the Navy, President's message and accompanying documents, page 302. On page 393 the committee will find a letter from Professor Espy, from which I will read a short extract. After detailing the duties which he has performed in reference to collecting and collating meteorological observations that have been made at the military posts in the country, he uses the following language in his letter to the Secretary of the Navy:

"I have already finished collating the years 1849, 1850, and 1851, with the exception of the third quarter of 1849, and the third quarter of 1851. These quarters I shall finish by the end of the present year, and if you so direct, the report for these three years can then be handed in to Congress. But I respectfully suggest that a report on this subject would be greatly increased in value by even a small increase of time contained in it; and I should be pleased if you would allow the report to be withheld from Congress till its second session, at which time the year 1852 would be embodied in it."

This man has been regularly and continuously employed; and you will find, in the cases referred to, that the Secretary of the Navy has made the recommendations of which I have spoken. You will find, by referring to page 112, that this appropriation of $2,000 a year was not only made for that year, but for the year previous. In the act of the last session, at page 221, you will find that the same appropriation was made, and in the precise way in which it has been made in every particular case. I now offer this amendment, because my friend from Georgia, [Mr. STERNES], who is my colleague upon the Committee of Ways and Means, told me that he had always attended to it, and he intrusted it to my hands now. I wish to perform that trust faithfully, as it is an appropriation which I think ought to be made. It is certainly one which has been adopted as an amendment to this bill for the last half dozen years.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would inquire whether the office was established by law?

Mr. HAVEN. Certainly; and this man is in the employment of the Government. He is now engaged in making a report.

Mr. PHELPS. I differ with the gentleman as to the fact whether the office was established by law. I admit that in two or three naval appropriation bills an amendment was passed making provision for the prosecution of meteorological surveys, but those appropriations were only made from year to year. There is no such officer provided for by law. His term of office expired the 1st of July, and there is no law providing for the continuation or further prosecution of these meteorological surveys. It is for these reasons that I raise the question of order.

Mr. HAVEN. I will not say whether I am right or wrong in reference to this matter; but I do say that for a series of years appropriations have been made from year to year for this purpose, contained precisely in the same words as my amendment. This man is in the public employment—

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. Will the gentleman say whether the office of Mr. Espy, who used to be called the Storm King, is an office created by law?

Mr. HAVEN. The question which my friend from Virginia puts me has reference to the designation of the man that fills the office—Storm King, as he says—rather than to the employment in which he is engaged. I cannot say whether there is such an office as the head of a bureau of meteorological surveys, but I do understand that the law has made provision for this office. I have pointed to the place where provision is made for the office, and for paying the man who has been employed under the law to fill it.

The CHAIRMAN. If the Chair understands the facts of the case, this was a special service for which the appropriation was made; and the service and office expires with the exhaustion of the appropriation. The amendment would not, therefore, be in order under the rule established.

Mr. HAVEN. Allow me to say one thing further. When the Secretary of the Navy called the attention of the House to this matter—

[Loud cries of "Order!" "Order!"]

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman appeal from the decision of the Chair?

Mr. HAVEN. I do; and I desire simply to say that ever since I have been in this House—

Mr. PHELPS. I rise to a question of order. There is an appeal pending; and no debate is in order.

Mr. STANTON. I desire to make a suggestion. This is in continuation of works which have already been commenced. These observations have been carried on for a series of years.

[Cries of "Question!" "Question!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, "Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?"

The question was taken, and the decision of the Chair was not sustained; there being, on a count, only thirty-one in the affirmative.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment submitted by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. HAVEN.]

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I propose to amend the amendment by adding:

Provided, That the hemp agents appointed for Kentucky and Missouri be dispensed with after the passage of this act.

Mr. HAVEN. I hope the gentleman will not mix up hemp with my amendment. It does not hang on.

Mr. STANTON. The hemp agents in those States are now unnecessary. They have not purchased a pound of hemp for the last few years, and will not purchase a pound for the next five years. I will, however, withdraw my amendment.

Mr. WALSH. I move to amend the amendment by adding the following:

Provided, That no portion of the said amount be appropriated for the purchase of intoxicating liquors for beverages.

[Laughter.]

Mr. FLORENCE. I move to amend the clause by striking out the word "three" and inserting the word "four;" so that it shall read:

For the wages of persons employed at the Observatory and Hydrographical Office, viz: one lithographer, one instrument maker, two watchmen, and one porter, $4,160.

There are employed at the National Observatory—

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair rules the amendment out of order, as not being germane to the pending amendment.

Mr. WALSH. I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The question being, "Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?" it was put, and decided in the affirmative.

So the decision of the Chair was sustained.

Mr. HAVEN. I rise to a question of order. We have passed from that clause of the bill and gone to another.

Mr. FLORENCE. Then I will put my amendment in another shape. I move to amend by adding:

And to increase the pay of the lithographer and two watchmen employed at the National Observatory, $1,000.

Mr. HAVEN. I propose, if the gentleman will allow me, to say that his amendment does not trouble my amendment, and perhaps it will be better to take the question upon my amendment first, and then offer his amendment.

Mr. FLORENCE. Then we will have passed from the clause. But I have no objection to do so, if my amendment will come in immediately after the gentleman's amendment is voted on. I will now briefly state the reason why I offer the amendment.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Is that amendment in order. I submit that it is an expenditure not authorized by law? I make that point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the point of order is well taken, and he therefore decides the amendment to be out of order.

Mr. FLORENCE. Why, Mr. Chairman, is it not in order to strike out "$3,000" and insert "$4,000?" That is my motion, and I intended to have stated that the object was to increase the compensation of these officers.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the amendment is not in order.

Mr. FLORENCE. Is it not in order to offer an amendment to enable the Secretary of the Navy to increase the compensation of certain officers of the Navy?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair decides that the amendment contains an appropriation not authorized by existing law, and is, therefore, not in order.

Mr. FLORENCE. I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The question "Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?" was taken, and the decision of the Chair was sustained.

Mr. STUART, of Michigan. I move to amend the amendment of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. HAVEN,] by increasing the appropriation one dollar.

I have moved the amendment merely for the purpose of enabling me to ask one or two questions, to which I ask the attention of the gentleman from New York. There is now an officer employed by the Smithsonian Institution whose duty it is to receive and to make all these meteorological calculations, and to report upon them. Reports are sent from all the different military stations in the country to him. He is employed at present in getting out a work upon this subject at the expense of the Smithsonian Institution. What I want to know is, whether these are the same services upon which Professor Espy is employed?

Mr. HAVEN. I can only answer the gentleman by reference to the documents. I know nothing of the computations of the Smithsonian Institution; but I doubt not the gentleman is correct in what he states.

Here is Professor Espy's letter:

IRVING HOTEL, WASHINGTON, }
September 8, 1853.

Sir: In answer to your letter of the 6th instant, requesting me to "furnish you a report of my labors, and their results, connected with meteorological observations conducted by me, under the direction of the Navy Department, during the past year," I have to report progress as follows:

During the year, as in several former years, I have had access to all the meteorological journals kept at the various military posts by order of the surgeon general, and to all the journals procured by the Smithsonian Institution, which are very numerous, and embrace a very wide extent of territory, which, united to the journals of my own correspondents, furnish the means, such as the world never possessed before, of generalizing the phenomena of storms, and educating laws which apply to their origin, the direction and velocity of their motion, in the United States; the direction and violence of the wind in different parts of the storm at the same time; the state of the barometer in the storm and around its borders; the causes which produce these phenomena; and the means of predicting, in all great storms of dangerous violence, their approach in time to prepare for them. How much of all this I have already done, and how much remains to be done, and with what prospect of success, you will judge by examining my previous reports to the Department.

The plan which I adopted in those reports, in collating the meteorological journals, was, to exhibit to the eye, on skeleton maps of the United States, the various phenomena of the winds and rains and barometric fluctuations, by appropriate symbols, so that, by a glance, it might be seen where a storm was raging, how far it extended, in what direction, and with what violence the wind blew in its borders, and beyond; how the barometer stood within and beyond its borders; and how far, and in what direction, the center of the storm had moved by the next day at the same hour. This plan I have not seen proper to change in the report now in progress for the Department.

I have already finished collating the years 1849, 1850, and 1851, with the exception of the third quarter of 1849, and the third quarter of 1851. These quarters I shall finish by the end of the present year; and, if you so direct, the report for these three years can then be handed in to Congress. But I respectfully suggest that a report on this subject would be greatly increased in value by even a small increase of time contained in it; and I should be pleased if you would allow the report to be withheld from Congress till its second session, at which time the year 1851 would be embodied in it.

Whatever you direct me to do on this, shall be done to the best of my ability.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,
JAMES P. ESPY.

Hon. J. C. DOBBS.

These calculations are of very great service to science. They are the handmaid to the great business in which Lieutenant Maury is engaged. It seems that Professor Espy has access to the journals kept at the various military stations in the country, to all the journals received by the Smithsonian Institution, and besides that, has a very large correspondence of his own from which he deduces his facts, and reports to the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. STUART, by unanimous consent, withdrew his amendment to the amendment.

Mr. HAVEN's amendment was then agreed to.

Mr. PHELPS. I am instructed by the Committee of Ways and Means to move to strike from the enumeration in the bill of the purposes for which contingent expenses may accrue, the words "furniture for Government houses."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PHELPS. I am instructed by the Committee of Ways and Means to move to increase the appropriation for contingent expenses from $600,500 to $706,860. That was the estimate of the Secretary of the Navy, and, on re-examination, the Committee of Ways and Means agreed to restore it. We believe it to be proper and right.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PENNINGTON. I move to insert the following:

To enable the Secretary of the Navy to test any improvements in steam boilers, or any other steam machinery in reference to the construction of steamers for the Navy of the United States, as in his opinion may be calculated to benefit the public service, $10,000.

Mr. PHELPS. I rise to a question of order. This is an appropriation not authorized by existing law.

Mr. PENNINGTON. There has been an appropriation made for the construction of six naval steamers for the use of the United States Navy. The object of the amendment is to enable the Secretary of the Navy to test such improvements in steamship machinery as may be submitted to him by machinists, artisans, and others. It does seem to me to be a very proper amendment to this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. In the opinion of the Chair it would be a pertinent amendment to the bill authorizing the construction of these steamships, but not to this bill.

Mr. PENNINGTON. The Secretary of the Navy thinks the amendment a highly desirable one. I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The question was taken; and the decision of the Chair was overruled, and the amendment decided to be in order.

The amendment was then agreed to.

The following clause was then read:

For the erection and repair of buildings, for the improvement and preservation of the grounds, and for contingencies at the Naval Academy at Annapolis, Maryland, $39,678: Provided, That no part of this sum shall be expended until a contract, with security, to be approved by the Secretary of the Navy, be entered into for the completion of a workshop, at a sum not exceeding $5,000, and herein provided for.

Mr. SOLLERS. I move to strike out the proviso. My impression is, that the works ought to go on as rapidly as possible; but if the proviso be retained the work will be retarded, and hundreds of workmen, my constituents, will be thrown out of employment. I have no objection to a workshop being erected, at the expense of the Government; but I object to this proviso, as you will perceive, from the reading of it, that all the works in process of erection will be obstructed until this workshop is completed. That is doing manifest injury to the service.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The gentleman is mistaken. It is for the Naval School at Annapolis. This proviso relates to the workshop at the Naval School, and not at the navy-yard.

Mr. SOLLERS. I know it is for the Naval School at Annapolis. I think I ought to know, as Annapolis is in my district.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. Will the gentleman from Maryland allow me to call his attention to the fact that the proviso only requires that a contract shall be made, and not that a workshop shall be erected?

Mr. SOLLERS. I equally object to that. It will be some time before the contract can be completed. Now, there are works in progress which will be obviously and necessarily delayed until a contract is entered into by the Secretary of the Navy with some contractors who choose to undertake the work. I desire that those works shall go on; and if they are to go on, and if it is necessary that they should be completed, you have no right, nor is it your duty, to offer any obstruction to their completion. I can see no reason in the world why the works at present commenced at the Naval School at Annapolis should be obstructed until this contract is completed. At what time is the contract to be completed? Is it limited to twelve months, two years, or five years?

Mr. PHELPS. I would suggest to the gentleman from Maryland an amendment, which I think will accomplish the object he has in view, and that is: after the words "shall be expended," the words "for a workshop."

Mr. SOLLERS. I withdraw my motion to strike out, and offer that amendment; and I also move to amend by striking out the words "of a workshop," in the latter part of the clause, and inserting in lieu thereof the words "of the same."

The clause as it would stand, if amended, was then read, as follows:

For the erection and repair of buildings, for the improvement and preservation of the grounds, and for contingencies at the Naval Academy at Annapolis, Maryland, $39,678: Provided, That no part of this sum shall be expended for a workshop until a contract with security, to be approved by the Secretary of the Navy, be entered into for the completion of the same, at a sum not exceeding $5,000, and herein provided for.

The amendments were then agreed to.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I offer this amendment, to come in at the end of the clause just read:

For the purchase of Barlow's planetarium for the use of the Naval Academy at Annapolis, $3,000.

I offer the amendment under the direction of the Committee of Ways and Means. It will be recollected by the committee, that a similar provision was passed in the Army bill for the Military Academy at West Point. This instrument is much more important for a naval school than it is for a military one.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAVEN. Mr. Chairman, if my proposition should meet with the approbation of my friend from Missouri, [Mr. PHELPS,] who has charge of this bill, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. JONES, of Tennessee, having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, the Chairman of the committee reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the Union generally, particularly House bill No. 97, and had come to no conclusion thereon.

Mr. BRIDGES moved that the House adjourn. The motion was agreed to.

The House thereupon (at twenty-five minutes past three o'clock, p. m.) adjourned till to-morrow at eleven o'clock, a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, July 26, 1854.

The House met at eleven o'clock, a. m. Prayer by Rev. HENRY SLICER.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

The SPEAKER appointed the following gentlemen as a committee of conference, on the part of the House, to meet a like committee of the Senate on the disagreeing votes on the amendments of the Senate to the Indian appropriation bill: Messrs. HOUTSON, HAVEN, and GROW.

The SPEAKER. The business first in order is the motion submitted by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. JONES,] to discharge the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads from the further consideration of certain memorials sent to that committee, with a view to send the said memorials to the Committee on Public Lands, and on that proposition the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. LETCHER] has the floor.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. Will my friend from Virginia give way to me for one moment?

Mr. LETCHER. I will for a moment.

CLERK TO INVESTIGATING COMMITTEE.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to allow the special committee, appointed day before yesterday, a clerk for a few days, at the usual rate of compensation.

Mr. WALSH. I object.

Mr. WASHBURNE. It is impossible for the committee to get along without a clerk. I move to suspend the rules, to enable me to introduce a resolution to that effect.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Virginia yield the floor for that purpose?

Mr. LETCHER. I merely yielded the floor to hear the proposition of the gentleman from Illinois, and if there was no objection to it, to allow him to introduce it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will only remark, that if the gentleman from Virginia yields the floor for the purpose of allowing the gentleman from Illinois to submit the motion, he loses the floor altogether.

Mr. WASHBURNE. Is there any objection to my proposition?

The SPEAKER. A half dozen gentlemen object, on different sides of the House.

Mr. LETCHER. Then I cannot yield the floor.

Mr. PHELPS. I hope the gentleman from Virginia will yield me the floor for a moment to make a suggestion to the House.

Mr. LETCHER. I yield.

Mr. PHELPS. I wish to say a word in relation to the business to be transacted to-day. I desire, as soon as I can get the floor for that purpose, to submit a motion that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, for the purpose of taking up and proceeding with the consideration of the Navy appropriation bill. It is important that the Senate should have it soon, in order to commence their deliberations upon it; and I believe that in the course of two hours, if the House will go into committee, we can dispose of that bill. I am very desirous of taking it up before motions are entertained to suspend the rules, for the purpose of putting bills upon their passage. I hope the gentleman from Virginia will allow me to submit the motion at this moment.

[Cries of "No!" "No!"]

Mr. PHELPS. Will the gentleman from Virginia yield?

REPEAL OF THE MINNESOTA RAILROAD BILL.

Mr. LETCHER. I cannot yield for that purpose. I gave notice some two or three days ago that I should offer a bill, at the first convenient opportunity, to repeal an act to aid the Territory of Minnesota in the construction of a railroad. I take this opportunity to offer that bill; and if it is objected to, I shall move to suspend the rules to enable me to introduce it.

Several Members objected.

Mr. LETCHER. Then I move to suspend the rules.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I wish to inquire of the gentleman from Virginia whether he is willing to have the bill referred to the select committee which was appointed a day or two since?

Mr. LETCHER. I do not see that there is any necessity for its going there.

Mr. PHELPS. I now ask the gentleman from Virginia to withdraw his motion at this time, and allow me to submit a motion that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. I make the request for this reason: if the question which the gentleman from Virginia brings forward at this time shall be taken up, I fear that its discussion will consume a good part of the day; and in such case the Navy bill will go over until another day.

Mr. LETCHER. I cannot withdraw it.

Mr. PENNINGTON. I rise to a point of order. It is this: the gentleman from Virginia, leaving the floor for a specific purpose, has no right to occupy the floor for the purpose of submitting a motion to suspend the rules for another purpose.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia had the floor regularly, and he chose to abandon his first purpose, and submit a motion which any other gentleman could have done, having obtained the floor regularly and in order.

Mr. PENNINGTON. But he has yielded the floor for another purpose.

The SPEAKER. He has not yet yielded the floor at all.

Mr. PENNINGTON. Will the gentleman be entitled to the floor after this matter is disposed of?

The SPEAKER. He will not. He will have no more right to it than any other member, because he has abandoned it.

Mr. OLDS. I rise to a question of order; as to the order of business. The same morning that the gentleman from New York [Mr. JONES] submitted a motion to discharge the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads from the further consideration of the memorial, by the unanimous consent of the House after that motion was submitted, the post route bill was introduced, and it seems to me, under the decision of the Chair, made last session, it takes precedence of all other matters.

Mr. TWEED. I object to the consideration of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not recollect the history of the matter; but if that given by the gentleman from Ohio be correct, the post route bill is first in order.

Mr. OLDS. I am willing, however, that it should go over until to-morrow morning.

The SPEAKER. It may go over by unanimous consent.

Mr. WALSH. I object.

The SPEAKER. Then the bill must be taken up and read. The Chair is, however, informed that the bill is in the hands of the printers, or the engrossing clerks, and not in the House. It will be for the House to say what they will do under the circumstances.

Mr. OLDS. I move that the further consideration of the bill be postponed until to-morrow morning.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. LETCHER. I now call up my motion to suspend the rules, to introduce the bill I have indicated.

The bill was read by its title, as follows:

An act to repeal "An act to aid the Territory of Minnesota in the construction of a railroad therein."

The bill was then read in extenso.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I demand the yeas and nays upon the motion to suspend the rules.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken upon Mr. LETCHER's motion; and there were—yeas 100, nays 60; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Aiken, Appleton, Ashe, Barksdale, Bennett, Benson, Boccock, Bridges, Bugg, Carpenter, Caskie, Chastain, Churchwell, Colquitt, Cox, Craig, Crocker, Curtis, Dawson, Dick, Dickinson, Dowdell, Dunbar, Edmundson, Thomas D. Eliot, John M. Elliott, Ewing, Faulkner, Fenton, Flagler, Franklin, Fuller, Giddings, Goode, Goodrich, Grow, Aaron Harlan, Harrison, Haven, Hibbard, Hlester, Hill, Howe, Hunt, Daniel T. Jones, George W. Jones, Roland Jones, Kerr, Kittredge, Knox, Kurtz, Lamb, Letcher, Lilly, McCulloch, McMullin, McNair, McQueen, Matteson, Maurice, Millson, Morgan, Andrew Oliver, Parker, Peck, Peckham, Bishop Perkins, John Perkins, Phelps, Phillips, Powell, Preston, Puryear, Reese, David Ritchie, Rogers, Ruffin, Russell, Shaw, Shower, Simmons, Skelton, William Smith, George W. Smyth, Sollers, Stratton, Andrew Stuart, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Prout, Vail, Vansant, Wade, Walley, Walsh, Tappan Wentworth, Wheeler, Witte, Daniel B. Wright, and Hendrick B. Wright—100.

NAYS—Messrs. James C. Allen, Willis Allen, David J. Bailey, Barry, Bliss, Breckinridge, Campbell, Caruthers, Chandler, Clark, Clingman, Cobb, Cook, Corwin, John G. Davis, Thomas Davis, Disney, Eastman, Eddy, Ederton, English, Farley, Green, Greenwood, Andrew J. Harlan, Sampson W. Harris, Wiley P. Harris, Hendricks, Henn, Houston, Hughes, Johnson, Lindsley, Macy, Maxwell, Mayall, John G. Miller, Smith Miller, Nichols, Noble, Olds, Mordecai Oliver, Orr, Pack, Pennington, Pringle, Robius, Sabin, Sapp, Seward, Shaanon, Frederick P. Stanton, Hester L. Stevens, David Stuart, John L. Taylor, Tweed, Ellihu B. Washburne, Wells, John Wentworth, and Yates—60.

So (two thirds not voting in favor thereof) the rules were not suspended.

NAVY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PHELPS. I now move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, with a view of taking up the Navy appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The rules were accordingly suspended, and the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. FULLER in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the bill of the House (No. 97) "making appropriations for the naval service for the year ending the 30th June, 1855."

Mr. PHELPS. I have an amendment which I am instructed by the Committee of Ways and Means to offer.

It is as follows:

For construction, extension, and completion of the following objects, and for contingent expenses at the several navy-yards:

Portsmouth, New Hampshire.—For quay wall connecting dock basin; completing engine-house and machinery; tools for machinists and smiths; launchery and hauling up ways; cisterns for officers' quarters; extending ship-house No. 4; extension of ship-house and launchery; and repairs of all kinds, $63,550.

Mr. Chairman, I desire the ear of the committee for one moment, in which I shall briefly explain the amendments I have been instructed by the Committee of Ways and Means to offer. I remarked yesterday that the Committee of Ways and Means delayed reporting the appropriations for the improvement of the navy-yards in the Navy appropriation bill, in order that the estimates might be submitted to the Committee on Naval Affairs. The amendment has been adopted by the Committee of Ways and Means, and also meets with the concurrence of the Committee on Naval Affairs. The appropriation proposed is a reduction on the estimates which have been submitted to us.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PHELPS. I am instructed by the Committee of Ways and Means to move the following amendment:

Insert the following:

Boston, Massachusetts.—For machine shop, smithery, foundry, and forge shop, boiler-house and chimney; new steam engine for dry-dock; extension of ship-house and slip, and repairs of all kinds, $166,750.

Mr. Chairman, the estimates submitted by the Department amounted to $265,000. Some of the expenses at these navy-yards, and particularly the one at Boston, are rendered necessary in consequence of the construction of the new steam frigates provided for during this session.

Mr. HOUSTON. I would ask the gentleman from Missouri a question, and the answer will probably recommend all the amendments he has to offer in regard to these navy-yards to the favorable consideration of the committee without any further explanation. Are not the amendments which the gentleman is now offering in relation to the navy-yards such as have been approved of, not only by the Committee of Ways and Means, but by the Committee on Naval Affairs?

Mr. PHELPS. I have already stated that fact. They are all recommended by both committees.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

The question was then taken on the following amendments presented by Mr. PHELPS, by instruction of the Committee of Ways and Means, and they were severally adopted:

New York.—Towards foundry and boiler-shop; completing steam saw-mill; continuation of quay wall; dredging channels; lightning conductors; water pipes; iron railing on wall along Navy street; extension of ship-house and slip; saw-mill machinery; launchingslip; balance due city of Brooklyn for lien on amount of assessments and repairs of all kinds, $71,615. Provided, That so much of the first section of the act making appropriations for the naval service for the year ending the 30th of June, 1854, approved 3d of March, 1853, as empowers and directs the Secretary of the Navy to sell and convey to any purchaser all that part of the navy-yard which lies in Brooklyn, between the west side of Vanderbilt avenue and the hospital grounds, containing about twenty-six and a half acres, including Vanderbilt and Clinton avenue, be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.—For furnace for heating mast-booms; steam stove for boat shed; raising old steam box house; completing wharf No. 4; raising engine house; extension of ship-house and slip; and repairs of all kinds, $57,726.

Washington, District of Columbia.—For completion of saw-mill; completion of ordnance building; completion of marine railway; extending boiler-shop; converting old ordnance shop into machine shop; quay wall; removing shears; extension of ship-house and slip; filling in around foundry and laboratory; dredging channel; machinery; steam hammer and slanting machine, and repairs of all kinds, $23,067.

Norfolk, Virginia.—For brick saw sheds; completing storehouse No. 14; shed and machinery for saw mill; setting up engine boilers and machinery; reservoir; commencing foundry and machinery for the same; extension of ship-house and slip, and repairs of all kinds, $152,281.

Pensacola, Florida.—For continuation of permanent wharf; continuation of deep basin; raising walls of dock basin; engine and blast pipes; for smiths' and machine shops, and repairs of all kinds, $143,500.

Memphis, Tennessee.—For excavation and embankment, smiths' shop; storehouse, and repairs of all kinds, $13,400.

Sackett's Harbor, New York.—For raising end of ship-house; building pier; leveling, grading, and repairs of all kinds, $4,500.

San Francisco, California.—For blacksmiths' shop; carpenters' shop; storehouse, and wharf, $200,000.

Mr. PHELPS. I am instructed by the Committee of Ways and Means to offer the following amendment, to come in at the end of the bill:

For the reappropriation of the following sum carried to the surplus fund under the provisions of the tenth section of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the civil and diplomatic expenses of the Government for the year ending the 30th of June, 1853, and for other purposes," approved the 31st August, 1850, to be applied to the payment of all the expenses incurred prior to the first day of July, 1852, for carrying into effect the provisions of the act providing for the prosecution of the war between the United States and the Republic of Mexico, $27,156 50.

I merely desire to state that this amendment provides for the reappropriation of the fund which has been carried to the surplus fund. There were some incidental expenses incurred in carrying into effect the provisions of the act providing for the prosecution of the war, and which have not been provided for; and, in consequence of the unexpended balance having been carried to the surplus fund, there is no money to pay them. The appropriation is recommended by the Secretary of the Navy and by the Secretary of the Treasury. I therefore offer the amendment, and hope the committee will adopt it.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SEWARD. I offer the following amendment:

For establishing a navy-yard and depot at Brunswick, Georgia, $50,000.

Mr. PHELPS. I rise to a question of order. The amendment submitted by the gentleman from Georgia is not for the purpose of carrying on any work authorized by an existing law. There is no navy-yard or depot now at the point designated.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that, under the 81st rule, such an amendment would not be in order. The Clerk will read that rule.

The 81st rule was read, as follows:

"No appropriation shall be reported in such general appropriation bills, or be in order as an amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously authorized by law, unless in continuation of appropriations for such public works and objects as are already in progress, and for the contingencies for carrying on the several departments of the Government."

Mr. SEWARD. Well, my amendment comes within the provisions of the last clause of that rule. It is for a contingency for carrying on one of the departments of the Government.

The CHAIRMAN. Has there been an appropriation made for it by law?

Mr. SEWARD. Not at all; nor is it necessary under the last clause of the rule just read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair construes the rule differently.

Mr. SEWARD. Then I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The question was taken; and the decision of the chair was sustained.

Mr. BOCKOCK. I move the following amendment:

And be it further enacted, That whenever any seaman on board of a vessel of war in service shall violate the laws or the rules and regulations for the better government of the Navy, he shall be liable to forfeit such portion of his pay as shall be adjudged proper by a commission composed of the officer in command, and the two officers next in rank; and all pay thus forfeited on board of any ship, shall constitute a merit fund, to be distributed at the consummation of the cruise by the commission aforesaid, among the crew who have been faithful in the discharge of their duty, a record of which proceedings shall be kept and returned to the Navy Department.

Mr. SEWARD. I rise to a question of order. The amendment is not in order under the same rule by which my amendment was declared out of order.

Mr. BOCKOCK. The amendment does not propose to appropriate money, but only specifies how the money appropriated in the bill shall be disbursed. It is as much in order as was the amendment to cut off the spirit rations, for that only determined how the money previously appropriated should be disposed of.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair, reluctantly, sustains the question of order, and rules the amendment out of order upon the ground that an amendment for the government, regulation, and discipline of the Navy is not germane to a bill making appropriations for the support of the Navy.

Mr. BOCKOCK. What is the difference between the amendment, in principle, and that offered by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. SMITH?]

Mr. SOLLERS. I hold in my hand an amendment which I shall offer as an additional section to the bill. I should not offer it, as there are some doubts about its being in order, but for the fact that when the House, as they will recollect, were engaged upon the Army appropriation bill, a provision of exactly the same sort, and embracing the same principle, as that which I hold in my hand, was offered by the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. STANTON,] and it was ruled by the House to be in order. I refer to the amendment offered to the Army bill, to change the superintendency of the armories at Springfield and Harper's Ferry from a military to a civil one. But for that decision I should not offer the amendment now.

The amendment was read, as follows:

And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of the Navy shall cause to be enlisted in the Navy of the United States as seamen, no one who is not a native-born American citizen, and the commissioned and non-commissioned officers of the Navy shall hereafter be native-born American citizens, and that before either officers or seamen shall be permitted to serve in the Navy, competent proof shall be adduced by them that they are native-born Americans.

Mr. PHELPS. I rise to a question of order. The amendment of the gentleman from Maryland is not in order, because it is an attempt to regulate and govern the Navy, while this is a bill only to appropriate money for its support.

Mr. SOLLERS. I have pointed out the precedent upon which I have offered the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the point of order well taken, and rules the amendment out of order.

Mr. SOLLERS. Then I have another thing to say, and that is, I give notice now that when the bills come up for the reorganization of the Navy and Army, I shall steadily and uniformly adhere to the principle contained in that amendment, and I shall offer it as an amendment to those bills, so that no one not a native American citizen, shall hereafter serve either as officer, seaman, or soldier in either of these branches of the public service.

Mr. PHELPS. I now move that the committee rise, and report the bill to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the Chairman of the committee reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had the Union generally under consideration, and particularly House bill (No. 97) making appropriations for the support of the Navy, and had directed him to report the same to the House, with sundry amendments thereto.

Mr. PHELPS. I move the previous question upon the engrossment of the amendments.

Mr. SEWARD. I move to postpone the further consideration of the bill until the second Tuesday in December next.

The SPEAKER. The motion is not in order, for the reason that the previous question is demanded.

Mr. SEWARD. I understand the rule only to apply where the previous question has been ordered by the House. In the present case the previous question has only been demanded; and, therefore, I submit that the motion is in order.

The SPEAKER. The rule is very clear upon that point. No motion to amend or to postpone can be made after the previous question has been demanded, until the House has determined whether the main question shall be ordered.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. And I would submit, further, that if the motion had been already made, the ordering of the main question would cut it off.

The previous question was then seconded; and the main question ordered to be put.

Mr. SEWARD. Is my motion in order?

The SPEAKER. It is not. The main question having been ordered to be now put, no motion is in order except to adjourn, and to lay the bill on the table. The House must be brought to a direct vote first upon the pending amendments to the bill, and then upon the bill itself. If the motion to postpone had been made in order, it would be cut off by the ordering of the main question.

Mr. SEWARD. I move then that the bill do lie upon the table.

The motion was not agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the amendments reported from the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union were then read over, and the question being taken in gross, upon such a separate vote was not demanded on, they were agreed to.

Mr. PHELPS moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendments were agreed to, and to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table; which latter motion was agreed to.

The first amendment (on which a separate vote had been demanded by Mr. SEWARD) was to strike out, after the word "Navy," in the following clause:

"For pay of commission, warrant, and petty officers, and seamen, including the engineer corps of the navy, $2,992,643,"

—the words "two million nine hundred and ninety-two," and insert in lieu thereof, "three million three hundred and sixty-seven."

The amendment was agreed to.

The second amendment (upon which a separate vote had been demanded by Mr. SEWARD) was to add at the end of the following clause:

"For provisions for commission, warrant, and petty officers, and seamen, including engineers and marines attached to vessels for sea service, $686,200,"

—this proviso:

But no intoxicating liquors shall be provided for a beverage, and no officer shall be allowed to use intoxicating liquors except for medicine.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee, demanded the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 84, nays 65; as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Aiken, Willis Allen, Appleton, Ball, Bennett, Benson, Brooks, Campbell, Carpenter, Chamberlain, Clark, Cook, Corwin, Crocker, Curtis, Thomas Davis, Dick, Dickinson, Dunham, Eastman, Eddy, Edgerton, Edmonds, Thomas D. Eliot, Ellison, Everhart, Fenton, Florence, Giddings, Goodrich, Greenwood, Aaron Harlan, Harrison, Hendricks, Hens, Hiestler, Howe, Hughes, Johnson, Daniel T. Jones, Kittredge, Knox, McCulloch, Macey, Matteson, Maurice, Mayall, Morgan, Murray, Norton, Andrew Oliver, Parker, Peck, Peckham, Pennington, Pratt, Pringle, David Ritchie, Russell, Sabin, Sapp, Shaw, er, Simmons, Singleton, Skelton, Gerrit Smith, William R. Smith, Sollers, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Stratton, Andrew Stuart, Thurston, Trout, Upham, Wade, Walley, Elihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, Wells, John Wentworth, Tappan Wentworth, Wheeler, and Yates—84.

NAYS.—Messrs. Abercrombie, David J. Bailey, Barksdale, Benton, Bockock, Boyce, Bugg, Caruthers, Caskey, Chastain, Chrisman, Clingman, Cobb, Colquitt, Cox, Craige, Dowdell, Dunbar, Edmundson, John M. Elliott, Ewing, Farley, Franklin, Sampson W. Harris, Wiley P. Harris, Hibbard, Hill, Hunt, George W. Jones, Roland Jones, Keitt, Kerr, Kurtz, Lamb, Letcher, McDougall, McMullin, McNair, McQueen, Maxwell, Smith Miller, Millson, Morrison, Noble, Orr, Phelps, Phillips, Powell, Preston, Robbins, Ruffin, Seward, Shannon, George W. Smyth, Hesor L. Stevens, David Stuart, John L. Taylor, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Tweed, Vail, Walsh, Westbrook, Witte, Hendrick B. Wright, and Zolliecoffer—65.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I think it likely that the amendment, as it now stands, may be a little doubtful. I hope, by unanimous consent, that it may be amended so as to confine its operation on board of the national vessels.

Mr. STUART, of Michigan. I object.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Better, by unanimous consent, strike it all out.

Mr. GIDDINGS moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to, and to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

Mr. BOCKOCK demanded the yeas and nays.

Mr. CLINGMAN demanded tellers on the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. VAIL and FLORENCE were appointed.

The House was then divided, and the tellers reported—yeas thirty-nine.

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. KEITT. I would inquire whether that amendment precludes an officer from drinking on board of a vessel, or any where else?

The question was then taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 79, nays 81; as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Aiken, Willis Allen, Appleton, Ball, Belcher, Bennett, Benson, Campbell, Carpenter, Chamberlain, Cook, Corwin, Crocker, Gullion, Curtis, Thomas Davis, Dick, Dickinson, Dunham, Eastman, Eddy, Edmonds, Thomas D. Eliot, Everhart, Fenton, Flagler, Florence, Giddings, Goodrich, Greenwood, Aaron Harlan, Andrew J. Harlan, Harrison, Hendricks, Hens, Hiestler, Johnson, Daniel T. Jones, Kittredge, Knox, McCulloch, Macey, Matteson, Maurice, Mayall, Morgan, Murray, Norton, Andrew Oliver, Parker, Peck, Peckham, Pratt, Pringle, Russell, Sabin, Sapp, Shaw, Simmons, Singleton, Skelton, Gerrit Smith, William R. Smith, Sollers, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Stratton, Andrew Stuart, Thurston, Trout, Upham, Wade, Walley, Israel Washburn, Wells, John Wentworth, Tappan Wentworth, Wheeler, and Yates—79.

NAYS.—Messrs. Abercrombie, James C. Allen, Ashe, David J. Bailey, Barksdale, Benton, Bockock, Boyce, Bridges, Brooks, Bugg, Caruthers, Caskey, Chastain, Chrisman, Clark, Clingman, Cobb, Colquitt, Cox, Craige, Dawson, Disney, Dowdell, Dunbar, Edgerton, Edmundson, John M. Elliott, Ewing, Farley, Faulkner, Franklin, Fuller, Green, Sampson W. Harris, Wiley P. Harris, Hibbard, Hill, Hughes, Hunt, Ingersoll, George W. Jones, Roland Jones, Keitt, Kerr, Kurtz, Lamb, Letcher, McMullin, McNair, McQueen, Maxwell, Smith Miller, Millson, Morrison, Nichols, Noble, Mordecai Oliver, Orr, Pennington, John Perkins, Phelps, Powell, Preston, Reese, David Ritchie, Robbins, Ruffin, Seward, Shaw, William Smith, David Stuart, John L. Taylor, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Tweed, Vail, Walsh, Westbrook, Witte, Daniel B. Wright, and Hendrick B. Wright—81.

So the House refused to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The question then recurred upon reconsidering the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STUART, of Michigan, demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 83, nays 76; as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Abercrombie, James C. Allen, Ashe, David J. Bailey, Thomas H. Bayly, Barksdale, Bennett, Bockock, Boyce, Bridges, Bugg, Caruthers, Caskey, Chastain, Clark, Clingman, Cobb, Colquitt, Dawson, Disney, Dowdell, Dunbar, Edgerton, Edmundson, John M. Elliott, Ewing, Farley, Faulkner, Franklin, Fuller, Goode, Green, Sampson W. Harris, Wiley P. Harris, Hibbard, Hunt, Ingersoll, George W. Jones, Roland Jones, Keitt, Kerr, Kurtz, Lamb, Latham, Letcher, Lindley, Macdonald, McMullin, McNair, McQueen, Maxwell, Smith Miller, Millson, Nichols, Noble, Mordecai Oliver, Orr, Pennington, John Perkins, Phelps, Powell, Preston, Reese, Robbins, Ruffin, Seward, Shannon, Shaw, George W. Smyth, Straub, David Stuart, John L. Taylor, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Tweed, Vail, Vansant, Walbridge, Walsh, Westbrook, Witte, Daniel B. Wright, Hendrick B. Wright, and Zolliecoffer—83.

NAYS.—Messrs. Aiken, Appleton, Ball, Banks, Belcher, Benson, Benton, Brooks, Carpenter, Chamberlain, Cook, Corwin, Crocker, Cullum, Curtis, Thomas Davis, Dick, Dickinson, Dunham, Eastman, Eddy, Edmonds, Thomas

D. Eliot, Ellison, Everhart, Fenton, Flagler, Florence, Giddings, Goodrich, Aaron Harlan, Andrew J. Harlan, Hendricks, Henn, Hiestler, Howe, Johnson, Macy, T. Jones, Kittredge, Knox, Lindsley, McCulloch, Macy, Materson, Maurice, Mayall, Morgan, Murray, Andrew Oliver, Parker, Peck, Peckham, Pringle, David Ritchie, Russell, Sapp, Simmons, Skelton, Gerrit Smith, William R. Smith, Sollers, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Stratton, Andrew Stuart, Thurston, Trout, Upham, Wade, Walley, Ellihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, John Wentworth, Tappan Wentworth, Wheeler, and Yates—76.

So the motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The question then recurred upon the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. Can the question be divided?

The SPEAKER. It cannot; it must be taken as a whole.

Mr. INGERSOLL. Is an amendment to the amendment now in order?

The SPEAKER. It is not, as the previous question is pending.

Mr. TAYLOR. Will it be in order to add the words, "while engaged in the public service?"

The SPEAKER. No amendment is in order.

Mr. MAURICE called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken; and there were yeas 80, nays 80; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Aiken, Willis Allen, Appleton, Ball, Banks, Belcher, Bennett, Benson, Brooks, Carpenter, Chamberlain, Corwin, Crocker, Cullom, Curtis, Thomas Davis, Dick, Dickinson, Dunham, Eastman, Eddy, Edmunds, Thomas D. Eliot, Ellison, Everhart, Fenton, Flagler, Florence, Giddings, Goodrich, Aaron Harlan, Hendricks, Henn, Hiestler, Howe, Johnson, Daniel T. Jones, Kittredge, Knox, Lindsley, McCulloch, Macy, Materson, Maurice, Mayall, Morgan, Murray, Norton, Andrew Oliver, Parker, Peck, Peckham, Pratt, Pringle, David Ritchie, Russell, Sabin, Sapp, Simmons, Singleton, Skelton, Gerrit Smith, William R. Smith, Sollers, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Stratton, Andrew Stuart, John L. Taylor, Thurston, Trout, Upham, Wade, Walley, Israel Washburne, Wells, John Wentworth, Tappan Wentworth, Wheeler, and Yates—80.

NAYS—Messrs. Abernombie, James C. Allen, Ashe, David J. Bailey, Thomas A. Bayly, Barksdale, Boeck, Boyce, Bridges, Burg, Caruthers, Caskie, Chastain, Chrisman, Clark, Clingan, Cobb, Colquitt, Cox, Craige, Disney, Dowdell, Dunbar, Edgerton, Edmundson, John M. Elliott, Ewing, Farley, Franklin, Fuller, Goode, Green, Sampson W. Harris, Wiley P. Harris, Hibbard, Hill, Hunt, Ingersoll, George W. Jones, Roland Jones, Keitt, Kurtz, Lamb, Latham, Letcher, Lindley, McDougall, McNaair, McQueen, Maxwell, Smith Miller, Millson, Morrison, Nichols, Noble, Orr, John Perkins, Phelps, Phillips, Powell, Preston, Reese, Robbins, Ruffin, Seward, Shannon, Shaw, William Smith, George W. Smyth, David Stuart, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Vail, Vansant, Walbridge, Walsh, Westbrook, Witte, Daniel B. Wright, Hendrick B. Wright, and Zollcoffer—80.

The SPEAKER voted in the negative.

So the amendment was disagreed to.

Fifth amendment, on which a separate vote was demanded by Mr. JONES, of Tennessee:

To enable the Secretary of the Navy to pay the salary of J. P. Espy, for the current fiscal year 1855, $2,000; the payment to be made in the same manner, and under like control, as former appropriations for meteorological observations.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

Eighth amendment, upon which Mr. JONES, of Tennessee, had asked for a separate vote:

To enable the Secretary of the Navy to test any improvements in steam boilers, and other steam machinery, with reference to the construction of steamers for the Navy of the United States, as in his opinion may be calculated to benefit the public service, $10,000.

Mr. WASHBURN. I demand tellers on the amendment.

Tellers were appointed; and Messrs. Cox and Churchwell were appointed.

The question was taken; and the tellers reported—yeas 75, noes 62.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Twentieth amendment, on which a separate vote was demanded by Mr. JONES, of Tennessee:

San Francisco, California.—For blacksmith shop, carpenter shop, storehouse, and wharf, $200,000.

Mr. LATHAM demanded tellers on this amendment.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. Cox and Wheeler were appointed.

The question was taken; and the amendment was disagreed to—only eighteen voting in the affirmative.

The amendments having now been disposed of, the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. PHELPS demanded the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question received a second, and the main question was ordered to be put.

Mr. MORGAN demanded the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The question was then taken; and the bill was passed.

Mr. PHELPS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, and that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS.

Mr. GREEN, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported as correctly enrolled the following bills; which thereupon received the signature of the Speaker:

House bill (No. 107) "for the relief of Robert Grignon."

House bill (No. 344) "making provision for the postal service in the State of California, and in the Territories of Oregon and Washington."

House bill (No. 176) "for the relief of Pamela Brown, the widow of Major General Jacob Brown, late of the United States Army, deceased."

House bill (No. 50) "making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the year ending the 30th of June, 1855."

House bill (No. 162) "to increase the salaries of executive and judiciary officers in Oregon, New Mexico, Washington, Utah, and Minnesota."

House bill (No. 99) "for the relief of Captain George Simpton, of Galveston."

House bill (No. 63) "for the relief of Charles Lee Jones."

House bill (No. 269) "to create and provide a pension for David Towle."

House bill (No. 109) "creating a collection district in New York, to be called the district of Dunkirk, and constituting Dunkirk a port of entry, and the ports of Barcelona, Silver Creek, and Cataraugus Creek ports of delivery."

House bill (No. 232) "making appropriations to defray the expenses of the Cayuse war."

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message was here received from the Senate, by ASBURY DICKINS, Esq., their Secretary, informing the House that the Senate have agreed to the amendments of the House to the following bills of the Senate:

Senate bill (No. 136) "for the relief of William Senna Factor."

Senate bill (No. 137) "to incorporate the proprietors of the Glenwood Cemetery."

Senate bill (No. 206) "for the relief of the executrix of the late Brevet Colonel A. C. W. Fanning, of the United States Army."

Senate bill (No. 224) "for the relief of the representatives of Joseph Watson, deceased."

Also, that the Senate had passed bills of the House of the following titles:

House bill (No. 411) "for the relief of George Mattingly."

House bill (No. 189) "for the relief of John S. Jones and William H. Russell, surviving partners of the firm of Brown, Russell & Co."

House bill (No. 289) "for the relief of Pine Grove Academy, of Louisiana."

House bill (No. 438) "for the relief of John Frazer, administrator of the estate of John G. Clendenin, deceased."

Also, that the Senate had passed joint resolution and bills of the following titles:

Senate resolution (No. 25) "for the relief of the legal representatives of Seth M. Leavenworth."

Senate bill (No. 468) "for the relief of David F. Douglass, late marshal of the northern district of California."

Senate bill (No. 182) "for the relief of Thomas Butler."

In which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House.

MRS. VAN NESS.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee: I ask the unanimous consent of the House, and if it is not granted, I shall move to suspend the rules for that purpose, to take from the Speaker's table Senate bill (No. 445) "for the relief of Mrs. Magdalena Van Ness, widow of Cornelius P. Van Ness, deceased."

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. We cannot take up that bill unless we go to the business upon the Speaker's table. I have no objection to proceeding to the business upon the Speaker's table.

Mr. STANTON. I move to suspend the rules for the purpose of taking it up.

The question was taken; and, upon division, there were—yeas 49, noes not counted.

So (two thirds not voting in favor thereof) the rules were not suspended.

RELATIONS WITH SPAIN.

Mr. SINGLETON. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to introduce the following resolution:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested, as far as in his judgment is compatible with the public interest, to communicate to this House whether the progress of negotiation with Spain has removed the necessity for provisional action by Congress, as indicated in his message of March 15, 1854; or whether he still thinks it advisable that measures should be taken to augment the Executive power, to protect and secure the national honor, rights, and interests.

Mr. PECK. I object.

Mr. SINGLETON. I move that the rules be suspended; and upon that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 56, nays 106; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Aiken, Willis Allen, Ashe, Barksdale, Barry, Boeck, Boyce, Breckinridge, Bridges, Brooks, Caskie, Chamberlain, Chastain, Churchwell, Clingan, Cobb, Colquitt, Craige, Curtis, Dowdell, Dunbar, Edmundson, John M. Elliott, Faulkner, Florence, Goode, Greenwood, Grey, Sampson W. Harris, Wiley P. Harris, Hibbard, Roland Jones, Keitt, Kidwell, Kittredge, Kurtz, Lilly, McMullin, Maxwell, Orr, John Perkins, Phillips, Powell, Seward, Shaw, Shower, Singleton, George W. Smyth, Frederick P. Stanton, Stratton, Andrew Stuart, Vail, Walbridge, Witte, Hendrick B. Wright, and Zollcoffer—56.

NAYS—Messrs. Abernombie, James C. Allen, Appleton, David J. Bailey, Ball, Banks, Belcher, Bennett, Benson, Campbell, Carpenter, Chandler, Chrisman, Clark, Cook, Corwin, Cox, Cullom, John G. Davis, Thomas Davis, Dick, Dickinson, Disney, Dunham, Eastman, Eddy, Edgerton, Edmunds, Thomas D. Eliot, Ellison, English, Farley, Flagler, Franklin, Fuller, Giddings, Goodrich, Aaron Harlan, Harrison, Hendricks, Henn, Hiestler, Hill, Howe, Hughes, Hunt, Ingersoll, Johnson, Daniel T. Jones, George W. Jones, Kerr, Knox, Latham, Lindley, Lindsley, McCulloch, Macdonald, Macy, Materson, Maurice, Mayall, Smith Miller, Millson, Morgan, Morrison, Murray, Nichols, Noble, Norton, Olds, Andrew Oliver, Parker, Peck, Peckham, Pennington, Bishop Perkins, Pratt, Preston, Pringle, Puryear, Reese, David Ritchie, Robbins, Russell, Sabin, Sapp, Shannon, Simmons, Skelton, Gerrit Smith, Hestor L. Stevens, John L. Taylor, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Thurston, Trout, Upham, Wade, Walley, Walsh, Ellihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, Wells, John Wentworth, Tappan Wentworth, Wheeler, and Yates—106.

So (two thirds not voting in favor thereof) the rules were not suspended.

REORGANIZATION OF THE ARMY.

Mr. FAULKNER. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to permit me to report back from the Committee on Military Affairs Senate bill (No. 119) "to regulate the pay and increase the efficiency of the Army of the United States, and for other purposes."

Mr. WALSH. I object.

Mr. HUNT. I move that the rules be suspended to enable the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER] to report back the bill, that it may be taken up. I hope that gentlemen on this side of the House will vote for the suspension of the rules.

Mr. FAULKNER. I call for the yeas and nays on the motion to suspend the rules.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Let the bill be read.

The bill was read in extenso by the Clerk.

The question was then taken; and there were yeas 106, nays 39; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abernombie, Aiken, Willis Allen, Appleton, Ashe, David J. Bailey, Thomas A. Bayly, Banks, Barksdale, Belcher, Boeck, Boyce, Brooks, Carpenter, Caskie, Chamberlain, Chandler, Chastain, Chrisman, Churchwell, Clingan, Cobb, Colquitt, Cook, Corwin, Cox, Craige, Crocker, Curtis, Dick, Dickinson, Dunbar, Eddy, Edmunds, Thomas D. Eliot, Ellison, English, Ewing, Farley, Faulkner, Florence, Franklin, Goodrich, Grey, Grow, Sampson W. Harris, Wiley P. Harris, Harrison, Henn, Hiestler, Hill, Howe, Hughes, Hunt, Ingersoll, Roland Jones, Keitt, Kerr, Kidwell, Knox, Kurtz, Lamb, Lindley, Lindsley, McDougall, Maxwell, Smith Miller, Noble, Olds, Andrew Oliver, Mordecai Oliver, Peckham, Pennington, Bishop Perkins, Phillips, Powell, Pratt, Pringle, Puryear, Reese, David Ritchie, Rogers, Russell, Sabin, Shannon, Shower, Simmons, Singleton, Sollers, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, David Stuart, John J. Taylor, John L. Taylor, Nathaniel G.

Taylor, Trout, Upham, Vail, Vansant, Walbridge, Walley, Walsh, Wells, John Wentworth, Westbrook, and Hendrick B. Wright—108.

NAYS.—Messrs. Ball, Bridges, Clark, John G. Davis, Thomas Davis, Dunham, Eastman, Flagler, Fuller, Giddings, Hendricks, Houston, Daniel T. Jones, George W. Jones, Kittredge, Letcher, McCulloch, McMullin, McQueen, Maurice, Morgan, Murray, Nichols, Norton, Parker, Phelps, Rufin, Sapp, Seward, Shaw, Skelton, Gerrit Smith, George W. Smyth, Stratton, Thurston, Wheeler, and Zollicoffer—37.

So (two thirds voting in favor thereof) the rules were suspended.

Mr. FAULKNER, from the Committee on Military Affairs, then reported the bill back, with sundry amendments, and with a recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. F. then said: Mr. Speaker, I am much gratified by the decision of the House. The condition of the Army demands the consideration of Congress, and I have now the assurance that its grievances, if not remedied, will at least be heard. All that I propose now to do, is to make a brief explanation of the leading provisions of the bill, reserving my right, under the rules of the House, to close the discussion, if I should deem it necessary to do so.

We propose to amend the bill as it passed the Senate by striking out the ninth section, which authorizes the appointment of sixty-two cadets—that is, two additional cadets from each State, to be appointed upon the recommendation of the respective Senators. We regard the provision as in conflict with the Constitution, which vests the appointing power in the President. But that difficulty might be obviated. We have not, however, been able to learn any satisfactory reason why the number of cadets should be increased at West Point. The institution is doing well, and is now popular. We are unwilling to adopt any step that may furnish material for opposition to it as now established. A conclusive reason with us for striking out that amendment is, that it is in conflict with one of the most valuable provisions of the bill itself. That bill opens to the rank and file the preferences and distinctions of the Army, as I shall hereafter more fully explain. By it the President is authorized, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to confer the brevet of second lieutenant upon the meritorious enlisted men of the Army, under certain regulations therein presented—which places them at once in the line of promotion—upon the footing of graduated cadets at West Point. They are to be attached as supernumary officers to the companies as graduated cadets now are awaiting a vacancy. To increase, therefore, the number of cadets, must to that extent interfere with the promotion of the meritorious non-commissioned officer.

I will now proceed briefly to explain the provisions of this bill as they have been retained, and as they have been recommended, by the Committee on Military Affairs, to the adoption of this House.

The first section of the bill proposes to increase the pay of the Army, from the private inclusive, to the major general. The present pay of a private of infantry is seven dollars per month; we propose to increase it to ten dollars per month. The largest percentage of increase is upon the pay of the private soldier. There is a gradual decrease of that percentage as you ascend to the higher officers—perhaps not exact and uniform on the scale of decrease; for one of the great objects of this bill is to regulate, upon just and proper principles, the relative pay of each officer and enlisted man, and to correct some gross relative inequalities that exist under the present system.

I am well aware that there exists upon the part of many gentlemen of this body an earnest opposition to an increase of the pay of the commissioned officers. Of this fact I cannot be ignorant, for it has already been loudly proclaimed on this floor. All that I propose to say at this time on that branch of the subject is, that after the fullest consideration which the committee has been able to give to the subject, we believe the pay of most of the commissioned officers of the Army to be inadequate—some of them grossly inadequate—and that in the present schedule of increase, as set forth in the bill, we have sought as earnestly as possible to establish a just and proper position and relative compensation from the highest to the lowest officer of the Army. The scheme, if erroneous, is in the power of this House, to whose judgment and discretion it is now submitted.

But, sir, whatever may be the diversity of opinion as to the propriety of increasing the pay of the commissioned officers, there should and can be none as to the enlisted men. It is a point upon which we need not speculate; the fact proclaims itself in your thinned and dilapidated Army. You cannot obtain recruits—men will not enlist at the compensation now provided by law. There is, therefore, no alternative before us but to disband the Army, close up our recruiting service, surrender our frontier settlements to the horrors of Indian depredation and cruelty, or to provide such inducements as will fill the ranks of the Army.

It may suit the continental nations of Europe, where the rights of personal liberty are but imperfectly recognized, to resort to the system of conscription and levies in raising those standing armies which have now become, as it were, the fundamental principle of government among them, but in this country, and in England, there is but one mode in which an army can be raised, and that is by voluntary enlistment. Men must be as free to accept or reject the bounty for military service as to accept or reject employment in any other branch of business, or we cease to be a free people. Such being the character of our Government and its institutions, if we want an army, we must resort to that sound and universally-acknowledged principle, that whenever men are wanted for any occupation in society, they can only be had by holding out to them a suitable encouragement to perform the same. I know of no countries on earth where the system of voluntary enlistment could be successfully resorted to but England and the United States. It is a remarkable fact, that notwithstanding the military spirit of the French people, the voluntary recruiting before the year 1792 only averaged sixteen thousand men a year, of whom Paris alone furnished one third, and yet that was at a period when wealth was less general in that country than it is at the present day. Since 1815, voluntary enlistment averages about five thousand a year, besides about four thousand who reenlist, and almost always choose the infantry or light cavalry. In this country, until October, 1852, we had averaged each year about four thousand recruits, an adequate supply under our existing military establishment; but since October, 1852, the number of recruits has been rapidly decreasing each year. The whole number of enlisted men from the 1st of October, 1852, to 1st of October, 1853, was but two thousand eight hundred and sixty-three, it being one thousand three hundred and eleven less than the year 1850-'51, and one thousand seven hundred and three less than for the year 1851-'52, and this notwithstanding an increased force of recruiting officers. So that we are informed by the Secretary of War, in his report to the President at the commencement of Congress, that four thousand six hundred recruits would be required for the ensuing year, to fill our Army to its proper legal strength, small as that legal strength is.

I hold in my hand a letter from the Adjutant General, bearing date the 5th of July, 1854, in which, in reply to my inquiries as to the condition of the recruiting service since the date of his last annual report in November, he says;

"Since the report of the Adjutant General of November 20, 1853, there has been no material improvement in the recruiting service; and the same difficulty in obtaining men exists now, as heretofore, during the last few years. Some months since the Secretary of War authorized the payment of a premium of two dollars, at the principal rendezvous, for every accepted recruit furnished, yet even this appears to have produced no sensible effect. Officers have been placed at all points where there is a chance of procuring recruits, and it is known that every effort has been made, but it has been found impossible to meet the wants of the Army."

"As illustrative of the embarrassment of the service in this particular, I will mention that, notwithstanding the most strenuous exertions to keep the companies full in the departments of New Mexico and Texas, where, from the character of our Indian relations, troops are most needed, yet in the latter department—although containing within its limits rather less than a third of the Army—upwards of two thousand recruits are required, of which number, probably, it will not be practicable to supply by autumn more than three hundred. There seems to be no remedy for this state of affairs but an increased compensation to the soldier, and greater incentives to enlistments and reenlistments. Without some improvement, the number of enlistments made will not fill the vacancies caused by the ordinary casualties by deaths, discharges, and desertions."

It is manifest, therefore, that unless we desire to see our Army perish and waste away under the influence of desertions and expiration of periods of enlistment; unless we mean to fold our arms, neglect our national obligations, and surrender our emigrants to the tomahawk and scalping knife of the Indian, we must review our system, and make such changes as will adapt it to the exigencies of the times.

Perhaps some gentlemen may think that our Indian population is very harmless and pacific, and that there is no urgent, pressing necessity for the distribution of well appointed forces in our western Territories. A brief review of the condition of our Indian population—increased under our recent territorial acquisitions to four hundred thousand souls—would promptly dispel such an error. I shall not at this time consume the time of this House by going into that review, but I will ask the Clerk to read some well authenticated statements which I have taken from the recent morning papers, and which coincides with all the official information which we have from New Mexico. The Clerk then read as follows:

"OUR INDIAN AFFAIRS.—SAD CONDITION OF THINGS.—At no period since the organization of this Territory has it been so sorely stricken, and so completely at the mercy of the Indians, as at this time. It appears as though all the Indians of the Great West had combined to overrun and destroy us. Within the last fortnight, the county of San Miguel has been sadly dealt with by a band of Cheyennes and Kiowas from the plains near the Arkansas river. They made a descent upon that defenseless frontier, murdered twenty herdsman, carried off ten shepherd boys captive, and drove off a large number of horses and mules, and, in the wantonness of their acts, they strewed the valley with the dead carcasses of cattle and sheep. In the southern part of the Territory, the Mesqueros are in full blast, and almost daily robbing our citizens of their sheep and cattle, on their way to California. Many of the emigrant parties have suffered severely from murder and robbery."

"The Camanches seem to have turned their attention particularly to the northern part of Mexico, where they fairly run riot in their devastations. They have murdered as many as twenty citizens in a single day, and seem to set at defiance all attempts to stop their incursions. The Jicarillas are almost lost sight of in the hostilities of the other tribes; they appear to be almost entirely subdued. The Navajos, the most powerful tribe in the country, have also commenced depredations. Seven of them ran off eight hundred sheep, but Agent Dodge has procured the return of one hundred, and hopes to be able to restore the balance."

"An express has been sent to General Garland, now at El Paso, urging his immediate return to headquarters, where his presence is much needed. The acting Governor, Hon. William S. Messervy, has very properly ordered out a portion of the militia to repel the invasion of San Miguel county, in addition to those ordered out to defend the county of Rio Arriba."

"Colonel Cook has ordered two companies of dragoons to pursue the Cheyennes and Kiowas, who are now devastating the frontier of San Miguel county."

"Under the circumstances, it becomes the duty of every man to hold himself in readiness to answer the call of the acting governor to take up arms. In the two counties of Rio Arriba and San Miguel, where the call has already been made, we hope the citizens will respond promptly, and turn out to a man to defend their homes and property. If we do not want a general Indian war, we must act vigorously, and put down the tribes that have already risen.—Santa Fe Gazette, May 29.

"FROM NEW MEXICO.—General Garland received, while at El Paso, a dispatch from Santa Fe, stating that a number of very serious depredations had been committed by the Indians in the neighborhood of Acon Chico, and in other portions of the Territory of New Mexico. Secretary Messervy had made a call, in the absence of Governor Merrivether, for four hundred volunteers. In consequence of this General Garland and staff left El Paso direct for Santa Fe, with a view of superintending the movements of the troops in the above named quarter."

"A letter from W. W. H. Davis, Esq., editor of the Santa Fe Gazette, dated May 29, says:

"I reached home from the lower country Friday, the 25th instant, safe and sound. We have no news here but that which relates to the Indians and the war. Hostilities still continue. Within a few days the Kiowas, Cheyennes, and Arapahoes have opened the ball and commenced hostilities on our frontiers. It is said the tribes soon are to have a general junta, in order to combine against the whites. The Governor has called out the militia, and four hundred of them are now embodied, and some already in the field. I fear we will have a general Indian war."

"No further intelligence has been received from the expedition under the command of Colonel Cook, who was lately sent out in pursuit of the Jicarillas."—National Intelligence.

Mr. FAULKNER. This bill proposes to encourage the recruiting service of the country,

chanical labor. But all experience has shown that a soldier may be enlisted for a sum less per month than the ordinary and usual wages of labor in civil life, if not too far below that point. This may be accounted for by the attractions which a soldier's life present to many persons, the absence of domestic care, and the imposing spectacle of military parades and evolutions, and the martial music by which they are accompanied. Or it may be that, in every country, there must be some occupation which is the common sewer of unemployed labor, and that the Army is that occupation. Be the precise cause what it may, the fact is as I state; and ten dollars a month, although below the wages of the lowest order of civil labor, will, it is believed, with the other provisions of the bill, be a compensation sufficient to fill the ranks of the Army.

2. Encouragement is given to reenlistment by the additional pay of two dollars per month. The experience of the service has abundantly shown that this is a provision that looks both to economy and efficiency. One experienced soldier, both in an economical and military sense, is worth a half a dozen raw recruits. A large proportion of desertions, disabilities, and deaths occur in the first year of their enlistment. With the expansion of our territory, the cost of sending recruits to our distant frontiers is greatly increased; and it is estimated by the Secretary of War that the expenses of the enlistment, transportation, subsistence, loss by desertion, death, and disability, will average ninety-one dollars for each man enlisted under the present system. And if this be added to the pay, clothing, medical attendance, &c., of the recruit, from his enlistment until he joins his company, the actual cost of each man, from his enlistment until the period when his actual service commences, will be $121. This expense we propose to save, by a moderate bounty, to ensure reenlistment, besides the advantages of an experienced and well disciplined soldier.

3. We propose to encourage enlistment, and to attract a better class of recruits, by opening to meritorious non-commissioned officers the chances of reaching the honors and preferments of the Army. In looking over the Army Register—in the list of nine hundred and sixty-four commissioned officers—I find the names of but nineteen who were promoted from the ranks. This under some special acts of Congress passed during the war of 1812, and the late Mexican war. We propose to make that a permanent feature in our system, so that if there be a youth of courage and enterprise, who lacks the necessary influence to procure for himself a cadetship at West Point, let him enter the enlisted corps of your Army, and by his own gallant conduct and with his own good sword cut his way to the highest preferments of the Army. I am happy to say that this feature in the bill has met the hearty approval of every Army officer to whom I have mentioned it; and I am sure it cannot fail to attract the favorable consideration of this House.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio. I wish to propound a question to the gentleman from Virginia, if he will give way for a moment.

Mr. FAULKNER. Certainly.

Mr. TAYLOR. I am very desirous, Mr. Speaker, to vote for this bill, if I see the necessity of doing so. And that I may know whether there is such a necessity, I desire my friend from Virginia, who is now the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, in the absence of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. BISSELL,] to state what is the aggregate force of the Army now allowed by law? How many men are now employed in the Army of this country? And what is the opinion of the Committee on Military Affairs as to whether this bill will enable us to fill up the numbers to the necessary amount?

Mr. FAULKNER. I will answer the gentleman from Ohio with pleasure. As they are now posted, the authorized strength of the Army is thirteen thousand eight hundred and twenty-one; but the actual number is less by three thousand three hundred and twenty-six, making the present actual strength of the Army, according to the returns last fall, something upwards of ten thousand. Of this force, about eight thousand are distributed through New Mexico, California, Texas, Washington, and Oregon, and the routes to these Territories, and the residue upon our Canada line, Atlantic and Mexican coasts.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio, (interrupting.) My friend from Virginia does not apprehend my question. I want to know how many men are now in the field?

Mr. FAULKNER. I cannot give to the gentleman any reliable information of later date than the official returns of last fall. At that time, the total of enlisted men, as reported, was nine thousand and two hundred and thirty-four. Now, when he is informed that the vacancies in our Army, from discharges by expiration of enlistment, from disability, from death and desertion, amount annually to about three thousand eight hundred, he can form some idea of the wretched skeleton our Army will soon present, if some effectual steps are not taken to encourage enlistment. We were told in December that we should want four thousand six hundred recruits to bring our Army up to its full legal organization; and the question is, where are they to come from, unless your system is changed?

Mr. HENDRICKS. I desire to ask the gentleman one question. He says that to fill the ranks of the Army requires four thousand six hundred men. How many of those are officers? How many commissioned officers are wanted in the Army whose compensation you must raise in order to secure their services?

Mr. FAULKNER. Not one out of the four thousand six hundred are commissioned officers I speak of. We want that number of enlisted men for the Army. They are required to raise the Army to its legal strength, and to meet the pressing exigencies of the country.

Mr. HENDRICKS. If I understand the gentleman correctly, it is necessary to raise the pay of the men, in order to secure their enlistment. I ask if it is necessary to raise the pay of the commissioned officers in order to secure their services?

Mr. HUNT. I hope the gentleman will be allowed to proceed in order.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I have been listening with great pleasure to the remarks of the gentleman; but I wanted to know the facts, and for that purpose I interrupted him. And it was not out of order to do so, as the gentleman yielded me the floor for that purpose.

Mr. FAULKNER. The gentleman from Indiana well knows that the rule upon which we are acting in regulating the pay of the officers and privates must necessarily be different. It is so in the very nature of things. We propose to increase the pay of the soldier up to that point that will enable us to purchase his temporary service—service which we have not now. In regulating the pay of the officers of the Army, a distinct inquiry is presented, and it is what is a just and proper compensation, according to their respective grades and responsibilities, of men who have dedicated their lives to the service of the country? I am well aware that there is a difference of opinion, in this Hall and elsewhere, upon the points presented in that gentleman's interrogatory. Some think the increase of pay ought not to be extended beyond the enlisted men; others think that captains and lieutenants should, by all means, be embraced in any increase of pay. But, as I have already said, the Committee on Military Affairs, whose organ I am, upon this occasion, think the pay should be increased throughout every grade of the Army, according to the plan set forth in the bill. It will be for the House to determine between us.

Sir, the compensation of an officer may seem, at first view, to be a reasonable compensation to those who are not familiar with the sacrifices and exposures to which he is subject; but when it is recollected that he is subject to constant changes of residence by the order of his Government—that many of the officers are stationed on our western and Pacific frontiers, where provisions and every necessary and comfort of life brings extravagant prices—that his pay from Government constitutes all that he can properly or honorably earn—it is only matter of surprise that men of talent and enterprise seek or continue in the Army. It cannot be the pay—it is the prospective rewards of fame, and a generous ambition and love of their profession, that can alone account for their clinging to the service with such inadequate compensation as is now provided for the junior officers of the Army.

Mr. Speaker, the last important feature of the bill, and to which I was about adverting when interrupted, is that which proposes to extend to the Army the pension laws which are now in force for the benefit of the Navy. It is difficult to see any reason for the discrimination which has existed between these kindred branches of the public service. And such a provision is now especially needed to encourage the necessary enlistments for that branch of the public service.

I have thus, sir, briefly explained the leading provisions of the bill, which is all that I designed when I rose; and I accordingly yield the floor to some of the several gentlemen around me who seem to be exceedingly anxious to assail it in part, if not in whole.

Mr. GROW. I have but a few words to say upon this bill. Having voted to suspend the rules for its introduction, I desire to make a brief explanation of the reasons that controlled that vote. The tendency in this country—and those who have served in this House for the last few years cannot help but notice it—is to increase the salaries of all officers, military and civil. That a fair and reasonable compensation should be paid to the employees in every department of the Government for their services there can be no objection; but what reason can there be for increasing the highest rate of service as at present paid, either military or civil? Sir, in the Departments, the heads of bureaus, and those occupying the highest positions, receive a respectable and sufficient compensation, while it may be true that of the lower grade of service is not sufficiently paid, in consideration of the expense of living here at the present time. The clerks who received, under the classification bill of last year, $900, worked at their desks, many, if not all of them, more hours per day than others who perform a less amount of service, and receive $1,600 or $1,800. But still when it was proposed to increase the lowest rates of pay, it was claimed that you must also increase the highest, in order to keep up the relative grade.

I am opposed to increasing the salaries of the higher grade, now paid to the employees of the Government, civil or military. The pay of your Major General is now $200 per month, besides the pay for rations and other allowances that I believe amount to about an equal sum. Now, sir, is not $200 a month, with about an equal amount for expenses, a sufficient compensation for this officer? The exact amount for rations, forage, &c., that an officer in the Army receives, I am not sufficiently informed on military matters to compute, but I believe those of a Major General amount to as much or more than this pay proper. What propriety is there in increasing his pay? Is not $200 per month sufficient?

Mr. BRIDGES. I will inquire of my colleague whether the pay of a Major General does not now amount to $4,000 per year?

Mr. GROW. As I have already stated, I am not acquainted with the precise number of rations, &c., allowed officers, nor the rate at which they are reckoned. At $200 per month, this officer receives $2,400 annually, which is about one half of what my colleague says he really receives. If my colleague be right, then the officers receive in fact nearly double the pay, as stated in the Blue Book.

Now, what propriety is there in the Government becoming a gratuitous pensioner of men, because they choose to serve their country in the Army or Navy, rather than in its civil departments? The Government should pay a fair compensation for their services, and no more, even though they are officers. Those who go forth under their command, like them, to bare their bosoms in defense and protection of the country, ought also to receive a fair compensation, and no more; but it should be in some proportion to the pay of the officer, and at least as much as the individual could command in the ordinary business pursuits of life.

There is no doubt but that the pay of the common soldier and the lower grade of officers in the Army ought to be increased; for in agriculture, or any other branch of industry, where there is no risk of life or limb, save the ordinary casualties of life, and where, too, no skill is required, they can command from twelve to sixteen dollars per month. And in the service of his country the soldier should receive as great a compensation as his services would command in any other branch of industry, and no more. Because for the additional risk he incurs on the battle-field, the Government guarantees, in case he falls in its service, that his widow shall be provided for at the public expense. Therefore a compensation should be paid to your men in the Army and Navy equal to the compensation that they would receive in the ordinary avocations of life.

But what is the reason urged for the increase of the higher grade of officers' pay? That is not necessary, I take it, in order to provide the Army with officers. There can be no such necessity, I presume, for the proposed increase. The only reason urged for the increase of the pay of the soldiers, is to enable the Government to fill up the rank and file of the Army. Let that be done, in order that the service of the country may be furnished with the proper quota of men. But I have not yet heard of any difficulty in obtaining competent persons to fill offices, either in military or civil life. There has been no trouble in filling the civil offices under the Government on account of the salary. Nor has there been any difficulty so far in the history of the country to find officers to command your soldiers in peace or war? Then there is no reason for this enormous increase of the pay on that account. It is an unreasonable demand on the tax-payer of the country, and is unjust to the rank and file of the Army. Why should you increase the soldier's pay only three dollars per month, and that of the officer sixty-five dollars?

While there is a general tendency to increase the salaries of officers, it becomes this House to guard well their appropriations for such purposes. It becomes them to scrutinize well all the bills of this character that are proposed for their action. Sir, I have but little faith in bills prepared in your bureaux providing for the efficiency of your Army and Navy and the increase of pay among their officers and men, so far as their relative pay is concerned. Those bureaux, both Army and Navy, are controlled in their recommendations by old officers—men who have been schooled in one particular discipline, and who have been taught, almost from childhood, to revere rank and reverence the plume, disregarding the merits and services of the more obscure. They have always asked an increase of pay for the officers, to the neglect of the subalterns. You will find, whenever a proposition has come up here for the reorganization of the Navy, and an increase of pay for those in the service, that the commodores and captains are always specially to be provided for. It seems, in this Army bill, that the old officers of the Army must take care of their own class, and an increase of pay is provided for them to the disregard of the rights and interests of the private in the ranks.

This has been the general tendency of things since I have had the honor of a seat upon this floor. Propositions of this character always come from the old class of officers—men who are bound up with their own class; and it is for them, their interests and rights, that they labor, not looking so closely to the interest of those whom work has made inferiors. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER] no doubt thinks that the increase he desires is all proper, and he has, undoubtedly the sanction and approval of the officers in and about the Departments. They propose to increase the pay of your private in the ranks three dollars a month, and the pay of your general sixty-five dollars a month. Why this discrimination? Should not the services of the soldier, who gives to his country his whole time, and who risks his life and braves danger the same on the battle-field, and whose services secure the triumph that adds glory to the officer, be rewarded by a compensation something proportionate to that awarded to his general?

Mr. PECKHAM. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania allow me to ask him a question? I would ask him why there should be any difference in the pay at all?

A VOICE. Why have any pay at all? Let them serve for nothing.

Mr. GROW. I ask no man to serve me, or serve his country, without a fair compensation for his labor. Would you grant a bounty to a man, out of the public Treasury, who occupies a position of honor and glory because of his position, over and above all reasonable compensation for his services? While he is occupying a position of honor and of trust, let him be paid some additional compensation for the duties of that position. I make no objection to differences of pay, for there are differences of responsibility in your Army. If a man has additional duties devolved upon him, requiring greater responsibility, he should be compensated to that extent. But I do object to the distinctions made in this bill, for the compensation proposed for the higher grades is unreasonable for the service rendered.

Mr. PHILLIPS. I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania, if by this bill the compensation of the private soldier is not increased in a greater ratio than the compensation of the officer?

Mr. GROW. But then comes the question, was the compensation right before? I do not know whether it is so or not. The compensation of the private soldier now is seven dollars per month. This bill proposes to increase it to ten dollars. The compensation of the Major General now is $200 per month. It is proposed to increase it to $265. I care not whether the proportion of increase is the same or not. The question comes back again, "Was the pay right before?" For we are acting not on precedent, nor are we bound by its authority. We are acting on principles which we believe fair, just, and right; and not upon the authority of what has been done heretofore, when the world looked upon the wearer of the helmet and the waving plume as the great savior of mankind. Times have changed; and men's opinions of the relative worth of chieftain and citizen have changed also. Now "peace hath her victories no less renowned than those of war." The world's greatest heroes are no longer plumed warriors.

Why is it still insisted that the General must be paid so large a compensation? The notion has come down to us from ancient days, that the man holding a position of high honor must be furnished with the means of ostentatious display, and that, therefore, he must be paid by the Government a large compensation. The idea has come down to us from olden times that "the royal family" is to be provided for at the public expense. Whoever, then, is high in the State must be paid an enormous salary, to support him in idleness and extravagance. And hence have come grades in labor, and distinctions in society, based not on moral and intellectual worth, but on accidental rank, and factitious inequalities. Because the pay of officer and soldier was once fixed at a particular rate, must it therefore always continue in the same ratio? Because your soldier has been poorly paid heretofore, and your General well paid, is that any reason why we should always continue the disproportion? I care not what the relative pay has been heretofore, or what the relative increase proposed by this bill is. The question is, is ten dollars per month for a private soldier in the ranks a fair compensation for his services, when the General who commands is paid $265 per month, in addition to large extra allowance for rations?

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio, (interrupting.) I wish to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GROW] a question, if he will give way to me a moment.

Mr. GROW. Certainly.

Mr. TAYLOR. I should like the gentleman to state what would be a fair proportion between the pay of the private soldier and that of the Major General. It is very easy to complain of the proposition of the Committee on Military Affairs; but what proportion does he think should exist between the grades?

Mr. GROW. I will state what my opinion is, and what my action will be on this bill. I will not vote to increase the pay of any officer who receives now forty dollars or upwards per month. I will vote to increase the pay of men who receive less than that sum, because I believe that in almost any other business in life they could command larger compensation than is now paid them in the Army. But the pay of the General is now as large as he could command in any other pursuit, with the advantage that it is a life office. There is no, or scarcely any, civil service in this country where he would receive $400 per month for his services. I believe that the pay of all grades that is fixed above forty dollars per month is sufficiently large now. So believing, I shall vote against all increase of pay for officers who receive that amount or more.

I have but a word further to say, and then I will yield to others and trespass no longer on the patience of the House. I propose to offer an amendment to this bill, by striking out all after the fourth line to the letter "a" in the fourteenth line—which provides for the increase of pay to all officers above sergeant major, so the section will provide only for the increase of soldiers and officers under that rank.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio. Is the bill open to amendment now?

The SPEAKER. The Chair would inquire of the gentleman from Virginia, if he reports this bill back to the House without amendment?

Mr. FAULKNER. No, sir, the committee recommend two amendments.

The SPEAKER. Then the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania will be in order.

Mr. GROW. I propose further to amend by striking out of this bill all after and including the word "provided" in the twenty-sixth line, with the exception of the eighth section.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman must propose one amendment at a time.

Mr. GROW. What does the Chair decide in regard to my amendment?

The SPEAKER. It will be in order at its proper place. The bill will be read for amendment, and when the proper place is reached, the gentleman may submit it in order.

Mr. GROW. The remarks I have made were in explanation of my vote to suspend the rules for the purpose of giving this measure opportunity for consideration in the House.

ENROLLED BILLS.

Mr. GREEN, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported as correctly enrolled the following Senate bills; which thereupon received the signature of the Speaker:

An act confirming a certain land claim in Louisiana, known as the Fleurian claim.

An act for the relief of John S. Wilson.

An act to ascertain and adjust the titles to certain lands in the State of Indiana.

An act to incorporate the proprietors of the Glenwood Cemetery.

An act for the relief of Ira Baldwin.

An act for the relief of James M. Goggin.

An act for the relief of the legal representatives of the late Thomas Chapman, formerly collector of the port of Georgetown, South Carolina.

An act authorizing a patent to be issued to Peter Poncin for certain lands therein described.

An act for the relief of Conrad Wheat, jr., or his legal representatives.

An act for the relief of Richard King.

An act for the relief of William Senna Factor.

An act for the relief of Richard M. Bouton, George Wright, and the widow of Marvin W. Fisher.

An act for the relief of Passed Midshipmen George P. Welsh and Clark H. Wells.

An act for the relief of the widows and orphans of the officers and seamen of the United States schooner Grampus, who were lost in that vessel, in March, 1843, near the coast of the United States.

An act for the relief of Andrew J. Deckerhoff.

An act for the relief of Lavinia Taylor.

An act for the relief of Thomas S. Russell.

An act for the relief of A. G. Bennett.

An act for the relief of the representatives of Joseph Watson, deceased.

An act for the relief of Samuel H. Hempstead.

An act for the relief of John W. Kelly.

An act for the relief of Sylvester T. Jerauld, assignee of the interest of Henry Richard.

An act for the relief of Thomas D. Jennings.

An act for the relief of Joseph Campau.

An act for the relief of Manuel Hernandez.

An act for the relief of Mrs. Sally T. B. Cochran, widow of the late Lieutenant R. E. Cochran, United States Army.

An act for the relief of William Claude Jones.

An act for the relief of Rebecca Freeman.

An act for the relief of James Wormsley.

An act for the relief of Mary Carlton.

An act for the relief of Sarah Crandall.

An act for the relief of Joseph Gonder, jr., and John Duff.

An act for the relief of William Miller.

An act for the relief of the legal representatives of Samuel Prioleau, deceased.

An act for the relief of William Harris, of Georgia.

An act for the relief of James Edwards and others.

An act for the relief of Thomas Snodgrass.

An act for the relief of the executrix of the late Brevet Colonel A. C. W. Fanning, of the United States Army.

Mr. PHELPS then obtained the floor, but yielded it to

Mr. PECKHAM, who moved that the House adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and thereupon the House (at three o'clock and twenty minutes p. m.) adjourned until to-morrow at eleven o'clock, a. m.

IN SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, July 26, 1854.

Prayer by Rev. HENRY SLIGER.

Mr. BADGER. I hope, at this period of the session, there will be no objection, as it is usually done when we are hard pressed for time, to omit the reading of the Journal. I move that that be done.

There being no objection, it was so ordered.

DAVID F. DOUGLASS.

Mr. BRODHEAD. The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill for the relief of David F. Douglass, late marshal of the northern district of California, have instructed me to report back the bill without amendment, and to recommend its passage. It is a meritorious case which is recommended by Mr. Whittlesey. I also present a report in the case, which I ask may be printed.

The report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. GWIN. I hope the bill will be passed now. Its object is to enable the settlement of the accounts of the late marshal for the northern district of California. Mr. Whittlesey, the Comptroller, has sent it here, and asked for its passage.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to direct the accounting officers, in the settlement of Mr. Douglass's accounts, to allow such charges as he paid the bailiffs and criers of the district court, certified by Judge Hoffman, who held the court, to be necessary, reasonable, and proper, and as low as competent persons could be obtained to perform such offices.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

FORTIFICATION BILL.

The bill from the House of Representatives, making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, and for repairs of barracks and quarters, for the year ending the 30th of June, 1855, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

GEORGE MATTINGLY.

The private bills heretofore received from the House of Representatives were read, and appropriately referred, as stated below. When the bill for the relief of George Mattingly was announced,

Mr. BADGER said: I should be very glad if the Senate would dispose of that bill immediately. It is one about which there can be no question.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the bill as in Committee of the Whole.

It proposes to authorize the Commissioner of Public Buildings to convey to George Mattingly and his heirs, all the right, title, and interest of the United States in and to square numbered four hundred and ninety-five, of the plot of the city of Washington, if he or they shall first produce to the Commissioner a certificate of the Secretary of the Treasury that he paid to him for the United States the sum of $387 11, with interest thereon from July 26, 1844.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

PINE GROVE ACADEMY.

When the bill for the relief of the Pine Grove Academy, in the State of Louisiana, was announced,

Mr. SLIDELL said: The Committee on Private Land Claims of the Senate have reported a bill in precisely the same terms as this one; and there can be no doubt that the Senate would have passed it if it had been reached in regular order. I ask, therefore, that this bill may now be considered without a reference.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded, as in Committee of the Whole, to consider the bill.

It proposes to confirm the title of the president, directors, and trustees of the Pine Grove Academy, in the parish of Caldwell, Louisiana, in their title to a lot of forty acres on which the academy is situated, which was donated by some of the claimants under the Maison Rouge grant. It also proposes to confirm them in their title to another tract of land in the same parish, of about one mile front on the west bank of the Ouachita river, known as lot 23, in plat No. 1, in the Maison Rouge grant, surveyed by John Dinsmore, a deputy surveyor of the United States, containing about four thousand acres, donated to them by Daniel W. Cox, one of the claimants of the grant in 1839, with a proviso that the act shall operate only as a relinquishment of title on the part of the United States, and shall not interfere with the rights of settlers on the land.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

FRAZER AND CLENDENIN

When the bill for the relief of John Frazer, the administrator of the estate of John G. Clendenin, came up—

Mr. PETTIT. I ask for the consideration of that bill now. It is a matter with which I am familiar, and there is no doubt that if it were referred, the Committee on Private Land Claims would recommend its passage.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to reimburse to the parties the amount expended by them for the purchase of a certain tract in Indiana, together with interest thereon, and also their expenses in defending their title to the land, with interest on that sum; but before any payment shall be made, the accounting officer is to be satisfied by proof as to the amount expended by them in purchasing the tract and prosecuting their title to it, and that no more shall be allowed than the United States received for the land, with interest on that sum, and that no more than seventy-five dollars shall be allowed for their expenses in defending their title.

Mr. CASS. I do not like to object to this bill; but I really prefer that it should be referred to the proper committee.

Mr. PETTIT. This is a matter with which I am perfectly familiar. If it be referred at all, it will be to my committee, and I know it will be favorably reported on. It is now before the Senate, and might as well be acted on at this time.

Mr. CASS. I do not doubt the merits of the case; but I think we ought to have a report. I withdraw my objection, however, to oblige the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. HUNTER. After this is disposed of I shall object to considering any more of these bills now. It is time that we were getting to the appropriation bills.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills from the House of Representatives were severally read a first and second time by their titles, and referred to committees, as annexed:

A bill for the relief of W. D. Porter, of the United States Navy—Committee on Foreign Relations.

A bill for the relief of Daniel Bedinger's heirs—Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

A bill for the relief of Brigadier General John E. Wool—Committee on Claims.

A bill for the relief of James S. Graham and Walter H. Finnall—Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

A bill for the relief of William A. Duer, John Duer, and Beverly Robinson, trustees of the estate of Sarah Alexander, widow of Major General William Alexander, commonly known as Lord Sterling—Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

A bill for the relief of the legal representatives of John Rice Jones—Committee on Private Land Claims.

A bill for the relief of Robert F. McGuire and Louisa, his wife, late Louisa Lamy—Committee on Private Land Claims.

A bill for the relief of Lieutenant George H. Paige, of the United States Army—Committee on Military Affairs.

A joint resolution for the relief of Captain J. H. Lendrum, of the United States Army—Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill to provide a pension for Oliver Brown, of Chemung county, New York—Committee on Pensions.

A bill to provide a pension for Edmund Mitchell, of Carroll county, in the State of Kentucky—Committee on Pensions.

A bill for the relief of James Butler—Committee on Pensions.

A bill for the relief of John H. Hicks, of Indiana—Committee on Pensions.

A bill for the relief of John Brown, second, of New Hampshire—Committee on Pensions.

A bill for the relief of Mrs. Anne W. Angus, widow of the late Captain Angus, United States Army—Committee on Pensions.

A bill for the relief of Betsey Nash—Committee on Pensions.

A bill for the relief of Thomas Ellis—Committee on Pensions.

A bill for the relief of Charlotte S. Westcott—Committee on Pensions.

A bill for the relief of Thomas Bronaugh—Committee on Pensions.

A bill for the relief of Anna E. Cook—Committee on Pensions.

A bill for the relief of Abraham Ausman—Committee on Pensions.

A bill for the relief of Titian R. Peale—Committee on the Library.

A bill for the relief of Sylvester Humphrey, and the heirs of Alexander Humphrey, deceased—Committee on Claims.

A bill for the relief of Jacob McLellan—Committee on Commerce.

BROWN, RUSSELL AND COMPANY.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill from the House of Representatives, for the relief of John S. Jones and William H. Russell, surviving partners of the firm of Brown, Russell & Co., have instructed me to report it back without amendment, and recommend its passage. I ask for its consideration now.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. Its object is to direct the Secretary of War to settle and adjust the claims of John S. Jones and William H. Russell, surviving partners of Brown, Russell & Co., for losses of oxen and wagons sustained in the transportation of military stores from Fort Leavenworth to Santa Fé, and limits the amount to be allowed to $38,800.

In the fall of 1850, an extraordinary necessity arose for forwarding military supplies from Fort Leavenworth to Santa Fé. Owing to the lateness of the season, and the risk to be encountered in such a journey in the winter time, the acting quartermaster, Brevet Major Ogden could find no persons willing, at any price, to undertake the service, except Russell, Brown, and Jones. These persons entered into a contract with Major Ogden, acting on the part of the Government, to receive the supplies at Fort Leavenworth, with suitable means of conveyance, to be approved by that officer, and transport them, "with all practicable dispatch," to Santa Fé. The contractors accordingly entered on the service with three trains, consisting of one hundred wagons, and upwards of twelve hundred head of oxen; and after a toilsome journey, and much exposure, arrived at a point about forty-five miles from Santa Fé, when they were stopped by a snow storm of extraordinary severity. Mr. Brown, one of the contractors, was in charge of the trains, and at this point left them, and went into Santa Fé, to report his progress to the officer in command there, and procure his assent to a suspension of the journey until better weather. Mr. Brown was taken ill on his arrival at Santa Fé, and died a few days after, in consequence, as was believed, of the hardships and exposures he had suffered. After waiting several days for Mr. Brown's return, the person next in charge went also to Santa Fé, and there finding his principal at the point of death, represented to the commandant of the post, Captain Easton, the condition of the trains, and the state of the weather and roads, and that it would cause great loss to endeavor then to proceed; asking, consequently, his concurrence in a temporary delay. This was refused by Captain Easton, in consequence, as is shown by his affidavit, and those of the clerks in the quartermaster's department, of the necessities of the garrison, and he demanded that the supplies be brought on immediately, and if not, that he would have them brought at the contractor's expense. The agent, consequently, returned to the encampment, and thence hastened the supplies through to Santa Fé. To effect this, it appears by the deposition of the agent, C. O. Jones, that he expended upwards of $14,000 in the purchase of forage, and in the hire of extra teams and men; and from sundry depositions, that nearly the whole number of the cattle belonging to the trains perished from the exposure. It also appears that, on the settlement of the estate of the deceased partner, (Brown,) the actual loss of the contractors in the transaction was a fraction less than $40,000. It is shown that these losses might have been avoided by a temporary delay at the point where the trains were encamped.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read a third time and passed.

TEXAS NAVY.

Mr. RUSK. I move to dispense with all prior orders, for the purpose of taking up the bill to provide for the surviving officers of the late Texan Navy.

Mr. HUNTER. I have a proposition to make to the Senate, which I hope will be accepted by all. If they will agree to take up the civil and diplomatic appropriation bill this morning, and sit it out to-day, I think we can conclude it probably by four o'clock, the usual hour of adjournment. I shall then not be in the way of gentlemen to-morrow, and they can get up what they choose.

Mr. RUSK. It is now only half past eleven o'clock.

Mr. HUNTER. I suggest that it will be an actual saving of time to finish the appropriation bill.

Mr. RUSK. What will become of my bill then?

Mr. HUNTER. The Senator may try the sense of the Senate upon it to-morrow.

Mr. RUSK. I will make a proposition to the honorable Senator from Virginia?

Mr. WALKER. I will say to the Senator from Virginia, that I think it will be impossible to finish the civil and diplomatic appropriation bill until we shall have had another Executive session. I could tell him why, but I cannot speak of such matters in open session. He will find on conference with the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, [Mr. SEBASTIAN,] that we cannot dispose of this bill until we have had an Executive session.

Mr. HUNTER. We can get so nearly through that we can see our way clear.

Mr. MASON. We have very important business to dispose of at this session. We have Executive business to attend to. This is the first appropriation bill that we have had before us. It is not yet finished, and I apprehend it will require a day or two yet to finish it. I have the kindest disposition towards the Senator from Texas, but I am opposed to taking up any business of a character which is not pressing in preference to that which is pressing.

Mr. RUSK. I introduced this bill at a very early part of the session. I have been very anxious all the time to get it up, but it has been delayed by other business. It will be useless to attempt to get it up at this session unless within a few days. It is a matter which involves questions of considerable importance, especially to the parties who are to be affected by it. I hope the Senate will take it up.

On a division,

The PRESIDING OFFICER decided that the motion was lost.

Mr. RUSK called for the yeas and nays; but they were not ordered.

SETH M. LEAVENWORTH.

Mr. RUSK. The Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, to whom was referred the petition of the legal representatives of Seth M. Leavenworth, have instructed me to report a joint resolution for their relief. I hope it will be acted upon now. It merely requires the execution of a law.

The joint resolution was read twice, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to direct the Sixth Auditor of the Treasury to examine and ascertain the amount of damages which may have been due to Leavenworth under the provisions of a joint resolution for his relief, passed August 6, 1846, to allow twelve months to his legal representatives to file proof in regard to it, and to direct that the amount found to be due, be paid to them.

Mr. CHASE. I ask for the reading of the report accompanying the joint resolution.

Mr. HUNTER. I hope it will be laid over. We have not time for that now. We should take up the civil and diplomatic appropriation bill.

Mr. RUSK. One word of explanation will settle the matter, and prevent the necessity of calling it up again. A resolution was passed in 1846, requiring the Postmaster General to settle certain damages for a violation of a contract with Seth M. Leavenworth. The Postmaster General refused to take any action on the subject. Leavenworth has since died. The report on the old case is there, and it makes a very strong case. This only requires the Auditor to examine, ascertain, and pay what damages may be due.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is the Senator from Ohio satisfied?

Mr. CHASE. Yes, sir.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

PETITION.

Mr. MALLORY presented the memorial of Charles E. Sherman, attorney in fact of Robert Harrison, and other claimants, under the ninth article of the treaty of 1819 with Spain, praying payment of the decrees in his favor, as attorney aforesaid, made under the acts to carry said treaty into effect; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

REPORTS FROM STANDING COMMITTEES.

Mr. MALLORY, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the memorial of E. A. Williams and W. D. Ligon, asking to be relieved from their liability as sureties upon the official bonds of W. H. Kennon, purser in the United States Navy, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. SLIDELL, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the memorial of Anne S. P. Chew, executrix of William W. Chew, praying to be allowed the outfit of a chargé d'affaires, during the time the testator acted in that capacity at the Court of St. Petersburg, in 1839 and 1840, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. SHIELDS, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill from the House of Representatives, authorizing the payment of balance of the property accounts between the United States and the State of New York, for military stores in the war of 1812, reported it back without amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON, from the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the motion to print the petition of John A. Sutter, praying indemnity for losses sustained in consequence of the forcible seizure of his lands and property by settlers, under the plea that they were unappropriated public lands, reported against printing the same.

He said he was instructed to say that, although it had been usual for the last four years to print memorials from State Legislatures, yet it had not been so in the case of private individuals, and therefore the committee had reported adversely to the printing of this petition.

The report was concurred in.

Mr. BUTLER, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the petition of J. H. Taliaferro and others, sureties of D. F. M. Thornton, a purser in the Navy, praying to be released from their liability, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for the relief of J. H. F. Thornton, Lawrence Taliaferro, and H. T. Taliaferro, sureties of D. M. F. Thornton, late a purser in the Navy of the United States; which was read, and passed to a second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

CANAL IN FLORIDA.

On motion by Mr. MALLORY, the report of the Secretary of War, communicating information respecting the survey of a route for a canal across the peninsula of Florida, was ordered to be printed.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Mr. SHIELDS asked and obtained the unanimous consent of the Senate to introduce a bill granting the right of way across Rock Island, in Illinois, to the Chicago and Rock Island Railroad Company; which was read, and passed to a second reading.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message was received from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McKean, Chief Clerk, announcing that they had passed a bill from the Senate supplementary to an act entitled "An act to authorize notaries public to take and certify oaths, affirmations, and acknowledgments in certain cases;" also, that they had passed a bill for the relief of Benjamin Metoyer, in which they requested the concurrence of the Senate.

Also, that they had concurred in the amendments of the Senate to the bill of the House making provision for the postal service in the State of California, and in the Territories of Oregon and Washington.

The message also announced that the House had passed an order requesting the Senate to send them a certified copy of the bill of the Senate for the relief of Thomas Butler, the original having been mislaid.

The Senate proceeded to consider the above order of the House of Representatives, and in concurrence therewith, directed the transmission to them of a certified copy of the above-named bill.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message was received from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McKean, Chief Clerk, announcing that the Speaker had signed the following enrolled bills:

An act to create and provide a pension for David Towle.

An act to increase the salaries of executive and judicial offices in Oregon, New Mexico, Washington, Utah, and Minnesota.

An act making appropriations to defray the expenses of the Cayuse war.

An act for the relief of Robert Grignon.

An act for the relief of Captain George Simpson, of Galveston.

An act for the relief of Pamela Brown, widow of Major General Jacob Brown, of the United States Army, deceased.

An act for the relief Charles Lee Jones.

An act creating a collection district in New York, to be called the district of Dunkirk, and constituting Dunkirk a port of entry, and the ports of Barcelona, Silver Creek, and Cattaraugus Creek ports of delivery.

An act making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the year ending the 30th of June, 1855.

An act making provision for the postal service in the State of California, and in the Territories of Oregon and Washington.

Which were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

During the discussion on the civil and diplomatic appropriation bill, a brief period before the adjournment, another message was received from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McKean, Chief Clerk, announcing that the Speaker had signed the following enrolled bills:

An act for the relief of James M. Goggin.

An act for the relief of the legal representatives of the late Thomas Chapman, formerly collector of the port of Georgetown, South Carolina.

An act authorizing a patent to be issued to Peter Poncin for certain lands therein described.

An act for the relief of Conrad Wheat, jr., or his legal representatives.

An act for the relief of Richard King.

An act for the relief of Richard M. Bouton, George Wright, and the widow of Marvin W. Fisher.

An act for the relief of Andrew J. Dickerhoff.

A bill for the relief of Lavinia Taylor.

An act for the relief of Samuel H. Hempstead.

An act for the relief of John W. Kelly.

An act for the relief of Sylvester T. Jerauld, assignee of the interest of Henry Richaud.

An act to ascertain and adjust the titles to certain lands in the State of Indiana.

An act for the relief of Ira Baldwin.

An act for the relief of Thomas D. Jennings.

An act for the relief of Rebecca Freeman.

An act for the relief of James Wormsley.

An act for the relief of Mary Carlton.

An act for the relief of Sarah Crandall.

An act for the relief of Joseph Campau.

An act for the relief of Manuel Hernandez.

An act for the relief of Mrs. Sally T. B. Cochran, widow of the late Lieutenant R. E. Cochran, United States Army.

An act for the relief of William Claude Jones.

An act for the relief of Joseph Gonder, jr., and John Duff.

An act for the relief of William Harris, of Georgia.

An act for the relief of James Edwards and others.

An act for the relief of Thomas Snodgrass.

An act for the relief of William Miller.

An act for the relief of the legal representatives of Samuel Prioleau, deceased.

An act for the relief of John S. Wilson.

An act for the relief of Thomas S. Russell.

An act for the relief of A. G. Bennett.

An act for the relief of the widows and orphans of the officers and seamen of the United States schooner Grampus, who were lost in that vessel, in March, 1843, near the coast of the United States.

An act to confirm a certain land claim in Louisiana, known as the Fleurian claim.

An act to incorporate the proprietors of the Glenwood Cemetery.

An act for the relief of Passed Midshipmen George P. Welsh and Clark H. Wells.

An act for the relief of William Senna Factor.

An act for the relief of the executors of the late brevet Colonel A. C. W. Fanning, of the United States Army.

An act for the relief of the representatives of Joseph Watson, deceased.

Which were then signed by the President pro tempore.

CIVIL AND DIPLOMATIC BILL.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill from the House, "making appropriations for the civil and diplomatic expenses of the Government for the year ending the 30th of June, 1855."

Mr. HAMLIN had submitted an amendment for the erection of certain custom-houses, as published yesterday.

Mr. ADAMS had moved to amend the amendment by adding to the custom-house appropriations the following proviso:

Provided, That no money shall be expended for a custom-house under the provisions of this act at any place where the customs do not equal the expense of collection.

The pending question is on this amendment to the amendment.

Mr. ADAMS. My object in offering that amendment was not to discontinue any collection district, or to remove any one from office, but it has been represented that Congress has passed various bills establishing custom districts and appointing officers where no customs are collected, or if any at all, very little. It does seem to me that if the receipts into the Treasury are not equal to the expenses of collecting, we should not go on to build custom-houses.

I admit, sir, that this is intended rather as an inquiry into this report. If we have collection districts all over the country at an expense to the Government, without any corresponding advantage, when the commerce of the country does not require such districts, it is right that we should know it. At all events, this proposition limits the expenditures to the districts where the customs amount to the expenses of collection. I am not disposed to detain the Senate, but this seems to me to be a most reasonable proposition, and one to which none can reasonably object.

Mr. HAMLIN. I hope that the amendment to the amendment will not be adopted. There are two rules, I think, which prevail in the collection of the revenue. There are two classes of officers necessary in the revenue department, one to collect revenue, the other to prevent frauds on the revenue; one to serve as a preventive force, the other as a collective force; and one is just as necessary as the other.

We all know that in a very few of the principal ports, nine tenths of all our revenue is collected; but still, if we had no preventive force at other points, the whole revenue system would be evaded. It is true, in point of fact, in some districts where little or no revenue is collected, the preventive force is necessary, and a vast number of officers are required for the keeping of records, and the charge of papers. I refer to those districts particularly composed of fishermen. They add to the wealth of the country though they do not pay duties on imports.

Mr. RUSK. So far as the appropriations are concerned for my own State, the amendment to the amendment would not affect it. I hope, however, that it will not pass. I see no good reason for it; and I see very many good reasons against it.

These custom-houses are necessary to protect the revenue. I will instance the State of Texas. Our exports there amount to $10,000,000, and upwards, annually. I have no idea that I should be under the estimate, if I should say that the imports, upon which duties are paid, and which are consumed within that State, amount to $5,000,000 annually; and, perhaps, considerably more. If so, there would be a revenue derived from the consumption by the people of that State of $200,000, or $300,000; but the amount of duties collected in her ports would fall very far short of that sum, because the goods would be imported into New York, and would go by the coastwise trade to the ports of Texas. They would do so for two reasons: In the first place, there is a larger amount of capital in the city of New York for the purpose of making these importations; and, in the second place, the accommodations offered by the custom-house there, are much greater than in any of the ports of my State.

Under such circumstances the operation of the Government is to give an additional inducement to the larger importations of the large cities, over and above the amount of capital which they have, by the facilities which the Government itself affords to those larger ports for the collection of duties, by these means adding to the expenses and additional charge for reshipment and freight along the coast to be received at Texas. It seems to me that the Government ought, at least, to put the smaller ports upon an equality in point of accommodation, because, as a matter of course, great expenses would be saved, if you made the trade as direct as possible between the producer and consumer.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. DAWSON. I desire to present an amendment to the amendment for the custom-houses. Brunswick, in the State of Georgia, has been, during this session of Congress, made a port of entry. It is one of the finest harbors in the entire South, and the nearest one to the Gulf of Mexico. There are now several canals in connection with it just being completed, and their celebration has just taken place. Then there is a railroad from that place directly over to Mobile, which will make it one of the most important ports in our part of the country. I now ask, sir, to have appropriated for the building of a custom-house at that port, $50,000. I would further state, that my friend from Vermont [Mr. Foor] is very well acquainted with its location, and knows the great importance of that place. If any appropriation should be made of this kind, an appropriation for Brunswick is indispensably necessary, for it is now a port of entry. My amendment is to add the following:

For the building of a custom-house and post office at Brunswick, in the State of Georgia, $50,000.

Mr. HAMLIN. Is that in order? Has it been recommended by a Department or reported from a committee?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Georgia inform the Chair whether the amendment to the amendment is moved by direction of a standing committee of the Senate, or in pursuance of an estimate from the head of a Department?

Mr. DAWSON. It is not moved by a committee.

Mr. HAMLIN. Or estimated for by a Department?

Mr. DAWSON. No, sir.

Mr. HAMLIN. Then it is excluded by the rule.

Mr. DAWSON. The paper which was read yesterday, from the Department, in regard to the amendment which is pending, was not an estimate made by the Department; it was merely a letter in response to the members who had asked some questions on that subject.

Mr. HAMLIN. I had the estimates in every case in my hands.

Mr. DAWSON. I can obtain one. But, Mr. President, have I not a right to move an amendment to the amendment, whether it is recommended by the committee or anybody else? I do not offer this as an original proposition, but as an amendment to an amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is of opinion that under the rule no original amendment can be made unless it be recommended by a standing committee, or be in pursuance of an estimate from a Department. The Senator from Georgia moves to amend the amendment, and the Chair supposes that the same rule applies to such amendment.

Mr. DAWSON. If I then address a letter to the Secretary of the Treasury, and obtain from him a recommendation in reply, will that make this in order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes, sir.

Mr. DAWSON. Very well, I can do that.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment of the Committee on Commerce, to which I think there can be no objection; certainly none on the part of the friends of this measure. It is one which is well guarded, and it asks for no appropriation of money at this time. I hope it will meet with general approbation. I make it as a report from a committee:

And the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and empowered to provide necessary accommodations for the courts of the United States and the officers connected with them in the district of Massachusetts, by fitting up and leasing the same until permanent accommodations can be provided, as hereinafter proposed.

And be it further enacted That the President cause to be procured, by purchase or otherwise, suitable sites for buildings to be used as court-houses and post offices in the cities of Boston, New York, Philadelphia, and Baltimore; and that he prepare and submit to Congress, at as early a day as practicable, the plans and estimates of the same, together with any contract or contracts he may make for any site or sites, which contract or contracts shall be conditional and only effective in case they are approved by Congress.

The material part of this amendment consists of the second section, which authorizes the President of the United States to make conditional contracts, and submit them to the next Congress, for suitable sites for the courts and post offices in the cities of Boston, New York, Philadelphia, and Baltimore. Provisions for most of the other States are contained in this bill. There has been recommendation after recommendation for this. Bills providing for each of these places have passed the Senate separately. There is an absolute necessity for it; much more than there is for many of the provisions of the original amendment.

The courts are literally in the streets in the city of Philadelphia. Suitable places cannot be obtained there for them. Buildings cannot be hired from individuals suitable for the post office, either in New York or Philadelphia, except at an enormous rent. The amendment which I have offered authorizes conditional contracts to be made, and they are to be submitted to Congress.

Mr. GWIN. I think the Senator had better change it, and have the estimates and propositions sent, but no contract made.

Mr. BRODHEAD. My amendment provides that the President shall submit the conditional contracts, which he may make, to the next Congress.

Mr. GWIN. It should not provide for a contract. Let us have the propositions for Congress to act upon.

Mr. BRODHEAD. The contracts are only to be conditional.

Mr. HUNTER. Is that amendment in order? There is no estimate for it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposes no appropriation at all, and the Chair knows no objection to it. It merely authorizes conditional contracts to be made.

Mr. BRIGHT. This subject has already been referred to the Committee on the Judiciary for the purpose of ascertaining whether or not the public interest would be promoted by erecting suitable buildings at the capital of every State, or at every point where the circuit and district courts of the United States are held by authority of law. No greater necessity for such building can exist at any one of the points named in the amendment to the amendment than exists at the capital of the State which I represent. As evidence of that, I will refer to the memorial of the Legislature which is now on file here, to various petitions which I have presented, and to the bill which I introduced at an early stage of the session. I do not wish to embarrass the proposition of the Senator from Pennsylvania. It may be that there are Senators who do not desire appropriations for buildings within their respective States; but I do desire it for my State; and I intend to resist this amendment, unless Indianapolis is included in it. Therefore, if the Senator insists upon his amendment, I move, as an amendment to it, that Indianapolis be inserted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is not now in order. The amendment offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania is an amendment to a pending amendment.

Mr. BRIGHT. I ask the Senator from Pennsylvania whether he will accept it?

Mr. BRODHEAD. If I do, I will have to accept every other amendment of the same kind.

Mr. BRIGHT. I understand that every Senator feels he has a right to such an amendment.

Mr. BRODHEAD. There are many places and cities not provided with post offices. The amendment reported from the Committee on Commerce makes provision for post offices in the various places mentioned in it.

Mr. CASS. In all of them?

Mr. BRODHEAD. I know that two or three of the places are provided for in the original amendment, advocated by the Senator from Michigan. Provision is made in several of them for post offices, and perhaps in all of them. And why, sir, should the city of Boston, or New York, or Philadelphia, not have suitable accommodation for post offices, when all the little towns mentioned in the original amendment are provided for? There is more business done in one day, in the post office at New York, than is done in all the post offices provided for in the original amendment. I do not wish to say anything that will damage that amendment, but I say this for the purpose of showing the absolute necessity for the provision made in the amendment which I have offered.

Mr. WALKER. For my life I cannot see why there should be opposition to this amendment. Here is a proposition to submit to the President of the United States the power to contract for these buildings at places where they are a matter of absolute necessity.

Mr. BRODHEAD. He is to make conditional contracts, which are to be submitted to Congress.

Mr. WALKER. They are to be conditional contracts which are to be submitted to Congress, and passed upon and ratified or rejected by it. While it is deemed expedient and proper that appropriations should be made for the other places in the United States mentioned in the original amendment, I cannot for my life see why this should not be done for the places named in the amendment to the amendment. In one case they have no court-house, and in the other the apartments are very inconvenient. I believe it is so in both places.

A SENATOR. Where?

Mr. WALKER. Philadelphia and Boston.

Mr. BRODHEAD. They have none in Philadelphia.

Mr. ROCKWELL and Mr. SUMNER. And none in Boston.

Mr. WALKER. I cannot see the reason for the opposition to the proposition. I shall support it cheerfully.

Mr. BUTLER. It is but just to the Committee on the Judiciary, of which I am chairman, that I should say a word here. Originally a proposition came to the committee from the city of Boston, asking that some arrangements should be made, by the Secretary of the Interior, I think, to afford them some place in which to hold the United States courts. Under the circumstances, it was thought reasonable that in Boston, where there had been such opposition made to the Federal courts, we should have some permanent place in which the Federal judge could hold his court. Out of that grew the amendment, in substance, which is now proposed. It has been the subject of conversation before the committee, and I give notice to the Senate that it will be the commencement of a system of having Federal court-houses in every State of the Union. I do not know but that it may be right; but I can say that this is not the proper bill, nor this the proper occasion to decide upon such measures.

Mr. BRODHEAD. Whether there is an absolute necessity or not for having Federal court-houses in all the States I do not know, but certainly when we are paying $6,000, or $8,000, or $10,000 for places in which to hold the courts in New York, and the same amount in Philadelphia, and perhaps the same in Boston, and $10,000 rent for a place, the lease of which will soon expire, for a post office, and when we are obliged to pay $6,000 or $8,000 a year rent for a place in which to hold the post office in Philadelphia, it becomes a question whether it would not be sound economy to make purchases at once, and not be taking leases of buildings which afford very imperfect accommodation. If there is any necessity for the original amendment, there is great necessity for this.

The original amendment makes an appropriation of money from the Treasury; the one which I have offered directs the President of the United States to make conditional contracts, and that is the proper way to do it. If we were to direct him merely to submit propositions, one set in Philadelphia or New York would say this is the best site, these are the best proposals; another set would advocate other sites and other proposals. You must leave it as a question of administration to make conditional contracts, and submit the same to Congress. That is the best way. We shall then have the contract in form before us. It is, therefore, sound economy, it is right in form; and certainly, although this bill is pretty large, although it may be somewhat questionable whether it will ever be sustained in a committee of conference, which I think very doubtful, it is proper to put this in. If there is any necessity existing in Indiana, as indicated by the honorable Senator, [Mr. BRIGHT,] I have no objection to include Indianapolis. I therefore put "Indianapolis" in the amendment after the word "Boston."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania modifies his amendment by inserting "Indianapolis."

Mr. BRODHEAD. I have received notice from gentlemen around me which induces me to withdraw the modification. I should be willing to modify it, but I cannot obtain the consent of the committee.

Mr. BRIGHT. I have not been resisting this proposition on the ground that I do not think it necessary; but I insist on my amendment, believing it to be quite as just as the other. If the Senator will accept it, I will go with him for his proposition.

Mr. COOPER. I think the amendment proposed by my colleague should meet with the favor of the Senate. I admit that the suggestions of the Senator from South Carolina have a great deal of force; but inasmuch as provision is made in the bill for the purchase of sites, and the erection of buildings for these purposes at various points, I cannot conceive why it is improper that the President should be clothed with power to make conditional contracts, and to submit them to Congress at the next session for its action. It seems to me that it is proper.

I do not know what the condition of Boston or New York is in this respect, not having made inquiry into it, but I know what the condition of Philadelphia is. We have no convenient edifice for the post office; we have no edifice at all in which the courts of the United States can be held. Our post office is in a building which is very inconvenient for the purpose, and unsafe in many respects. There is not the necessary amount of room for the clerical force which is engaged in assorting and distributing the mails. I think, therefore, it is highly convenient and proper that the amendment of my colleague should be made.

I have no objection at all to the amendment which is proposed by the Senator from Indiana, if it be in order. I have no objection to it if there is a necessity for a court-house at the place to which it alludes. I shall go cheerfully with the Senator to put it in the bill as an amendment, when it may be in order. I have no objection to it, but I do not see why the amendment of my colleague should not prevail.

Mr. BRIGHT. I understand the Senator from Pennsylvania accepts my modification.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He first accepted it, but then withdrew his acceptance.

Mr. BRIGHT. But he now accepts it.

Mr. BRODHEAD. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Then the amendment to the amendment will be so modified.

Mr. TOUCEY. The State which I, in part, represent, has as great a necessity for a provision of this kind as any other State, but I shall not embarrass this bill by moving an amendment. I deem the proposition which is embraced in the amendment offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania to be one of the highest importance. Sir, how is it possible that the judicial power of this country can be maintained without suitable accommodations in the States, with questions arising which involve local hostility? And in what manner can the laws of the country be executed without a place of refuge where your courts of justice may sit? Why, sir, in Boston at this time, you have no place, in Philadelphia you have none; you are dependent altogether upon accidental circumstances. This great Government with an overflowing Treasury, with mighty powers, has not yet provided itself with suitable buildings in these places to administer justice. It is well known that in some of the States we have already been threatened with exclusion from the court-houses of the States; though it has not been successful.

I deem the policy of this proposition to be a general policy, which ought to be entered upon, and carried out, of erecting permanent court-houses in every State of the Union. It is due to the sovereign people. It is due to the efficiency of the laws. I am aware that upon this bill, you cannot enter upon a general policy of that kind, but I would go to the extent of the pressing exigency which is provided for by the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania. Without, therefore, embarrassing it, or extending the number of appropriations, I hope that the amendment to the amendment will prevail.

Mr. BAYARD. I should cheerfully vote for this amendment, if I did not know that its object could be reached by a bill which passed the Senate in the early part of the session, and subsequently, if I am not incorrect, was returned by the House to us, with an amendment, and referred, I believe, to the Committee on the Judiciary. The bill which passed the Senate provided accommodations for the courts at Boston, which, with the evidence before the committee, we supposed were essentially necessary. When it went to the House, it was amended by providing only for temporary accommodation in Boston, and authorizing the President to procure sites for the courts in Philadelphia, New York, and Boston.

With that amendment it was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. That is a very appropriate bill. It will pass by amending it in the mode suggested, to which I should cheerfully assent, by adding Indianapolis, with the restriction of making the contracts conditional, on procuring the sites. I think that would answer the purpose. I think, therefore, there is no necessity for putting it in an appropriation bill, to which certainly it does not belong. I will go for that bill when it is reported back, as I suppose it will be, without hesitation. I think we have a guarantee that it will pass the House, because they have already passed it giving the general, absolute discretion to the President to procure the sites, without any restriction as to the price being conditional.

Mr. RUSK. As a separate measure I should vote for the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania; but as an amendment to the amendment which is pending, I shall vote against it. The Committee on Commerce have submitted an amendment, which has been estimated for and recommended by the Treasury Department, and here is a different amendment altogether offered to it. Each should stand upon its own merits; but here comes in a proposition for a post office at New York, another at Boston, another at Indianapolis, and I understand there are several other propositions of the same kind.

The result will be to defeat the whole proposition. There are some persons who would vote for the custom-houses, which are recommended by the Secretary of the Treasury as necessary, but would vote against this proposition; there are certain others who would vote for this proposition, but against the other. It is a sort of log rolling which I do not think is right. Let every tub stand upon its own bottom. Let us vote on the merits of the proposition which is before us on the recommendation of the Treasury Department, and if it is adopted or rejected, let the other be offered as a separate amendment.

There is another custom-house and post office which should be provided for—one in the city of Savannah. It is a very strong case, and one that has great merit in it; but I shall not embarrass this proposition by offering it at this time. I shall vote against attaching the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania to the original amendment.

Mr. HUNTER. I hope we shall get a vote. I am anxious, and the Senate must be anxious to have the bill disposed of to-day. I merely rise to ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. STUART. At an early day in the session the Senate, by courtesy, allowed the Senator from Pennsylvania to introduce a bill and have it immediately acted on for the purpose of providing accommodations for the United States courts, and for the post office in the city of Philadelphia. The bill went to the House, and has come back here with sundry amendments providing similarly for other places, and the whole subject, I think, was referred a day or two since to the Committee on the Judiciary. Now, sir, I am decidedly opposed to having so many strings to a bow. That bill has passed and is in the hands of a committee of this House. If they report in favor of agreeing to the amendments of the House, and the Senate concur in their report, the bill will become the law of the land, and will provide for New York, Boston, and Philadelphia. Now, to come in and propose to put that upon an appropriation bill, after what has been done, is a species of legislation which I cannot sanction. For that reason I shall vote against the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. BUTLER. I concur in every word that has been said by the honorable Senator from Michigan. There is no use for the committees to take into consideration these separate measures if they can be discussed and ingrafted upon an appropriation bill. I had some difficulty myself in concurring with the majority of my committee, in regard to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill which has been referred to by the Senator from Michigan; but I have rather come to the conclusion that what is proposed by that can be well done without any danger; but if that bill should be passed in the form in which it has passed the House, it will come before the Senate under the common responsibility of having passed through the ordeal of the judgment of a committee. But when you put such propositions upon an appropriation bill, one after another, and multiply them as you may to embrace all the States, and I do not know but that it will end in that, I cannot agree to it. I cannot consent to legislate in this inconsiderate way without having the common guarantees of the consideration of our committees.

Mr. JOHNSON. I do not understand, Mr. President, from my friend from Indiana, [Mr. BRIGHT,] that there is anything peculiar in the case of Indianapolis; but when that is inserted, it devolves, in some measure, a responsibility upon the Representative of every State where there is insufficient accommodation for the United States courts, to propose a similar measure for his State. In my own State, there are two judicial districts, which are insufficiently provided for; and I know that if provision shall be put in this bill for a court-house at Indianapolis, it will be expected that I should offer a proposition to commence similar buildings in my State. I have no objection to the proposition of my friend from Indiana being added to the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania; and in regard to places in my own State, I have made up my mind that I will not offer an amendment for them, but will let the question be taken on the amendment as it stands; but I shall most certainly, under the circumstances, vote against the whole amendment; for I believe that whenever we commence such buildings, where there are not peculiar circumstances demanding them, the rule will be fixed and firmly established, and we shall have to build court-houses in every judicial district within the limits of the United States. Do not offer a proposition to provide for these in my own State, for the simple reason that I am not disposed to embarrass the business of the Senate; but I doubt the propriety, and I do not see the necessity, of constructing court-houses in every judicial district; for it must result in that. All I can say is, that I feel constrained to vote against the whole amendment.

Mr. TOOMBS. Mr. President, I have a few words to say in reply to the answer made yesterday by the Senator from Maine [Mr. HAMLIN] to my remarks then, as to his amendment for the building of new custom-houses. The Senator's answer was not as satisfactory to me, as it seemed to be to himself. I urged that custom-houses on the western waters, on the tributaries of the Mississippi, were not necessary. The only answer he gave to that—and he seemed to think it was perfectly satisfactory—was this: He appealed to the Senator from Virginia to know whether his constituents at Wheeling could go all the way to New Orleans to pay duties on articles imported for them. Why, sir, it is done at every town and village in the United States where there is not a custom-house, and which is equally remote from a custom-house as Wheeling is from New Orleans. The great principle should be that the Government should collect the revenue at the most convenient points; and the very fact which the Senator from Maine stated that they have to do everything at New Orleans but pay the duties, is conclusive that it is unnecessary to establish these custom-houses, instead of supporting the argument which he makes in their favor. The goods pass by New Orleans and have to be entered there, and everything which is to be done with them is done there, except the payment of the duties. There is no reason but the personal convenience of the persons living on these waters, why they should not pay the duties at the ports where the goods are entered from the sea. No ship from the sea can go up to Wheeling. The goods are unladen at New Orleans. They are put on other vessels, and scattered from there all over the interior of the country. The building of custom-houses at these points can be for no purpose in the world, but first to build up a number of offices under the Government, and, in the second place, for the purpose of bringing in a large expenditure for the erection of custom-houses. As I said yesterday, all the business to be performed in most of these custom-houses can be done in a building, ten by twelve. There is no necessity in the world for the erection of these large buildings. It is nothing but a profligate waste of money.

The gentleman used an argument in reference to the northeastern coast, that it was necessary to build custom-houses there in order to preserve the records of the Government. Why, sir, I take it as a general rule that the record property of the people throughout the United States, of the largest counties and municipalities, is kept in buildings or rooms not twenty feet square. Here it is proposed to erect buildings none of which are to cost less than $10,000, and some of which are to amount to $80,000 or $100,000, even at points where there may be little or no revenue. The Senator says that at such points it is necessary to keep bills of sale and ships' registers and licenses. Sir, there is nothing necessary for our ships, except the evidence of nationality to be carried in the ships themselves, showing their right to sail under our flag. I can see no necessity for building large houses to contain records to show on which side of the St. John's a vessel's keel was built. Why, sir, I take it, that in every county in the Senator's own State, the records are kept in some side room in the court-house, containing all the titles to land throughout the State; but here we are to go on, and erect magnificent buildings, after we have done without them for seventy years, at every port of entry, whether there is commerce there or not, at an expense ultimately, perhaps, of $70,000 or $80,000 each.

The idea is presented that we should vote for it because Mr. Guthrie has recommended it. I know he has recommended it, but I think a more profligate and wasteful recommendation for expenditure never emanated from any Department. I suppose that officer, as well as his chief, has forgotten the inaugural address, in which he said, or intimated, that unless he could reduce the public expenditures below the rate at which they had been for several years past, his own administration would be a lamentable failure. Sir, does that fate remain to be written? When has a Congress met from 1775 to this hour, in which such wasteful extravagance, both as to amounts and measures, has characterized it, as the one now sitting in both ends of this Capitol. Look at the amount of appropriations for this year! I think it is very likely they will exceed $70,000,000.

Another idea seems to be that we may vote this sum because we have the money now in the Treasury. In this gentlemen start on an error. We have not a dollar. I know it has been alleged that because of a full Treasury we are paying interest on our debts nine or ten years ahead; and that was given as a reason to induce us to pass, the other day, a proposition to pay sixty per cent. on a certain portion of our debts which have not yet accrued. But, sir, we owe more money than we have cash in the Treasury of the United States; and I do not consider a nation or a man to be overrun with money who has outstanding obligations greater than the cash he can command.

This has been the excuse for pouring out the Treasury at every end, and for every purpose.

I rely on the general remarks which I made yesterday. I say, in the first place, that custom-houses are unnecessary at these places. Besides, the ports of entry may be changed, and so with the places for the sessions of the district courts at different places. Population concentrates at some particular place, and you are continually changing the courts from one town to another. How, then, are you going to erect permanent buildings for them? At some places, like New York, and Boston, and Philadelphia, where they are permanent, and likely to be so, it may be necessary. But suppose you build your court-houses, and then change the place of holding the courts, can you take up and move a court-house? It is very easy to rent buildings which will accommodate the courts; and there are few places in the United States, where the supreme courts of the States are held, where it is not perfectly easy to obtain buildings for this purpose which are vacant three fourths of the time. That is the way in which you have got along for the last seventy years. Why can you not do so now?

I am willing to admit that at particular points custom-houses are necessary, and I wish them to be adequate for all purposes; and there are places where court-houses are necessary, and I am willing to vote for them. But each case must stand on its own necessity. I am not willing to agree to the doctrine of the Secretary of the Treasury, and the chairman of the Committee on Commerce, that we must erect public buildings at a cost of $20,000, or $80,000, or $100,000, or $300,000, or $400,000 at every port of entry, whether there be any commerce there or not. I believe the expression of Mr. Guthrie is, that we should have them at those ports, whether there be little or no commerce there or not. It is said that it is necessary, because ship-building may be carried on there. That may be so in the Senator's State, but it does not apply to other custom-houses provided for by the amendment. Think, for instance, of the idea of building ships at Wheeling, or Pittsburg! I believe steamboats are built at Pittsburg to a large extent, and I do not know whether they are built at Wheeling or not; but the idea that we must erect buildings at ports where there is no commerce, with the idea of preserving ships' papers. I take it, is one of the wildest bases on which we can make appropriations of the public money.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania, to the amendment offered by the Senator from Maine, from the Committee on Commerce.

MR. MALLORY. Is that amendment now subject to amendment?

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. It is not. It is itself an amendment to an amendment.

MR. MALLORY. Then, before the question is taken on it, I will ask the Senator from Pennsylvania, who proposed it, to accept the amendment which I now hold in my hand, which is in the same words as a bill that has been reported by the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary. It is a small bill for the erection of a court-house at Key West, Florida. It was presented at the earnest representations and suggestions of the judge of the district court of the United States for that district, and at the request of the members of the bar. They have renewed that representation.

Now, while the yellow fever is prevailing in that district, they pronounce it dangerous to health to hold the court in the old court-house; but that is the best building they can obtain, and it is rented, I think, at $360 a year. The United States have already paid for that court house over $1,200. This proposition is in accordance with the estimates of the Department. The judge and the bar unite in a recommendation for an appropriation to enable the Department to erect a new court-house, as a suitable one cannot be rented in the entire district. The Committee on the Judiciary reported it as an independent measure. It proposes but a small appropriation—$8,000.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. Badger.) I would suggest to the Senator from Florida that it is not competent for him to move any amendment which proposes an appropriation. The amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania does not propose any appropriation; it is to authorize the President to make certain inquiries.

MR. MALLORY. The proposition which I hold in my hand is a bill reported from the Committee on the Judiciary.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Senator is authorized by the Committee on the Judiciary to move it as an amendment, when the other is disposed of, it will be perfectly competent for him to do so.

MR. BRODHEAD. If I felt so disposed, I could not accept this, for the reason which has been stated by the Chair.

MR. DOUGLAS. I will present a case, though, which I think the Senator from Pennsylvania can accept, and which I have no doubt he will take great pleasure in accepting. It is to add "Springfield, Illinois," after "Indianapolis, Indiana." It is the seat of government of that State, and the place of holding the United States courts.

MR. BRODHEAD. I believe I cannot modify my amendment now, except by unanimous consent, as the yeas and nays have been ordered.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. Unanimous consent is not necessary. The Senator can modify the amendment by the consent of the Senate.

MR. DODGE, of Iowa. I am sure it will afford my friend from Pennsylvania equal pleasure to insert "Iowa city, in the State of Iowa."

MR. DOUGLAS. One at a time.

MR. BROWN. I should like to have Jackson, Mississippi, also included.

MR. BRODHEAD. I am like the man in the almanac, pointed at all round; but I have this remark to make to all my friends: I regret that I yielded to my friend from Indiana, though he made a very strong case. I think that Boston, New York, Philadelphia, and Baltimore ought to stand together. There is a great necessity for these buildings there; and there is a difference between a city with five hundred thousand inhabitants and a small place like Springfield, in Illinois. I must therefore decline further to modify my amendment.

MR. BRIGHT. I know this body is just, and I am never unwilling to trust it upon any proper occasion. I see that many of my friends feel that I have embarrassed this single proposition. I do not desire to stand in that attitude. My object in offering my amendment was not to embarrass the original proposition, but it was to carry out, in good faith, what I regarded as my duty; but I will not run the risk of hazarding the good will of gentlemen here by insisting on my amendment in view of the peculiar state of things. I presume the Senator from Illinois will insist on inserting Springfield, if Indianapolis be retained?

MR. DOUGLAS. I cannot insist, because I asked to have it put in as a favor, as it is not in order for me to move it as an amendment.

MR. BRIGHT. I presume the Senator from Iowa will insist?

MR. DODGE, of Iowa. No, sir.

MR. BRIGHT. Will the honorable Senator from Illinois?

MR. DOUGLAS. I do not wish to make any bargains here. This is my view of the subject: We must determine whether or not we shall erect court-houses for the district courts of the United States. The case presented at Springfield, Illinois, is precisely like that at Indianapolis, Indiana. It is the seat of government of the State, and the place where the United States courts are held, and where they will probably meet in all time to come; or at least it is one of the places where they will continue to meet. You rent buildings there now, and are paying rent for them, but they are inconvenient buildings. The question is, whether or not we are going to carry out the policy of erecting buildings, instead of renting them, at those points, the capitals of the States, where the courts will be permanent. If it is to be done elsewhere, I must ask that the same justice be extended to my own State as towards others. Hence I do not feel at liberty to waive it, in order to carry through other appropriations.

MR. BRIGHT. That is precisely the condition of things in the capital of the State which I have the honor in part to represent. We have no building there but one which is rented for this purpose, and that is a very inconvenient one, and not at all adapted to the wants of the courts. I am very sorry that the matter has assumed such a shape that I cannot insist on inserting it in connection with the four great points named in the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania—

Baltimore, Philadelphia, New York, and Boston. A greater necessity may exist there for these buildings; and I rise for the purpose of saying that I will not embarrass the proposition of my friend from Pennsylvania, if it has that effect, and I therefore ask leave to withdraw my amendment to insert Indianapolis, being satisfied that when I bring it up as a bill by itself, I shall get every vote in the body in favor of it.

MR. TOUCEY. I wish only to say that at the four points which are mentioned in the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania, the courts of the United States are in permanent session from year's end to year's end, and that is the reason why that proposition should go through without making provision for other cases.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. Do I understand the Senator from Pennsylvania as proposing to withdraw the modification which was made at the suggestion of the Senator from Indiana?

MR. BRODHEAD. Yes, sir.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania asks permission to modify his amendment by striking out "Indianapolis."

Permission was granted; and the question was taken by yeas and nays upon agreeing to the amendment to the amendment, as proposed originally by Mr. Brodhead, and resulted—yeas 19, nays 24; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Badger, Bell, Benjamin, Bright, Brodhead, Clayton, Cooper, Fessenden, Fish, Houston, Mallory, Pearce, Pratt, Rockwell, Sumner, Thomson of New Jersey, Toucey, Walker, and Weller—19.

NAYS—Messrs. Atchison, Bayard, Brown, Butler, Dawson, Dodge of Wisconsin, Dodge of Iowa, Douglas, Evans, Fitzpatrick, Foot, Gillette, Hamlin, Hunter, James, Jones of Tennessee, Mason, Pettit, Rusk, Shields, Slidell, Stuart, Toombs, and Wade—24.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

MR. HUNTER. I now ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment of the Committee on Commerce. I hope we shall have a vote on it, and dispose of the bill to-day.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands the whole four sections offered by the Senator from Maine, including custom-houses and marine hospitals, to be proposed as one amendment.

MR. HAMLIN. Yes, sir.

The question being taken on the amendment by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 31, nays 16; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Badger, Bell, Benjamin, Cass, Chase, Clayton, Cooper, Dodge of Wisconsin, Dodge of Iowa, Douglas, Fessenden, Fish, Foot, Gillette, Gwin, Hamlin, Houston, James, Mallory, Rockwell, Rusk, Shields, Slidell, Stuart, Sumner, Thomson of New Jersey, Toucey, Wade, Walker, Weller, and Williams—31.

NAYS—Messrs. Atchison, Bayard, Bright, Brodhead, Brown, Butler, Dawson, Evans, Fitzpatrick, Hunter, Johnson, Jones of Iowa, Jones of Tennessee, Mason, Pratt, and Toombs—16.

MR. HAMLIN. I am also directed by the Committee on Commerce to propose to amend the bill by striking out in the proviso in reference to the erection of custom-houses the words:

"And until the State in which such building is to be completed, shall, in due form and in a manner that shall bind such State, release and surrender to the United States jurisdiction over the site of such building."

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. That amendment has already been made on the motion of the Senator from Missouri, [Mr. Geyer.]

MR. HAMLIN. Then I have but one further amendment to offer from the Committee on Commerce. I find that the House have included in the bill, appropriations for the completion of every marine hospital in process of construction with one exception, and that is in my own State. It was omitted, I apprehend, by mistake. There is in the annual estimates submitted, by the Department an estimate of $50,000 for the marine hospital at Portland. There is also in the same estimates an item of $50,000 for sick and disabled seamen at Cincinnati, and the Secretary of the Treasury has also recommended a small sum, $5,000, for the temporary relief of sick and disabled seamen at St. Marks, Florida. I therefore propose to add, after the appropriation for marine hospitals, the following:

For prosecuting operations on the marine hospital at Portland, in the State of Maine, $50,000.

To provide a suitable building as marine hospital at St. Marks, Florida, $5,000.

To provide accommodations for sick and disabled seamen at Cincinnati, Ohio, $50,000; and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to use such part of said sum for the purchase of a site for a marine hospital at said place as he may deem expedient.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAMLIN. I have no further amendment; but my colleague on the committee, the Senator from Michigan, [Mr. STUART,] has one more.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will suggest, before that amendment is offered, that the question should be taken on an amendment which was moved by the Committee on the Library, which is to insert at the end of the appropriations for the library of Congress, the following:

To enable the Joint Committee on the Library of Congress to replace the seventh volumes, and atlas of the Exploring Expedition, destroyed by the burning of the library, and the plates and other property destroyed by fire in Philadelphia, including binding, $9,002 75.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STUART. I am instructed by the Committee on Commerce to offer an amendment to this bill to provide for life-boats upon Lake Michigan. A memorial was presented to the Secretary of the Treasury, and by him referred to the Committee on Commerce, asking an appropriation for this purpose. I shall not detain the Senate by stating now, what I presume every Senator knows, in respect to the loss of life and property on that lake.

Mr. HUNTER. I would suggest that this ought to go into the light-house bill. I understand it is for light-boats.

Mr. STUART. No, sir, life-boats, surf-boats. It is probably known to everybody that the loss of life and property is probably greater on that lake—for the want of things of this sort—than on any other equal amount of coast in the United States, from peculiar causes connected with the direction of the wind, and the range of the lake. It is not a case of occasional occurrence; but it occurs annually, and I may add, occurs frightfully. They ask for the construction of some twenty-five boats, to be located at the places which are indicated in the amendment. Upon consulting with the Secretary of the Treasury, I find that to purchase the boats and put them at the points where they are to be used, will cost about $500 a piece, so that the appropriation will only amount to $12,500, which will put the people of that lake in a condition to save not only an immense amount of property, but to prevent a frightful loss of life which occurs every year. The amendment is to insert:

For the purchase of metallic surf-boats to rescue lives and property, $12,500; to be located at each of the following points, to wit:

On the east side of Lake Michigan, at Michigan City, one, New Buffalo one, St. Joseph one, Kalamazoo one, Manistee one, Grand River one, Muskegon one, White River one, Pier Marquette one, and South Black River one; and on the west side of Lake Michigan, at Chicago, two, at Kenosha one, at Milwaukee one, at Sheboygan one, at Death's Door one, at Two Rivers one, at Manitowish one, Waukegan one, Racine one, Port Washington one, Washington harbor one, South Manitowish Island one, Kalley's harbor one, and at Calumet one; to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall also adopt such measures as shall be necessary for the preservation of such boats.

Mr. RUSK. I regard this as one of the most meritorious amendments which has been offered. We have supplied these life-boats on the Atlantic coast, and made liberal appropriations for them. I think it is nothing but just and right to provide for them on Lake Michigan.

Mr. HAMLIN. I desire to say that all the points designated along the Atlantic coast at this time are such as have been designated, after survey, by the Treasury Department. The amendment proposes to designate certainly the points. Probably they are the best points; but I think it would be better to add, at the end of the points named, the words "or at such points as shall be designated by the Secretary of the Treasury."

Mr. STUART. I have no objection to that.

The amendment, as thus modified, was agreed to.

Mr. SLIDELL. I perceive that, according to the phraseology of an amendment which has been adopted, on the motion of the Committee on Finance, as to a boarding station at the southwest pass of the Mississippi, exclusive jurisdiction is required to be ceded by the State of Louisiana. That clearly was not the intention of the Committee, and I therefore move to strike out the words "the consent of the Legislature of Louisiana obtained to said purchase," and insert in lieu of them "the release of such land from taxation or assessment of any kind," so as to require the Legislature to consent to release the land from taxation and assessment.

Mr. HUNTER. There is no objection to that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HUNTER. I have now a few amendments to offer from the Committee on Finance. The first is to correct a clerical error in the appropriation for lighting the President's House, and Capitol, and the public grounds "around the Executive offices on Pennsylvania avenue." I move to strike out the word "on" and insert "and."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HUNTER. I have another amendment in the appropriation for salaries of the officers of the Mint: to insert after "assistant assayer" the words "assistant melter and refiner;" and to increase the appropriation from $23,400 to $24,900. This is according to a subsequent estimate.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HUNTER. I have another small amendment to offer: to insert at the end of the appropriations for the Indian office the following:

For fuel and lights, and necessary fixtures for warming and lighting the rooms occupied by the office of Indian Affairs, $1,616.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLAYTON. I am instructed by the Committee on Foreign Relations to move an amendment to provide for the compensation of the services of William Hunter, commissioned to act as Secretary of State in the absence and sickness of Mr. Webster. Only the sum of $1,500 is proposed to be appropriated to pay that gentleman for acting as Secretary of State. I will briefly state that the act of 1792 authorized the President of the United States to commission the person who was commissioned in this case to perform temporarily the duties of the Secretary of State under such circumstances. Among the papers which were sent to the committee were the commissions of the President to William Hunter to act as Secretary during the absence of Mr. Webster. Some years ago it was customary to pay compensation for services of this description without applying to Congress for a special act. I have before me a number of cases of that sort, but I will not cite them unless the position is controverted.

Mr. HUNTER. I only ask the judgment of the Chair as to whether the rule does not exclude the amendment. If the rule does not exclude it, I have nothing to say.

Mr. CLAYTON. Of course this case is within the rule, because it is to carry out an existing law. It is to carry out the act of 1792, and on that ground the Senator will see at once that it is not liable to the objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has very great doubts whether this amendment can be received under the rules of the Senate.

Mr. CLAYTON. It is to pay for services directed to be performed by the act of 1792. This is an appropriation to carry out that act; and if the Chair will look at the rule, he will see that an appropriation for the purpose of carrying out an existing law is excepted from the objections which are made to amendments of this description.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands the rule to be that amendments proposing additional appropriations must be for the purpose of carrying out an existing law or treaty, or moved by the direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate, or in pursuance of a recommendation from the head of a Department; but no amendment can be moved in any of these cases for the purpose of allowing or discharging a private claim.

Mr. CLAYTON. This is not, I think, a private claim. It is to pay a salary for performing services which have been directed by a former law. It is therefore exempted from the operation of the rule.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is satisfied that it is not a private claim, but that it is admissible under the rule.

Mr. CLAYTON. Now, sir, I will proceed to state that formerly compensation for services of this description was paid out of the Treasury, without coming to Congress for a special act. I hold in my hand an account of the receipts and expenditures for 1815; and whoever will take the pains to refer to them, will see a number of cases. I will refer briefly to but one or two of them to show the justice of this claim, and to prove that it is such a one as has been commonly paid without even appropriation by Congress.

Mr. HUNTER. I understand the Chair to decide the amendment to be in order. The only objection I raised was the point of order. I did not object to the merits of the amendment.

Mr. CLAYTON. Then there is no objection. The claim is a plain one, and I have nothing to say. The amendment is to insert, after the appropriation for extra clerk hire of the State Department, the following:

For services of William Hunter, commissioned as acting Secretary of State during the absence of Secretary Webster, for services as such acting Secretary in 1851, 1852, and 1853, $1,500.

Mr. WELLER. I move to amend that amendment by adding the proposition which I hold in my hand. It makes provision for similar services rendered by the present Secretary of the Senate. The Senate will see at once that it is based precisely on the same grounds. It is to add:

For paying to Asbury Dickens the difference between the compensation of head of a Department and chief clerk of a Department, for the time he acted as Secretary of State or Secretary of the Treasury, by an appointment of General Jackson, to be ascertained by the proper accounting officers, a sum not exceeding $2,500.

Mr. CLAYTON. I have no objection to that. It is perfectly just, and I accept it as part of my amendment.

The amendment, as modified, was adopted.

Mr. CLAYTON. I have another amendment, to carry out an existing law, which has passed at this session. I am authorized to report it by the Committee on Retrenchment. It will be recollected that when the bill providing compensation for the clerks in the different Departments was under consideration, I put to the honorable Senator from Mississippi, [Mr. ADAMS,] who is chairman of that committee, the question whether the bill, as it stood, made provision for the clerks in the State Department, as it did for the clerks in the other Departments. I held at the time in my hand an amendment which I intended to offer, in case there was any doubt about it. He replied that there was no doubt that the committee had considered the subject, and they intended that the clerks in the State Department should be placed on precisely the same foundation with the others. For that reason I did not press the amendment. I thought with him, upon examining the bill, that the provision was clear, and that all the clerks would be paid alike. But after the law was passed at this session, a difference of opinion arose at the other end of the avenue about it. The Attorney General gave an opinion that the clerks in the State Department were entitled as the clerks in the other Departments were. That, however, was not the opinion of the very able gentleman who is the First Comptroller of the Treasury; and the end of it was, that though these clerks were intended, and it was so expressly stated at the time of the passage of the bill, to be placed upon the same footing as the others, they are not so in fact. Now, I want to carry out what we all supposed and knew were the provisions of that act.

I want the Senator from Virginia to understand distinctly the ground on which I put this amendment. It is to carry out the provisions of an existing law. I propose to carry out the provisions of a law passed at this session, as he knows. It is to provide for paying the clerks in the State Department the same compensation as is paid to others, for the fiscal year ending the 30th of June last.

Mr. HUNTER. In regard to that, I would say that it would hardly be proper to go back for the purpose of making up back pay to these clerks. It would be difficult to do it. Some of the clerks in the State Department get more than any in the new classification, others get less. The reason they were excluded was, that at the time of the former classification, Mr. Webster, as Secretary of State, addressed a letter to the Committee on Finance, requesting that his clerks should not be included in the classification. Since then, the present Secretary has asked that they shall be brought in, and accordingly they have been brought in agreeably to his estimate and recommendation. That is as much as we can do. We cannot go back for the purpose of equalizing, because there are different grades of salaries, and what would you do with those who receive more than any under the existing classification? We cannot disturb the past, I think, without raising some difficulty.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would suggest, before the matter is further discussed, that the amendment be read.

It was read. It is to insert, at the end of the appropriations for the State Department, the following:

That the act approved the 22d April, 1854, entitled "An act to amend the third section of 'An act making appropriations for the civil and diplomatic expenses of Government for the year ending the 30th of June, 1854,' and for other purposes," shall be so construed as, in regard to increased compensation for the fiscal year ending the 30th of June last, to include within its provisions the clerks of the Department of State; and that the chief clerk in that Department shall receive the same compensation as the chief clerks in the other Departments of the Government for the last fiscal year; and that the money necessary to carry these provisions into effect, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. CLAYTON. I think there can be no objection to that. It is to provide for these clerks for the last fiscal year. That is all. It carries out the intention of the existing law which was misconstrued at the other end of the avenue. If the Senator from Virginia makes any objection, I shall insist upon bringing forward the amendment when the Senator from Mississippi is here. He understands more fully all the facts connected with it than I do; but unfortunately he is now out of his seat.

Mr. HUNTER. I do not wish to attempt more than we can carry in this bill. There is already liberal provision made for these clerks, under the estimate and recommendation of the Secretary of State, and I think we ought to stop there. I believe the Senator will find that there is difficulty in carrying out his plan, owing to the difference in the grades of compensation, of which I have spoken. You cannot compensate them as you can the classified clerks, because of the different grades of compensation.

Mr. CLAYTON. I think there would be no difficulty whatever. It is due from me to say that most of these clerks served under me while I was in the State Department, and a more faithful set of officers I never knew. Beyond all doubt they perform quite as much labor as any other clerks, and probably much more. The fact was, that in consequence of the small force of the Department, many of them were often called upon by me, and, as I understand, by my successors, to act as amanuenses and clerks, to perform duties not attached to their particular positions in the Department; and they did perform, consequently, extra duties, for which they received nothing. All they ask is to be put on the same footing with the clerks of the other Departments. It is clearly an act of justice.

Mr. HUNTER. I thought this was offered from the Committee on Foreign Relations, but I learn not. How, then, does it come in order? Is it from any committee?

Mr. CLAYTON. From the Committee on Retrenchment.

Mr. BRIGHT. I should like to have the honorable Senator explain how it happens that this proposition to increase the compensation of these clerks was not before the Committee on Retrenchment raised for that purpose, and why they did not recommend the increase?

Mr. CLAYTON. I was unfortunate in not being heard by the honorable Senator. They did recommend it, and they did, as they thought, draw the law so as to provide for this compensation. When the bill which has passed both Houses and become a law, was before the Senate on a former occasion, I put the question to the Senator from Mississippi, [Mr. ADAMS,] and chairman of the Committee on Retrenchment, whether the bill put the clerks in the State Department on the same footing as the others, and he said, yes. Afterwards, although the Attorney General was clearly of opinion, and gave a long and elaborate opinion on the subject, I am told that these clerks ought to be placed on the same footing with the others, yet in the Treasury Department he was overruled, and they were not allowed to take the position which Congress intended, and which the committees of both Houses stated to the Department they intended they should have under the bill. This amendment now is only for the purpose of carrying out the intent of Congress in passing the law. If my friend from Indiana will take the pains to look at the act as passed, he will, I think, form the same opinion which I have formed, and the same opinion which the committee formed in regard to it, and the same opinion that was expressed by the Senator from Mississippi on a former occasion: that these clerks are entitled to the same compensation with other clerks. The same opinion was also adopted by the Attorney General. The sum is a small one; but this is an act of justice; it should be paid to these men. If there is any difficulty in regard to it, I trust the amendment will be laid over until the Senator from Mississippi can be heard about it. If there is no objection, I hope it will be adopted now.

Mr. THOMSON, of New Jersey. I have prepared an amendment for the purpose of carrying out the intention and meaning of the act approved the 22d of April, 1854, by which it was provided that "all clerks not provided for in this act performing the same or similar duties with any of the other classes, shall receive the same compensation as is allowed to such class." Under this there has been a good deal of difference of opinion.

Mr. HUNTER. I will suggest to the Senator from New Jersey that his amendment cannot be entertained until some disposition be made of that of the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. THOMSON, of New Jersey. If the Senate will allow me, I will read my short amendment, and perhaps it may embrace what the Senator from Delaware has in view. It is in these words:

And provided, That whenever clerks of the first class shall perform the same or similar duties with clerks of any one of the other classes, they shall receive the same compensation as is allowed to such class.

It provides for a set of clerks who were formerly called temporary clerks, but by the bill of the Senator from Virginia, they are now called, for the most part, clerks of the first class; and the term "temporary clerks" has been entirely done away with in the bill, as I understand it. My proposition is to provide that those clerks shall receive compensation in proportion to the services they perform. It is carrying out, in the very language, the intent of the act of April 22, 1854.

Mr. HUNTER. I will simply state that the amendments of the Committee on Finance were in pursuance of the estimate, and recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Delaware, from the Committee on Retrenchment.

Mr. RUSK. I propose to amend it by inserting after the words "State Department," the words "clerks of the United States Coast Survey." They were excluded by a similar decision, and receive much lower salaries, and perform, I am told, heavier work than anybody else. Besides, there are but few of them.

Mr. HUNTER. I understand that the clerks in the Coast Survey Office are now arranged according to a scale which is founded upon a system of promotion; and I understand that, although the grade of salary is somewhat lower there than elsewhere, that system is working admirably, because they know they will be promoted according to merit. There is danger that any such amendment as this would disturb that scale. It might produce such a scale of salary as to make the present arrangement no longer possible. I think there would be some hazard at least in interfering with it.

Besides that, I have another objection to this. If we go on increasing the salaries of the officers of the Coast Survey, where is the limit? We have now before us petitions from officers in almost every custom-house in the Union, and from all the navy-yards—we have petitions for a general increase of salaries; and I think, sir, (Mr. BADGER in the chair,) you must recollect that in the Committee on Finance we determined that there were so many of these petitions that the subject would have to be laid over until the next session, when we should have to look into it as a system, and see whether there be a necessity for the general increase in salaries; for it amounts to that. If we grant all the applications which are made, many of them having quite as much merit as this, we shall have to make a very general increase of salaries. I think the whole subject had better go over until the next session. We have gone far enough when we make a distinction in regard to the Executive officers. In arranging them, it was perhaps right and proper that we should equalize the salaries, and make some just arrangement in regard to them first. When that object is accomplished, we may look abroad to see whether anything more is necessary as to the other officers.

Mr. RUSK. The first objection which the honorable Senator takes to the amendment, is, that it may disturb the order of promotion which is now established in the Coast Survey Office. There is no danger of that, for my proposition simply increases the salaries, and will make the higher clerkships just as desirable as now. The relative distinction will be precisely the same. But the question is one of justice between the employees in the State Department and in the Coast Survey Office. A general law has been passed, to which the honorable Senator himself contributed largely, to increase the salaries of the clerks of the different Departments. One reason given for that was, that the expenses of living in the city of Washington were very high, and that they had increased within a few years past, so that the salaries of the clerks were too low to enable them to meet the additional expense which they had to incur. So far as the State Department is concerned, I am uninformed; but so far as the Coast Survey is concerned, I know the same reason applies there, and with much more potency, because these officers receive lower salaries than those in any other Department. I do not propose to put them on any extra footing, but only on an exact equality with the clerks in the other departments.

Mr. HUNTER. I wish to suggest this difficulty. The force in the Coast Survey office is composed partly of civilians and partly of officers of the Army and Navy. How will you discriminate? Will you give this increased pay to the civilians and deny it to the officers of the Army and Navy?

Mr. RUSK. The amendment confines it to the clerks.

Mr. HUNTER. Why that discrimination? Why give it to the clerks and not to the others, who may be doing quite as much?

Mr. RUSK. Because they have a larger salary than the clerks.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to; and the amendment, as amended, was rejected.

Mr. COOPER. I move to amend the third section, which has been inserted on the motion of the Committee on Finance, by inserting between lines fourteen and fifteen, "and in the fourth Auditor's office, in class three, one clerk." This is recommended by the Secretary of the Treasury. The clerk proposed was left out of the bill. He is now employed in the office, and the Auditor declares that it will be altogether impossible to get along without him.

Mr. GWIN. That is right. We will put it in.

Mr. HUNTER. There were two clerks that were left out, but the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania extends to but one of them. Both ought to go together.

Mr. COOPER. Then I will modify my amendment by striking out "one clerk," and inserting "two clerks."

The amendment, as modified, was agreed to.

Mr. MASON. I am instructed by the Committee on Foreign Relations to offer the following amendment, to come in immediately after the clause for office rent of the consulate at Zurich:

For payment to Blythe & Co., of Port Louis, in the Island Mauritius, the sum of $7,854 50, it being the amount of two bills of exchange drawn upon the Department of State by George M. Farnum, commercial agent, in payment of expenses incurred in relieving destitute American citizens, which drafts were cashed by said Blythe & Co.

The necessity for that appropriation, and one of a similar character which I hold in my hand to follow it, results from the existing state of things in reference to the migration of our people. There are annual appropriations, as we all know, for the relief of destitute American seamen, but there are none for the relief of destitute American citizens. They are now going into Australia and California, and are occasionally thrown into foreign ports without the means of living. There were a large number of American citizens thrown ashore, as it were, by the stress of weather, at the Island of Mauritius, and they were provided for by our commercial agent there, but the Department of State had no means to reimburse him.

Mr. GWIN. There was a precisely similar case in regard to our Consul at Panama, where he relieved destitute American citizens.

Mr. MASON. I have another amendment which will provide for that.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MASON. I am also instructed, by the Committee on Foreign Relations, to offer this amendment, to come in after the appropriation for the relief and protection of American seamen in foreign countries:

And to enable the diplomatic and consular representatives of the United States in foreign countries to afford relief, and provide the means of returning home to such citizens of the United States, in foreign countries, as may have been reduced to a state of destitution of the necessities of life, by shipwreck, or necessary abandonment of the vessel in which they were embarked; and, also, to such citizens of the United States, as, being on their way from one part of the United States to another, have become destitute in foreign countries, in consequence of shipwreck, disease, or any other casualty, $20,000.

Mr. HUNTER. I should like to hear an explanation of that.

Mr. MASON. I gave the explanation a moment ago, when, I apprehend, my colleague was not present. I said there was a fund annually appropriated for the relief of destitute American seamen, but none for the relief of destitute American citizens who are not seamen; and in consequence of the state of things which has arisen from the immense emigration to California, and the large emigration of our citizens to Australia, it has been found that they are thrown ashore at various points in a state of destitution, and are necessary to be provided for by our commercial agents, or by our diplomatic corps, who are without any fund applicable to such an object. The necessity of an appropriation for this purpose was strongly brought to the notice of the Department of State in a letter from Mr. Clay, our Minister at Peru; and this appropriation is recommended by the State Department.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MASON. I offer another amendment from the same committee. It is to insert after the appropriation for clerk to the legation at London:

For salary of a clerk to the United States legation at Paris, $500.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MASON. I am also instructed by the same committee to move the following amendment, to come in after the first amendment which I offered:

That the Secretary of the Treasury audit and settle the accounts of Robert C. Schenck, late Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary of the United States to Brazil, and John S. Pendleton, late Chargé d'Affaires of the United States to the Argentine Confederation, for additional compensation, and for expenses incurred by them in the performance of special services not pertaining to their respective missions, and at points distant from those to which they were originally accredited, in compliance with instructions from the Department of State. In settling which accounts the certificate of the parties shall be regarded as sufficient evidence as to the amount of expense incurred, where no regular voucher can be produced. And a compensation at the rate of twenty-five dollars per diem shall be allowed to each of them for the time they were so employed, to be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. TOOMBS. I move to amend the amendment by striking it all out and inserting, as a substitute, the following:

To pay Robert C. Schenck, in full compensation for his services as Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary on his special mission to the Oriental Republic of Uruguay, under instructions from the President of the United States, in the year 1852, $9,000; and to pay him in full compensation for his services on a like special mission to the Argentine Confederation in the year 1853, the further sum of $9,000.

I shall also offer an amendment to provide for Mr. Pendleton, if this shall be adopted. I will explain the circumstances of the case.

Mr. Schenck was our Minister Plenipotentiary to Rio, and at the time he was there, the British and French Governments proposed to this Government to unite with them in a commission to send Ministers Plenipotentiary to form treaties with the Argentine Republic and with Uruguay, in South America. Mr. Fillmore, then President, commissioned Mr. Schenck to these separate courts, and directed him to go down some one thousand or one thousand five hundred miles in the performance of this duty. He went there, and united with the French and English Ministers, and formed treaties which have been brought to the Senate and ratified unanimously. Mr. Pendleton, who was our chargé at Buenos Ayres, was associated with him; and they were made, in fact, Ministers Plenipotentiary to these Powers to negotiate these treaties, and they went there for the purpose.

The ordinary practice of the Government in such cases has been to give an outfit under such circumstances. My amendment provides the amount of an outfit to Mr. Schenck, for both the courts to which he was commissioned, and with which he made treaties. Mr. Pendleton, who was a chargé also, went to two of these courts, and I have an amendment to offer to provide for him after my present amendment shall be disposed of. They are not necessarily connected at all. By looking at the history of the Government from its foundation down to 1825, it will be seen that such allowances were uniformly made in cases like these. A paper was prepared in 1825 by Mr. Monroe, showing all the cases up to that time. The uniform plan was to give persons who were sent on these special missions the amount of an outfit, or to allow them expenses limited to the amount of an outfit. In some of the cases, that of Mr. Pinckney, for instance, at Naples, under the name of expenses, they allowed him an outfit of $9,000. There are many such cases in point. There is the case of the treaty of Paris, of 1804. Three commissioners were sent there to negotiate that treaty. One of them was our minister resident at the Hague, and an outfit of $9,000 was allowed him for going to Paris. Why, sir, at this very session, the Senate and House of Representatives, in the deficiency bill, made a similar allowance to Mr. Kerr, of Maryland, who was sent as chargé to Nicaragua, and commissioned to the "national representation," as I believe they termed it, where he was not received. After he had drawn his outfit for the mission to which he was sent, we allowed him the outfit for the other mission to which he was commissioned. I say, therefore, the rule has been uniform to make these allowances. Sometimes they have been under the name of expenses, it is true. A very striking instance is the case of Mr. Clay, who was sent a commissioner to Ghent. He was sent on two missions; one to make a treaty of peace with England, and the other to make a commercial treaty. After the treaty of peace was concluded, the English declined pursuing the commercial treaty there, and he went to England. He claimed and obtained his outfit for that, though he was but a commissioner in both cases. It was decided by Mr. Wirt, the Attorney General, that he was entitled to his outfit. That opinion can be found in the first volume of the Opinions of the Attorneys General. It was decided that he was entitled to it as a matter of right. Mr. Murray, who was minister resident or chargé d'affaires at the Hague, being sent to Paris as commissioner to negotiate a treaty, was also allowed $9,000, as appears by the paper to which I have referred, prepared by Mr. Monroe. In every case in which the Government transferred ministers resident to special duties, the allowance was made. All the cases are collected, and may be found in the reports of your commissioners. I have reviewed the whole of them. There are some cases in which the allowance was made under the name of expenses, but the expenses were fixed precisely at the amount of an outfit, or approximated very near to it. It appears, then, that this has been the practice of the Government.

I can give another instance of it. Mr. Adams, when appointed commissioner to negotiate the treaty of Ghent, was Minister to Russia; but he was ordered to the Hague to take part in that special treaty, the treaty of peace, and was subsequently transferred as Minister to England. He claimed his outfit, but it was contested, and the question was referred to Mr. Wirt, who decided that he was entitled to it as a matter of right. In fact, when he was called into the Cabinet of Mr. Monroe, it was objected that he had public money in his possession which did not belong to him. An investigation was had, and the Attorney General decided that he was entitled to it by law, and he held his place as Secretary of State.

There are numerous cases in which, wherever a minister abroad has been sent to another court for a special or general mission, an outfit has been allowed to him. Mr. Schenck's case comes directly within the practice of the Government, and what was decided by Mr. Wirt to be a legal right, and not a gratuity. I hope, therefore, in his case, the Senate will not depart from the established practice.

Mr. MASON. The petition of Mr. Schenck, on whose behalf the Senator from Georgia offers a substitute for the amendment of the Committee on Foreign Relations, was to allow him two outfits, in addition to the outfit which he received as Minister to Brazil.

Mr. TOOMBS. That is my amendment.

Mr. MASON. And that is the amendment now offered by the Senator from Georgia. The petition of Mr. Pendleton, who was chargé d'affaires at Buenos Ayres, was to allow him an outfit equal to the outfit of a Minister Plenipotentiary, for the special mission upon which he was sent. The Committee on Foreign Relations had the subject under consideration, and made a report accompanied by a bill. That bill is the amendment I now offer to the civil and diplomatic appropriation bill. In that report the committee assigned these reasons for their action:

"To allow the full prayer of the memorialists in these cases, would, in the opinion of your committee, be the introduction of a new system of compensation for public services, unsanctioned by the principles of a wise and just economy. The allowance of outfits to our foreign ministers, it is presumed, was not designed to operate as an indirect mode of increasing their compensation, but as means to enable them to fit up, at the courts to which they are accredited, such establishments as might be suited to their station.

"In this case the memorialists had been regularly accredited as the diplomatic representatives of the United States—one as full Minister to Brazil, and the other as chargé d'affaires to the Argentine Confederation, at which places only did the expense of permanent establishments devolve on them. The special missions on which they were sent were temporary in their character, under letters of credence only to negotiate treaties, and not further accrediting them."

Now, Mr. President, we know very well that, under the law, the compensation of a Minister Plenipotentiary is $9,000 a year, with an addition of $9,000 for an outfit, and he is allowed the half of an outfit on his return home, provided he comes back with the permission of the Government. I have not investigated the Opinions of the Attorneys General spoken of by the Senator from Georgia; but it may be that, in construing the law, it has been considered that if a minister resident abroad has added to his duties, as minister resident at one court, the duties of minister resident at another, he is entitled by law to an outfit for his new mission. But the view taken by the Committee on Foreign Relations, is this: It is very much the custom, wherever the occasion requires it, and it conduces very much to the public convenience, where you have a minister resident abroad, and it is deemed important, in our foreign relations, to send that minister to transact a special business somewhere else, the President of the United States directs him to go to the point indicated, and transact this special business, and his expenses upon the mission are paid by direction of the President out of the fund for contingent expenses of intercourse with foreign nations. It is considered that, being in the service of the Government, resident abroad at one court, he may be sent elsewhere on special business on having his expenses paid. That was the case with these two gentlemen. Mr. Schenck was associated with Mr. Pendleton, and sent to negotiate treaties with some of the South American Powers, near to, or not remote from, their places of residence at the Courts where they were accredited; and Mr. Pendleton was sent on a separate mission, according to my recollection, to the Government of Paraguay. They were absent altogether, according to my impression now, from four to six months.

It seemed to the committee that it would be exorbitant to allow them a full outfit of $9,000, as a compensation for this casual but extraordinary service, in addition to all the expenses to which they were subjected being paid. There is no obligation on the Government to do it. There is an obligation on the Government—not a legal, but a moral and equitable obligation—to pay them, and pay them justly, for any extraordinary services they may have rendered; but I do not know that the measure of compensation always to be adopted is to be the round sum of an outfit—far less two outfits—when there happen to be two missions.

The committee, on looking at the case of Mr.

THE CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE.

THE OFFICIAL PROCEEDINGS OF CONGRESS, PUBLISHED BY JOHN C. RIVES, WASHINGTON, D. C.

33d CONGRESS, 1st Session.

THURSDAY, JULY 27, 1854.

NEW SERIES...No. 192.

Kerr, the one adverted to by the Senator from Georgia, passed on at this session, found that, although he was but chargé d'affaires at Nicaragua, he was directed to go to Guatemala, and perhaps one or two other States in Central America, to exchange the ratification of certain treaties; and he was directed further to present himself at a partial confederation of some of these States called their "national representation," to which he was accredited for general purposes as minister. The committee reported, in that case, in favor of allowing him an outfit for his whole services, in addition to his expenses; and that provision passed the Senate. In this instance, however, the committee thought it would be wise and safe, in order to avoid a precedent hereafter, to draw the distinction between accrediting a special minister to a court generally, and sending him, for special purposes, to transact a particular piece of business which ends his functions there.

The committee made, as was thought, a very liberal allowance in addition to the expenses of these gentlemen. All their ordinary expenses have been paid, as far as it was in their power to present vouchers; but the committee were aware that they might have incurred expenses which were necessary to be incurred for which they could have no vouchers. The amendment offered by the committee, therefore, directs that any expenses of that kind shall be paid to them upon their certificates that the money was expended, and, in addition, allows them for the time that they were occupied twenty-five dollars a day—twenty-five dollars a day being about at the rate of $9,000 a year. This seemed to the committee to be a fair and equitable allowance.

Mr. TOOMBS. Mr. President, I differ from the Committee on Foreign Relations on the very clause of the report which the chairman has read. They say that by the allowance proposed in my amendment a precedent would be established. Now, I have shown that they violate all precedent by not allowing it. The precedents from 1789 until now have all been in favor of allowing these outfits, under this precise state of things. The cases which I cited before I have now before me. Every single case of the transfer of a minister, or the sending one abroad, from 1789 to 1825, was collected in Mr. Monroe's memorial, and they are precisely as I have stated.

The case which the Senator from Virginia has put, of gentlemen being sent to exchange ratifications of a treaty, is not the case here. These gentlemen were commissioned with plenipotentiary powers, directed to go to these Governments as Ministers Plenipotentiary, by a joint commission, to form treaties. They did that to the satisfaction of the Government, and to the satisfaction of the Senate. I say, therefore, that Mr. Schenck's case stands precisely upon the same footing of that of Mr. Adams, who was Minister to Russia, and the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations cannot draw a distinction between them. Mr. Adams was Minister Plenipotentiary in Russia. He was commissioned with the special duty of making a treaty of peace at Ghent. He went to Ghent under this commission for the special purpose of making a treaty of peace with England. He did help to make it; and his claim for an outfit was allowed. He was then sent from there to England, and an outfit was allowed for that.

The case of Mr. Murray, who was Minister at the Hague, is precisely the case of the other gentleman, Mr. Pendleton, of lower grade. Mr. Murray was chargé or minister resident at the Hague, and he was sent, in connection with two other gentlemen, to Paris, under a joint commission, in 1804, to make a treaty. He was allowed an outfit of $9,000, because he was quo ad hoc a Minister Plenipotentiary at the Court of Versailles.

Again, there is the case of Mr. Monroe. While Minister to England, he was commissioned to Spain on a special duty; and he claimed, and was allowed an outfit for that. Then there is the case of Mr. Clay, which I have already stated. He was a commissioner. He was not sent as minister to England, but was taken from the House of Representatives, and made a commissioner. I presume, however, that it makes no difference what a gentleman followed before. Nor does it in the case of these two gentlemen. Mr. Clay was sent as commissioner, with plenipotentiary powers, to Ghent, to negotiate a treaty of peace, and at the same time had other letters commissioning him to make a commercial treaty. The negotiations touching the commercial treaty were transferred to London, and he was allowed an outfit for going from Ghent to London, although he had been commissioned at the same time to make both a treaty of peace and a commercial treaty. His claim for an outfit, I know, was contested, but it was allowed on a reference of the case to the Attorney General, Mr. Wirt.

I say that the committee in this case are violating precedent against these gentlemen. I do not think it is a dangerous precedent. I have shown that, from the latter part of the last century down, the precedents have been uniform. The case of Mr. Kerr is one not near as strong as this. He was a chargé, commissioned to the "National Representation" in Central America, who never did receive him. The House of Representatives and the Senate, in the deficiency bill, at this very session, allowed him his outfit—not his expenses only. A certain class of expenses is allowed; but the Committee on Foreign Relations, at this session, reported in favor of allowing him an outfit. He had been paid his expenses to these courts, where he went to exchange the ratifications of treaties. He had no plenipotentiary powers to make treaties at the courts to which he was sent, so that this case is much stronger than even that.

Again, let me refer to Mr. Pinckney's case. Mr. Pinckney was sent to St. Petersburg, and was directed to go by way of Naples, and deliver a letter of credence at Naples; and he was allowed $9,000 for that service, and it was expressly stated to be in the form of an outfit, corresponding to his grade. On his way to Russia he stopped at Naples, and delivered the letters of credence. He was not accredited to make a treaty; he made no treaty there; he did nothing but deliver a letter of credence; and yet the Government allowed him $9,000 in the shape of an outfit. In this case, however, the Committee on Foreign Relations propose to depart from the established precedent.

Mr. Schenck being Minister at Rio, was sent to Uruguay to make a treaty. He went there. He was commissioned by the President in the recess of Congress. It was an emergency of great importance. It was about the time of the overthrow of Rosas. England and France had been trying for twenty years to get treaties to secure the navigation of the noble rivers in that quarter, and commercial intercourse with the people there. They commissioned ministers to go there. This Government sent Mr. Schenck and Mr. Pendleton, and they made treaties which were satisfactory to the Government, and were unanimously ratified by the Senate.

The services of these gentlemen were very valuable and important; but that is not the point. We sometimes send ministers to countries which will not receive them, but we allow outfit and salary to those ministers. Several cases of that kind have occurred since I have been in Congress; and they have been constantly allowed. Whenever there has been a new commission to a new court, for independent purposes, this allowance has been made. In some cases, the allowance was made in the form of expenses, which overran the amount of an outfit.

Mr. Jay, when he was Chief Justice of the United States, was sent to England to negotiate a treaty. During that time, he received his salary as chief justice of the United States, and drew, in the shape of expenses, nearly $12,000. The allowance in that case was put in that form. There are similar cases running all through the history of the Government from its commencement.

I do not think this is a class of cases liable to great abuse. There are not many of these gentlemen abroad, and I think they are the poorest paid agents of the Government. Some effort was made during the last Administration, and has been made at several times during the history of the Government, to ascertain whether they were paid a fair compensation; and, I believe, the universal opinion expressed by every man whom you had abroad, was that the compensation was altogether too small. But these men, being but few, not having any congressional influence, have not had their salaries increased. They are not like the eight hundred or one thousand appointees in the shape of clerks, dependent, perhaps, on both Houses of Congress. Their salaries can be carried up at will, as they have been twice within the last three years, because they have personal influence, personal relatives, and, perhaps, personal appointors in Congress. But our ministers and chargés abroad, being but few in number, having little congressional influence, are not increased in salary. I hope, however, that we shall not refuse to them what a law officer of the Government has declared to be their legal right. That was Mr. Wirt's opinion in the case of Messrs. Adams and Clay. It has been in accordance with the uniform practice of the Government, from which I have known no variation.

Mr. RUSK. I shall very cheerfully vote for the substitute of the Senator from Georgia. According to the statement made by that honorable Senator, it has been usual, where services of this character have been required, to allow an outfit. It seems to me that it is utterly impossible for these gentlemen to ascertain what their expenses were. They were associated in making these treaties, as I understand, with the Ministers of France and England, who were extremely well paid, while ours were extremely poorly paid. They succeeded in obtaining as good treaties, if not better ones, than those obtained by other Governments. They were in a country where the expenses were very large. They were sent among a people with whom it was necessary to incur heavy expenses. Inasmuch as that was so, and it has been the uniform rule to allow an outfit in each case where a Minister abroad has been sent to a new Court, I think it is nothing but fair and just to do it here. It is admitted on all hands, I believe, that our diplomatic agents abroad are more poorly paid than those of any other Government whatever. In this case the services of these gentlemen were important. They made treaties which were ratified unanimously by the Senate, and regarded as of the utmost consequence to the United States. Under such circumstances, I shall cheerfully vote for the amendment of the Senator from Georgia, and I think the allowance ought to be made.

Mr. PRATT. Mr. President, the diplomatic intercourse of our Government is regulated by law. We have different classes of officers—ministers, chargés, and other agents of the Government to discharge diplomatic duties. By law, they are entitled to salaries and to certain perquisites. When, therefore, the gentleman whose name is indicated in the amendment of the Senator from Georgia, was appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, Minister to the Government of Brazil, he became entitled by law to a salary of $9,000, and to an outfit of $9,000 for going. As minister at that point, the President had no right to send him to any other. He was entitled by law, as minister at that point, to the particular compensation I have named. The President had no earthly authority to impose upon him the obligation, as minister to that Government, to go to some other, for the purpose of discharging similar diplomatic duties. Hence, when the Government required him to go there, it would have been optional in him to go or not. If he did go, he went as minister, and he would be entitled, according to my conception, to whatever he might, according to the antecedent usage of the Government, be justified in considering the compensation operating on the Government to induce him to go.

Take the case of this gentleman. He was requested to go from a Government to which he was accredited to some other, for the purpose of making a treaty. In determining in his own mind whether to go or not, he had a right to look to the antecedent usage of the Government for the purpose of ascertaining what he was to receive for going. According to the statement of the honorable Senator from Georgia, that usage had been universal, and therefore he had a right to suppose that by receiving this appointment and consenting to discharge the duty, he would receive what every other officer from the commencement of the Government similarly situated had received.

Now, in order to illustrate this, allow me to put a single case: suppose that, instead of sending this minister to discharge this special duty, the President, during the recess of the Senate, had appointed somebody else to go there. That person would unquestionably be entitled to be paid. He would have received not only the compensation which this amendment allows, in conformity with the usages of the Government, but he would have received also $9,000 salary. It seems to me, therefore, that, according to strict principle, this gentleman is entitled to the compensation which the amendment of the Senator from Georgia authorizes to be paid.

Mr. BUTLER. As my friend from Georgia seems to have informed himself fully on this subject, I will take the liberty of asking him some questions with a view to inform myself. I understand from him that when Mr. Clay was ordered to Ghent, he received $9,000 outfit and $9,000 salary.

Mr. TOOMBS. A salary, at that rate, per annum.

Mr. BUTLER. He was ordered from there to the Court of St. James, as I understand the Senator, after the ratification of the treaty of peace, to negotiate a commercial treaty. Did he also receive, for that service, or that mission, $9,000?

Mr. TOOMBS. Yes, sir; he claimed $9,000, and $4,500 was paid at once, and payment of the balance suspended; but it was afterwards paid over, on the decision of the Attorney General.

Mr. BUTLER. Was he also allowed his expenses?

Mr. TOOMBS. Yes, sir; his accounts are all stated in the book which I have before me.

Mr. MASON. Mr. President, the committee have said nothing in the report on the subject of precedents; but they have said, as I apprehend will now be apparent to the Senate, that if these memorialists are to be compensated by giving them a round outfit to all the places to which they were sent for the purpose of negotiating treaties, it will establish a precedent. The committee have said this in their report:

"To allow the full prayer of the memorialists, in these cases, would, in the opinion of your committee, be the introduction of a new system of compensation for public services, unsanctioned by the principles of a wise and just economy."

Now, sir, if these gentlemen are by law entitled to an outfit because they were sent upon these special missions, they have only to apply at the Department of State and have it paid, or that Department would have sent an estimate here to Congress for these outfits and expenditures incurred under the law. It is because the law does not sanction it, that they come here and ask it at the hands of Congress.

The Senator from Maryland, I apprehend, is utterly mistaken in his idea that a minister abroad who is sent to one court, is by law exonerated from obeying the directions of the President to go to another court. A minister who is resident abroad, is under the direction of the President. If the President directs him in the course of the public service to go to another country and transact special business, and he declines, of course he forfeits his commission as insubordinate. It is the usage of all countries; it has been the usage of our country, to consider our ministers as under the control of the Executive, to be sent, if the public service requires, from one court to another for the transaction of special business.

Now, sir, here is the naked case of gentlemen in South America, commissioned there to certain courts, who were directed to go to other Governments for the purpose of negotiating treaties. That will very frequently arise again; and if it is the sense of the Senate that they are entitled, because of alleged precedents, necessarily to receive a round outfit, whether they go a thousand miles or five hundred miles or fifty miles, it will be the establishment of a precedent from which we are not hereafter, I presume, to depart. I said before, sir, that I did not look to the cases adduced by the Senator from Georgia, because I did not regard this as a matter of precedent at all. The compensation of our diplomatic functionaries, further than what the law entitles them to, is entirely within the control of Congress, to be judged of by the circumstances of each case. I can very well understand that Mr. Clay, having negotiated the treaty of peace at Ghent, and being ordered to London on special services there, might be considered, in the estimation of the Government, as entitled to a sum equal to $9,000, when, if he had been sent from one place in South America to another, he would not have been so entitled; because we know very well that in Europe a man who is clothed with diplomatic functions is subjected to a scale of expenditures to which he is not subject in the little courts of South America, and therefore what would be proper in one case would not be proper in the other. I will not detain the Senate. The question is before them. I will not trouble them further.

Mr. DAWSON. I wish to ask the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations one question. As I understand it, the President of the United States appointed these two gentlemen as full ministers, to do a certain act, in different States from those where they represented this Government.

Mr. MASON. The fact was this: Mr. Schenck was Minister Plenipotentiary, and Mr. Pendleton was Chargé d'Affaires, and those gentlemen, thus occupying these grades at the countries to which they were accredited, were vested with plenary powers to go and negotiate treaties with other Governments.

Mr. DAWSON. That necessarily made Mr. Pendleton, for the objects intended by the commission, a full minister, instead of a chargé.

Mr. MASON. That may be the Senator's inference.

Mr. DAWSON. Necessarily so. He went under a joint commission. Mr. Schenck already was a full minister; and he could not have been reduced down. When the President appointed these gentlemen, he did it under the Constitution, appointing ministers to do particular acts in different States from those to which they were accredited. When Mr. Schenck went to perform that duty, he went as the minister of this Government, appointed by the President. If he had not executed the order given to him by the President before the meeting of Congress, would not the President have submitted his nomination to the Senate of the United States for confirmation? Under the law he cannot draw both outfit and salary, because the confirmation did not take place. Now we, as the Senate, have ratified the acts of these gentlemen by unanimously confirming the treaty which they submitted to us, and have thereby substantially confirmed the nomination. Now, are they not, in legal acceptance, entitled to all the rights which arise under the law, even in the double capacity? I think so, and more especially after the precedent has been established.

Mr. MASON. I will mention a single case. Recently, Mr. Borland was sent as Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary, accredited to the five Governments of Central America, to reside sometimes at one of them and sometimes at another. It was deemed convenient to send a minister plenipotentiary to that country, instead of the chargés who had been heretofore sent to some of these States. Now, under the views taken of the obligations of the Government by some gentlemen, that gentleman is entitled, by law or by the usage of precedent, to five outfits, and may come here for them.

Mr. DAWSON. When Mr. Borland went out, his commission contained on its face all the States to which he was accredited.

Mr. MASON. So it did.

Mr. DAWSON. And he accepted the commission under that view. Mr. Schenck, when he went to Rio, went as minister to reside at Rio. He afterwards performed this duty eighteen hundred miles from there. Can it be presumed that an American minister, going to act with foreign ministers from England and France, and other Governments, should go there stripped of any of the means of sustaining the national character and dignity of this nation, for want of a sufficient sum? Certainly not. And it is known to us all that the salaries of these officers are so small that it is difficult for them properly to sustain the character of the nation as it ought to be.

Mr. BAYARD. This debate has satisfied me as to one question, not as to the measure of compensation which ought to be allowed to these gentlemen. It has satisfied me that this is clearly a private claim. I do not see how it can be put on any other ground. If there be any meaning in the rule of the Senate, this amendment cannot be attached to the bill. I object to it on that ground, though I do not wish to pass any judgment on the claim itself.

Mr. MASON. It is proper that the Senate should understand that the salaries of each of these gentlemen—one as minister, at $9,000 a year, and the other as chargé, at $4,500 a year—were continuing during the period that the committee propose to pay them at the rate of twenty-five dollars a day; so that, if the amendment of the committee be adopted, Mr. Schenck would receive, during that period, at the rate of a double salary, and Mr. Pendleton would receive his own salary, and at the rate of a minister plenipotentiary during that period.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, I am willing to pay these two gentlemen the highest sum which is deemed reasonable, but I am not willing to pay it as an outfit. I am not willing to recognize the principle that where a minister at one court is detailed on special business at another, he is to have an outfit for being thus detailed. The object of an outfit was to enable the minister to buy his furniture and go to housekeeping at the place to which he should be sent. The outfit was given to enable him to procure a house, and set up an establishment. Then his salary was to cover the residue. That practice was adopted when it was the custom, at most of the capitals of Europe, to rent houses unfurnished, and it took a large portion of the salary to furnish a house and get prepared to live in it. Afterwards, he was to have only his salary. For that reason there was double pay for the first year, in the shape of salary and outfit. Now, the practice is to rent houses furnished at nearly all the courts; and I believe the whole doctrine of outfits ought to be abolished, and the salaries increased, so as to give the ministers so much for each year.

In regard to this amendment, I am unwilling to make this allowance as an outfit; and yet these gentlemen were sent to these respective places, fifteen or eighteen hundred miles distant from the countries to which they were accredited, and had to pass through a region where traveling is perhaps unsafe, in concert with the representatives of foreign countries, and are compelled, of course, to incur heavy expenses. I think they should be amply paid; but I am not willing to recognize the principle that each time an officer of this nature is detailed on a special duty, he shall have an outfit for it. Within the last year an instance came under my own notice. We had a slight difficulty, on account of a small claim on the king of Greece, by one of our citizens, and also another question in connection with Dr. King. Mr. Marsh, our Minister in Turkey, was sent from Constantinople down to Athens to attend to it. I do not know how often he went, but he went several times. He could go there in a couple of days in a steamer, so that much time was not occupied in those trips. I insist that Mr. Marsh ought to be paid for these trips, and well paid for his extra expenses and services at Athens, while he was Minister at Constantinople; but I should not be willing to say that for each time he took the steamer from Constantinople to Athens, whether he was gone one week or three months, he should have a full outfit. It might be that in the course of a year or two in this way, his outfits would run up to more than double the amount of our claims against that Government.

It is often very convenient to detail a minister to go to some neighboring court, where we do not deem it necessary to have a constant resident minister, to do a special act. Take the case of Germany, where there are a large number of small States. We have a representative at Berlin. We may desire to send him down to Dresden, in Saxony, or to Hanover, or to any of the little independent dukedoms there; but if we should send him to ten or fifteen or twenty of them in a year, occupying a day or two in each case, are we to be obliged to pay an outfit in every case? Shall we pay an outfit when he goes to Dresden, where he can go in four hours, or to the free town of Hamburg, where he can go in four or five hours, or to Bremen, which it will take him six or seven hours to reach, or to Hanover, where he can arrive in four and a half hours, or to Wurtemberg, or to any of those small kingdoms? I apprehend it will not do to recognize the principle that each time a minister is detailed in that way for special duty, he must be paid a full outfit.

In this case, when Mr. Schenck was appointed Minister to Rio, he went under a law providing $9,000 outfit and $9,000 salary for the minister there; but there was no law of Congress authorizing or providing for missions to the other nations to which he was sent to make treaties. There was no salary, no appropriation to pay for such services; but he took that appointment under this implication: that he would go and obey the orders of this Government, and perform this special duty, and receive such pay therefor as Congress should deem just and proper under the circumstances. There was no law recognizing this mission; there was no law providing for it; there was no salary fixed for it. In this case I believe we paid his expenses, whereas, we do not pay the expenses of regular ministers. Why? It was outside of the law,—a case arising where there was an exigency for the appointment of a special minister for the occasion. There was a manifest propriety in detailing the nearest diplomatic representatives of our Government to perform this duty, and they should be well and liberally paid for it. I am not prepared to say that the sum specified by the Senator from Georgia is too much. I make no point on the amount, but I insist that it must be paid as a proper and just recompense to these gentlemen, for the services which they performed under the circumstances, and not as an outfit. If we commence the principle of allowing outfits in these cases, we shall get into great difficulty in future, and perhaps may lay the foundation of large claims in those cases to which I have referred that have already occurred. I am willing to be liberal, and I do not know that I shall vote against the amendment fixed by the Senator from Georgia, but my object is to protest against what is urged here as a legal obligation.

Mr. BADGER. I should like to know what are the terms of the amendment. Is there anything said in it about outfits? Let it be read.

The Secretary read the amendment of Mr. Toombs, as inserted above.

Mr. TOOMBS. The Senator from Illinois will perceive that there is no outfit mentioned in my amendment.

Mr. MASON. If that amendment be adopted, this officer will have received a higher rate of compensation than any officer ever did before under this Government, I presume. He will have received $22,500 for six months' service.

Mr. ATCHISON. If the Senator from Georgia will withdraw his amendment, I propose to double the amount proposed by the committee. We shall then adopt the principle of per diem compensation, as proposed by the committee, and it will amount to a little more than $9,000 for six months' services. I will propose to amend the amendment of the committee by striking out twenty-five dollars, and inserting fifty dollars, including expenses.

Mr. BUTLER. They have had their expenses.

Mr. TOOMBS. As my amendment is in conformity with precedent, I do not feel at liberty to withdraw it. If it be voted down, the Senator from Missouri can offer his amendment. My proposition is in conformity with the precedents and the usual practice of the Government, and I think it right.

Mr. ATCHISON. It was because I believed those precedents and that practice to be preposterous that I made the suggestion.

Mr. SLIDELL. I would ask the Senator from Georgia whether Messrs. Clay and Adams, when they were transferred from one point to another on those special missions, were not commissioned by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate? I think that makes a very material difference.

Mr. TOOMBS. They were not so commissioned in both cases. They were commissioned as commissioners to Ghent, by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, but, I think, not in the other cases.

Mr. SLIDELL. My impression was, that they were so commissioned in the other cases by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

Mr. TOOMBS. They were to negotiate the treaty of peace.

Mr. SLIDELL. Then I should like to ask another question. The Senator from Georgia claims this compensation for Mr. Schenck on the ground that he was sent to these two different South American Republics, Uruguay and Paraguay, as Minister Plenipotentiary and Envoy Extraordinary. I rather think he is under a misapprehension as regards the facts. He was sent as special commissioner, but it does not appear that he was sent as minister plenipotentiary.

Mr. TOOMBS. He was sent as a commissioner with plenipotentiary powers.

Mr. SLIDELL. So are all commissioners.

Mr. TOOMBS. He was accredited to the sovereign of the country, and not to the Minister for Foreign Affairs. Both these gentlemen were commissioned as full ministers, according to the uniform practice of the Government, as their commission was directed to the sovereign, and not to the Secretary for Foreign Affairs.

Mr. SLIDELL. I wish to state a distinction which I draw. Every person who is sent to a foreign Government for the purpose of performing a special duty, is quod ad hoc clothed with plenipotentiary powers—that is clear; and the grade in which he serves regulates the standard of compensation. Now, this is the point to which I wish to direct the attention of the Senator from Georgia: What was the tenor of the commission under which Mr. Schenck acted in negotiating the treaties with these two Republics? Was he sent there in the capacity of Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary? Or was he a simple commissioner, deputed for a specific purpose? That is the point.

Mr. TOOMBS. I have his commission here; and I can state to the Senator that he was sent as commissioner, as Mr. Clay, and Mr. Adams, and the other gentlemen who were sent to Ghent. He was accredited to the sovereign. I think the Senator is in error in regard to his distinction. It does not follow, of course, that, if a gentleman be accredited to a court for a special duty, he has plenipotentiary powers. That does not necessarily result. When a man is sent as minister resident or chargé, he is not accredited to the sovereign of the country. These gentlemen had precisely the same powers as Mr. Murray when he was sent to Paris, and precisely the same powers as Mr. Clay and Mr. Adams when they were sent to Ghent. Those were full missions, and they were allowed the outfit of a full mission.

Mr. BUTLER. I have endeavored to attain something like a conclusion conformable to principle in this matter; and if my friend from Georgia had made good the general proposition with which he started out, and which I think he has maintained with a great deal of plausibility, at least, I should have voted with him; but as I understand now—and really it is from what he has stated, as from anything else—when John Quincy Adams, Minister Plenipotentiary at the Court of St. Petersburg, was required to act in the negotiation of the treaty of Ghent, he was appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, for that purpose. When Mr. Clay left the United States for the purpose of negotiating the treaty at Ghent he also went under the same sanction, with an incidental power to go to London as commissioner and negotiate a commercial treaty with Great Britain, upon the contingency of the success of the treaty of Ghent. So far as regards the claim for an outfit, I understand they claimed it by virtue of their commission derived from the President and Senate of the United States.

Mr. TOOMBS. Not that. They were not accredited to London, but the negotiation of the commercial treaty was expected to be at London. Mr. Clay was not sent to London, but at the time he was sent to Ghent to negotiate the treaty of peace, he was also instructed to form a commercial treaty.

Mr. BUTLER. I wish to make these two propositions clear, or to have them made clear.

When John Quincy Adams was selected to go to Ghent, he was made Minister in addition to his functions as Minister Plenipotentiary at St. Petersburg.

Mr. TOOMBS. He was.

Mr. BUTLER. He received that commission, as I understand, by the nomination of the President and the sanction of the Senate.

Mr. TOOMBS. He did.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Clay received his appointment by the nomination of the President and sanction of the Senate, and Mr. Clay had authority to go to London and negotiate this commercial treaty. Now, as I understand, Mr. Clay did not, in the first place, claim an outfit as Minister to Great Britain, but his accounts were suspended, and that claim was a subsequent matter.

Mr. TOOMBS. The Senator did not understand me, or I was very unfortunate in my remarks. The negotiations for the commercial treaty were transferred to London, because the British Government did not wish to make the treaty at Ghent, and I said that Mr. Clay claimed the whole $9,000 for going to London. He was allowed at first only $4,500 for an outfit, and he was subsequently allowed the balance under the opinion of the Attorney General. But I will correct myself as to one point. I am not sure, (my opinion is rather otherwise,) though the Senator from Louisiana says it is so, that those commissioners were appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate.

Mr. BUTLER. That would be a very important element in my judgment.

Mr. TOOMBS. My impression is the other way, but I am not certain.

Mr. BUTLER. Assuming, however, that they went with the full authority of the Senate and the President of the United States, I think they were properly paid. I think Mr. Clay was properly paid. The measure of compensation was to be allowed by Congress, or the accounting officer, and $9,000 was adopted as that measure. I am willing to acquiesce in it, but it is a precedent that ought not to be followed.

Mr. MASON. Here are the commissions of these gentlemen. I have sent for them, and will read them to the Senate.

MILLARD FILLMORE, President of the United States of America, to his Excellency the President of the Oriental Republic of Uruguay:

GREAT AND GOOD FRIEND: I have made choice of Robert C. Schenck, one of our most distinguished citizens, an Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to Brazil, to proceed to Montevideo on business connected with the welfare of our respective countries. I consequently pray your Excellency to give credence to whatever Mr. Schenck shall say to you on our part, and most of all when he shall assure your Excellency of our ardent desire to maintain unimpaired, and to strengthen the friendly relations which fortunately exist between the United States and the Oriental Republic of Uruguay.

And so I pray God to have your Excellency in His safe and holy keeping.

Written at Washington, the 29th day of April, A. D. 1852.

Your good friend,

MILLARD FILLMORE.

By the President:

DANIEL WEBSTER, Secretary of State.

Mr. TOOMBS. I will ask the Senator if that is not the precise language of the letters of credence which he carried to Brazil?

Mr. MASON. No, sir.

Mr. TOOMBS. It is an exact copy, and they carry nothing else abroad.

Mr. MASON. When Mr. Schenck went to Brazil, he carried with him a letter of credit, announcing that he was Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary at Brazil. He was there in that character, and clothed with that name. In this paper he is described as Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to Brazil, by way of describing the person that was sent on a special mission to Uruguay; and so in the case of Mr. Pendleton. This is a joint commission.

MILLARD FILLMORE, President of the United States of America, to all whom these presents shall come, Greeting:

Know ye, that for the purpose of confirming between the United States and the Argentine Confederation, or the States now or at any time composing the same, jointly, or severally, perfect harmony and good correspondence, and reposing special trust and confidence in the integrity, prudence, and abilities of Robert C. Schenck, Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary of the United States to Brazil, and of John S. Pendleton, Chargé d'Affaires of the United States to the said Confederation, I hereby invest them jointly or severally, with full and all manner of power and authority for and in the name of the United States to meet and confer with any person or persons duly authorized by the Government of the said Argentine Confederation or by the Government of either of the States now or at any time composing the same, being invested with like power and authority, and with him or them to agree, treat, consult, and negotiate of and concerning general commerce between the United States and the Argentine Confederation or the States now or at any time composing the same jointly or severally, and to conclude and sign a treaty or treaties touching the premises, transmitting the same to the President of the United States for his ratification, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate thereof.

In testimony whereof I have caused the seal of the United States to be herewith affixed.

Given under my hand at the city of Washington, the 27th day of April, A. D. 1852, and of the Independence of the United States, the seventy-sixth.

MILLARD FILLMORE.

By the President:

DANIEL WEBSTER, Secretary of State.

These papers show that these two gentlemen are described by their proper title to make known to the two Governments to which they were sent who they were. One was a minister to Brazil, the other was chargé d'affaires at the Argentine Confederation; and they were sent as special commissioners for the purpose of making treaties with these Republics.

Mr. RUSK. I understand the honorable Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] to say that these two gentlemen had been commissioned by the President, and confirmed by the Senate, in this capacity, for the purpose of making these treaties, notwithstanding they held the offices specially, one of minister to another Government, and the other of chargé d'affaires. Now, sir, what difference is it? The history of the case is this: A crisis arose in these countries. It was presumed by the President, that commercial treaties could be formed. It had been attempted before, but it had been an utter failure, both on the part of this Government and the Governments of Europe. That crisis arose when the Senate was not in session. The President, therefore, could make no appointments of this description, and he must necessarily devolve this duty upon this minister and this chargé d'affaires. They went. The British and French Governments, at the same time, availing themselves of this very crisis in the affairs of the country, sent their ministers for the purpose of making commercial treaties, which were regarded of vast importance, with them. It had been regarded as of vast importance for a number of years to have commercial relations with these countries, if possible.

Suppose the Senate had been in session when the crisis arrived, and they had been asked, would they not have confirmed the appointment necessary to have obtained these important commercial treaties? I think there is no doubt of it. There certainly can be no doubt of it; because when the treaties were made and sent here, they were at once confirmed. They were sanctioned by the Senate. Then everything was acquired by these gentlemen which could have been acquired if they had had in their pockets the additional commissions which now seem to be made of importance. The action of the Senate, confirming the treaties, is conclusive proof that if it had been in session at the time, it would have authorized the appointment of these persons for the purpose of obtaining the commercial treaties. We have availed ourselves of the labors of these gentlemen, and now, upon a matter of etiquette, because they did not have a particular commission in their pockets, we are called upon to refuse to pay them. Sir, taking it for granted that the Senate would have sanctioned these missions if they had been in session, and it cannot be disputed, for they sanctioned the treaties, and if they were regarded as matters of so much importance as to lead them to sanction the treaties unanimously, they certainly would have regarded it at the time as a matter of considerable importance to have them commissioned, and having availed ourselves of the labors of these gentlemen, I am willing to pay them.

Mr. MASON. I desire to ask the Senator a question. Suppose the President of the United States had thought proper to send a minister to negotiate treaties with Uruguay and Paraguay, and with the other States, the names of which I do not recollect, and had asked the Senate for an appropriation to do it, and had sent one minister to discharge that service, would that minister not have received only a single outfit of $9,000, and a single salary of $9,000?

Mr. RUSK. Certainly; because that would have been his arrangement. But I can answer that question by asking another. Suppose he had asked for the outfit for two ministers, one to have gone to each of these places; would they not both have received outfits and salaries? It is obvious they would. Certainly that would have been the case, and the supposition is as strong on the one side as on the other.

Mr. President, the services have been performed. The Government has availed itself of them by sanctioning the treaties made by these gentlemen. Those treaties have been regarded by the Government as matters of considerable importance, and I shall not stickle over their want of a particular kind of commission in their pockets, to withhold from them their compensation.

Mr. TOUCEY. I rise to call attention to one fact. At the time when these commissions were issued, when these instructions were given to these two ministers who had been appointed and confirmed, and were resident abroad, the Senate was in session, and now the claim is made that they are entitled to an outfit on the ground of a new appointment either as minister of the first or second grade. By what right or authority, when the Senate is in session, can the President of the United States, without sending in to this body the nomination, send a minister to any other country, and give him a title in consequence of the new office which is conferred? I think it shows that it was not the intention of the President to make a new appointment, but merely to call upon those individuals, who were already holding foreign appointments, to discharge occasional duties; and now, as a remuneration, I am willing to make them an ample compensation for their expenses; but I am not willing to admit that they received a new appointment at the hands of the President entitling them to an outfit, when it never had been submitted to the Senate which was in session, whether it would agree to confirm the appointment or not. I am therefore opposed to the proposition of the Senator from Georgia, but am in favor of the one that comes from the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. BUTLER. I shall detain the Senate but a very few minutes, to put myself right. I feel confident of my conclusions now. Before Mr. Schenck could receive $9,000 as an outfit, he must do so in virtue officii, that is, as a minister plenipotentiary, deriving his powers from the nomination of the President, and the confirmation of the Senate; and if he had presented himself to the Department, in virtue officii, they would have paid it just exactly as it was paid John Quincy Adams, who left St. Petersburg, and claimed, by virtue of his commission, an outfit to Ghent; or, as did Mr. Clay; and until they bring themselves within that character, they have no right to claim it as an outfit. The outfit of $9,000 is incident to an office regularly derived from the constitutional authority of the President and the Senate of the United States. So far from the President of the United States intimating that Mr. Schenck was to be regarded with the dignity of a Minister Plenipotentiary, he did not even give him the designation; but to what monstrous abuses would this lead? Suppose that a President, after he has found that he is to go out of office, chooses, by a commission of this kind, to detail a favorite minister to go to the twenty-two courts in South America, to Central America, to Mexico; or suppose to the courts in Europe, where they can go from one to another in a few hours. Suppose the President were to detail one of his favorite ministers to go to England, to France, to Belgium, to Rome, and to Constantinople, according to the doctrine of my friend from Georgia, in virtue officii, he could claim, as a matter of right, an outfit of $9,000. I would allow him for the services, and for going to a different place, a fair and liberal compensation; but I would not allow him the outfit incident to an office that can only be derived from the President and the Senate.

Mr. RUSK. No such abuse as that of which the Senator speaks has been committed in this case.

Mr. BUTLER. I do not say that it has. I say it might be committed.

Mr. RUSK. Hence that objection cannot apply here. If these persons had been ministers appointed by the President, and confirmed by the Senate, to these Republics, they would have been entitled to $9,000 as a salary. All that is necessary to answer in regard to what the President might do, is, that they have to come here for the purpose of getting an appropriation; and if anything was done improperly, all that it would be necessary for the Senate to do, would be to reject it. Nobody pretends that there was anything improper in this case.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Georgia to the amendment.

Mr. RUSK called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 17, nays 24; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Badger, Bell, Benjamin, Brown, Cooper, Dawson, Fish, Foot, Geyer, Pettit, Pratt, Rockwell, Rusk, Thompson of Kentucky, Thomson of New Jersey, Toombs, and Wade—17.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Allen, Atchison, Bayard, Bright, Brodhead, Butler, Dodge of Wisconsin, Evans, Fitzpatrick, Hamlin, Houston, Hunter, James, Jones of Tennessee, Mason, Norris, Sebastian, Shields, Slidell, Toucey, Walker, Weller, and Williams—24.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. ATCHISON. (Mr. WELLER in the chair.) I move now to amend the amendment of the committee in accordance with the suggestion that I made to the Senator from Georgia, by striking out "twenty-five" and inserting "fifty," which will be including the expense.

Mr. MASON. Does the Senator mean that the expenses shall be paid out of the fifty dollars?

Mr. ATCHISON. Yes, sir.

Mr. BUTLER. That would be worse for them than the original amendment is.

Mr. MASON. Their expenses are all paid except—

Mr. ATCHISON. Then I move to strike out "twenty-five dollars," and insert "fifty dollars" per diem.

Mr. MASON. That will give them exactly the sum proposed by the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. ATCHISON. No—less $9,000 outfit.

Mr. MASON. Twenty-five dollars a day for the time employed is at the rate of $9,000 a year. If you give them fifty dollars a day, that is at the rate of $18,000; and that is what the Senator from Georgia proposed to give by his amendment.

Mr. TOOMBS. The Senator from Virginia does not seem to comprehend my amendment at all. I did no such thing. I proposed to give Mr. Schenck the amount of $18,000; therefore, the amendment of the Senator from Missouri is precisely half of mine. That is the effect of it.

Mr. MASON. The amendment of the Senator from Georgia was to pay Mr. Schenck $18,000 for some five or six months' service. The Senator from Missouri proposes to pay him at the rate of fifty dollars a day for about six months' service, which is at the rate of $18,000 a year. If this be done, it will be taken as a precedent to establish the position, that if a minister is sent from one country to another to transact special business, besides his salary going on all the time at $9,000 a year, and expenses, he may have fifty dollars a day.

Mr. WALKER. With the desire to know afterwards what the country may think of paying, under these circumstances, fifty dollars a day, I ask respectfully for the yeas and nays on the amendment to the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. TOUCEY. If I understand it, these ministers have already been paid their annual salary during the very period of six months for which it is now proposed to pay them twenty-five dollars a day in addition; and the proposition contained in the amendment to the amendment is to make it fifty dollars a day, so that in case of the minister plenipotentiary during these six months, he will be receiving at the rate of seventy-five dollars a day.

The question was taken by yeas and nays, and resulted as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Atchison, Badger, Bell, Benjamin, Cooper, Dawson, Fessenden, Fish, Foot, Geyer, Pearce, Pettit, Pratt, Rockwell, Rusk, Shields, Toombs, and Wade—18.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Allen, Bayard, Bright, Brodhead, Brown, Dodge of Wisconsin, Evans, Fitzpatrick, Hamlin, Houston, Hunter, James, Jones of Tennessee, Mason, Sebastian, Slidell, Thomson of New Jersey, Toucey, Walker, Weller, and Williams—22.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. WALKER. I move to strike out of the amendment reported from the committee the words:

And a compensation at the rate of twenty-five dollars per diem shall be allowed each of them for the time they were employed, to be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

That will leave the amendment a provision simply to pay the expenses of these gentlemen, and when they cannot produce their vouchers, that their own certificates may be taken for the items of their expenses. I make this motion upon the ground that, aside from their expenses, the Government was entitled to their time. If they had remained at the points to which they were originally appointed, the Government would have been entitled to their services. They spent no more time in going on the special mission than they would have spent in remaining. This provides for allowing their expenses, and their own certificates are to be taken when they cannot produce vouchers. Upon my amendment I simply ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MASON. The committee were satisfied, from the papers before them, and I dare say other Senators would be satisfied, that these gentlemen, being absent from the places to which they were appointed to reside, and being obliged to continue their establishments there, were put to actual expenses by their absence, and we thought we had measured them a fair and just allowance in giving them at the rate of an additional salary.

Mr. WALKER. Suppose there were expenses incurred; can they not bring them under the item of expenses, and thus avoid precedent of giving double compensation for the time spent in the service of the country?

Mr. GWIN. In regard to the suggestion of the Chairman of the Committee on Finance, when the chargé was absent, were not his duties performed by the secretary of legation, and did he not receive at the rate of $4,500?

Mr. MASON. While he was absent the secretary of legation was acting as chargé ad interim; and the secretary has asked to be paid the difference between the salary of the one office and that of the other. The committee reported in his favor.

The question was taken by yeas and nays; and resulted—yeas 13, nays 30; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Allen, Badger, Bright, Dodge of Wisconsin, Fitzpatrick, Gillette, Jones of Tennessee, Sebastian, Toombs, Wade, Walker, and Williams—13.

NAYS—Messrs. Atchison, Bell, Benjamin, Brodhead, Brown, Butler, Cooper, Dawson, Dodge of Iowa, Evans, Fassenden, Fish, Foot, Geyer, Hamlin, Houston, Hunter, James, Mallory, Mason, Pettit, Pratt, Rockwell, Rusk, Shields, Slidell, Thompson of Kentucky, Thomson of New Jersey, Toucey, and Weller—30.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The question then recurred on the amendment of the committee.

Mr. WADE called for the yeas and nays; and they were ordered.

Mr. PEARCE. Mr. President, I do not wish to consume the time of the Senate; but I desire to say that I shall vote against this proposition, considering the amount proposed to be paid by it as entirely inadequate. I have not heard the arguments advanced in the case; but I merely wish to say, that I understand Mr. Schenck was absent from Brazil eighty-three days on his mission, and he traveled on that occasion four thousand eight hundred miles, and was constantly engaged in arduous labors, which resulted in the successful conclusion of a treaty. It is proposed to pay him at the rate of $2,075 for that service. In the performance of that service he was obliged to leave his house, in which he had just established himself, and to pay out of his own pocket more than $800, which leaves a balance of $1,200 for this service. On the second occasion he was absent ninety-five days, during which time two treaties were negotiated. It is proposed to pay him for that $2,375. He had to pay out of his own pocket for the care of his property during that time $380, leaving $1,895 for the making of these two treaties. That is $947 for each treaty. Now, sir, while he was negotiating one of these treaties, it became necessary to employ a clerk. I would remark here, that for these expenses vouchers have been produced to the State Department, but no allowance has been made.

Mr. MASON. It is allowed by this amendment.

Mr. PEARCE. Then he had to employ a clerk for two weeks, whose expenses have been paid at this Department, $1,000 for his services; so that absolutely they have given the clerk who was employed more money than is given to Mr. Schenck for the time he was employed in making the treaty.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 27, nays 17; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allen, Atchison, Bright, Brodhead, Brown, Butler, Chase, Dawson, Dodge of Wisconsin, Dodge of Iowa, Evans, Gillette, Houston, Hunter, James, Jones of Tennessee, Mallory, Mason, Pettit, Pratt, Shields, Slidell, Thompson of Kentucky, Thomson of New Jersey, Toucey, Weller, and Williams—27.

NAYS—Messrs. Badger, Bayard, Bell, Benjamin, Cooper, Fassenden, Fish, Fitzpatrick, Foot, Gwin, Pearce, Rockwell, Rusk, Sebastian, Toombs, Wade, and Walker—17.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MASON. I am instructed by the Committee on Foreign Relations to offer the following amendment:

For payment to Lieutenant W. D. Porter, of the Navy of the United States, the sum of $1,748 61, being for so much money expended by him for expenses incurred in bringing Amin Bey, the Turkish envoy, and his attendants to the United States in the year 1850, at the request of the United States minister resident at Constantinople.

Mr. HUNTER. Is not that a private claim?

Mr. MASON. An appropriation to Lieutenant Porter passed the Senate at the last session, and my impression is, upon an appropriation bill. It would seem at first to be in the nature of a private claim; but it is for expenses incurred by direction of the minister at Constantinople, and it seemed to us in the nature of current services of the country. The expenses were really incurred by the officer. The Government made an appropriation of $10,000 to pay the expenses of this agent while in the country, all of which I have been told has been drawn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. WELLER in the chair.) The Chair thinks that this amendment is in order. It is brought forward by the order of a standing committee. The Chair is disposed to entertain it.

Mr. TOOMBS. I ask the chairman of the committee if that was the cost of his passage here in a public ship?

Mr. MASON. No, sir. Lieutenant Porter commanded one of the public ships, and he was requested by the minister to furnish a passage to Amin Bey.

Mr. TOOMBS. I understand that. But did it cost near $2,000 to bring him here?

Mr. MASON. Lieutenant Porter received him on board his ship as a guest, and provided for him by having apartments put up in the ship for him. He provided for him and suite, entertained them, and fed them all the way. It is shown that he incurred these actual expenses.

Mr. TOOMBS. Did not the Government appropriate $10,000 for the expenses of Amin Bey?

Mr. MASON. The Government appropriated $10,000 to pay his expenses after he arrived in this country to enable him to travel about.

Mr. HUNTER. It seems to me that this is a private claim. I am compelled to raise the question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has great doubt about it. He decided that it was in order, but if the Senate thinks proper to overrule the decision, the Chair is willing to submit the question to them. The question of order, therefore, which is raised, will be submitted to the Senate.

The question was put; and the Chair decided that the decision of the Chair appeared to be overruled.

Mr. BUTLER. No appeal was taken from the decision.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Virginia [Mr. Hunter] took an appeal.

Mr. BUTLER. I do not think he did.

Mr. HUNTER. The President has the right to submit the question. I did not appeal, but I am glad the question has been submitted to the Senate.

Mr. BUTLER. It is fairly in order. Nobody is going to appeal.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair entertains doubt upon the subject, and he is willing to refer the question to the Senate.

Mr. HUNTER. I hope the sense of the Senate will be taken.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will put the question to the Senate.

The question was taken; and the amendment was declared to be out of order.

Mr. MASON. I have here a class of amendments which the Committee on Foreign Relations have instructed me to offer. Reports have been made in each case. They are to pay certain secretaries of legation at foreign courts the compensation of chargé d'affaires, while acting in that character. In each instance we have ascertained, at the Department of State, that the services were rendered, I believe the invariable practice of the Government has been to make the allowance. The first one that I offer is in the case of Mr. Sanford. In it there is an allowance of the small sum of $1,170 63 additional for clerk hire, which he shows was actually and necessarily paid by him while acting as secretary of legation. The others are simply for the difference in pay. I present them all as a class.

Mr. GWIN. I raise the question whether they are not private claims?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the amendment.

The Secretary commenced to read:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to pay out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated—

Mr. GWIN. The Secretary is reading that from a printed slip. A part of it has been stricken out. I should like to hear the whole of it read.

The Secretary read "Senate bill No. 430."

Mr. GWIN. From what committee is it reported?

The Secretary continued to read:

"Mr. SLIDELL, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, submitted a report, accompanied by the following bill:

"July 22 recommitted to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

"July 24 reported with an amendment, (to insert the words printed in italics,) accompanied by a report.

"A bill for the relief of Henry S. Sanford."

Mr. GWIN. That is it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the amendment, &c.

It was read, as follows:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to pay, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Henry S. Sanford, late acting chargé d'affaires of the United States at Paris, the sum of $2,223 82, it being the amount of the difference between the salary received by him, as secretary of legation at Paris, from the 14th day of May, 1853, to the 22d day of January, 1854, and the salary of a chargé d'affaires for the same period, together with the usual outfit of a chargé d'affaires, and for necessary clerk hire paid by him while secretary of legation at Paris, the further sum of $1,170 63.

Mr. MASON. I ought to have stated that that case was reported upon by the Senator from Louisiana, [Mr. SLIDELL] from the Committee on Foreign Relations, and it was not put into my hands until just now by him, so that I did not make the statement that it contained also an appropriation for outfit, and is distinguished in that way from the others in the class which make provision only for the difference between the pay of the secretary of legation and chargé d'affaires.

Mr. BADGER. I desire to know whether it is not a private claim?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is of the opinion that it comes within the prohibition of the rule, and is, therefore, out of order.

Mr. MASON. The custom of the Senate at least has been, in all other instances, to permit appropriations of this kind to be put upon the appropriation bills; and the reason by which they are distinguished always is this: these gentlemen are officers in the public service; they are discharging other duties than those pertaining to their office, for which no appropriation by law has been made; and, heretofore, they have gone upon the appropriation bills. It is the very case, I apprehend, presented a little while ago by the Senator from Delaware, in regard to the chief clerks in the Department of State, while discharging the duties of the office of Secretary of State. They were paid the same salary by an appropriation on this bill. If the Chair decides the amendment to be out of order, I must respectfully appeal from the decision, because I have a precedent in the case of the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. BADGER. The cases would be alike if this were an appropriation to carry out the provision of an existing law—if there was a law which entitled the party to receive the compensation, and he had not received it.

Mr. MASON. It strikes me the cases are precisely alike in this. There is no law to pay a chief clerk in the Department of State the salary of the Secretary of State while he acts as such.

Mr. BADGER. There is the mistake of the Senator.

Mr. MASON. I yield if I am mistaken. I had supposed that there was none, or that it would not have been necessary to come here for a special act.

Mr. BADGER. The act of 1792 authorizes the President to make these appointments of acting officers, and the custom of the Government for years has always been to pay them as a matter of course; but they come to Congress when the money has not been appropriated.

Mr. MASON. I was not aware of that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the appeal.

Mr. MASON. I withdraw it.

Mr. SLIDELL. I should like to ask the Senator from North Carolina how he distinguishes this case, to which he now objects, from the one which he so earnestly advocated of Schenck and Pendleton.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will inform the Senator from Louisiana that there is no question now before the Senate.

Mr. SLIDELL. I hope the Senator will answer the question.

Mr. BADGER. I will say to the Senator from Louisiana that I expressed no views upon that subject—none at all. When I came into the Senate to attend to what was going on, I found that case before the body, and under discussion. No question had been raised as to its being in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the next amendment.

Mr. MASON. The rest are of the same character, and of course must fall with the one which has been read. I have another amendment which I am instructed by the Committee on Foreign Relations to offer, to increase the salaries of the Ministers to Great Britain and France to the sum of $15,000 per annum, and to discontinue the outfit. I had it drawn up here, but it has been mislaid. I will write it out again.

Mr. BRIGHT. While the Senator is preparing his amendment, I have a small one to offer from the Committee on Finance. It is to insert:

To enable the Secretary of the Interior to pay for two hundred and twenty feet and five inches of granite coping used in the improvement of the triangular square at the corner of 13th street and Pennsylvania avenue, $515.47.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MASON. I offer the following amendment to come after the appropriation for the salaries of the ministers to the two courts mentioned:

Provided, That the salaries of the Ministers to Great Britain and France, shall be hereafter, to each, at the rate of $15,000 per annum, and that the outfits to those missions be hereafter discontinued.

Mr. SHIELDS. I ask the honorable Senator why deny the outfit? Why not leave it just as it is?

Mr. MASON. At the last session the Senate put upon the appropriation bill a provision making the salary $15,000 a year for the Ministers to the four courts of Great Britain, France, Spain, and Russia. The House disagreed to it; and it was lost. It was thought absolutely necessary, by the Committee on Foreign Relations, that the salaries of the ministers to these two Governments, at least, should be increased, and, at the same time, that the outfit should be discontinued. The policy in discontinuing the outfit, as I understood it, was that it would induce ministers to remain during the full term of four years, for which they are usually sent—during one Administration—and that during the four years the increased salary would largely overgo the existing salary with the outfit.

Mr. PRATT. The manifest effect and operation of this amendment would be to discriminate between the present incumbents and all others who should hold similar offices hereafter. Those gentlemen now holding the positions, have received the outfit of $9,000, and they are to receive in addition to that outfit $15,000, instead of $9,000 a year for the future. If they were to resign tomorrow, and some other citizen should be sent to fill their place, he would be entitled to $15,000 per annum, and would be entitled to no outfit. Now, I am decidedly in favor of increasing the salaries of all these officers. This, however, does not increase, but, on the contrary, diminishes the salary, except to the present incumbents. Now, any party receiving an original appointment, would receive the first year $18,000. By the amendment he would only receive $15,000. It therefore does not increase the salary of those hereafter to be appointed. It rather diminishes their emoluments and fees, and is confined exclusively for the benefit of those now in office.

Mr. MASON. Undoubtedly it will discriminate between those now in office and those hereafter to be appointed; but you cannot well change the salaries without discriminating between the predecessors and their successors in office.

Mr. PRATT. The Senator corresponds in opinion with me as I understand. Then his object can be effected by striking out the latter part of the amendment, so that it will increase the salaries to $15,000, and leave the outfit as it is. That will leave the successors of the present incumbents entitled to the outfit. I do not desire to discriminate between them. There is no necessity for it; because, by striking out the latter part of the amendment, you accomplish the very object which the Senator professes to desire to obtain, and put all others upon the same footing with those, giving them a salary of $15,000 and the outfit.

Mr. MASON. The object of the committee was to discontinue the outfit where they increased the salary. The latter part is prospective, and applies to the present and all future ministers. If you strike it out, you will leave the outfit with the additional salary. I should have no objection to that, but I am afraid it could not be carried elsewhere.

Mr. SHIELDS. I do not wish to raise any objection here, but I merely suggest, for the consideration of the honorable Senator from Virginia, that this outfit is necessary. No one, unless a wealthy citizen, could appear at either of those courts without the aid of the outfit. I think depriving them of it would have an injurious effect; and I concur, therefore, with the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. MASON. Probably the Senator did not hear what I said just now, that, at the last session, we proposed to increase those salaries to $15,000, leaving the outfit as it stands. The House disagreed to it. We do not legislate alone; we legislate in union with the other branch; and the probability is, that if we continue the outfit, the House will again disagree to it, and I should rather take half a loaf than no bread.

Mr. FISH. I think the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations omits to state that the increase of salary at that time embraced the ministers to two other courts, Spain and Russia. It was probably on account of their being connected that the House did not conceive the necessity for the increase to exist, and they may on that account have disagreed to the amendment, but may not object to increase the salaries of the Ministers to England and France.

Mr. MASON. I will modify my amendment by striking out the last clause.

Mr. SLIDELL. I trust the chairman of the committee will not do that. If he does, I shall be obliged to vote against the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Chair understand the Senator from Virginia to make that modification in the amendment?

Mr. MASON. It seems to be so generally unacceptable to discontinue the outfit, that, not to detain the Senate, I propose to modify it by striking out the words, "and the outfit appropriated by law to those missions shall be henceforward discontinued."

Mr. SLIDELL. I move to reinstate that provision which the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations has stricken out; and I wish to state very briefly the reasons which induced me to do so. The Committee on Foreign Relations thought that it was very desirable to hold out inducements to ministers to remain for as long a period as possible at their posts. They wished to avoid the temptation which is found in many instances, to induce persons to accept appointments, receive the outfit, go abroad, and remain for so limited a time that really they can be of no use to the Government. The amount which would be given to these ministers under the amendment of the committee, if they remained abroad four years, would be $60,000. Under the old system they would have received $36,000 as salary and $9,000 outfit; that would be $45,000. The honorable Senator from Maryland has said that the amendment, if adopted in the form in which it was originally presented by the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, would be unjust and unequal in its operation. It would be so, but to a much more limited extent than he supposes. I will take the case of the present incumbent at London. He was appointed, if I mistake not, in the month of April of last year. He received his outfit; but under the provision of the amendment, as I desire it shall stand, and as originally offered by the chairman of the committee, he will have received, during the period of some fifteen months, $6,000 less salary than is proposed to be given to the minister hereafter appointed to either of these courts. That would make a difference in the compensation. He would receive, supposing this amendment to be adopted, and the salary be not changed by any future Congress, less in the form of salary, by $7,500, than his successor would receive, while he would have received $9,000 more in the way of outfit; so that the whole difference reduces itself to the sum of $1,500, neither more nor less.

In legislating for the future, I do not know that we are obliged to have any particular reference to the past. It seems to me, with all respect, that there is nothing in the argument of the Senator from Maryland but this: that he objects that if this provision be adopted, the present minister to London will be compelled to remain abroad four years to receive $15,000 more than his successors.

As regards the question of outfit, I do not think, Mr. President, that outfits are at all necessary. As a general rule, I would say they are not necessary. A minister going to London or Paris may be under the necessity of expending money to prepare himself; but, as I understand it, it is now customary to pay in advance a certain portion of the salaries of the ministers in addition to the outfit. That proportion depends upon the discretion of the Department. A minister going abroad with a salary of $15,000 may receive six months' salary in advance. My great objection to the system of outfits, I repeat, is, that it holds out inducements for men to go abroad for the mere purpose of jobbing. I think it is a vital error in our system, and I wish to get rid of it altogether. When the opportunity arrives, I shall feel disposed to make an effort generally to get rid of it, and to make whatever increase may be necessary in the salaries.

Mr. BUTLER. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. GWIN called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 18, nays 30; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allen, Butler, Chase, Clayton, Cooper, Fitzpatrick, Foot, Gillette, James, Pearce, Pettit, Rockwell, Rusk, Sebastian, Sumner, Thompson of Kentucky, Toombs, and Wade—18.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Atchison, Badger, Bayard, Bell, Benjamin, Brodhead, Brown, Dawson, Dodge of Wisconsin, Dodge of Iowa, Douglas, Fessenden, Fish, Geyer, Gwin, Hamlin, Houston, Hunter, Johnson, Mallory, Mason, Pratt, Shields, Slidell, Thomson of New Jersey, Toucey, Walker, Weller, and Williams—30.

So the motion to adjourn was not agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana to insert in the amendment of the committee the following words:

And the outfit appropriated by law to those missions shall be henceforward discontinued.

The question was then taken; and the Presiding Officer declared it to be rejected.

Mr. SLIDELL called for the yeas and nays; but they were not ordered.

Mr. MASON. I have found that, probably by the construction under the existing law, the amendment which I have offered, as it stands, may entitle these ministers to a full year's salary and outfit, so that they will receive a salary of $15,000, and an outfit of $15,000. To avoid that construction, I propose to modify it by adding the following:

The outfit to each not to exceed the sum of $9,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment as modified.

Mr. SLIDELL. I hope I can have the yeas and nays upon that, at least.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

After the roll had been called,

Mr. WALKER said: I wish to know if I have voted right? I intended, by the vote I gave, to go against the $15,000 outfit.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator voted wrong then.

Mr. WALKER. I think the Senate have been voting under a misapprehension. If I understand the explanation of the Senator from Virginia, it is this: without his modification, they might receive an outfit of $15,000, a year's salary. He proposes to give $9,000 outfit. I voted to allow $9,000, and to prevent the $15,000 outfit.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment with that modification. The Senator has voted for the whole amendment.

Mr. WALKER. That I intended to do.

Mr. JOHNSON. I should like to hear the amendment, as modified, read.

It was read as follows:

Provided, That the salary of the ministers to Great Britain and France shall be hereafter $15,000 per annum to each; the outfit to each not to exceed the sum of $9,000.

Mr. MASON. If the Senate will allow me, I will state that I first offered the amendment to pay to the two ministers the sum of $15,000 each per annum; but upon examining the existing law, I found that, under it, the probable construction would be to make the salary of each $15,000, and the outfit $15,000. It was to avoid that construction that I modified it by leaving the outfit at $9,000, which it now is; so that, if the proposition carries, we may hereafter pay the ministers to these courts a salary of $15,000, and an outfit of $9,000.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 21, nays 25; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allen, Badger, Bayard, Bell, Benjamin, Brown, Butler, Clayton, Cooper, Dawson, Fish, James, Mason, Pearce, Pettit, Pratt, Shields, Thomson of New Jersey, Toucey, Walker, and Weller—21.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Atchison, Brodhead, Chase, Dodge of Wisconsin, Dodge of Iowa, Fessenden, Fitzpatrick, Foot, Gillette, Houston, Johnson, Rusk, Sebastian, Slidell, Sumner, Toombs, Wade, and Williams—25.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MASON. The Committee on the District of Columbia have instructed me to offer the following amendment:

To reimburse the expenditure made by the Commissioner of Public Buildings for the repair of the Potomac bridge, when injured by fire, $4,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MASON. In the absence of the chairman, I am directed to offer another amendment from the same committee. It is to insert:

To enable the Secretary of the Interior to pay the outstanding debts of the penitentiary, $12,175 66.

Mr. President, the fact in relation to that amendment, as appears from the report of the warden and keepers, is this: For a long series of years, they have been accumulating a debt there for the purchase, chiefly, of materials for the workmen. The larger portion of it is due to one man in the city of Washington; and they report that the custom of giving credit at the institution, which they have been obliged to do, disables them from meeting these debts. It is to wipe out the outstanding debts that this amendment is offered.

Mr. GWIN. I desire to ask a question of the chairman. Are not these men officers of the Government? and have they contracted debts without an appropriation being made?

Mr. HUNTER. I do not understand how they had any right to contract the debt.

Mr. MASON. I do not know what right they had to contract the debt. They were placed there with instructions to keep the mechanics employed, and sell the materials, and these debts were contracted for the purchase of materials.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. BELL. I desire to submit a motion to amend this bill, which, I trust, will meet with the unanimous assent of the body. I propose to amend the clause "for salaries of the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, and eight associate judges, $41,000," by striking out "$41,000" and inserting:

Which said salaries shall hereafter be, the Chief Justice $7,000, and of the associate justices $8,500 each, commencing with the present fiscal year, $59,000.

I do not propose to say a single word on the amendment, unless some one opposes it.

Mr. FITZPATRICK called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

Mr. RUSK. At the proper time I will vote cheerfully for the increase of the salaries of the Judges of the Supreme Court. The judiciary system is in a wretched condition; but I am not willing to touch it by piece-meal. Whenever the proposition comes up to reorganize the Supreme Court, I will vote for it.

Mr. BUTLER. I must be permitted to say, in justice to myself, that as chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, I reported a bill to accommodate every portion of this Confederacy. I have attempted to call it up twice, but these stronger bills, involving money appropriations, have pushed it aside. Money has been appropriated for almost any purpose, except as a legitimate compensation for intellectual service. I am for this amendment.

The yeas and nays were taken on the amendment, with the following result:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Badger, Bayard, Bell, Benjamin, Brodhead, Brown, Butler, Clayton, Cooper, Dawson, Fish, Geyer, Gwin, Hunter, James, Mallory, Mason, Pearce, Pettit, Pratt, Rockwell, Shields, Stuart, Thomson of New Jersey, Toombs, Toucey, Weller, and Williams—29.

NAYS—Messrs. Atchison, Chase, Dodge of Wisconsin, Dodge of Iowa, Fessenden, Fitzpatrick, Foot, Gillette, Houston, Johnson, Rusk, Sebastian, Slidell, Sumner, Wade, and Walker—16.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COOPER. At the suggestion of the chairman of the Committee on Finance, I move to reconsider the vote on the appointing of two additional clerks in the Fourth Auditor's office. The recommendation of the Secretary is, that there shall be one in the First and one in the Fourth Auditor's office.

Mr. BADGER. That amendment may be made by general consent, if there be no objection.

Mr. COOPER. It is the same amendment proposed this morning, with this exception: that one of the clerks should be in the First Auditor's office, instead of both in the Fourth.

The amendment was agreed to by general consent.

Mr. BADGER. I desire to offer an amendment to the bill. It proposes no appropriation. I will explain in a few words the object of it. In the second week of the session, I think it was, the Senate passed a bill which I introduced, to correct the phraseology of a clause in the river and harbor bill, which was passed some two years ago, in which an appropriation was made for an improvement in North Carolina; but by some inaccuracy, the language was used "by the construction of a breakwater." My object is merely to correct that phraseology. The amendment is:

And he it further enacted, That the "act making appropriations for the improvement of certain rivers and harbors," approved the 30th of August, 1832, be, and the same is hereby amended by striking from the clause in which they occur, the following words: "by the construction of a breakwater across Croatan Sound."

Mr. STUART. A provision is made for that in the river and harbor bill.

Mr. BADGER. I am aware that there is a provision in that bill intended to attain that object; but it is evident to everybody that there is an extreme probability of that bill not passing this session.

Mr. STUART. I think the probability is precisely the reverse of that.

Mr. BADGER. Suppose it should become a law, and this were provided for twice, it will do no harm. This does not make an appropriation.

Mr. STUART. The only objection is this: there is an objection to giving to a particular district of country advantage over all others in respect to this question.

Mr. BADGER. No particular advantage is asked. The appropriation has been made, and this is merely to correct a mistake in the phraseology of the bill. That is the whole of it. No appropriation of money—no advantage is asked for. The money appropriated under that bill has been applied to every other point, except this one.

Mr. STUART. The same thing is true of the Red river raft. The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JOHNSON] had a bill passed through this body for the purpose of correcting that; it has not been passed by the other House, but the river and harbor bill also contains a provision for it.

Mr. BADGER. I know that, and he is going to offer an amendment, and I shall vote for it.

Mr. ATCHISON, (Mr. WELLER in the chair.) I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. MASON called for the yeas and nays; and they were ordered, and taken with the following result:

YEAS—Messrs. Atchison, Chase, Clayton, Cooper, Fessenden, Foot, Gillette, James, Pearce, Pettit, Pratt, Rockwell, Stuart, Sumner, Thomson of New Jersey, Toombs, Wade, and Weller—18.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Badger, Bayard, Bell, Benjamin, Brown, Dawson, Dodge of Wisconsin, Dodge of Iowa, Fish, Geyer, Gwin, Houston, Hunter, Johnson, Mallory, Mason, Rusk, Sebastian, Shields, Slidell, Toucey, and Walker—23.

So the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. SLIDELL. I move an amendment to the amendment. The Secretary, I presume, has the river and harbor bill at the desk. I think North Carolina has already had enough advantages over the rest of the States in this particular, and she shall have no more, so far as I am concerned. I move to substitute the river and harbor bill for the amendment offered by the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. HUNTER. What amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina has moved an amendment correcting an error in a previous law; the Senator from Louisiana now proposes to amend that by inserting what is commonly called the river and harbor bill.

Mr. HUNTER. In what? The civil and diplomatic appropriation bill? [Laughter.]

Mr. ATCHISON. Read the amendment to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana will please to send up his amendment.

Mr. SLIDELL. The bill is at the Secretary's table. It has been reported from the committee.

Mr. ADAMS. I raise a question of order. The amendment offered by the Senator from North Carolina does not propose any appropriation. He may, therefore, properly offer it without the sanction of a committee. The Senator from Louisiana, however, proposes an amendment to this amendment, which makes a large appropriation, without the sanction of a committee. I raise that question of order.

Mr. SLIDELL. It appears to me, with all due deference to the Senator from Mississippi, there is nothing in this question of order. The river and harbor bill has been reported by the proper committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will decide the question of order. The Chair decides the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana is not in order. The Senator can take an appeal from that decision.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. I hope that, by general consent, the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina will be agreed to. It seems to me to be eminently proper; and, whether the river and harbor bill is passed or not with it in it, no harm will be done. There is no greater friend of the river and harbor bill than myself; but I do not desire to embarrass this with it.

Mr. PETTIT. I may be allowed to enter my protest against this amendment. I do it with great reluctance and regret; for the Senator from North Carolina, who moves it, is uniformly liberal in voting for all reasonable and rational appropriations. I regret exceedingly to feel constrained to oppose his amendment; but why do I do it? If I understand it, two years ago an appropriation was made of $100,000, or about that amount—

Mr. BADGER. Fifty thousand dollars.

Mr. PETTIT. Fifty thousand dollars, the Senator says, for certain works in North Carolina, and because those works were badly described in the law, or such works were described as could not be made at the places mentioned, or were inappropriate, the money has not been expended. The Senator now seeks to make an amendment here by which that money remaining still in the Treasury can be taken out and applied to a new work not described in the law, appropriating the money. A certain work was described in the law, but that work cannot be done, or is inappropriate to be done. The money, therefore, has not been drawn from the Treasury to construct that work, and the Senator now proposes to amend the law, so that the description of work that will then be allowed can be accomplished, and this money appropriated. That is precisely the case.

Now, allow me to say, that while I do not think North Carolina has met with any more favor than she ought to meet with, or that any more money has been appropriated for Cape Fear river than ought to be appropriated, I think she has got a decided advantage over what we must expect to get for other States and other localities. None of us can be mistaken in the inklings or givings out as to what the result will be if we pass the river and harbor bill. I want the effect of the presidential veto to reach all portions of this Union alike. It is unnecessary for me to go into the constitutional argument of the power of this Government to make these appropriations, and much less of its duty to make them—not to say its power, but its duty. But, I repeat, I desire that all portions of the Union shall be placed upon the same footing, and not by a mere hap-hazard guess at the existence of the fact that this Government, by some accident or other, has placed a little obstruction, however large or however small, in the mouth of the Cape Fear river, by which sands and dirt and rubbish have gathered about the mouth of the river, and obstructed its—

Mr. HUNTER. Is this in order? I am reluctant to interpose; but we are anxious to get through with the bill.

Mr. PETTIT. If the Senator wants to adjourn, I will give him the floor to make the motion.

Mr. HUNTER. I do not want to do that.

Mr. PETTIT. Very well. I am in order. You cannot get over me in that way. [Laughter.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks the Senator is in order.

Mr. PETTIT. I will give way to the Senator to move an adjournment.

Mr. HUNTER. Not at all.

Mr. PETTIT. Under these accidental circumstances of an obstruction having been made, as it is alleged, upon the face of the bill, a bill has been approved making an appropriation of $140,000 for Cape Fear river. I have never been on that river. I know not how large it is; whether it is a perennial, or whether it is a spring or fall stream, I do not pretend to know. I take it for granted that the appropriation was right and proper; that it was no larger than necessary. But by this amendment, disguise it as you will, it proposes to appropriate—I use that term, for it is that—out of the Treasury $50,000 which is there, and which cannot be expended under any law in existence whatever. The Senator admits that no such thing can be constructed as a breakwater, for none is needed—none is required. There was a mere lapis penna in drawing the bill; there is no possibility of spending the money; and though this amendment does not say in so many words that it shall be appropriated, it says that it shall be applied to the construction of other works. It is, to all intents and purposes, an appropriation of $50,000 out of the Treasury, which cannot be drawn or applied unless this amendment be passed. Now, then, if it be unconstitutional, as it is said, and given out, to make these appropriations, let us put our hands at once upon all the money that is remaining in the Treasury, and not appropriate it by any hide-and-go-seek means, for the purpose of indirectly violating the Constitution in doing that which you cannot do directly. What is the reason of it? You have $50,000 in the Treasury which cannot be used without that amendment; and the amendment authorizes its use. It is provided for in the general river and harbor bill. I hope to see that bill pass. It has passed the House, and I hope will pass here. Let the Cape Fear river, or let the improvements in North Carolina take the direction and suffer the fate of the others. Let it be decapitated with all other parts. Let North Carolina stand upon a condition equal with all her sisters. She has already obtained an advantage by one bill, which the Senator from North Carolina, by his seducing and prevailing power of speech, has induced us to pass. She has the advantage of that, appropriating $140,000, all on account of the power of his tongue. That is all that I want to say against him; but I am opposed to adding this $50,000 more to that advantage by an indirect appropriation; although the Senator has had one advantage, let him hereafter stand upon an equality with us; and if our works die, let his die with them.

Mr. BADGER. I should very much prefer the support of my friend from Indiana to the expressions, with which he has overcome me, of his excessive flattery. Now, sir, I have no objection to his making an onslaught upon the principles which the President has indicated on the bill for the improvement of Cape Fear river; but I insist that I have a right to ask that Senator that the general subject of the improvements of rivers and harbors should not be urged for preventing the Senator from doing a simple act of justice to my State. The Senator says that he thinks North Carolina ought to be put upon an equality in this matter with the other States. Would to God that it were so. She has, sir, less money appropriated for her benefit than any State in this Union; but that has nothing to do with the question. By the act of 1852 a certain sum of money was appropriated, not for the erection of a breakwater, but for opening a communication with the Atlantic ocean; but the appropriation indicated the erection of a breakwater as the method of accomplishing the object. Its object was the opening of the communication. That is the object specified by the law; but, as I stated, upon an examination being made, it was found that a breakwater would not accomplish the declared object of the provision. Now, it is sought to strike those words out of the bill. Why should they not be stricken out? My friend from Indiana says that he wants the consequences of a veto of the river and harbor bill, if it should come, to apply everywhere. Well, sir, the river and harbor bill contains appropriations for the benefit of the State of North Carolina, small in amount, but considerable, compared with those sums which we have been in the habit of receiving; but the amendment does not propose, directly or indirectly, to make an appropriation. The object expressed in the original bill was the opening of a communication with the ocean. When it was examined, it was found that the mode specified would not accomplish the object. I only ask that the mistake may be corrected. It seems to me to be a very simple request; and I hope it will be agreed to.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MALLORY. I desire to offer an amendment, making no appropriation, which, in the language of the Senator from Tennessee, [Mr. BELL,] I hope will receive the unanimous assent of the Senate:

That the President of the United States be authorized and directed to appoint two persons to investigate and collect proof, under the instructions of the Department of the Interior, of the depredations upon private property by the Indians in Florida, subsequent to the 25th of December, 1825, the report and testimony to be submitted to Congress at its next session.

The question was taken; and, on a division, there were—yeas 15, noes 10; not a quorum voting.

Mr. MALLORY. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. COOPER. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and

The Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, July 27, 1854.

The House met at eleven o'clock, a. m. Prayer by Rev. HENRY SLICER.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

The SPEAKER. The first business in order is the consideration of the bill regulating the pay and increasing the efficiency of the Army of the United States, and for other purposes.

Mr. HOUSTON obtained the floor, but yielded to

Mr. FULLER. Before proceeding to the regular order of business, I desire to have taken up and considered House bill (No. 242) "authorizing the purchase or construction of four additional revenue cutters." I should not ask its consideration now, if I were not fully impressed that it was one of great public importance.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HOUSTON. I rise to a privileged question, and I shall ask that it be first disposed of. On the part of the committee of conference on the Indian appropriation bill, I am instructed to submit the report which I send to the Chair.

The report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 46) "making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30th, 1855, and for other purposes," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend, and do recommend, to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate concur in the amendments of the House of Representatives to the first, second, fifty-ninth, sixty-eighth, and eighty-first amendments of the Senate; that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House of Representatives to the fourteenth amendment of the Senate with amendments, as follows:

In line fifteen of the amendment of the House of Representatives, strike out the word "seven," and insert "seventy." In line twenty-four of said amendment strike out the word "five," and insert "one;" and in line thirty-three of said amendment strike out the word "five," and insert "one."

That the Senate do recede from its seventy-fourth amendment, and that the following be substituted for its seventy-fifth amendment:

And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby authorized, if in his judgment the public interest will be promoted thereby, to cause to be disbursed such of the moneys appropriated in this act for the Utah Indians, either under treaty stipulations, or for general incidental expenses, by the Indian agent in that Territory, as he may think proper: Provided, That said agent shall, under no circumstances, receive any additional compensation therefor.

That the Senate do recede from its seventh, seventy-third, eighth, and eighty-second amendments. That the House of Representatives concur in the sixty-seventh amendment of the Senate with the following amendments:

After the word "rendered," in fourth line of the amendment of the Senate, insert the words "within or upon any Indian territory," and in same line strike out the words "in cases," and in lieu thereof insert "for medical or manual services, or in cases of humanity."

And that the House of Representatives do recede from their disagreement to the tenth amendment of the Senate and agree thereto.

GEO. S. HOUSTON,

S. G. HAVEN,

G. A. GROW,

Managers on the part of the House.

J. A. PEARCE,

S. ADAMS,

W. K. SEBASTIAN,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. HOUSTON. I have the bill before me which I used when the amendments were before the committee, and I will explain them in a very few minutes. I will take them in order as I find them in the bill.

The first amendment of the Senate proposes to establish the salary of Governor and superintendent of Indian affairs in Minnesota, whenever the President of the United States shall see fit to separate those offices. The House disagreed to that amendment, and the Senate have receded from it, and they have yielded their proposition for a separation of the offices of Governor and superintendent.

The next amendment of the Senate was a proposition creating five Indian sub-agents in California. The House reduced the number to three, and in that reduction the Senate concurred.

The next amendment of the Senate was a proposition to increase the salaries of five Indian agents. The House disagreed to the amendment, and the Senate have receded from it.

A MEMBER. Is the pay increased?

Mr. HOUSTON. No; the compensation of the agents is not increased.

The next amendment in order is number ten. It is "for erecting buildings for Indian agent in Washington Territory, $5,000." The House non-concurred in that amendment, and the committee of conference on the part of the House have receded from their disagreeing vote. That is the only case in which we have yielded.

The next amendment in controversy is number fourteen. That was an amendment which the House had put on the Senate amendment, making appropriations for recent Indian treaties. The Senate agree to the House amendment by correcting the wrong phraseology which had, some how or other, crept in and destroyed its sense.

The next was an amendment in which the House inserted the words "in full." The amendment of the Senate was for payment to the Winnebago nation of Indians of certain unexpended balances; and the House inserted the words for payment "in full." The Senate agree to that amendment of the House.

The next amendment of the Senate, on which there was a disagreeing vote, was number sixty-seven. I will read the section as it went from the House originally, and then read the amendment as it is now agreed upon:

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That no existing provisions of law, prescribing the manner in which payment shall be made to Indians, shall be so construed as to repeal or contravene the seventeenth section of an act entitled "An act to regulate trade and intercourse with the Indian tribes, and to preserve peace on the frontiers," approved June 30, 1834.

That section was preserving in its force what was known as the Indian intercourse act. The Senate added to it the following as an amendment:

"Or to prohibit the payment of any claim or claims (other than those of agents or attorneys for claims) for bona fide services rendered to any Indian tribe, in cases where the President may adjudge such service necessary, and the claim or claims thereof just and reasonable."

The House disagreed to that amendment of the Senate, and the committee of conference have agreed to a modification of it, so as to make it read:

"Or to prohibit the payment of any claim or claims (other than those of agents or attorneys for claims) for bona fide services rendered within or upon any Indian territory, to the Indian tribes, for medical or manual services, or in cases of humanity."

The amendment is reported by the committee of conference for the purpose of restricting that which they were apprehensive was an enlargement of the principle which permitted the interference of attorneys and agents with the business of Indians in the departments. We have thought proper to restrict it to a certain class of claims, and for services performed within the Territories.

I will illustrate by one example. The small-pox broke out among, I believe, the Menomonee tribe of Indians; and with a view to save the lives of the Indians, and to counteract the spread of that dreadful disease, they were necessarily compelled to have a physician, and to have the balance of the tribe vaccinated. And, under the existing law, that physician could obtain no compensation.

The object of the amendment, as modified by the committee of conference, is to authorize the payment of such a claim as that, and at the same time to prevent the inroads which these agents are making ordinarily, on the funds of the Indians.

The sixty-eighth Senate amendment, which was amended by the House, was in reference to the Indians in California. The amendment was as follows:

For defraying the expenses of continuing the removal and subsistence of Indians in California, three military reservations, in accordance with the plan submitted by the superintendent of Indian affairs of that State, and approved by the President, the sum of $200,000: Provided, That no portion of this amount shall be paid over to the present superintendent of Indian affairs, until he shall account satisfactorily for the amount already drawn by him out of former appropriations. And that, hereafter, no more than $20,000 shall be drawn by the said superintendent, or be in his hands unexpended at one and the same time: And provided, The sub-agents created by this act shall be appointed by the superintendent, subject to confirmation by the Secretary of the Interior, not to exceed one for each reservation, nor three in all, said reservations to contain not less than five nor more than ten thousand acres; and the said superintendent is authorized to apply, out of the sum hereby appropriated, not exceeding $25,000, in the extinguishment of conflicting titles and rights to said reserved lands at a price not exceeding $1 25 per acre, for a valid and indefeasible title to the land so purchased: And provided, The State of California shall cede the necessary jurisdiction in such cases with regard to the land so purchased.

The House amended the same by striking out the words:

"That no portion of this amount shall be paid over to the present superintendent of Indian affairs, until he shall account satisfactorily for the amount already drawn by him out of former appropriations."

This restrictive provision, which was stricken out by the House, was intended to apply to Lieutenant Beale, who was then the superintendent of Indian affairs in California. Before, however, the House acted upon that amendment, Lieutenant Beale was removed, and another agent appointed in his place. The House, therefore, struck out that portion of the Senate amendment, which was intended to apply to Lieutenant Beale, leaving the other restrictions to remain upon the present superintendent of Indian affairs there. The Senate concur in that amendment.

The next amendment of the Senate was the seventy-third, which provides that the superintendents of Indian affairs in the Territories of Washington and New Mexico—or rather the Governors of those Territories, for they are the superintendents of Indian affairs in their respective Territories, shall each be allowed a clerk, the former at a salary of $1,800, and the latter at a salary of $1,000 per annum. The House rejected the Senate amendment, and upon a conference, the Senate have receded from it.

The seventy-fourth Senate amendment was as follows:

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That the President be authorized, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint a superintendent of Indian affairs for the Territory of Utah, who shall receive an annual salary of $2,000, and whose duty it shall be to exercise a general superintendence over all the Indian tribes in Utah, and to exercise and perform all the powers and duties assigned by law to other superintendents of Indian affairs.

This amendment was, as the House will remember, discussed in the Committee of the Whole. I was at the time in favor of separating in that particular Territory the office of Governor from that of the superintendent of Indian affairs. The House, however, saw fit to agree with my friend from New York, and my friend from Tennessee, and overruled me. The Senate have receded from that amendment, and the House concur in a section which authorizes the Secretary of the Interior, if he thinks the public interest demands it, to disburse the appropriation made in this bill, through the instrumentality of the Indian agents out there. I will read the clause upon which we have agreed:

And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized, if in his judgment the public interest will be promoted thereby, to cause to be disbursed such moneys as are appropriated in this act for the Utah Indians, either under treaty stipulations, or general incidental expenses, by the Indian agents in that Territory, as he thinks proper: Provided, Said agent shall in no instance receive any additional compensation therefor.

The eightieth amendment was as follows:

SEC. 9. And be it further enacted, That the President be and he is hereby, authorized, by and with the assent of the Indian tribes, respectively, to be obtained in due form, to enter into treaties with the various Indian tribes, to redeem and extinguish the perpetual annuities, or the payment of interest perpetually upon sums of money required to be held in trust, or invested in stocks, by either paying to said tribes the par value or equivalent of the said annuities and perpetual interest, either in whole or in annuities, for a term of years, as be, in his judgment, may deem most advantageous to the Indians, respectively.

It gives the President authority, after obtaining the consent of the Indian tribes, to make arrangements with them to buy in their perpetual annuities. The Senate also have receded from that amendment.

The eighty-first Senate amendment, which the House agreed to with an amendment, was the following:

SEC. 10. And be it further enacted, That to enable the Secretary of the Interior to settle and pay the claims on file for reservations, and for rents and improvements, under the thirteenth and sixteenth articles of the Cherokee treaty of 29th of December, 1835, in pursuance of the stipulations of the third article of the treaty of August 8, 1846, the sum heretofore appropriated for those purposes, and carried to the surplus fund, is hereby reappropriated.

The House amended it so as to make it read:

That to enable the Secretary of the Interior to settle and pay the awards of commissioners, on file for reservations, preemptions, and for rents and improvements, under the twelfth, thirteenth, and sixteenth articles of the Cherokee treaty of 29th of December, 1835, in pursuance of the stipulations of the third article of the treaty of August 8, 1846, the sum heretofore appropriated for those purposes, and carried to the surplus fund, is hereby reappropriated.

And the House agreed to it as amended. The Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The eighty-second Senate amendment, to which the House disagreed, is this:

SEC. 11. And be it further enacted, That for the payment of the balance of per capita due the Cherokee Indians residing in the States east of the Mississippi river, under the treaty of 1835, and supplemental treaty of May, 1836, according to the stipulation of the tenth article of the treaty of August 8, 1846, the sum of $92,625 18: Provided, That the same shall be reimbursed from the sums of money hereafter to be paid to the Western Cherokees, in such manner and in such amounts as the President of the United States may direct.

The Senate have also receded from this amendment.

The committee of conference on the part of the House have given up the tenth amendment, which proposes to give $5,000 to erect buildings for Indian agents in Washington Territory, and that is all they have yielded, except a slight modification of one or two other amendments. I think the result of the committee will recommend itself to the good sense of the House, and I hope the report will be adopted.

Mr. ORR. I have examined the report of the committee of conference upon this bill, and I concur with the gentleman from Alabama that this House have obtained more than might have been reasonably anticipated. I therefore move the previous question upon the adoption of the report.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered to be put.

The report of the committee of conference was then adopted.

Mr. PHELPS then resumed the floor.

RELATIONS WITH SPAIN.

Mr. BARKSDALE. I ask the gentleman from Missouri to yield me the floor, to enable me to ask the unanimous consent of the House to introduce a bill merely for the purpose of reference. It is a bill to grant to the President of the United States $10,000,000 during the recess of Congress to enable him to protect the tranquillity and honor of the United States in our existing difficulties with Spain.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I object.

Mr. BARKSDALE. I appeal to the gentleman to withdraw his objection. My object is merely to refer the bill.

Mr. JONES. I cannot.

DESTRUCTION OF GREYTOWN.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask the gentleman from Missouri to yield to me, to enable me to offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be respectfully requested to furnish to the House of Representatives any official information which may have been received at the Departments, relative to the destruction of Greytown, (or San Juan del Norte,) by Captain Hollins, of the United States vessel Cyane; and also, that the President be requested to furnish to the House copies of the instructions given to Captain Hollins relative to the demand for satisfaction which was made in the name of the United States upon the authorities of Greytown, (or San Juan del Norte,) before the bombardment and destruction of that place.

Mr. SEWARD. I object.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I demand the regular order of business.

REORGANIZATION OF THE ARMY.

The House then resumed the consideration of the bill of the Senate to regulate the pay and increase the efficiency of the Army of the United States, and for other purposes.

Mr. PHELPS, who was entitled to the floor, said: I shall decline to yield the floor further, Mr. Speaker. When I obtained the floor yesterday, I did not intend to have occupied the attention of the House but for a few moments upon this bill.

There can be no doubt something ought to be done to promote the efficiency of the Army. Complaints are continually reaching us from the frontiers of the country that the present Army is wholly unable to protect our citizens there from the ravages and the encroachments of the Indians. It was but a short time ago the greater part of a small detachment of soldiers belonging to the regular Army were massacred by the Indians in New Mexico. The Indians of that country, emboldened by their success, and in consequence of the inadequacy of the military force in that Territory, are continually making incursions upon the settlements in the valley of the Rio Grande; and wherever they make their appearance, the destruction of property and the massacre of the defenseless citizen marks their path. And hence any measure which will secure greater protection to the citizens upon the frontier, will meet my approbation. Hence, there are portions of this bill which meet with my hearty approval. But there are portions which cannot receive my assent; and, if presented to me as a whole, I shall be compelled to vote against the bill.

The provision for the augmentation of the number of enlistments in the Army by the increase of pay, and holding out other inducements, such as promotion from the ranks of the regular Army and others, meets with my entire approbation. When the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs [Mr. FAULKNER] proposed this bill as an amendment to the Army appropriation bill, I, at the time, expressed my willingness to vote so much as provided for the increase of the pay of the rank and file of the Army. I should have been glad had that provision been ingrafted upon that bill. It has not, and the proposition is now before us under the suspension of the rules. I am now ready to vote anything reasonable to afford adequate compensation to the men who are employed in the service of the country. I agree with the gentleman from Virginia, that the present pay of the private in the Army is entirely inadequate. While men engaged in agriculture, mechanics, and in the construction of the public works, receive fifteen, twenty, twenty-five, or even thirty dollars per month, your soldier only receives seven and eight dollars as pay per month, together with the allowance for clothing, of about $2 50 per month.

It is true, the soldier possesses many advantages which these other laborers have not. In case of sickness, he is taken care of at the expense of the Government. He has entered into a contract with the Government for a period of five years, during which he is to serve the country at a rate of wages stipulated at the time of his enlistment. He knows while he is in the service he will be provided for in all exigencies as far as the Government and his situation can afford. We know that when there was not the great disproportion between the wages of the soldier and that of men engaged in the industrial pursuits of life, there was no difficulty experienced in securing desired enlistment. The deficiency in the rank and file of the Army is more than four thousand. Four thousand recruits are wanted, but cannot be obtained for our Army at the present pay; and the gentleman from Virginia properly remarked, that unless something be done by way of remedy, you might as well close the recruiting offices. But I do object, Mr. Speaker, to this bill being carried through the House under the operation of the previous question, and without affording proper opportunity for its being made by amendment palatable to members generally. I do object to its being carried through under the pretext of sympathy for the rank and file. That is the point.

The other day the gentleman from Virginia took occasion to refer to the course pursued by me in reference to the amendment to the Navy appropriation bill for increased pay to the Navy. The Committee of Ways and Means, and the Committee on Naval Affairs, did agree to make increased appropriation, in order that the seamen of the Navy might receive higher wages than they now receive. But when the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BOCOCK] indicated his intention to bring forward his proposition for the reorganization of the Navy as an amendment to the Navy appropriation bill, I made resistance, and successfully. What have we before us? Why, sir, we have under consideration a bill providing for the increase of the pay of all the officers in the Army, from the highest to the lowest. It also provides for increase of the pay of the rank and file, and promotion from the ranks.

Besides, the last section provides, and I believe that it meets with the approval of the Committee on Military Affairs, that the widows and orphans of soldiers dying in the service, instead of being pensioned as now for five years, shall be pensioned on the Government during life. Is this a wise provision? You do not find any difficulty now in obtaining officers for the Army at the present compensation. Your Army list shows fifty-six brevet second lieutenants without any place in the regular line of the Army as such to assign them for duty. They are attached to the several corps as supernumeraries, waiting for vacancies, to receive their commissions as second lieutenants. I have a document in my possession which shows the amount of compensation of every description received by officers of the Army during the fiscal year ending the 30th June, 1853. It is a part of the Army Register, but not published with it. I recollect when I first came to Congress that the Army Register contained not only the name of every officer of the Army, precisely as the Army Register now does, but also the entire amount of compensation of every description which each officer received during the preceding fiscal year.

The document to which I have referred shows that some of the field officers of the Army receive more than $3,000 per annum for the services which they perform. This sum includes their pay and emoluments. You have at this time in the Army one major general and two brigadier generals. Last year you paid for the services of four major generals and three brigadier generals. You have this system of brevet rank and brevet pay by which it becomes almost impossible to ascertain, from the statement of pay, &c., as published in the Army Register, the amount of compensation which these officers receive. You have an Army regulation, if an officer is assigned to the command of a military department or post, he shall be entitled to double rations during the time he is in command of such military department or post. You have provided by law that an officer who has served in the Army of the United States shall be entitled to an additional ration for each five years' of service. This is what is termed service or longevity rations. Almost every one of these military departments is under the command of a field officer; and in the event such officers have had leave of absence, then the senior captain is charged with the command. The officer having command of that department is, in many instances, entitled to pay according to brevet rank, and is also entitled to additional rations for commanding the department, besides the regular service rations which are given him.

Mr. PECKHAM. I wish to ask the gentleman from Missouri this question: Is it not the fact that brevet officers do not receive the pay of the rank to which they are breveted, unless they are performing the duty of such grade?

Mr. PHELPS. I answer the question of the gentleman from New York with pleasure. They do not. They receive pay in this way: For instance, a first lieutenant of the Army, if he be in command of a company, is entitled to the pay of a captain, if he holds that brevet rank; and if he shall have the command of a military post, he would receive emoluments accordingly.

Mr. HOUSTON. I desire to ask a question of my friend from Missouri, who seems to have given a deal of attention to this subject. I ask him whether it is not true, in reference to breveted officers of the Army, that almost all officers who hold brevet rank higher than their regular commission in the line, are assigned the command of military posts and positions, and receive the pay which correspond with their brevet appointments?

Mr. PHELPS. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOUSTON] inquires of me whether many of the officers who hold brevet rank, are not receiving the pay of their brevet commission. Such I understand to be the fact. Examine your Army Register, and you will find, in most instances, that there are brevet officers, whose names are given, commanding at certain military posts and stations throughout the country. For instance, in the department of the East, out of some eight or ten military posts mentioned, you will find that more than one half, nearly two thirds, of these posts are commanded by officers holding brevet commissions.

Mr. HOUSTON. Certainly; and drawing brevet pay.

Mr. PHELPS. Yes, they draw brevet pay during the time they hold such command; and they also receive the emoluments of that brevet rank. They draw, as I before remarked, the additional rations belonging to their brevet rank, in addition to their regular rations, during the time they have commanded, corresponding to their brevet rank. And, in addition to that, they are allowed longevity rations for every five years of their service, commencing from the day on which they entered the service.

Under the regulations of the service the Army is now divided into three divisions—the eastern, the western, and the Pacific. It is subdivided into eleven military departments. You have at this time some seventy-eight posts garrisoned by troops, or at which officers are stationed. Perhaps in entering upon these details I may make some mistakes. I may have been led into some errors perhaps from the hasty manner in which I have examined the subject. But, in the statement which I make in relation to the number of military posts, I am nearly correct, sufficiently correct for all practical purposes. Now, it is proposed by the Committee on Military Affairs, in the bill now under consideration, and which has received the sanction of the Senate, that we shall increase the pay of the major general of the Army from $200 per month, which he now receives as his pay proper, to the sum of $265 per month.

I do not, in speaking of this matter, in referring to the general-in-chief of the Army of the United States, do so from any want of respect for that gentleman, for he has my highest respect as a military man. But it becomes necessary to fix the pay of the officers of the Army, without respect to the individuals who hold those positions. The general-in-chief commanding the Army of the United States received during the fiscal year ending the 30th of June, 1853, for annual pay, rations, forage, and allowances for servants, $5,626; and for fuel, quarters, and transportation of baggage, an additional amount sufficient to make the whole amount of pay $6,809.

Your brigadier generals in the Army of the United States, received during that period of time, for pay, rations, allowance for servants, forage, and allowance for fuel, quarters, &c., one of them upwards of $7,000, and the other upwards of $8,000. Both are major generals by brevet, and both received the pay of a major general.

Mr. FAULKNER. I desire to ask the gentleman from Missouri if the sum of $1,218 40, embraced in that statement, does not include the mileage for twelve thousand miles traveled by General Twigg?

Mr. PHELPS. No, sir. The traveling allowance is a separate allowance. You will find in the Army appropriation bill some $120,000 for defraying the mileage of officers when traveling under orders, and without troops, and for transportation of their baggage. The report from which I read includes, in one column, the pay proper; in another, pay for rations; in another, pay for allowances for servants, forage, fuel, quarters, and transportation of baggage, &c.

Mr. FAULKNER. I tell the gentleman that the item of $1,128 40, set down for the transportation of baggage, was for mileage. It is the mode of stating the account.

Mr. PECKHAM. Can the change be for anything else?

Mr. PHELPS. One at a time, if you please. The $1,200, to which the gentleman from Virginia alludes, is the amount for the transportation of baggage allowed to General Twigg, and not to General Wool. Will the gentleman inform me where General Twigg traveled twelve thousand miles during that year?

Mr. FAULKNER. I am not prepared to inform the gentleman where General Twigg traveled, in that fiscal year, but I am officially informed by the War Department that the heading, of transportation of baggage, embraces the expenditures for mileage.

Mr. PHELPS. If he traveled twelve thousand miles in the fiscal year ending June 30, 1853, some member of this House should know where it was. Now, is it to be said that General Twigg was paid for the travel of twelve thousand miles during that time, and no member of this House know where he was engaged in traveling?

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I would say to the gentleman from Missouri, that he is a member of the Committee of Ways and Means, and he certainly ought to know the fact; and if he does not know, he cannot expect other gentlemen to know, or cast any imputation upon my colleague.

Mr. PHELPS. My understanding differs from your colleague's understanding. I understand this item to be for the transportation of baggage.

Mr. PECKHAM. Where?

Mr. PHELPS. From post to post. It also embraces traveling allowance. However, this matter is immaterial. The amount of money allowed to officers for traveling, depends upon the amount of travel they may perform without troops, under the order of the Secretary of War, or under the orders of the commanding officer.

I only wanted to call the attention of the House to the allowances to these officers for pay, rations, forage, and servants, and I spoke of the other matters only incidentally. Here, then, you find that each brigadier general receives $5,626, the same amount as is paid to General Scott, showing that during that time they received pay according to their brevet rank.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio. I desire to ask the gentleman from Missouri a question, for I suppose a large number of members believe with me, that the expenses of the Army as well as of the Navy, ought to be cut down. I myself, believe, that in the present reduced condition of the Army, the expenses should be cut down one half. I wish to ask the gentleman from Missouri if he will not bring forward some measure to accomplish that object. I would cooperate with him heartily in such a measure. But, sir, the regular Army appropriation bill has passed; and unless some special measure is brought forward, there will be no opportunity of accomplishing any reform in this quarter. I would go with him in abolishing all pay for brevet rank. I think it is unfair that a brigadier general should, by brevet, receive the pay of major general. Indeed, I am opposed to the brevet rank altogether. It is a delusion, and ought to be abolished. I would pay the officers of the Army well and liberally, when performing their duty, but I would abolish all brevet rank, and would increase the pay of the rank and file.

Mr. PHELPS. The gentleman from Ohio, misunderstands me, if he supposes that I alluded to these gentlemen in any derogation of their character. No, sir, I make no reflections upon those military gentlemen. I have been called upon to refer to their names, and have presented them. But, sir, I do not believe they have received any pay to which they are not entitled under the existing laws. I make no charges upon any of the officers of the Army. I believe they are incapable of taking any pay to which they are not entitled. Their pay is allowed by the accounting officers of the Government.

Mr. TAYLOR. Then, why does not the gentleman propose some remedy? Why does not he introduce a measure abolishing all pay for brevet rank.

Mr. PHELPS. I concur fully with the gentleman in the opinion that pay for brevet rank should be abolished, and I am also in favor of abolishing all command in consequence of brevet title.

Sir, this brevet rank² was originally conferred merely as an honorary distinction, and not with the intention of conferring any additional command, or of giving any additional pay. Now, as to the question of the gentleman from Ohio, why I do not bring forward some measure proposing a reform in the expenditures of the Army, and reforming the abuses that are existing, I have to say that I happen to belong to that much abused Committee of Ways and Means. Charges have been made, ever since I have been a member of the House of Representatives, that the Committee of Ways and Means are seeking to monopolize all the business of the House, and to deprive other committees of the business which legitimately belongs to them; and if I, as a member of that committee, had come forward with a proposition for the reform of the Army, and another proposition for the reform of the Navy, and another for reorganizing the various departments of the Government, it would have been said at once that the matter emanated from the Committee of Ways and Means, and the committee would then be justly liable to the charge of endeavoring to absorb all the business of the House. The rules of the House intrust this subject to another committee, who are supposed to be more familiar with the Army laws and the Army regulations than the Committee of Ways and Means, which is simply the finance committee of the House.

Mr. HOUSTON. While the gentleman from Missouri is upon the subject of reform in the Army, and especially upon the subject of brevet pay, I ask him to allow me to say that those subjects belong peculiarly to the Committee on Military Affairs. Sir, at a very early period of the session, the House, upon my motion, unanimously adopted a resolution instructing the Committee on Military Affairs to inquire into the expediency of so modifying the existing laws with reference to the Army officers, that members of the House could tell what pay they did receive—to so modify them, that officers of the Army should receive monthly pay, service rations in kind, and nothing else. And, sir, I had hoped that resolution would have brought about some of these great reforms; but there is nothing said about it. There is no report from the committee on the subject.

Let me give notice just here, that before the bill is finished I intend to offer an amendment, if I get the opportunity, providing that brevet rank shall not carry pay under any circumstances.

Mr. FAULKNER. With the permission of the gentleman from Missouri, I shall make a brief reply to what fell from the gentleman from Alabama. I have never seen the resolution to which the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means refers. He may remember that three or four weeks ago I called on him for the purpose of inquiring whether some such resolution had not been offered by him. He answered me in the affirmative; but I have never seen the resolution.

Now I understand, from a conversation with the Secretary of War, that while great abuses have existed in this matter of brevet pay under one construction of the law, his construction of the law is different, and that it is his purpose to have those abuses reformed. It was a casual conversation with the Secretary. I may be mistaken, but such was the impression left on my mind.

As to the other point of inquiry to which the gentleman alluded, it is one which goes to a radical reform of the whole system of pay of the Army, and which has been in operation since the foundation of the Government. I did not feel prepared to go into the reform, of substituting fixed salaries for pay and rations. I did, after my conversation with the gentleman from Alabama, address a communication to the War Department on the subject. I found that it was a reform involving so much of detail and examination that it was impossible to go into it during the present session of Congress. But I will say, in reply to the gentleman from Alabama, that the pay of an officer of the Army, so far as his rations are concerned, is as easily ascertained, and as susceptible of exact results, as if the whole amount was payable by law in money. Any gentleman, by taking the Army Register, can at once see what is the pay of any officer in the Army, except those contingencies depending on special service, which form no part of the regular pay. There is no concealment; no disguise about it. The present system has its advantages, and it may have some evils attached to it; but it is all set forth in the Army Register, except those contingent rations, which, depending upon special service, cannot be estimated in advance of the employment and service.

Mr. PHELPS. In regard to the statements of the Army Register, I hold an opinion different from that entertained by the gentleman from Virginia. I declare it as my opinion, that any gentleman making computation of the entire pay of any field officer in the Army of the United States, will find the result falls short nearly $1,000 of the pay actually received. Let us take for illustration the pay of a colonel of mounted rifle men or dragoons. His pay proper, rations, and commutations for servants and forage, amount to $183 the month, or $2,196 the year, as stated in the Army Register. Now, I tell this House as matter of fact, that there is not a colonel of the Army who, for the fiscal year of 1853, did not receive $3,000, or near that amount. One of the colonels of dragoons received $3,295 for the fiscal year ending on the 30th June, 1853; the other, for eleven months in the same year, received $2,766.

In the Army Register you will find the monthly pay of a colonel of infantry set down at $166 the month, amounting to $1,992 per annum. By examination, you will find that longevity rations and rations for commanding posts are not embraced at all. Turn to the colonel of the third regiment of infantry, to whom nothing was allowed for fuel, quarters, transportation of baggage, &c., and you find that for the year to which I have referred he received $2,615. He was on leave. If he had been commanding a military department or post, he would have received double his regular rations. I speak in round numbers, but his pay is something less than $2,600. In this connection I will refer to another instance, that of a colonel who is not on duty, the colonel of the fourth regiment of infantry, who, I believe, has not been on duty for six or eight years. His pay for the year was $2,733 60, while his pay, as put down in the Army Register, would only amount to $1,992.

Mr. FAULKNER. Wherever it appears from the document to which the gentleman from Missouri has called the attention of Congress, that the pay of an officer is greater than appears in the Army Register, it results from acts of contingent service, of which it is impossible to make an estimate in advance. Such, for example, his post rations, his transportation of baggage, mileage, &c. I say in every instance where, by that document, it appears that the pay of an Army officer is greater than appears in the Army Register, it results from such contingent services or expenditures—services and expenditures cast upon him by the Government, and which we do not regard as a part of his regular duties. I will remark, moreover, if the gentleman will examine the document, he will see that many of these allowances belong to a different fiscal year, thus swelling the aggregate by portions of pay due for former years.

Mr. PHELPS. I think I have examined this subject with as much care as my friend from Virginia. I have no disposition to make any statements except such as I believe to be true. I have mentioned but one instance where an amount on account of a preceding year was embraced, and that a small sum. I regard the bill now under consideration as a bill intended more particularly for the increase of the pay of officers of the Army than for the increase of the pay of the rank and file. You find many officers of the Army declaring that their compensation is too small. I recollect that a friend of mine, a member of this House, remarked to me, not long since, when he returned from a little journey, which he had taken for his health, that wherever he went he found the hotels filled with officers of the Army and Navy, who were traveling about on leave of absence, and drawing their pay in the mean time.

Mr. HENN. I desire to ask the gentleman from Missouri this question: Whether there is actually any deficiency in the number of officers of the Army?

Mr. PHELPS. I have already stated to the House that there is no deficiency in the number of officers; but that, on the contrary, there is a large supernumerary list. Here is the Army Register, published last winter, and I find by it that there were at that time fifty-six officers, graduates of West Point, attached to the Army with the brevet of second lieutenants, waiting for vacancies to occur in the list of second lieutenants, in order to be commissioned as second lieutenants. We may now add to that number of fifty-six the number of those comprised in the class which has just graduated this summer, amounting, I suppose, to some fifty. This shows, if no vacancies have occurred since the publication of the last Army Register, and if the number of graduates at West Point this summer amounts to fifty, as I suppose it does, that we have at this time one hundred and six supernumerary officers attached to the Army of the United States, with the commission of brevet second lieutenant.

But if there is no deficiency in the officers, there is a deficiency in the men. I know that since we have been here, we have heard gentleman say: "We must increase the Army; we must have another regiment formed." But there is no necessity for that. I cannot conceive that there is any necessity for it. It has been my policy to fill up the ranks of the Army. You have a sufficient number of officers now. But you want the men. You want the men who shoulder the musket, and who mount the horse to pursue the Indians who attack our frontier settlements. It is not, I repeat, the officers that you want. They are there; but they are rendered inefficient because they have not men fitted for the service, owing to the smallness of the compensation allowed them. You find that many of the men who are enlisted as dragoons, when they are brought into service, sit the saddle in the most awkward manner, and are hardly fitted for the service in which they are engaged.

But, sir, I am aware this bill is to be followed by another, if this one is successful. And I presume it is right for me, in this connection, to refer to that. The bill I allude to is a bill providing for a retired list for the Army. We have before us at this time two bills relating to the Army. One is "to regulate the pay and increase the efficiency of the Army of the United States and for other purposes," which means "to increase the pay of the officers, and make a slight addition to that of the men." The pay of the men is to be increased by it from seven dollars per month to ten dollars; but the pay of the officers is to be increased much more. The other bill which we have before us, and which is to be the sequence of the one now under consideration, is a bill to promote the efficiency of the Army by retiring disabled officers. And you propose to pay to the disabled officers so retired the higher pay provided for in the bill which is now under consideration. Thus, then, if, after having passed this bill, you would place a colonel of the Army of the United States on the retired list, you would order him a pension of $1,620 per year. If the bill now under consideration should pass as it is now in print, and if you provide for a retired list of officers, then, I repeat, a colonel who would be put on the retired list, would receive a pension of $1,620 per year. Again, if a major of the Army is placed on the retired list, his pension would be $1,140. A lieutenant colonel would receive $1,380; a captain of cavalry would receive $1,020; a captain of artillery and infantry would receive $900.

Go into the States and see the salaries that are paid to your best officers. See the salaries that are paid to your Governors or judges, who are called upon to decide those intricate questions involving not only the property and the reputation of your citizens, but even their life and liberty. You will find very many States of the Union where the laws are as properly administered as in any other, and where the judges of the circuit and supreme courts are not receiving as much pay as it is proposed to give to some of these officers who are to be retired from the Army.

Mr. HUNT. That bill is not now before the House.

Mr. PHELPS. I know it is not. I am advertising it though. Again, as if these pensions were not sufficiently large for retired officers, it is proposed that, with their pay proper, they shall receive their service rations; that is, one ration per day for every five years they may have been in the service of the United States. Now, an officer may be in the Army for twenty years before he may be promoted to the office of major, and perhaps twenty-five before he reaches the rank of lieutenant colonel or colonel, and perhaps longer. But suppose it is only twenty-five years when he reaches the rank of colonel, and being incapacitated for service, you then retire him. His pay proper and his service rations would amount to about $2,000; and this you propose shall be his pension. I ask if such a measure as this is calculated to produce a reform in the Army of the United States? Is the House ready for such action? If the House is ready to adopt an amendment of this kind, be prepared in five years from this time to retire your officers employed in the civil service, and retire them upon a pension adequate to their support and the maintenance of their families. Such a system of pensions cannot meet with my approval. If you wish to promote efficiency in the Army and Navy, provide that from this time forward every person who enters the Army or Navy shall, at forty-five years, leave the service, unless the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, think proper, on account of the ability of an officer, or of his distinguished services, to continue him in his present rank, or promote him. You will then have efficient officers. You now have field-officers in the Army who are unable to mount the horses upon which they are required to perform their duty.

I have made these remarks with the view of calling the attention of the House to this matter. I did not intend to detain the House so long when I rose to address it.

Mr. ORR. There are two or three sections in the bill reported from the Committee on Military Affairs, which I think should be adopted by the House at the present session. There are other sections of the bill which I do not think can be matured now; and there are still other sections which should be stricken from the bill.

That portion of the bill which proposes to increase the compensation of the non-commissioned officers and privates of the Army of the United States ought to be passed, and we have this evidence of it, that the recruiting service shows that there is now a deficiency of about four thousand men in the Army. But we do not find that the same difficulty exists in the ranks of the officers. It may be that it is necessary that the compensation of the officers should be increased, and I am inclined to the opinion that the compensation of the officers of the lower grades should be increased. We cannot do that this session; but in reference to the common soldiers, and the non-commissioned officers, we can act; and we should do it, for the purpose of filling up the deficiency which now exists in the Army. That is one part of the bill which ought to be passed at the present session.

The sixth section of the bill has attracted my attention, and I am strongly and decidedly in favor of it. I think something of the sort ought to have been adopted a long time ago. It is a remarkable fact, that in this country there is not an employment or occupation a man can embark in, but by good conduct and meritorious services he may expect to be promoted, unless he enters the Army of the United States; but that, to him, is a sealed book, so far as hopes of promotion are concerned. The sixth section provides that if a soldier distinguishes himself, humble though he may be, the President of the United States shall have power to give him a rank and commission in the regular Army. That section will do more for the recruiting service than an increase of the compensation of the soldier to fifteen or twenty dollars a month. Young men who have been disappointed in getting to West Point, who have not had the political influence necessary to get them an appointment there, will be induced to enlist in the Army, looking forward to the time when they will be promoted. It will fill up the rank and file, and for that reason I look upon this section as the most material—as the very essence of the bill itself. If you adopt it, I think you will hereafter have no difficulty in filling up any deficiency that may occur in your Army when the young men of the country come to understand it.

But the particular purpose for which I rose was not to discuss elaborately the merits of the bill. In my opinion it would require a very long time to perfect it in all its features. I rise, therefore, for the purpose of making this proposition to the House: I think that something should be done to increase the efficiency of the Army. I am very anxious to perfect the bill properly, and it is evident that it cannot be done while the general debate is going on. I suppose there are quite a number of gentlemen who still desire to speak. I know there are a good many men here who could speak well upon the subject. But the only way by which the general debate can be stopped in the House is by the previous question; and when the previous question is sustained, all amendments are cut off, except those pending, and only two can be pending or received; and you cannot, therefore, perfect the bill as you could in Committee of the Whole. You must take the bill as it comes from the committee who reported it, with, at most, only one or two amendments, or reject it.

Now, sir, for the purpose of enabling the House to perfect the bill; for the purpose of enabling them to strike out such features as they may think obnoxious, and to insert such others as they may think desirable; for the purpose of giving the opportunity of considering the bill fairly, I propose that the House shall, by unanimous consent, suspend the hour debate, and that we shall retain the five-minute debate, and allow amendments to be offered the same as if we were in Committee of the Whole. By that arrangement we shall be able to perfect the bill, and every gentleman who desires to be heard will have the opportunity. I ask the consent of the House to submit that proposition, and I hope there will be no objection.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I would suggest to the gentleman that a better plan would be to refer the bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and that the House resolve itself into committee for the purpose of considering it.

Mr. HUNT. I desire to understand whether, if the proposition of the gentleman from South Carolina be acceded to, the acting chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs will still have the right to his hour for closing the debate? He has that right now, I believe; and if the proposition of the gentleman is acceded to, I ask that the right of the gentleman from Virginia to close debate shall be reserved.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia will still have the right to close debate, unless that rule be suspended along with the others.

Mr. WALSH. If this proposition is agreed to, will the House be restricted to five-minute debate?

Mr. ORR. So far as this particular bill is concerned.

Mr. WALSH. Then I object.

Mr. ORR. Well, Mr. Speaker, will it be in order for me to move to refer this bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, coupled with a motion that it be made the special order for this day, and with the further motion that the general debate shall be closed in five minutes after the committee shall take up the bill for consideration?

Mr. LETCHER. That is not in order.

The SPEAKER. The propositions of the gentleman will be in order if moved one at a time.

Mr. LETCHER. So I suppose, but not as an omnibus.

The SPEAKER. Is the proposition which has just been made by the gentleman from South Carolina agreed to?

Mr. WALSH. No, sir; I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has changed his proposition. He now moves that the bill be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and made the special order of the day for this day.

Mr. WALSH. I do not object to that proposition, if it be understood that the gentleman is not to move to close debate.

Mr. GIDDINGS. Is not the motion of reference debatable?

The SPEAKER. It is; but the gentleman from South Carolina is still upon the floor.

Mr. ORR. I am still occupying the floor, to know whether unanimous consent is granted to my proposition.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the proposition of the gentleman from South Carolina?

Mr. WALSH. I shall not object, if it be understood that the gentleman is not to move that debate be closed.

Mr. ORR. It is due to the gentleman from New York that I should say that if the House agree to my proposition, I shall move to close debate.

Mr. WALSH. In what time?

Mr. ORR. In five, ten, or twenty minutes, so that we may dispose of the bill to-day.

The SPEAKER. The Chair again asks whether there is objection to the proposition of the gentleman from South Carolina, that the bill be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and be made the special order of the day for this day?

Mr. WALSH. I object, provided the gentleman is going to close debate.

Mr. PHELPS. This morning, in the hurry of debate, I inadvertently made a mistake in regard to the subject of transportation of baggage and mileage. The item of $120,000 in the Army appropriation bill, passed at this session of Congress, was for mileage, as well as transportation of baggage.

Mr. ORR. I move that this bill be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and made the special order of the day for this day; and on that motion I demand the previous question.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. Can the gentleman submit three distinct motions at once?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of opinion that the gentleman cannot now submit his motion to make the bill a special order.

Mr. ORR. All the House need do would be to ask for a division of the question.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. If the gentleman will move that the bill be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, call the previous question, and let it be referred, he can then ask the unanimous consent to make it a special order. If there be objection, he can move a suspension of the rules for the purpose.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman has two thirds to support him, he can effect his object, and in no other way.

Mr. ORR. Well, then, I make the motion, and at the same time desire that the House shall understand it is submitted in good faith, in order to have the bill considered. I desire to couple the motions, so that the House, after reference, cannot refuse to make it a special order.

The SPEAKER. The proposition is objected to, and the Chair will inform the gentleman that he cannot have the bill made a special order without a suspension of the rules.

Mr. ORR. What will preclude me from making the motion?

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman will inform the Chair what rule will allow him to do it, then he may discuss the question. The Chair knows of no such rule.

Mr. ORR. If there be any rule precluding me, I shall move a suspension of the rules.

Mr. WALSH. To save time, I will withdraw my objection.

Mr. McMULLIN. I renew the objection.

Mr. ORR. Then I move that the bill be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. If that motion be agreed to, I give notice that I shall then move that the bill be made the special order of the day for this day. I call for the previous question on the motion of reference.

The previous question received a second, and the main question was ordered to be put.

The question was then taken upon Mr. ORR's motion, and it was agreed to.

Mr. ORR. I now move that the bill be made the special order for this day; and upon that motion I demand the previous question.

Mr. McMULLIN. I object.

Mr. ORR. I move to suspend the rules for that purpose.

The question was taken; and two thirds voting in favor thereof, the rules were suspended.

Mr. ORR. I now submit the motion that the bill be made the special order for to-day.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ORR. I move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. McMULLIN. I should have no objection to the course of the gentleman from South Carolina—

The SPEAKER. The motion now pending is to suspend the rules for the purpose of going into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and the gentleman from Virginia would not be in order except by unanimous consent.

Mr. ORR. I withdraw temporarily the motion I made for the purpose of making this statement.

The SPEAKER. There is nothing before the body that is debatable.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table; which latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. ORR. I withdraw my motion that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole, and propose the usual resolution to close debate upon this bill in twenty minutes after the committee shall proceed to consider it.

The SPEAKER. During the last Congress the Chair entertained a motion of that kind. A gentleman from North Carolina objected to it as out of order. The Chair overruled the objection, and the gentleman from North Carolina took an appeal, for the single reason that the subject-matter upon which it was proposed to close debate had not been considered at all. The Chair again decides that it is in order to make the motion.

Mr. ORR. Well, I submit the resolution.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. ORR moved to reconsider the vote by which his resolution was adopted, and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table; which latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. ORR. I now move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. MILLSON, in the chair,) and proceeded to consider the special order, being Senate bill (No. 119) "to regulate the pay and increase the efficiency of the Army of the United States, and for other purposes."

Mr. LETCHER. I do not propose, at this late period of the session, to occupy the time of the House with anything like a speech on this bill. I rise merely to present a few practical considerations in the shape of facts and figures, for the purpose of showing the operations of this bill, so far as the compensation of the officer is concerned.

It is known that every branch of the Government, civil, military, and others, are setting up now for an increase of compensation; and the very moment you undertake to increase the pay of one class of public servants, you find another class devising plans for an increase of their compensation. Now, I happen to have in this connection a statement showing the increase of compensation under this bill to the various officers therein enumerated. It has been made out by those who are interested in carrying out the recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury to the Committee of Ways and Means for the increase of the pay of the Comptrollers, the Auditors, and almost everybody else employed at the other end of the avenue.

I learn from this statement that in the quartermaster general's office, the brigadier general receives now in the way of pay, rations, forage, servants, clothing for same, fuel, quarters, per diem, medicines for himself and family, and mileage when traveling on duty, the sum of $4,413 94. By the bill now under consideration, if it be passed, that officer will receive $5,145 94. The first lieutenant colonel, one of his assistants, receives now $2,978 20; and if this bill should be passed, he will receive $3,458 20 per annum. The first brevet major, another of his assistants, now receives $1,810 16. It will be by this bill increased to $2,230 16. The captain now receives $1,977 05, and by this bill it will be increased to $2,397 05. The chief colonel in the adjutant general's office now receives $3,873 09, and under this bill it will be increased to $4,413 09. The major, who is the judge advocate, now receives $2,519 57, and his pay will be by this bill increased to $2,939 57. The brevet major now receives $2,894 18, and by this bill his pay will be increased to $3,314 18.

In the Commissary General's office the chief colonel gets $3,421 04, and that will be raised to $3,961 04. The assistant captain, in the same office, now receives $1,946 40, and that will be raised to $2,366 40.

In the Ordnance office the chief colonel now receives $3,547 89, and that will be raised to $4,087 89. The assistant captain in the same office now receives $2,640 53, and that will be raised to $3,060 53.

In the Paymaster General's office the chief colonel now receives $3,779 93, and that will be increased to $4,319 93. The pay of assistant lieutenant colonel, in the same office, is now $3,012 04, and that will be increased to $3,492 04.

In the Surgeon General's office the salary of the chief—rank of colonel—is now $3,787 13, and that will be raised by this bill to $4,437 13. One assistant, rank of major, receives now $2,845 03, and it will be raised to $3,265 03. One assistant, rank of captain, now receives $2,002 05, and that will be raised to $2,622 05. Another of the same rank, now receives $1,736 29, and that will be raised to $2,156 29.

In the Engineer's office the chief colonel now receives $3,592 04, and that will be raised to $4,132 04. One assistant, rank of lieutenant, now receives $1,366 02, and that will be raised to $1,746 02.

In the Topographical Engineer's office the chief, rank of colonel, now receives $3,462 24, and that will be raised to $4,002 24. One assistant captain now receives $1,911 24, and that will be raised to $2,331 24.

Now, sir, as I said before, this list was made out, not for the purpose of showing the operation of this bill—not to be used in debate here—but made out for the purpose of showing that there are certain comptrollers, chief clerks, auditors, treasurer, commissioner of customs, solicitor, and register, up at the other end of the avenue, who are on the lookout for increased compensation, having ascertained that Congress commenced this session by appropriating pretty largely in that way, and that the Secretary of the Treasury had recommended it. It has resulted in this Army bill; and this statement was made out for the purpose of showing that the salaries of these gentlemen, in civil pursuits here, ought to be increased as well as those of the Army officers.

Now, sir, it seems to me there ought to be some stopping point. When the pay of the clerks was increased, in the early part of the session, we were told that it was a case sui generis—that nothing of the sort would be likely to happen again; and that there would be no necessity of increasing the pay of those who now receive more. But no sooner is that done, than we find a proposition to increase the pay of the Army, and that is followed by a proposition to increase the pay of those who receive now three or four thousand dollars a year.

Mr. FAULKNER. Will the gentleman inform me from what document he read those statements?

Mr. LETCHER. From a paper prepared by a civil officer at the other end of the avenue, which was intended to show that when you carry out the provisions of this bill, increasing the pay of the Army, you ought to increase their compensation in a corresponding ratio. It was prepared for the purpose of showing that he who now receives $3,000 a year, ought to receive a larger sum for his services.

Now, sir, it does seem to me that there ought to be some stopping place to this kind of legislation. You began a year ago by increasing the salaries of the Cabinet officers. You raised their compensation $2,000 each; and you come here this session and increase the compensation of the employees of the Government, adding on sum after sum; and after all this has been done, after having destroyed the relative proportion which exists between the salaries of the clerks, auditors, secretaries, and Cabinet officers of the Government, the very next thing you hear is, that you must go on and increase the pay of all the intermediate grades of employees.

Now it does seem to me that it is time to begin to look about us, and see where and when this thing is to end. It is time for us to fix the point somewhere for it to stop. The expenses of this Government have already grown to a monstrous extent. They will, if I am not very greatly mistaken, be found to have swelled, during the present year, to an amount beyond that of any previous year, not even excepting the expenditures during the existence of the Mexican war. Without having made any computation, but speaking entirely from recollection, the current expenses of the Government for the present year will not fall short of $70,000,000.

Now, sir, I do not care whether this is done by Democrats or Whigs. It is just as wrong, in my estimation, if done by the Democrats, as if it had been done by the Whigs. But, sir, let me say that the real Democratic party of this House are not responsible for this extravagance. It is the Whigs of the House, and a fraction of the Democratic party who have acted with them, who have voted these appropriations.

Mr. REESE. Who are the real Democrats of the House?

Mr. LETCHER. Well, sir, I believe I pass for one. I think the gentleman from Tennessee, over the way, [Mr. JONES,] passes for another. I do not choose to particularize further. [Laughter.]

But, really, Mr. Chairman, this is not a jesting matter. It is a serious matter, and I ask the House to consider it, as it deserves to be considered, seriously.

Now, sir, so far as the soldiers are concerned, it is said that there are not enough of them to answer the purpose of the Government, and that it is impossible, with the present rate of compensation, to supply the deficiency. I am entirely willing to vote any sum necessary to supply that deficiency.

Mr. KEITT. I desire to interrupt the gentleman for a single moment. The gentleman says the Democratic party of the House are not responsible for these expenditures, but that the Whig party, with a fraction of the Democratic party, are responsible. Now, I want to know whether, when a man departs from the creed adopted by the Democratic party, he is still a Democrat? In other words, is the Democratic party split in two? When a fraction of the Democratic party refuse to sanction the doctrines which the majority have laid down, are they to be considered as Democrats? And further, whether, when there is a large Democratic majority in the House, that majority is not responsible for the measures adopted by the House?

Mr. LETCHER. Well, sir, the gentleman from South Carolina, in a speech the other day, in which he alluded to this subject, laid down pretty much the same doctrine that I have laid down now. I think the gentleman then took occasion to give notice that on some suitable occasion he should read the House a lecture, and I think the gentleman then said something about Democrats in this House departing from the principles of Democracy.

Mr. KEITT. I did not say it was not true, I only wanted to know whether the gentleman thought it was or not.

Mr. SEWARD. Will the gentleman from Virginia give us the articles of faith of modern Democracy?

Mr. LETCHER. My friend from Georgia told us the other day that he had not read the resolutions of 1798, and he surely has no right to get up and make that inquiry of me. [Great laughter.]

Mr. SEWARD. I did not say I had not read them; I said I did not understand them. That was the trouble.

Mr. LETCHER. Well, sir, that is about the same thing. A gentleman who does not understand the resolutions of 1798 has no right to come here and put questions to me about Democracy.

Mr. SEWARD. I doubt whether the gentleman from Virginia understands them himself.

Mr. LETCHER. Mr. Chairman, I hope I shall not be drawn off again. I was going on to say that we have been told that the Army is not strong enough under the present rate of compensation—that there is a deficiency of some three or four thousand men in making up the regular complement of soldiers. Now, sir, if the complement of soldiers is wanting, and if increase of pay is necessary to secure it, I am perfectly willing that the increase of pay recommended in this bill for non-commissioned officers and privates shall be made. But I give notice that, if I have an opportunity, I shall move to strike out from the first section of the bill the following lines:

“A major general, $255; a brigadier general, $165; a colonel, $135; a lieutenant colonel, $115; a major, $95; a captain of cavalry, $85; a captain of artillery and infantry, $75; a first lieutenant of cavalry, $65; a first lieutenant of artillery and infantry, $57; a second lieutenant of cavalry, $55; a second lieutenant of artillery and infantry, $47; a cadet, $33.”

The CHAIRMAN. That amendment was submitted by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. Grow,] and is now pending.

Mr. LETCHER. If I can get the floor I shall move to strike out the whole bill, from the twenty-sixth line of the first section.

Mr. McMULLIN. I have listened to this discussion, Mr. Chairman, with somewhat of mortification. I had not expected that a bill of the character of the one now under consideration would have emanated from the source whence it did. Had the proposition been merely for the increase of the present pay of the rank and file of the Army, and of the officers from the captain down, I should not have been disappointed. I was indeed disappointed, nay, mortified, at seeing my colleague, [Mr. FAULKNER,] now acting, in the absence of the chairman, as head of the Committee on Military Affairs, come here with this bill proposing a large increase of the pay of the officers of your Army, a pay now higher by a great deal than that given to the civil officers under the Government.

There are but few of us who have looked into this subject with a view of obtaining exact information in reference to the amount actually received by officers of the Army, in the way of compensation for their services. Your major general receives over $7,000 per annum. Call on General Scott, the highest officer in command, and he will tell you that his pay is upwards of $7,000. Is not that enough? The actual pay of every officer of the Army is within a fraction of double what it seems to be on the Army Register. Notwithstanding the receipt of these large salaries, they are continually crying More! more! During the last Congress, chief clerks and heads of bureaus came forward, when we manifested a disposition to increase the salaries of clerks, and asked that their salaries might also be increased in proportion; and now, while we are all willing and anxious to increase the pay of the private soldiers who fight the battles of the country, I doubt whether we shall succeed in that praiseworthy object unless we also increase the pay of the officers of the Army.

Mr. KEITT. Do not the officers also fight?

Mr. McMULLIN. Sometimes they do, and other times they do not. Very frequently they keep out of harm's way.

It has been well said by my colleague that you find every employee of the Government asking for an increase of pay. It was but the other day that you increased the pay of your Cabinet officers. Gentlemen need not tell me that this Democratic Congress is not to be held responsible for this increase. I have already heard it proclaimed in this Hall that the Whig party intend to go before the country in the next presidential election, cry out and spare not, against the extravagance of a Democratic Administration. Who can deny the fact? But when you come to examine the records, it will not be difficult to show that the Whig party have voted for the most extravagant appropriations made by this Congress. It is true that they will attempt to hold this Democratic Congress, with a majority of fifty or sixty, responsible; and when you go before the country, and appeal to the country to know why this Administration has expended upwards of sixty millions of dollars, you will be told, as my colleague has told the House to-day, that a fraction of the Democratic party, together with the Whig party, have made those expenditures. I tell my colleague, who reported this bill, that the Democratic party will be held responsible. Notwithstanding the fact that we can show by the record that the Whigs have voted for some of the most extravagant appropriations, yet, managed by my adroit friend from Ohio, [Mr. CAMPBELL,] and others of his associates, they will go before the country and hold this Congress responsible for extravagant appropriations. I ask, then, if this committee are prepared by their votes to increase the pay of their officers?

The hour having now arrived for closing the general debate upon the bill, under the order of the House,

The CHAIRMAN stated that the pending question was upon the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, to strike out all after the enacting words of the bill down to the fourteenth line.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I did not propose to participate in this discussion at all. Nor is it my intention to consume any more of the time of this House—

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Ohio submit an amendment?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I move to strike out the whole section.

The CHAIRMAN. That amendment is not in order. The Chair would suggest to the gentleman that it is competent to amend any part of the section proposed to be stricken out.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I move to reduce the amount in the fifth line of the bill to sixty-five dollars, instead of two hundred and sixty-five dollars. I move this amendment simply for the purpose of making a few remarks in reply to those made by my friend from Virginia, [Mr. McMULLIN.] He alluded to the probable course which the Whig party would take in the next presidential election; and has kindly singled me out as one of those who might occupy a prominent part in the canvass. I do not know, sir, in the present mixed up condition of parties, where I shall be found in the next presidential canvass; but I hope I shall be found, in all future time, as I have been in all the past, in favor of an economical expenditure of the funds of the people's Treasury. Sir, if I recollect aright, it was asserted by the party in power, in the last presidential struggle, that the Whig party had wantonly and extravagantly expended the money of the people; and we were promised, in the event of a Democratic triumph, retrenchment and reform. I presume that no one was more eloquent in these charges and promises than my friend from Virginia was in his district. At the opening of the present session, after the election of the Speaker, I took occasion to advert to the fact, that there was in this Hall a majority of more than two to one of the Democratic party, coming into power on the strength of these promises, and I called upon that majority to recollect that, so far as I was concerned—as one of the minority—I would hold the party in power to a strict accountability for all their acts of legislation. And the gentleman should not be surprised, therefore, if, on some future occasion, we bring the record of their legislative acts against them, on the trial before the people. But the gentleman from Virginia now complains that a portion of the Democratic party have been aided by some of the Whig members of this House to carry through extravagant and unnecessary appropriations. If the Democratic party, being in a majority of two to one in both legislative branches, and holding all the Executive offices, does not hold itself responsible to the people for the reckless expenditure of the public money, I should like to know from the honorable gentleman how large a majority it will require in order to make that party accountable? [Laughter.]

Mr. FAULKNER, (interrupting.) I desire to make a single remark, if the gentleman from Ohio will permit me.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I cannot yield the floor now. I am about to close in a minute or two.

Mr. FAULKNER. I wish to make but a single remark, which is this: I will not call the gentleman to order, because he is replying to the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. McMULLIN.] But I give notice—it being my duty to attend to this bill—that I will hereafter call every gentleman to order who deviates from the proposition under discussion.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Then I hope the gentleman will make his point of order when his colleague deviates from the rule, when he expands on the gross and wanton expenditure of his party, and seeks to make a party that is stripped of all power—

Mr. FAULKNER. I said to the gentleman that I did not mean to call him to order; but I gave notice that I intended hereafter to call every gentleman to order who did not speak to the amendment under discussion.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I understand my friend means nothing unkind or unfair.

I merely rose to call the attention of the House to the fact that this notice was served by me on the majority at the opening of the session, the moment after the Speaker was elected, and before the House was fully organized, as will be shown by the record of the debates. Now, sir, coming in, as the Administration party did, with this overwhelming majority, it will not answer the purpose of gentlemen who have made to the people such promises of retrenchment and reform, to attempt to make the Whigs, who are destitute of power, responsible for the measures of extravagance by which their Congress, pursuing the recommendations of their Executive officers, appropriates, in a single session, $70,000,000.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. GIDDINGS. I will detain the committee but for a moment in reply to my colleague, [Mr. CAMPBELL.] I am opposed to his amendment. This Army bill has been one of the standing subjects of contention of this House for the last twenty years, and I have never known one single improvement made upon it, except when the leading men of both parties united in a determination to effect a reform. I believe the last improvement made was in 1842. At that time the distinguished gentleman from Tennessee—the late Postmaster General [Mr. Johnson]—and the venerable member from Massachusetts, [Mr. Adams,] with all their energies, brought their combined influence to reduce the Army to the basis of 1820. The leading men of both parties united for the purpose of that reform, and they succeeded. From that day until this I have known no reform on this subject. Sir, the party in power has uniformly endeavored to increase the Army and Navy, and the party out of power has almost uniformly opposed it.

Mr. FAULKNER. I rise to a question of order. If I understand the present position of business before the committee, we are now acting under the five-minute rule, and the remarks of every gentleman must be confined, according to the rules which govern the committee, to the particular amendment under consideration; and if any gentleman departs from the discussion of the particular amendment under consideration, I feel bound to call him to order, and I do so on this occasion.

Mr. GIDDINGS. I am speaking to the subject of reform.

Mr. FAULKNER. Is there any amendment pending on that subject; and if so, what is it?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the gentleman from Ohio has not deviated from the question, and that he is in order. The gentleman is making an argument, intending to show that the amount specified in the sixth line should be reduced.

Mr. GIDDINGS. My colleague proposes to reduce the compensation of major general merely. I am opposed to that amendment, and I am stating definitely and distinctly the reasons of my opposition to it.

So far as parties are concerned, I only wish to observe, that no party has ever stood forth here as the advocate of reform upon this question. And as to the expenditures of the parties, I have nothing to say further than this, that the party in power has uniformly been limited in their expenditures by their ingenuity in squandering money, and apparently by nothing else; and I can testify that the late Whig party was limited by anything else than that. I know something about that party, for I once belonged to it; and no Administration ever squandered more treasure than the last. And if this present Administration shall go further than the last, it will be because they possess more talent, and find themselves capable of improving upon former examples. [Laughter.]

And now with regard to expenditures. Who does not see that the whole system of maintaining an Army in time of peace is an incubus resting upon the nation, and nothing else? There is no more necessity for it than there is for the fifth wheel of a coach. I am told that an Army is wanted to protect our settlements upon the frontiers from the ravages of the Indians. Sir, the friendly Indians upon our borders are the best protectors that can be found upon the face of the earth; and our trappers, hunters, and backwoodsmen, are the next best; and our border men, who are accustomed to the rifle, and to hardships, are the next. Either of these are a thousand times more efficient than your Army.

Again, as to these expenses, let me assure this committee that if they will appropriate one fourth the amount now annually expended in support of the Army to furnish food for the Indians, the frontier will be protected without bloodshed, or the trouble of an Army. We may save this vast expenditure. Sir, give me the money now used to supply food, and arms, and ammunition to our troops, and I will protect the frontier, and you may disband the Army. Yes, sir, we can feed the Indians, and make them our friends for the money we now use in feeding our Army and in supplying them with matériel of war. Common sense teaches us that these depredations are usually, ay, always, committed for the purpose of obtaining food, or for revenge of injuries received from the whites. These are the only motives which guide the wild savage. Now, if we supply his wants, or rather his food, and treat him kindly and justly, we shall need no army to fight him. They must sustain life; for that purpose they steal horses, and use them for food; they steal cattle and hogs for the same object; but, if you will feed them, they will have no occasion to commit depredations of that kind. You will make them your friends, your allies, who will protect you with their lives. Sir, I repeat, you can furnish them with the means of subsistence for one fourth the amount which you appropriate for the support of the Army. It is far cheaper to sustain their lives than it is to kill them.

Sir, I appeal to history, I appeal to the better judgment, to the conscience of every man, if this is not so, if it has not been the case from the days of William Penn down to the present time? The best protection that has ever been afforded against Indian depredations has been found in being just, generous, and kind to them, in making them our friends rather than our enemies.

Mr. PERKINS, of New York. I move to amend the amendment by reducing the amount five dollars.

I rise, Mr. Chairman, for the purpose of saying that I conceive it to be indispensable for the safety of the frontiers of the several Territories of this Government that the Army should be increased. As the settlers are extending into Minnesota, Washington, and all the other Territories calculated to excite the Indians to the commission of outrages upon them, it is necessary that our Army should be kept up to the full complement now authorized by law. And it is impossible to keep it full unless the pay of the soldiers is increased. I say that a large number of troops is required for the defense of the sparse settlements in the Territories, and therefore I shall vote for this bill, though there may be some provisions in it which do not commend themselves to my judgment. Still, sir, I think some of the officers, and especially the officers of companies, the lieutenants, captains, &c., should have their salaries increased as much as is provided for in this bill. The officers of our Army and their families are of those who have been accustomed to live respectably and fashionably. It is necessary that their pay should be sufficient, in order that they may properly preserve the dignity of their positions; and this is the object of the proposition which is under consideration.

Let anybody look into the matter, and I am sure that they will frankly acknowledge that the present pay of a lieutenant is entirely inadequate for the support of a family. Then, this being so, the necessity and obligation is as great for the increase of the pay of captain, lieutenant, and so on down, as for the increase of the soldier's pay. It is, in my opinion, a disgrace to the country to insist on refusing to give these young gentlemen, holding commissions in the Army, sufficient to support themselves and families decently and out of debt. It is our duty, if we employ such officers, to pay them, so that they may live respectably, and up to the dignity of their position, and not to disgrace it and themselves by running into debt. I shall go for carrying out the general provisions of the bill so far as regards the increase of the pay of the soldiers and of the officers from captain down. I think that the major general's pay is enough now; but the fact that the bill provides for an increase of it will not prevent me giving it my vote. I can see no way for disposing of the Army, unless you let out the killing off of these Indians to the Mormons, and give them the spoils by way of compensation. Then we may have peace on the frontier.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. What is the question before the committee?

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from New York to the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. SKELTON. I arise to a question of order. A motion was made to strike out a greater portion of the bill. To that the gentleman from Ohio moved an amendment. Then the gentleman from New York rose and submitted an amendment. I contend that the last amendment is not in order until that of the gentleman from Ohio is disposed of.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the question of order. A motion was made to strike out a portion of the bill. Amendment was then in order to the portion proposed to be stricken out. The amendment of the gentleman from Ohio was an amendment in the first degree, and the amendment of the gentleman from New York was an amendment to that amendment.

Mr. SMITH. If the gentleman from New York will withdraw his amendment, we may get rid of this question of order.

Mr. PERKINS declined withdrawing his amendment.

The question was taken; and Mr. PERKINS's amendment was rejected.

The question was next taken on Mr. CAMPBELL's amendment; and it was rejected.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I now move to strike out the words "sixty-five." The committee will see at once that I present a practical question for their consideration. It is a direct issue between the law as it now stands and that proposed by this bill. The committee can at once come to a vote upon the question of increasing the pay of a commanding general of the United States Army. This being the question, I propose to submit a few remarks, and I shall do so in consequence of the strange remarks to which I have listened. I do not suppose that there are half a dozen men in the House who could, by any device, be induced to abolish the Army altogether. If we are to have an Army, gentlemen must desire to have it efficient, and to have it efficient you must pay a sum sufficient to enable the officers, who are men of honor and spirit, to live as becomes such men. At this time our Army, as we all know, is dispersed to a very great extent over our wild country, upon the frontiers; and our Army officers out there are compelled to submit to most oppressive exactions. One would suppose that pay there would not be needed; but it is entirely absorbed, as we all know. I refer to this because the question has been made here, and it has been discussed in the committee, whether the commander-in-chief of the Army of the United States, who has permanent quarters, a settled residence, and fixed habits, receives pay enough, or whether he receives too much.

There is a wide difference between the case of a commanding general and that of his subaltern officers. One of the great evils of the service, and that which renders the miserable pittance which the subordinate officers receive wholly inadequate for their wants, is that which arises out of the necessity of raising money at a sacrifice, as they must be in readiness to obey orders at all times. I presume this committee understand that if a poor subaltern is ordered to go to California, he does not then get a dollar of pay for transportation and mileage. He has to raise money in some way. How does a captain of the artillery, who receives but forty dollars a month, and who has to live like a gentleman, raise the money necessary for his wants? Unless he has other means, he has to apply to the Jew, and pay an enormous usury. I advert to these things for the purpose of having this committee and the country understand that I am not one of those who will hesitate in meting out full and exact justice in this case as well as in all others. I am not afraid of expenditures, bound as I am by every obligation of duty as a politician, and as a man, to sustain only that expenditure which is just and economical.

Mr. McNAIR. Is the pay of the major general now $265 per month?

Mr. SMITH. His pay is $200 now. The bill under consideration proposes to make it $265 per month.

Mr. McNAIR. Well, I want to know why it is that the gentleman from Virginia is arguing in favor of increasing the pay of Army officers, when his amendment is to reduce it?

Mr. SMITH. If the gentleman had been listening to my remarks—

Mr. McNAIR. So I have.

Mr. SMITH. If he had paid attention to them, he would not have had occasion to ask that question. I stated distinctly to the committee that in the question under consideration, they should give attention to the fact that this commanding officer of ours, this major general, has fixed quarters, a permanent location, and a domestic establishment, and that he was, therefore, not under the necessity of incurring all the expenses of change of position to which subordinate officers are subjected. I did not even say that I would vote for the amendment, but that I rose simply for the purpose of presenting this as a practical question to the consideration of the committee. I said in my remarks that the officers of the Army, the brigadier generals, the colonels, the captains, and the lieutenants, who are compelled to obey orders, and to go from post to post as ordered by superior officers, have to sustain their domestic establishments independently of the expenses to which they are themselves subject, while the major general has a fixed and permanent residence. And I say that there is a wide difference in this.

Mr. LANE, of Oregon. I feel unwilling, Mr. Chairman, very unwilling, to oppose the amendment. The provisions of this bill generally strike me as being founded in right and justice. The commander of the Army—the major general—would receive, by this bill, in pay and allowances, $5,600. But the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. McMULLIN] has made a mistake of some hundreds of dollars in his calculations. He stated that the commanding general, if he were asked the question what his income from the Army is, would say that he received over $7,000 per annum. But I think his answer would show that he received no such amount. The commanding general of the Army has passed through all the grades which the gentleman from Virginia speaks of. Commencing his service in the ranks, he fought his way up to his present high and honorable position. And the pay he now receives will barely do more than maintain his rank. He is subjected to many expenses which he must defray out of his own pocket. He has to keep horses, and pay for them out of his income. He has to pay for his servants, for his uniform, for the support of his family, for all the expenses incident to his position; so that he can never lay by anything out of his pay. The major general has spent a large portion of his life in the service without saving a dollar; and, in the position he now occupies, he is not able to lay by any money.

Then, as my friend from Virginia [Mr. SMITH] has well said, the subordinates of the Army cannot subsist upon their present pay. At the time when the present rates of pay and allowances were fixed, subsistence did not cost, in this portion of the country, half as much as it now does. You have increased the pay of your clerks in the public offices of the Government. You have increased the pay of persons in almost every branch of the public service, and you have left the pay of the Army as it was first established. You have left them in a position that they cannot subsist themselves; and in my portion of the country, as the gentleman from Virginia so well said, unless an officer has a fortune and means of his own, or rich friends to assist him, he cannot live on his pay; he must leave the Army in debt. Many officers would be thus actually forced out of the service, and compelled to resign, were it not that their patriotism, love of country, and pride, induce them to hold to it at every sacrifice, without being able to afford a dollar to pay for their uniform. You must increase their pay, or they cannot subsist. And why discriminate between the officer and the soldier? The other day I was misunderstood in my remarks while discussing a pension bill, and if so, I would like to place myself right now. I hold that the widow of a general who dies in the service, or of wounds received while in the service, should receive a pension according to the rank of her husband; and so in regard to the widow of a lieutenant, and they should draw pay for an equal number of years. I say this for fear that my remarks were misapprehended the other day.

Mr. BRIDGES. I wish to ask the gentleman from Oregon a question. I wish to know if he ever knew an officer of the Army to leave the service because of the insufficiency of the pay?

Mr. LANE. I can answer the gentleman very readily. I have known many such instances. I have known many officers leave the Army because the pay was insufficient, and I can point them out to him.

Mr. BRIDGES. Name one.

Mr. LANE. I will mention the instance of Captain Britton, who quitted the Army because he could not subsist upon the pay. I have had some experience as to this matter, and know something about it. I entered the Army as a private, and came out of the service a brevet major general. The pay of a brigadier general at that time was about $3,000, and how could a brigadier general, who had to keep four horses and two servants, subsist upon that? It took a large portion of my salary to subsist myself, to pay for my servants, my horses, and other expenses.

Here the hammer fell.

[Cries of "Go on!" "Go on!"]

Mr. SKELTON. Will the gentleman from Virginia withdraw his amendment, to enable me to introduce another?

[Cries of "Go on!"]

Mr. LANE. Then, that I may proceed in order, I move another amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oregon is not entitled to the floor. The Chair recognized the gentleman from New Jersey, [Mr. SKELTON.]

Mr. SKELTON. I rise to offer an amendment to the amendment, which is really necessary to be incorporated in it before it is adopted. I move to except from the part which is proposed to be stricken out, the third and fourth lines, as follows:

"That the monthly pay proper of the several grades of the Army, hereinafter enumerated, shall be at the following rates."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that amendment is not in order. The pending amendment is the one offered by the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. SMITH.]

Mr. SKELTON. I understood the gentleman from Virginia withdrew his amendment.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I will withdraw my amendment, if there is no objection.

No objection being made, the amendment was withdrawn.

Mr. SKELTON. I now offer my amendment to the amendment. I offer it with a view of perfecting the amendment, as I suppose the House will strike out the part proposed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, and I wish those two lines to be retained in the bill, as they should be; and I suppose, likewise, from the indications which I have seen here to-day—

The CHAIRMAN, (interrupting.) The Chair would state to the gentleman from New Jersey, that his amendment is not strictly in order, as the gentleman from Pennsylvania proposes to insert equivalent words.

Mr. SKELTON. No, sir; he moves to strike out all after the enacting clause down to the fourth line.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the gentleman's amendment is in order.

Mr. SKELTON. The question for the committee to determine is, are the provisions of this bill necessary to promote the efficiency of the Army of the United States? I am willing the merits of the bill shall turn upon that point. If it is necessary to increase the pay of the officer, in order to promote the efficiency of the Army, then I am willing that an increase of pay should be accorded to them. But, sir, I contend that it is not necessary to increase the pay of the officers for that purpose, and I contend that it is necessary to increase the pay of the rank and file. I do not understand that this increase is necessary to procure the requisite number of officers. On the contrary, as the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HENRICKS] has told us, there are men all over the country who are extremely anxious to obtain positions as officers of the Army at the present rates. There are no deficiencies occurring in the list of officers. But, from the statements which have been made, the places are all full, and there are a large number of supernumeraries. I say we have more officers than we have soldiers for them to command; and hence the amendment of the gentleman from New York, to increase the pay of the subordinate officers, is not necessary. But it is said that these officers move in the fashionable circles of life, attend balls, parties, &c., and hence it is necessary that they should receive an additional compensation. Now, sir, I contend that it is entirely unnecessary that we should provide for such things for those who are to fight the battles of the country.

But the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. LANE] says these officers cannot live on their present pay. Now, a major general is allowed fifteen rations per day in addition to the regular pay, which is $200 per month; and besides he is allowed seven horses and four servants. He is allowed all these, and still the gentleman from Oregon says he cannot live. He tells us that the major generals are starving upon $200 a month and fifteen rations a day, while the common soldier has but seven or eight dollars a month and one ration a day, and yet he can live. That is the kind of argument that has been brought before this House to show the necessity of increasing the pay of the officers of the Army. This is not a kind of logic that will stand. I contend that there is no reason whatever for increasing the pay of these officers. The pay they now receive is sufficient to command the best talent of the country. The best talent of the country has already been engaged in that service, and what good purpose will be served by increasing the pay beyond what it now is? But the same reasoning does not apply to the rank and file of the Army. It is unjust to pay your officers such exorbitant sums, and still increase them, while you do not pay the poor soldiers, those who do your work, enough to induce efficient men to join the Army; and hence, while I am opposed to increasing the pay of the officers, I am in favor of increasing the compensation of the rank and file.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I desire to call the attention of the gentleman from New York, and of the committee, to one or two facts in connection with this subject. The gentleman from New Jersey says you can obtain Army officers enough at the present rate of compensation. I do not know whether the gentleman voted for increase of pay to the clerks, but we know that, at the time the salaries were raised from $900 to $1,200, plenty of men could have been found willing to discharge the duties for $500 per annum.

Mr. SKELTON. I voted against increase of pay.

Mr. SMITH. I have only mentioned the fact by way of illustrating my argument. There is Colonel Magruder, who has pay and rations running up to seventy-nine dollars per month. That officer was sent to California, and compelled to incur heavy expenses. In discharging his duty there, he would have been beggared and a bankrupt in reputation and fortune, if he had not been blessed through an interesting source with other means than those accruing from his rank. He was in the wilderness when that unhappy catastrophe happened which resulted in the death of the gallant Craig. He was a captain in pursuit of deserters from our Army, some of whom had served in the British Army. When he overtook them, he bared his breast covered with honorable wounds, and they slew him, widowing his wife and making orphans of his children. He had forty dollars per month. We have men who have been twenty years in the service, and who have periled their lives often on our battle-fields, and yet we are told that there are men plenty to take their commissions at the present allowance. You pay the lowest of your clerks $1,200 per annum, or $100 the month. You pay the gallant officer who has been twenty years in the service, and is covered with wounds, only eighty dollars the month. In the very instance to which I have alluded, when the Indians brought in the deserters who had been soldiers in the British Army for many a year, to answer to the offended laws of the country, the reward had to be paid, and there was no money. This same gallant officer staked his own credit, and borrowed the money at ten per cent. The Government refunded the principal, but the interest at ten per cent. for eight months, was a tax on his pay. That gentleman is in your service now, and yet the gentleman from New Jersey is against giving him the allowance given your clerks of the lowest grade. I would have the officers of the Army soldiers in the true spirit of chivalry. I would not stint them; for of all objects under the sun, the poor, needy, beggar soldier is the most unhappy. I would have him economical, but he should be liberally provided with that which is indispensable to his dignified and manly support. Is it an argument to be listened to by the American Congress, that these gentlemen should not have an increase of pay because there are others willing to take their places at their present pay? I can tell the gentleman from New Jersey that he can get plenty to fill his seat at two dollars per day, and he gets eight.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. SOLLERS. I move to increase the pay of a major general five dollars.

The CHAIRMAN. That amendment is not now in order.

Mr. SOLLERS. Then I move to strike out the words "thirty-five," and insert in lieu thereof the word "forty."

I confess that I have offered this amendment, not with a view of having it carried, but for the purpose of expressing some of the opinions I entertain upon the subject now under consideration. I have heard many things here which, heretofore, were considered as slander upon our republican Government. If this discussion could have taken place, and this proposition been moved in the House of Representatives, during the late war with Mexico, I take it for granted that no member of this House would have dared to raise his voice against it. If he had dared at that time to have spoken disparagingly of the services of our fellow-citizens in that war, he would have been met by the indignant voice of every American citizen within the limits of the United States. And yet, it seems, that in a very short space of time, we have forgotten all their gallant and heroic deeds that covered the country with glory; and because these men now ask for an increase of pay—a small increase of pay not at all proportionate to the expansion, wealth, and greatness of the Republic for which they fought and bled—is it to be denied to them?

The battles upon the plains of Mexico tell a tale that ought never to be forgotten by the members of this House or by the American people. In any great emergency that may arise between our Government and foreign nations, we are not to rely upon a standing army. But we must rely upon volunteers from the mass of the people to fight our battles, and these volunteers are to be commanded by officers of the regular Army of the United States. What is the fact in reference to the war with Mexico? There was a disproportion unheard of and unknown before in any battles that were ever fought upon the face of the earth, between the number of officers and men that were killed upon its battle-fields. History has recorded nothing like it. It required the skill and heroism of officers of the Army to lead and direct these volunteers upon the fields of battle; and it was through their exertions that our victories there were achieved. Shall we, then, deny them this miserable pittance, this slight increase of their pay, after all they have done, and all the gallant deeds they have performed? No! The American people will sanction no such proceedings. They expect us to deal liberally with these officers, especially with those who, in the time of need, in the full heat of the battle, poured out their blood like water in defense of their country. I appeal to gentlemen. I ask gentlemen to trust to their own feelings in this matter. There is not a genuine American heart that throbs with love for his country that is not willing to grant an increase of pay to those who bear the brunt of our battles. I trust and believe, that this amendment will be adopted. I am very far from saying that the compensation of ordinary soldiers is sufficient. I would increase their pay. We do not appreciate their services in these piping times of peace; but let a war break out requiring their services, and then we shall appreciate their worth. I hope and trust that no serious opposition will be made to this amendment.

33d CONGRESS, 1st Session.

NEW SERIES...No. 123.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I oppose the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maryland, [Mr. SOLLERS,] and I do so merely for the purpose of making a remark. When the gentleman from Virginia was on the floor speaking of the pay of a certain officer, I rose to ask him the name of the person to whom he alluded. He did not answer me publicly, but he mentioned the name so as that I overheard it. I understood him to say that the officer in question received only forty dollars per month, or four hundred and eighty dollars per year. I find on looking at the letter of the Secretary of the War Department, of February 17, 1854, and at the Army Register, that the receipts of that officer last year were $2,305 22.

A MEMBER. Whom do you speak of?

Mr. CLINGMAN. Of Captain Magruder, who is colonel by brevet. I find that the Army Register fixes his pay at $993 per year.

A MEMBER. What page is it on?

Mr. CLINGMAN. Pages 32 and 33. And then his rations amount to $801; his allowance for servants, $213, and so on, making his whole receipts for the year $2,305 22. Now, how it was that the gentleman from Virginia managed to get the idea that the pay of that officer was only forty dollars per month, I cannot say. I suppose somebody has misled him. I was myself misled this morning by a gentleman of the committee. I am disposed to pay what is right; and if an officer of one grade is only receiving $480 per year, that is one reason why I should vote for an increase of the pay of the officers. But as the gentleman from Virginia has been mistaken, and as the officer who he thought received only $480 per annum, actually, according to the report of the Secretary of War, received $2,305, I think it right that the committee should think some time before they determine to make the increase proposed.

Mr. ASHE. The first class clerks in Government offices receive $2,200 a year, and the ordinary custom-house clerks receive from $2,300 to $2,500.

Mr. CLINGMAN. My colleague tells me that the clerks in the custom-houses receive from $2,000 to $3,000 per year. Now, if that is so, I will vote for a proposition to reduce their pay. I have resisted the propositions to increase the pay of the clerks here. A gentleman from Virginia tells us that there are clerks here receiving $1,200 a year, while we could get as competent men to do the work at $500. That is precisely why I voted, this session, against increasing their pay. But if we waste money on one branch of the public service, that is no reason why we should waste it on all.

Mr. FAULKNER. I would like to call the attention of the gentleman from North Carolina to the fact that he will find, in a note appended to the Army Register, that out of the sum of $2,305 received by Captain Magruder, $365 was pay for service in California, and $123 for the fiscal year of 1852; that he was the commandant of a post, and that the pay received by him for servants and forage was far less than his actual expenditures for the same objects. His command of the post gave him the pay of a lieutenant colonel.

Mr. CLINGMAN. Well, that deduction would bring his pay down to $1,800. But the gentleman will see there that his pay proper is stated as $993, instead of $480; that his rations amount to $801, and so on. I have no feeling about this matter. If the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GROW] prevails, I will support the bill. I have no doubt we ought to increase the pay of the common soldiers and non-commissioned officers. The proper rule is to pay a fair compensation for the service we receive. It is conceded on all hands that we cannot get soldiers to serve at the present rate of pay. I am willing to vote for a proper compensation for soldiers and officers. Gentlemen say we have voted an increase of pay to the clerks, and, therefore, we should vote for this increase for the officers and soldiers of the Army. I do not consider that, by any means, a good reason. Gentlemen should recollect that they are voting a permanent increase. I have no hope that we shall ever be able to reduce any of these increased salaries to the proper proportions. If we act in the dark, and vote at this time for high rates of pay, there they stand; we cannot get them back to what they were. Therefore it is that I think it is better for us to content ourselves at this time with increasing the pay of the privates and non-commissioned officers of the Army; and, at the next, or some other session, we can deliberately consider the question of increasing the compensation of the commissioned officers.

Mr. LANE of Oregon. Is it in order now to move to amend the bill?

*The CHAIRMAN. It is in order to move to amend the amendment of the gentleman from Maryland, [Mr. SOLLERS.]

Mr. LANE. Well, the gentleman from Maryland moves to amend by increasing the pay five dollars. I will move to increase it ten dollars. I move the amendment to obtain the opportunity only to notice, in order that the committee and the country may understand this thing—some of the remarks which fell from the gentleman from New Jersey, [Mr. SKELTON,] and from the gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. CLINGMAN,] who has just taken his seat. The gentleman from New Jersey holds the opinion that a major general receives compensation at the rate of $200 a month, and that he is entitled to seven horses, four servants, and fifteen rations while he is employed in actual service. Well, that is all true; but the seven horses he must pay for himself, and he has to pay for them out of his own funds at the rate of two or three hundred dollars apiece, most likely, amounting perhaps, in all to $2,100. Then he has to pay for all they eat, for the gentleman will remember that, in these items which foot up $5,526, everything of this kind is included.

Mr. SKELTON. I want to ask the gentleman from Oregon a question in regard to those seven horses.

Mr. LANE. Not now, I want to go on with my statement. I want to say that a major general in the field has to furnish his own horses, and is allowed fodder for them, but it is counted with this sum of $5,526. He pays also for four servants, and pays for all they eat too. He is allowed rations, but he does not draw them from the commissary, but commutes for them at twenty cents a ration. He also subsists his own household and servants, bears all their expenses, and generally comes out at the end of the year in debt.

I desire to say one word now in relation to this case of Magruder, which has been referred to. He commanded the military department upon the Pacific. He was in command of our forces in California. He held the brevet rank of colonel. While in command of that department, and in the performance of the duties connected therewith, in a country where the high prices of everything absorbed all that he received in paying for his servants, subsisting his horses, and meeting his other expenses, he received pay at that rate. His pay, as stated by the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. SMITH,] is forty dollars a month, and no more. And when ordered upon duty upon a brevet rank, he receives the pay of that brevet rank. That was his case, and such cases furnish no argument against the increase of salary. It is too small, and ought to be increased.

I want to notice the remark of my worthy friend from Ohio [Mr. GIDDINGS] about the management of the Indians. "Feed them and you will have peace," he says. "Feed them, and dispense with your armies, for you will have no use for them." We have been taught a lesson by the Father of our country: "In peace prepare for war." It is by no means certain that we should not have war, though we should feed the Indians. I once knew a man who went into the Indian country, and undertook to feed and subside the Indians. He was wealthy, or at least he carried means with him. He introduced among the Indians the science of agriculture; he introduced the plow, prepared the ground, sowed wheat, built a mill, and fed the Indians well, but about the time that he had got all things right, the Indians killed him and his wife, and to pay the expenses of the troubles which grew out of that murder this House have appropriated $175,000. I tell the gentleman you cannot manage the Indians in any such way. Shoot them, feed them with powder and ball, and have troops in the field ready to do that when it becomes necessary. This is the only food that will keep them peaceful. We have the troops and we have officers, and they are officers too, who will not place themselves in the rear of their troops, but will occupy their proper posts in the fight. You have not to-day, an officer in the Army, who would protect himself by placing himself in the rear of his troops. Field officers on horseback, are necessarily placed in the rear. To increase the pay of the privates, the non-commissioned officers, and the commissioned officers, and that of the commanding general, in my judgment, is right and proper. The good of the country requires it, and I hope the House will pass the bill.

Mr. GIDDINGS. I am opposed to the amendment of the gentleman from Oregon.

Mr. LANE. Then I will withdraw my amendment.

Mr. GIDDINGS. Not until I have made some remarks upon it. I know something about the nature of these Indians. I have been with them, eat with them, and slept in their cabins. I have associated with them in war, and in peace. I think I understand their character, their habits, their gratitude; and let me again say what I said when I was before up, that their whole history shows that when you treat them well, when you show yourselves friendly, they will be friendly in return. The Indian never forgets a favor, nor forgives an injury. They possess more gratitude than any other people I have been acquainted with. Gratitude for favors, and revenge for injuries constitute their moral code, their education, their religion. There is no fraud about them; when you have obtained the confidence of these wild men of the forest, they will never forget your kindness.

But, Mr. Chairman, I spoke upon this subject when I was up before, and I will not detain the committee by repeating what I then said. If gentlemen desire to make any reform in the Army, this is not the time to do it. We are just at the heel of the session. Let the subject go over until the next session, when we may have an opportunity of investigating it, and when more facts connected with it can be presented than our time will now admit of. Let the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. JONES,] or the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. PHELPS,] or other members like them, be placed upon the Committee on Military Affairs, and let them investigate the subject, and give us facts and arguments in favor of reducing the Army—of disbanding it, if you please. Let us hear both sides. Let us see if we cannot act more intelligently on the subject than we can now under the pressure of the five-minute rule, just at the moment when we are thinking how we can best close the session, and return to our constituents.

This bill, containing important provisions, intended to place the Army upon a permanent basis, to organize it upon a system which is to continue for many years to come, is now to be passed through under railroad speed. It is wrong. We are doing injustice to ourselves as well as the country, injustice to the subject, injustice to the Army, by this hot haste. There is no pressing necessity for immediate action; no interest is suffering. We shall be here again in four months. We shall then have time to deliberate—to do justice to the subject, and to ourselves, and to the country.

I am opposed to the whole Army organization. I am against the whole system of cutting throats advocated by the gentleman from Oregon. I do not believe in christianizing the Indians by whipping them, by shooting them, by cutting their throats. I do not believe that "bayonets and balls" are the best agents for civilizing the heathen. He has told us of a man who was murdered with his family by the Indians. I have no doubt that man had tried the very means proposed by the gentleman from Oregon. He had probably shot some of the Indians. He doubtless acted upon the theory of the gentleman by whipping or killing them.

Mr. LANE. Never; never.

Mr. GIDDINGS. Well, did not their neighbors?

Mr. LANE. No, sir; they always had treated them with kindness.

Mr. GIDDINGS. I am acquainted with the whole system of bringing on Indian wars. No Indian ever did, or ever will, murder a white person unless he thinks he has cause for doing so. It is the frequent practice of the whites in the western territory to shoot the Indians, as intimated by the gentleman from Oregon.

Mr. LANE. If the gentleman will allow me, Dr. Whitman's mission was not to California. He was in Oregon, four or five hundred miles from any settlement, and had always treated the Indians with uniform kindness.

Mr. GIDDINGS. Well, sir, the Indian draws no distinction between white persons. He imputes the sin of one to all who come within his power, unless they be acknowledged friends. And we are all conscious that from the time Lewis and Clarke went to Oregon to this day, the whites have occasionally murdered the Indians.

Mr. LANE. No, sir; they are generally treated with kindness.

Mr. GIDDINGS. I doubt not that they are generally treated with kindness, but occasionally with "balls and bayonets." There are in every border community outlaws to civilization, who appear to delight in showing themselves greater savages than the Indians. I appeal to the experience of every man who has resided upon the frontiers, and who is acquainted with border life. Was it not so in Florida, in all our Indian difficulties? But some gentlemen appear to have made up their minds that we must have an Army; and in order to do that, we are told that we must increase the pay on account of the glory, as my friend from Maryland [Mr. SOLLERS] told us. The people must pay for nodding plumes and blazing uniforms. They toil for funds to be spent in glory. We must support men in luxury and vice, in indolence and ease, on account of glory. Now, sir, I think our true glory consists in cultivating the arts of peace, in promoting the industry and the virtue of the whole nation.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. LANE, by unanimous consent, withdrew his amendment.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio. I move to amend by adding twenty dollars.

Mr. Chairman, I did not intend to say anything in relation to this bill, which has been reported by the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. FAULKNER], now acting as chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs; but after listening attentively to the discussion, it does seem to me that I may say something, in order that my vote may be understood. In the first place, if we had the time, I would, with my colleague and other gentlemen, desire to go into a thorough investigation of the condition of the Army and Navy of the United States, and to reform and reinvigorate them. But you, Mr. Chairman, and this committee, well know that this whole session of Congress has been exhausted by discussions in relation to our Territories and their organization; and that these important questions can have now but little of our time.

This bill comes to me recommended by the Committee on Military Affairs of the Senate, at the head of which stands General SHIELDS, one of the most gallant and distinguished officers of the country. I understand from my friend from Virginia, that it passed the Senate unanimously; and it is further recommended by the Committee on Military Affairs of this House. Then, notwithstanding the diversity of opinion among gentlemen on this floor in debate—some of whom, I have no doubt, honestly speak their sentiments, and others who speak and act for popular favor—it comes strongly recommended. In the words of the old adage, it is better sometimes to be deceived than never to trust.

Mr. Chairman, as was very well said by my colleague, no party in this House or country has ever agreed on what is exactly a proper reform for the Army. His reference to an arrangement between Mr. Adams and the gentleman from Tennessee as to the reform for the Army, as late as 1842, ought to have some weight with this body. If distinguished gentlemen on all sides of the House then thought the pay of the Army was not too great, I do not think it is too great now. If the pay of Army officers was proper and right then in the estimation of the country, the simple increase now proposed to be given is not, in fact, any enlargement of what the pay then was. Money has increased in value. The great yield of gold from California has served to lessen the pay of the very men who conquered that country.

In looking into the communication of the Secretary of War, I find the pay of the commander of our forces to be a little over $6,800 per annum, while the pay of the brigadier generals is $7,000 and $8,000.

But I say that their pay is not equal to what it was in 1840. I am in favor of increasing the pay of the rank and file. I am in favor of another provision. I desire to introduce an amendment in this very section, providing that only one half of the proper pay shall be allowed to officers of the Army when they are not on duty. That is a real reform, which I hope the committee will take into consideration. I intend to introduce such an amendment, to come in at line thirtieth.

Mr. FAULKNER. I say to the gentleman from Ohio that such a provision is already in the bill.

Mr. TAYLOR. I do not see it in the printed bill.

Mr. FAULKNER. The gentleman will find it in the proviso.

Mr. TAYLOR. I propose to insert the words "one half pay proper," so as to allow the officers of the Army, when they are recreating in the country, and are not on duty, half of the pay that they receive while engaged in the duties of their profession.

Mr. ORR. I am opposed to the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio. I suppose a majority of the committee have their minds made up, first as to whether they will vote an increase of compensation to the officers of the Army. There may be two classes—those who propose to increase the compensation of all the officers, and those who propose to increase the compensation of officers from captain down. In running over the provisions of this bill, I find that if you commence the increase with captains, the compensation of a captain will be about twenty dollars per month more than that of the major who commands him, and so on. I take it for granted, therefore, that we will not be able to mature a plan by which the compensation of commissioned officers can be increased in a fair ratio, without consuming a great deal of the time of the House. I propose to the committee, then, with a view of disposing of this bill, that we should take a test vote upon the proposition of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. Grow.] He proposes to strike out everything pertaining to the pay of commissioned officers, and make the increase of pay only in the case of non-commissioned officers and privates. If his amendment does not prevail, then we should go to work and fix the compensation that ought to be paid to each officer. If there be a majority of the committee who are opposed to any increase, why, it is but a waste of time to be maturing now the amount that you are to pay to a brigadier general, a colonel, a major, &c. I hope that the question will now be taken upon the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. TAYLOR, by unanimous consent, withdrew his amendment.

The question recurred on Mr. SOLLERS's amendment.

Mr. ROBBINS. Is it in order to move to amend the bill at this time?

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. SOLLERS] is an amendment to an amendment, and no other amendment is now in order.

Mr. ROBBINS. When the vote shall have been taken on that amendment, I desire to offer one.

The question was taken on Mr. SOLLERS's amendment; and it was not agreed to.

Mr. ROBBINS. The amendment now pending, I believe, is the one offered by my colleague, [Mr. Grow]; is it not?

The CHAIRMAN. It is.

Mr. ROBBINS. Then I want to amend that, in order that we may take a test vote, as suggested by the gentleman from South Carolina, [Mr. ORR.] I move to amend by striking out the fifth, sixth, seventh, and eighth lines, down to the word "captain," in the eighth line; so that the bill will read, "that the monthly pay proper, of the several grades of the Army, hereinafter enumerated, shall be at the following rates: a captain of cavalry, $85," &c.

I repeat to the committee, that the object of my making that proposition is to have a test vote taken, as suggested by the gentleman from South Carolina. I would like the test vote to be taken on this amendment. I do not wish to make any remarks on it.

Mr. PECKHAM. Is that amendment amendable?

The CHAIRMAN. It is.

Mr. PECKHAM. I wish to amend it in this shape: Strike out the following words, between the fourth and sixth lines: "a major general, $265; a brigadier general, $165," and insert in lieu of the figures, after the other grades, as follows: a colonel, $100; a lieutenant colonel, $100; a major, $90.

Mr. PECKHAM. Mr. Chairman, the amendment proposed by me, and sent up to the Clerk's desk, strikes out the proposed increase as to the major general, the brigadier generals, and modifies the pay of the other grades down to that of captain. I believe, if we are to make any correction at all in the bill, the one proposed is a proper one; and the committee can show its disposition to alter, as well with respect to this amendment, as to any other. I do not propose to discuss the position taken by the gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. CLINGMAN], that we shall be satisfied if we can obtain men to fill up the service, and shall pay so much only as is necessary to that end. I have no sort of doubt that you can procure men to accept the post of major generals for less than five thousand dollars a year. I have no doubt that persons could be found willing to become members of Congress for one quarter the amount we are now paid. I have no doubt you could obtain somebody to occupy the White House for one half the salary of $35,000, perhaps for less.

A MEMBER. Twenty-five thousand dollars salary.

Mr. PECKHAM. Twenty-five thousand dollars proper, and $10,000 for rent of house, furniture, &c.

Mr. MCNAIR, (interrupting.) I ask the gentleman, could men be procured to fill these places as well?

Mr. PECKHAM. That is a very different thing. But you can fill them, certainly, I admit, not in a manner to promote the welfare of the country. Sir, there are many considerations which induce me to favor this additional pay to the Army, not only to the privates, the men in the ranks, but to the officers; and I am willing to include an increase to the major general. That position is rarely attained. It is held only by one man in the service. It may be the goal of the ambition of every enterprising officer, but though long lives are spent in active service—in deeds of valor and high desert—yet not more than one in thousands can justly hope to attain it. Mere length of service is not sufficient, promotion for deeds of gallantry is necessary—so that the confidence of the nation shall keep pace with the promotion. After a lifetime of toil and effort—of study as well as action—ought the highest military position in our country to be meanly paid? So meanly, that every officer with a family dies in poverty who looks to his pay alone for support! The gentleman from Oregon [General LANE] has shown to the House that the whole amount of pay and rations, &c., is barely sufficient to maintain such an officer in the field, and I will say nothing on that subject. He has had practical knowledge. But, sir, as to the officers of a lower grade, we all know many who have spent an ordinary lifetime in the service, and have yet arrived at no higher position than captain in fact, with rank of lieutenant colonel by brevet—men of over forty years of age, who have spent over twenty in the service, at the petty pay of about $1,500 a year, pay, rations, and all—obliged to travel from one extremity of this continent to the other—and as a gentleman behind me well says, with a family to maintain at home. This includes allowance for servant and forage, which they are frequently compelled to expend—thus reducing their actual pay to about $1,000.

Sir, the pay of all this class of officers, from captain down, is less than that of the clerks in the Departments. The clerks in all our offices here, as a general thing, get far better pay. Let it also be borne in mind that this pay was fixed in early days by men who had the welfare of the country at heart, who had knowledge on the subject, but fixed at a time when a dollar was worth more than a dollar and a half now. When we have raised the salaries of all the clerks here about us, the salaries of the Cabinet, and properly so, too, and of other officers throughout the land, why not be reasonable and just—not liberal, but just to the Army? I have no occasion to compliment the Army of our country, if our little band can be called an army. They require no compliments. They stand in need of "material aid," and I hope this House will grant it. I was very much pained to hear my worthy and distinguished friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. Grow] state to the House that he would not raise the salary of any man who receives more than forty dollars a month. I was sorry to hear it. I shall not allude to any motive that would induce gentlemen here to pay privates and not pay officers. That while the one might be popular, the other might be odious; I do not believe that that is enlightened public sentiment. The people are willing to do justice to all, and I did think that the position of my friend was taking a step lower as to pay than his uniformly high-toned manly course had induced me to expect from him.

Mr. LETCHER. The argument of the gentleman from New York illustrates exactly this, and nothing more; that because you have taken one false step, you must take another. His argument is, that because Congress have increased the salaries of the clerks and other employees of the Government, a step admittedly wrong, and because a dollar ten or twenty years ago was worth more than a dollar now, it follows, as a necessary consequence, that you must increase the pay of the Army officers and men to a corresponding extent. You have started wrong, but because you have started, you must go on wrong.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I would like to ask the gentleman what percentage upon the present pay it is proposed to give these men?

Mr. LETCHER. I do not know precisely, but I suppose about twenty per cent. I judge from the fact that that is about the proportion that is kept up in the various departments of Government. I presume that is about the percentage that is proposed to pay by this bill.

Mr. PECKHAM. The gentleman is mistaken. It is less than ten per cent.

Mr. LETCHER. Well, sir, I think, if the gentleman will take the pay of all these officers, he will find that I am not far from right. The increase in the case of the rank and file is more than twenty per cent.

The amendment to the amendment was not agreed to.

The question then recurred upon Mr. ROBBINS's amendment.

Mr. HUNT, in substance, said: Mr. Chairman, I have been shocked at the attack which has been made on the Army of the country. It was truly remarked by the eloquent gentleman from Maryland, that in times of danger men are ready to do honor to those to whom their liberties are intrusted, and to increase their pay. But, sir, what do we now witness? A barbarous assault is made upon the Army. Some gentlemen are unwilling to fill up its diminished ranks, and to supply the numbers necessary to meet the exigencies of the times; while others, though willing to recruit the service, and to give an increased pay to the privates, wholly refuse to do equal justice to the officers, by increasing their slender pay.

Mr. Chairman, the Army is a military system, and as such, it should be fairly kept up. Justice should be done alike to the officer and to the soldier. It is demagogism to declare, "I love the men, but cannot love the officers." A wise man and a patriot will properly appreciate each class, and uphold a due system of rank and order. We have been officially informed that four thousand men are needed for the Army; that such is the want of troops on our frontier, there is no safety for life and property there, and that murders and depredations are of constant occurrence. Can an American Congress allow such a state of things to continue? Soldiers are wanted, and soldiers must be had. And, sir, they can only be had by the means designated by the bill—an increase of pay. It will not answer to say that our citizens can protect themselves. It is the duty of Government to protect them—a duty that cannot be dispensed with. Besides, I am unwilling to trust to the loose and disjointed action of our citizens, conducted without system and authority. The, in all probability, ill-directed efforts of volunteers, will not be half so good in the way of protection as those of our regular soldiery. Moreover, their acts will be those of men heated by revenge, and reckless of right, and not of men well-tempered and just—of soldiers always standing by the law, and only operating in a hostile manner to bring about and to secure peace, law, and order in the country. And, sir, in addition to these observations, it may be added, that the expense of this species of warfare would be enormous, and would at last be defrayed by the Government that had failed to perform its duty in the first instance.

And here, sir, I will say a word or two on the proposed increase of pay for the soldier. If this question were submitted to the people of the United States, they would say, give such an amendment as will command the services of proper men for the ranks—of Americans, if it be practicable, whom you now exclude by your low rates. Depend not, as you have been doing, upon foreigners, who may be willing to take a pittance; but offer such a sum for enlistment as will induce ardent and patriotic young citizens to leave their peaceful shades, and array themselves under the banner of their country; especially under the present bill, which stimulates ambition by opening the door of preferment to merit and good conduct.

I will now briefly notice some remarks that have been made in the course of the debate. It was substantially contended by an opponent of the bill, that the families of officers ought not to be provided for like those of gentlemen in civil life; that their children ought not to be educated in the arts and sciences, and trained in the accomplishments and refinements of polite society; and it was especially insisted that officers and their families ought not to go to balls and routs. He who imagines that he can commend himself to favor by such narrow and illiberal views, deludes himself, and does great injustice to the good sense and good feeling of any portion of the American constituency.

I have proposed to increase the pay of a major general with a view to make these desultory observations; but I am led by the proposition to submit a few remarks suggested by it. The pay of the general-in-chief of the Army is altogether inadequate, considering his position, and apart from his distinguished services to the country. Sir, gentlemen who are opposed to increasing the pay of such an officer, do not reflect upon the expenses incident to his position, and upon the long or extraordinary course of services necessary to obtain his commission, and upon the skill, knowledge, and ability requisite for the performance of those services. In any other country than our own, such services as General Scott has rendered his country, would have secured the largest fortune, as well as the highest honor. In ours, it leaves the hero nothing beyond his fame, and the love and heart-felt gratitude of his fellow-citizens—the noblest and sweetest of human rewards, truly—but still, such as ought also to be accompanied with the comforts and enjoyments which wealth could supply to him and his family.

Mr. Chairman, it was the knowledge of the narrow fortune of our illustrious fellow-citizen that led a neighboring nation, not long since, to imagine that he might accept her chief magistracy or imperial rule. But, sir, it was a vain and delusive imagination. Faithful to his country, and true to his fame, the noble patriot clung fast to his commission. May his virtue inspire us with a proper feeling to do him justice in regard to rank and fortune. He who asserts that the pay of a major general in our service is too large, has failed to consider or to appreciate the knowledge, labor, and long service necessary to reach that position in the regular Army. Such an officer must be a man of science; not only be a thorough and accomplished soldier, in a limited or merely technical sense, but a jurisconsult and international lawyer, fit to negotiate treaties, and, if necessary, to do as General Scott did in Mexico, frame and promulgate in the midst of arms a wise and noble code of laws and morals adapted to the circumstances in which fortune had placed the victor and the vanquished, a code which would establish his reputation alike for humanity and wisdom. The remarks in respect to the pay of a major general have their application in a proper degree to the inferior grades of authority. Let us then, Mr. Chairman, stand as well by the officers as by the soldiers of the Army. Let us cherish science. Let us honor patriotism. Let us reward service.

It is said that we have all the officers that we need, and that others not in service are in waiting for advancement. What of it? Does this prove that service ought not to be properly rewarded? Is it contended that we may have ignorant men for low prices? Shame upon such barbarism! What gentleman would dare to stand before an enlightened constituency, and maintain such a proposition?

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. PHELPS. I was not aware that any gentleman here had assailed the officers of the Army. In any remarks I have made, I have been far from assailing the character of any officer of the Army of the United States; and, therefore, the remarks in which the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. Hunt] has indulged can have no application to anything I may have said. I have obtained the floor for the purpose, if permitted to do so, as I know it is not exactly in order, of indicating what I desire to offer as a substitute for the bill under consideration. I desire to present it to the committee at this time, entertaining the opinion that—

Mr. WALSH. I rise to a question of order. Is the gentleman from Missouri speaking to the amendment under consideration?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is speaking in opposition to it.

Mr. PHELPS. It must be apparent to every gentleman here, that we are not prepared at this session of Congress to legislate correctly with reference to the increase of salaries and compensation to be given to the officers of the Army. The gentleman from Louisiana correctly remarked that at this time there is a deficiency of men in the Army. If there is a deficiency, let us remedy the existing evil, and let us provide for filling up the rank and file of the Army, in order to maintain peace upon the frontier. If there was a deficiency of officers, and if they were resigning their commissions because of the inadequacy of their pay, I would increase their pay so as to command the services of good and efficient officers. But just at the close of the session there is no time to determine what should be the proper compensation. There is no pressing necessity for action upon the proposition to increase the pay of these officers now, and we can just as well postpone it to some future time. It is for this reason I shall propose, as soon as I can have an opportunity, a substitute for this bill which shall provide an increase of pay for the rank and file of the Army, retaining such provisions of this bill as relate merely to the rank and file.

Mr. WALSH. I insist upon my question of order. The gentleman stated that he desired to oppose the amendment of the gentleman from Louisiana, but he is telling us about a new proposition which he desires to submit to the committee. The gentleman has spoken eleven times already upon this question—

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri is in order, as he is speaking in opposition to the amendment of the gentleman from Louisiana, [Mr. Hunt.]

Mr. PHELPS. The amendment of the gentleman from Louisiana is to increase the pay of the major general, as proposed in this bill. I think it is legitimate to argue against it by saying that we are not prepared at this time to decide whether the pay of the major general, or any other officer of the Army named in the first section of the bill, ought to be increased. It seems to be the general desire of the committee that that branch of the question should be postponed for future consideration; and there seems to be an unanimity of opinion that the pay of the rank and file should be increased. It is for the purpose, therefore, of obtaining that which I believe will give to us a more efficient Army, that I shall endeavor to present to the committee the amendment which I have indicated.

[Cries of "Question!" "Question!"]

Mr. WALSH. Is an amendment in order now?

The CHAIRMAN. Not at this time; there is an amendment to an amendment pending.

The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. HUNT] to the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. GROW].

Mr. HUNT. I propose to withdraw my amendment.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I object.

The question was taken on Mr. HUNT's amendment; and it was not agreed to.

Mr. WALSH. I offer the following amendment to the first section of the bill:

Section first, line sixteen, strike out the words "twenty-three," and insert "thirty-two;" in the nineteenth line, strike out the word "eighteen," and insert "twenty-eight;" in the twentieth line—

The CHAIRMAN, (interrupting.) The Chair would suggest to the gentleman from New York that that amendment will be in order presently, but at this time it is not. The pending amendment is the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. ROBBINS], to strike out all from the end of the fourth line to the words "a captain," in the eighth line.

Mr. McMULLIN. I move to amend by diminishing the amount proposed to be paid to the major general twenty dollars.

I was surprised, Mr. Chairman, at the speech of my worthy friend from Louisiana. I was surprised at the arguments he used in advocating, as he did, the policy of increasing the salary of that officer. I understood the honorable gentleman as charging, in his speech, that attacks had been made upon the Army. Who—allow me to ask that honorable gentleman—has attacked the Army here to-day?

Mr. HUNT. Those who do not want to employ soldiers at their proper rate of pay.

Mr. McMULLIN. If the gentleman intended to allude to me in his remarks, I expressly declared my purpose to vote to increase the pay of the non-commissioned officers and privates, but at the same time I expressed my unwillingness to increase the pay of the commissioned officers. We heard, too, from the same gentleman, some other charges preferred against members of this House. I do not know to whom he alluded when speaking of demagogism. I hope the gentleman did not mean to include me within the scope of that term. I have heard other gentlemen, not in public speeches, but in conversation, speaking of demagogism. Sir, I tell this committee, the House, and the country, that when I undertake to demagogue, if I do so at all—

Mr. HUNT, (interrupting.) One word. On my honor I had not the gentleman in my mind.

Mr. McMULLIN. I do not believe the gentleman from Louisiana intended to include me. But the charge has been preferred against somebody.

Mr. STUART, of Michigan. I rise to a question of order. I submit that the remarks of the gentleman from Virginia are not pertinent, inasmuch as they do not concern the question before the committee, which is to decrease the pay of the major general.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that the gentleman from Virginia is hardly in order.

Mr. McMULLIN. I am replying to the remarks of the gentleman from Louisiana, and if my remarks are out of order, his were out of order. But I desire to proceed in order strictly.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would state to the gentleman from Virginia, that the rule allows five minutes for a speech in opposition to, and five minutes in explanation of, an amendment.

Mr. McMULLIN. I am aware of that. I desire to state, in connection with the amendment which I have offered, that while these gentlemen are scientific men, as stated by the gentleman from Louisiana, they are educated at the expense of the country, and not only that, if they fall upon the field of battle, their widows are provided for by law. Sir, I am the last man in this House to detract from the merits of these gallant men, but when we are paying them a fair and adequate compensation, I hold that it is not right that this committee should still increase their pay. If the Army is not an efficient one, and it is admitted not to be, let men come forward and increase the pay of the rank and file, and I will vote for it. I have not known of an instance of any officer resigning because of the inadequacy of his salary.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. McMULLIN, by unanimous consent, then withdrew his amendment.

Mr. GOODRICH offered the following amendment, to come in after the enacting clause of the bill:

That the grade of lieutenant general be, and the same is hereby, revived in the Army of the United States, in order that when, in the opinion of the President and Senate, it shall be deemed proper to acknowledge eminent services of a major general of the Army in the late war with Mexico, in the mode already provided for in subordinate grades, the grade of lieutenant general may be specially conferred by brevet, and "by brevet only, to take rank from the date of such service or services: Provided, however, That when the said grade of lieutenant general by brevet shall have once been filled, and have become vacant, so much of this bill as revives said grade in the Army shall expire and be of no effect.

Mr. FAULKNER. I rise to a question of order. I submit that that amendment is out of order.

Mr. LANE, of Oregon. Certainly it is not. The effect of it would be to reorganize the Army.

Mr. GOODRICH. The object of the bill, according to its title, is "to regulate the pay and increase the efficiency of the Army of the United States, and for other purposes." Now, I should like to know what that "for other purposes" means, if it will not cover such an amendment as this.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will not undertake now to decide whether the amendment of the gentlemen from Massachusetts will be in order to any portion of the bill or not. He certainly decides that it is not in order as an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, which is to strike out a portion of the bill.

Mr. LETCHER. I move to amend by excepting the first line that the gentleman from Pennsylvania proposes to strike out. He proposes to strike out seven lines. I propose to retain one of those lines.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. That is not in order. There is an amendment to an amendment already pending.

Mr. LETCHER. I should like to know the reason why it is not in order? I ask the Chair to decide.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the amendment is in order, but he thinks the effect will be, if adopted, to retain that line in the bill.

Mr. LETCHER. That is precisely what I propose. The gentleman from Pennsylvania proposed to strike out from the commencement of the section. I propose to strike out after the word "rates," in the fourth line, to the words "a captain," in the eighth, so that the clause will read:

That the monthly pay proper of the several grades of the Army, hereinafter enumerated, shall be at the following rates: a captain of artillery and infantry, seventy-five dollars, &c.

Mr. ROBBINS. That is necessary to make my amendment intelligible. I accept it.

Mr. LETCHER. The gentleman may accept it after I have made my remarks upon it. I have offered this amendment merely for the purpose of showing that the proposition of the gentleman from Pennsylvania will not work at all. If you strike out all down to the word "captain," a captain of infantry and artillery will then receive eighty-five dollars per month, while a major, under the present law, will get only $65 50 per month—$24 50 more than a major will receive; and with the balance there would be the same disproportion. A lieutenant of artillery would get fifty-seven dollars, which is within $3 50 of what a major gets. My object was merely to call attention to that difficulty in the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. FAULKNER. I am glad that my colleague has called attention to the proposed amendment, because the scheme of compensation recommended by the committee, has been carefully made out in view of the relative rank of all the officers of the army. The amendment would derange the proper proportion of pay between the officers, and introduce disorder and confusion.

Mr. GROW. If my amendment prevailed, would the pay of sergeant-major be greater than that of lieutenant?

Mr. FAULKNER. It would not.

Mr. ROBBINS accepted Mr. LETCHER's amendment as a modification of his own amendment.

The question then recurred on Mr. ROBBINS's amendment.

Mr. ROBBINS demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. McMULLIN and WHEELER were appointed.

Mr. PECKHAM. Before the vote is taken, by the consent of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, I desire to modify his amendment, so as to make the pay of major ninety dollars per month.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania cannot accept the amendment, for he proposes to strike out those very words.

Mr. PECKHAM. Then I move to amend by inserting, as the pay of major, ninety dollars, instead of ninety-five dollars per month.

The question was taken; and the amendment was rejected.

The question was then taken on Mr. ROBBINS's amendment; and the tellers reported—ayes forty-nine, noes not counted.

So the amendment was rejected.

The question then recurred upon Mr. GROW's amendment.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee, demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. PHILLIPS, and DAVIS of Rhode Island, were appointed.

The question was taken; and the tellers reported—ayes 76, noes 53.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WALSH. I suppose my amendment is now in order.

Mr. WALSH's amendment was reported, as follows:

Strike out all after the word "dollars" in the fourteenth line, and including the word "dollars" in the twenty-sixth line, and insert "a sergeant major, quartermaster sergeant, principal musician, chief bugler, principal farrier, and ordnance sergeant, twenty three dollars; to each first sergeant of a company of dragoons, mounted riflemen, artillery, and infantry, twenty-one dollars; to all other sergeants of those arms, twenty eight dollars; to a corporal of dragoons and mounted riflemen, twenty-five dollars; to a corporal of artillery and infantry, twenty five dollars; to a farrier, blacksmith, saddler, and artificer of dragoons, mounted riflemen, and artillery, fifteen dollars; to a bugler of dragoons and mounted riflemen, twelve dollars; to a musician of artillery and infantry, eleven dollars; to a private of dragoons and mounted riflemen, eleven dollars; and to a private of artillery and infantry, ten dollars."

Mr. WALSH. The abuses which exist in the Army are so numerous and so intolerably flagrant, and have been clung to with such pertinacity—with such a contumacious disregard of public sentiment on the subject, that the indignation of the people, thus aroused, has at length imperatively demanded some action on the subject by Congress, which should at least partially correct the evil. The bill reported by the Committee on Military Affairs; now under discussion, and to which I have offered a salutary and very reasonable amendment, is claimed, by its supporters, to meet this demand. But, while its pretended design it to aid those most deserving, and most in need of aid, a little scrutiny will readily convince every honest and unprejudiced man that its real purpose is to give the eggs to the commissioned officers, and the soup, in which they have been boiled, to the poor non-commissioned officers and privates. [Laughter]

Now, sir, I, for one, shall join in no vulgar warfare against the officers as such. I shall not echo the demagogue cry that they are already receiving entirely too much pay, but I do insist that that of the private, the mechanic, and the other hard working, harder used, and miserably remunerated men attached to the Army, should be increased to, at least, the extent set forth in my amendment. I am well satisfied that while it is much more pleasant to be a colonel, or even captain, at fifty cents a month, than to be a private at twenty dollars, men who are capable of performing the duties of officers are not so overflowing with questionable patriotism and self-sacrifice as to work for nothing for a Government which can squander millions annually upon the most unworthy objects. Sir, if our coast were blockaded, our commerce driven from the seas, our Treasury empty, our credit and resources exhausted, and our soil polluted by the presence of a foreign foe, there is no patriotic man in the country who would not willingly assume, and patiently endure his full share of the general calamity. But in a time of profound peace, and unexampled prosperity like the present, with a surplus of thirty millions in the Treasury, and a grasping and unscrupulous horde of vultures taxing their miserable wits, and vile ingenuity, to devise schemes by which they may deplete it, no man is called upon, or indeed justified, in sacrificing himself or family by serving the Government for a compensation less than that to which he is by his capacity or services entitled.

Sir, after all the laudation which has so repeatedly been here heaped upon the "poor soldier," and the "working man," I had confidently hoped that some gentleman would have saved me the necessity of having to offer this amendment in their behalf. Latterly, I have had no desire to speak on those subjects, because I have a great aversion—I feel an utter abhorrence at the bare thought of being confounded, even in the remotest degree, with those hollow-hearted individuals who clamor so loudly and incessantly about the wrongs and sufferings of the industrious poor, while generally proverbial, where known, as among those most instrumental in producing those wrongs, and most inexorably rapacious in preying upon those sufferings. I need not tell this House, nor the world, that I have rendered at least as much service to, and made as many and as bitter sacrifices for the working classes and the poor, as any man who ever occupied a seat upon this floor; but I have heard so much in favor of the "hard-fisted" working man from those who could not themselves be beat to a hard day's work with a club, [laughter;] I have heard so much about land monopoly from the largest land owners in the United States; I have heard so much driveling and impudent profession upon all those matters, by men whose daily acts violate their professions, that I have not only a delicacy, but an absolute repugnance towards saying anything on such occasions, when I can avoid it with anything like justice to myself, and those whom I have, at all times and in all places, defended when defense was needed, and promised to effect any good.

The great evil of the present day is an entire absence of all real faith and sincerity. We have a plenty of empty professions. The world is literally satiated with loud sounding professions, as hollow as the hearts of those who make them. Mankind now want practice, not preaching. The Christianity of religion, and the Democracy of politics have become mere idle abstractions, at least with those who claim to be the chosen expounders and defenders of each. Their great, humanizing mission is treated as an obsolete idea, and is chiefly used by heartless hypocrites as an effective means of gulling the multitude whom they are plundering, while deluding. If we are to have aristocrats, and there does not seem to be any likelihood of getting rid of them very soon, let them be men of diamond breastpins, Spanish cloaks, gaudy equipages, and a bearing as proud as the promptings of their hearts would have it. Let us have men who openly avow their purpose to the world, and advertise their intention of rendering the rights and interests of all subservient to their own luxurious enjoyment and personal gratification, and while I cannot approve the heartlessness of such conduct, while I despise and detest the craven servility of the masses who submit to it, I cannot but admire the boldness and independence, which, seeking no justification beyond its own caprice and power, indignantly spurns concealment. I can stand almost anything which is open, bold, and manly, but I loathe, detest, and execrate grasping avarice, and intolerant purse proud aristocracy, when, hypocritically assuming the garb of mock humility, it unblushingly styles itself "Democracy, and the poor man's friend."

[Here the hammer fell.]

[Cries of "Go on!" "Go on!" all over the Hall.]

Mr. INGERSOLL obtained the floor in opposition to the amendment, but yielded to Mr. WALSH.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York wish to oppose the amendment?

Mr. WALSH. No, sir; I do not belong to those who blow both hot and cold on the same question. I would inquire of the Chair if further amendment be now in order?

The CHAIRMAN. It is.

Mr. WALSH. Then I move an increase of one dollar more per month to the proposed pay of the soldiers.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman cannot move to amend his own amendment, but he may move to amend that portion of the bill proposed to be stricken out.

Mr. ORR. I move to amend the amendment of the gentleman from New York, by reducing the proposed pay of privates from eighteen dollars to eleven dollars. I have no remark to make.

Mr. WALSH. I hope that amendment will not prevail. It must be well known to all that our Army differs essentially in certain respects from all other armies. It does not move and act, during times like the present, in large bodies. It is sparsely scattered over a vast frontier, where it is often absolutely necessary that a single soldier shall rely exclusively on his own individual intelligence—where he has no one but himself to consult, and consequently he should be a man of much higher intelligence and energy, than can be procured, in any number, for less than twenty dollars a month. Five thousand of the right sort of men, sir, are far better for our purposes than seven, or even ten thousand, of those who can, as a general thing, be entrapped at the present shamefully pitiful prices. It may, and doubtless is, perfectly appropriate, that a heartless, grasping, and inexorable wretch in private life, should take every possible advantage of the necessities of his fellow men, but it is utterly disgraceful in a great, wealthy, and prosperous nation, like ours, to imitate the base example. Its duty is to protect—not prey upon—the misfortunes of the most helpless and destitute portion of its citizens. Poverty has been repeatedly coupled with disgrace, during the debates of this session, and even by men, too, who affect great love for the working classes.

The term loafer, has been repeatedly applied to the most industrious and deserving men—to men whose only offense has been that of being so abjectly poor, as to be compelled to accept whatever pittance selfishness and injustice might deign to offer for their services and labor. Sir, a man's poverty, at the present day, and at all other times for anything I have ever been able to learn to the contrary, is far oftener the result of an unshaken devotion to principle, far oftener the legitimate consequence of a generous and high-toned nature, than of any want of worth or competency in the individual. Rich men are usually much more indebted for their wealth to their heartlessness than any superior ability. How can you expect to get soldiers for seven, or even ten dollars a month? If they received three times what even I propose to give them, they would, with the exception of sailors and marines, be, by far, the worst paid persons in the service of the Government.

We are very ready to claim, and very desirous of appropriating to the national fame, all the glory which the fatigue, the privation, the peril, and the suffering of the poor private won for our arms in Mexico; but what was our treatment of these same penniless heroes before they left? What has it been since their return? Why, sir, the best recruiting officer the Government had in the North during that war—and to the eternal disgrace of those who permitted it, be it said—was the atrocious vagrant act. Yes; under its infamous provisions hundreds of unoffending men were kidnapped, many of them from famishing families, to win rags, wretchedness, and broken constitutions (if not graves) for themselves, while winning immortality for their commanders, and imperishable glory for the nation, by which they have been thus inhumanly outraged. Their treatment in every respect has been the same. The Government, finding it impossible, even with the aid of this kidnapping process, to obtain a half sufficiency of men at seven dollars a month, offered one hundred and sixty acres of land to each soldier who should honorably serve during the war. Now, the Government price of this land is one dollar and a quarter an acre, which would make two hundred dollars. Why not then give them that amount in cash? Because it would not enable those who gave it to go in with land speculators and knavish brokers, and realize fortunes, by plundering the penniless, clothesless, and war-worn soldier on his return.

Many of my own personal associates, among even the world-renowned New York volunteers, were so necessitated, on their return home, as to be compelled, in consequence of the combination which then existed among the rich rascals who speculated in land warrants, to dispose of their warrants for less than twenty-five dollars. Under the present state of things, we have generals for Presidents, colonels for Congressmen, and privates for the poor house and potter's field. I have no objection to the first; but I want something better for the private than a life of suffering, penury, and degradation, a wretched death, and a pauper's grave. This is no mere declaration. Many of these self-same volunteers, even, who fought as gallantly, and suffered as uncomplainingly as ever men fought or suffered, died, in the very midst of the city they had honored, of absolute want, and were interred in potter's field, and this, too, where clamorous patriotism and canting philanthropy revel in the most sumptuous and superabundant luxury. Numbers of others have only been saved from a like fate by the generous aid of companions nearly as poor as themselves. I trust, therefore, the committee will see the absolute necessity, to say nothing of the justice, of increasing the pay of the soldier to something near a proper return for his services, and I also hope that gentlemen who have been advocating the mechanics will evince the sincerity of their professions by voting in favor of my amendment.

Mr. BRIDGES. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

So the committee rose; and Mr. JONES, of Tennessee, having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, the Chairman of the committee reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration, according to the special order of the House, Senate bill (No. 119) "to regulate the pay, and increase the efficiency of the Army of the United States, and for other purposes," and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. ORR. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to offer the following resolutions:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to communicate to this House, if not incompatible with the public interests, the correspondence between the Secretary of State and our Minister to the Netherlands, in the case of Captain Walter M. Gibson.

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to communicate to this House, if not incompatible with the public interests, the correspondence from the Consul General of Egypt on the subject of the expulsion of the Greeks from Egypt.

The question was taken; and the resolutions were severally adopted.

Mr. SOLLERS. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

The House thereupon (at thirty-five minutes past three o'clock, p. m.) adjourned till to-morrow at 11 o'clock, a. m.

IN SENATE.

THURSDAY, July 27, 1854.

Prayer by Rev. HENRY SLICER.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday. At the end of five minutes—

Mr. BRODHEAD said: I presume it will take half an hour to read the remainder of the Journal. Yesterday morning we suspended the reading of the Journal of the previous day. I hope the same course will be pursued now.

The PRESIDENT. It requires unanimous consent. Is there objection?

Mr. CHASE. I object.

The Secretary continued, and concluded the reading of the Journal; and it was approved.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

A message was received from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McKEAN, Chief Clerk, announcing that they had passed a bill making appropriations for the naval service for the year ending the 30th of June, 1855, in which they requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The above-named bill was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

SHARP'S RIFLE.

Mr. TOUCEY submitted the following resolution, which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs be instructed to inquire into the expediency of an appropriation for the purchase of the Sharp rifle, for the use of the Army of the United States.

CAPTAIN LESLIE COOMBS.

Mr. SHIELDS submitted the following resolution, which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Pensions be, and they are hereby, instructed to inquire into the expediency of allowing the late Captain Leslie Coombs, all the arrearages of pension justly due to him.

MRS. BATCHELDER.

Mr. ADAMS. I move to postpone the prior orders with a view of taking up the bill for the relief of Mrs. Batchelder.

Mr. WADE. Will the Senator allow me to make a report from the Committee on Claims?

Mr. ADAMS. I insist on my motion, and ask for a vote upon it.

Mr. HUNTER. I would suggest to the Senator from Mississippi, that if he will allow us to finish the civil and diplomatic appropriation bill to-day, he can, after that, get up his bill much more easily than now. We ought to finish that bill to-day, so that the House may have a chance of seeing our amendments. It will not be long before the day of adjournment comes round, and I hope we shall go immediately to the consideration of that bill.

Mr. BADGER. I hope so too.

Mr. ADAMS. I have great anxiety for the consideration of the bill which I propose to take up, and would not think of continuing its consideration longer than the morning hour, but if the general wish be that we shall go on with the civil and diplomatic appropriation bill, I will give way for that purpose.

CIVIL AND DIPLOMATIC BILL.

Mr. HUNTER. I move then to postpone the prior order, for the purpose of taking up the bill from the House of Representatives "making appropriations for the civil and diplomatic expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1855." I hope Senators will permit it to be taken up so that we may finish it to-day.

Mr. CHASE. I trust that the Senator will allow the committees to report.

Mr. HUNTER. I hope we shall devote to-day to the civil and diplomatic bill, and reports can be made to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate accordingly resumed the consideration of the bill.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I move to reconsider the vote by which the Senate yesterday rejected the amendment of the honorable Senator from Delaware, [Mr. CLAYTON] allowing the same compensation to the clerks in the State Department as to those in the other Departments.

The PRESIDENT. That motion will be received, but it cannot be considered at present, as there is an amendment offered yesterday by the Senator from Florida, [Mr. MALLORY] which is pending, to add the following as an additional section:

Sec. — And be it further enacted, That the President of the United States be authorized and directed to appoint two persons to investigate and collect proof, under the instructions of the Department of the Interior, of the depredations upon private property by the Indians in Florida, subsequent to the 25th of December, 1835—the report and testimony to be submitted to Congress at its next session.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. I am friendly to the amendment of the Senator from Florida, but there is an exactly similar case in Iowa, and I trust, therefore, that my friend from Florida will allow the benefits of his amendment to be extended to my State. We are twin sisters; we were born together, and I hope we shall not be separated in any measure of redress when we have alike suffered. I move, therefore, to add after "Florida" the words "and Iowa." In that frontier State we suffered from like depredations. I trust, therefore, my friend will agree to my amendment.

Mr. MALLORY. Mr. President, the testimony which I have offered, was once obtained by officers of the Army, who were detailed for that purpose, so that I presume this will involve no additional expense whatever. The information was filed at the Department; but, by some means, has gone out of the possession of the War Department, and is beyond their reach. It is highly necessary, in view of the private claims continually coming up, that the Department should have the information desired. I should have no objection to a separate proposition for the State of Iowa; but I can see no similarity between the two cases.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to, and the amendment, as amended, was adopted.

Mr. WELLER. Is there any amendment now before the Senate?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. If the Senator from California will indulge me, I will make a brief statement in reference to the motion to reconsider, which I made.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. BRIGHT in the chair.) There is another amendment which was passed over on Saturday last. It is one reported from the Committee on Finance, to add the following additional sections:

Sec. — And be it further enacted, That the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint a commissioner, at a compensation not exceeding $4,000 per annum, to ascertain the nature, character, extent, and value of all valid claims arising in Washington and Oregon Territories, under the treaty with Great Britain of the 15th of June, 1846; and should said claims, or any part thereof, be deemed of sufficient public and political importance to justify or require the measure, the President is hereby authorized to direct said commissioner to agree with the claimants and the Hudson's Bay Company for the relinquishment of their claims on a just and fair valuation, and to pay over the amount so agreed upon, upon a full and entire surrender and relinquishment of all right, title, claim, interest, and demand therein and thereto to the United States: Provided, That none of the land acquired under this section shall be subject to donation or preemption, but shall be sold at public auction, unless in cases where, in the opinion of the commissioner, the sum bid for any particular parcel or piece shall be less than a fair price therefor, to be ascertained by the commissioner aforesaid, said sales to be made for cash, and at such times and places, and with such postponements as may be directed by the said commissioner; and for carrying into effect the provisions of this section, in case of purchase, a sum not exceeding $300,000 is hereby appropriated: Provided, That the amount to be paid for all said claims, rights, and interests, shall not exceed the sum herein appropriated; and for defraying the expenses of the commission, the further sum of — dollars is hereby appropriated, payable out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Sec. — And be it further enacted, That in case it shall be deemed inexpedient to sell said lands and improvements, immediately, or any part thereof, the President shall be, and he is hereby, authorized, on the extinguishment of the title as aforesaid, to direct the commissioner to take possession of the same, for and in the name of the United States, and to lease the same on such terms and conditions, and for such sum or sums as he may deem proper and right, subject, however, to sale, when, in his opinion, it may be proper, after the United States surveys have been extended over the same.

Mr. HUNTER. I move to fill the blank for the expenses of the commissioner, with $500.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WELLER. I take it for granted that this subject has been properly investigated by the Committee on Finance, who reported the amendment. It seems to me, however, that it is a very singular amendment to move to the civil and diplomatic appropriation bill. It embraces a large subject, and provides for the appointment of a commissioner to pass upon great questions. It seems to me that it ought to have been brought forward as a separate proposition. It is a subject of much importance, and is entitled to that degree of consideration before it is adopted. The Committee on Finance, however, having given it full investigation, and recommended its passage, as a matter of course, I interpose no objection.

Mr. HUNTER. I will state in regard to this, that in the progress of our investigations on this bill, that estimate was sent down by the Secretary of State. He was very anxious that it should go in this bill. He submitted with it a report of Governor Stevens, a very able report, which shows the fact that we are getting into collisions with these companies, who have certain rights under the Ashburton treaty. It is important that these things should be settled and got out of the way. If foreigners have rights in our territory, they may become troublesome.

There is a limit in the amendment as to the sum which shall be paid. The commissioner is not to purchase unless for a sum not exceeding $300,000. We all know that when these companies endeavored to sell their rights some years ago, they asked $1,200,000. This is carefully guarded and drawn up by the State Department, with the assistance,

I believe, of the Land Office. It contains two sections in order to preserve the valuable property which may be acquired by purchase, consisting in part of improved farms and houses. There does remain the objection of putting it in the civil and diplomatic bill; but, sir, it is to be remembered that that is the bill upon which the State Department relies for its appropriations. The fact that it has two or three sections, arises out of the desire to guard the United States in relation to the property which is proposed to be purchased.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. President, I now move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment proposed by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. CLAYTON] yesterday was rejected, as I think the Senate could not have understood the question involved at the time. As it was, sir, the amendment proposed to provide compensation for the employees in the office of the Secretary of State. They were supposed to have been provided for in the bill reported from the Committee on Retrenchment and Reform some time ago, but I understand that, under some regulation or order, they were ruled out, and have not been put on the same footing as all the clerks in the other Departments. When I reached the Senate yesterday the amendment was then under discussion; the vote was about being taken, and I did not really understand the question myself. Since then, I have been assured by the chairman of the Committee on Retrenchment and Reform, [Mr. ADAMS] that in the original bill they were proposed to be put upon precisely the same footing with all the clerks in the various Departments which that bill was intended to provide for; but, under certain rules of construction, they have been excluded, and hence receive a lower compensation for their services than those in any other Department. I trust, therefore, that the Senate will agree to reconsider the vote of yesterday, and that the amendment of my friend from Delaware will prevail.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. BRIGHT.) It is moved to reconsider the vote disagreeing to the amendment to insert in the bill the following:

That the act approved the 22d of April, 1854, entitled "An act to amend the third section of the act making appropriation for the civil and diplomatic expenses of Government for the year ending the 30th June, 1854, and for other purposes," shall be so construed as in regard to increased compensation for the fiscal year ending the 30th of June last, to include within its provisions the clerks of the Department of State, and the clerks in the office of the Coast Survey; and that the chief clerk in that department shall receive the same compensation as the chief clerk in the other departments of the Government for the last fiscal year; and that the money necessary to carry these provisions into effect is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. ADAMS. If I can have the attention of the Senate for a very few minutes, I will explain that amendment. The bill reported by the Committee on Retrenchment and Reform, which passed the Senate some time ago, was intended to extend to the different Executive departments in Washington. Under the bill classifying the clerks in the different Departments, it so happened that those in the State Department were not classified. There was a provision in the bill, however, which, it was believed by the committee, would extend to all clerks whether classified or not, by reference to the character of the labor they were performing. When the bill was before the Senate, the Senator from Delaware [Mr. CLAYTON] inquired of me whether it embraced the clerks in the State Department. All the reasons, if they were good, for embracing the clerks of the other departments, operated equally in favor of these clerks. I so stated to him at the time, and, consequently, it was then understood that they were embraced. The Attorney General determined that they were embraced. The Comptroller entertained a different opinion; and they have been excluded by his decision. I think all the reasons operate in their case which operated in the others, and that was the reason that it was proposed to provide for them.

Mr. HUNTER. I hope the vote will not be reconsidered. If it is, we shall have amendments offered embracing all the other clerks in the District. I hope when we have decided a question we shall adhere to it.

Mr. CLAYTON. How can it be possible that any other amendment will be offered, founded upon this reason? This amendment was offered for the express purpose of carrying out the provisions of an existing law. It does not make a new law; as the Senator from Mississippi has said, the bill which passed fixing the compensation of the clerks was understood to embrace the clerks of the State Department as well as the others. The Attorney General gave the same opinion; the committees in both Houses gave the same opinion. Nobody doubted it; and yet the Comptroller determined that those clerks were excluded. This is nothing more than a proposition to pay them for the last fiscal year the same sum as the others. It is a small matter, but it is a matter of absolute justice.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. RUSK. Is it on agreeing to it as it was rejected?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is.

Mr. RUSK. An amendment was attached to it before it was rejected to include the clerks in the Coast Survey. It was so amended yesterday, and after that amendment had been made the whole was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on the whole amendment as it was rejected yesterday.

Mr. PEARCE. That amendment, I believe, includes the pay of clerks and other employees in the Coast Survey.

Mr. RUSK. The clerks only.

Mr. PEARCE. I think the Senate had better not meddle with that matter. The regulation of the pay of clerks and other employees in the Coast Survey is devolved upon the Secretary of the Treasury. He can fix, and he can alter their compensation as he sees right and proper; and in point of fact I believe their pay is better graduated according to their merits and services, than in any other Department of the Government. I think it would be a great deal better to leave them alone, and let the power remain where it is, and where it has been exercised judiciously. If there be any necessity for an alteration of their salaries, it can be done by the Secretary of the Treasury. I hope, therefore, the Senate will not agree to that part of the amendment.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I trust my friend from Texas will not embarrass the original amendment. The case of the clerks proposed to be provided for in it, has been thoroughly examined by a committee, and the object was to put the employees in the State Department upon an equal footing with the others who now receive a higher compensation than those employed in the State Department. Now, I submit to the Senator from Texas, how it is possible that Senators can vote understandingly upon the proposition which he offers, when it has never been submitted to a committee. I do not know myself what compensation the clerks in the Coast Survey receive.

The clerks in the State Department stand upon a very different ground. The intention of the Committee on Retrenchment and Reform was to include the clerks in the State Department in the bill which provides for the compensation of all the other clerks. I do not understand that the case of the clerks in the Coast Survey has undergone any examination before any of our committees, but, on the contrary, the clerks in the State Department have, and it was supposed that they were provided for in the bill reported by that committee. Then, as the Senator from Maryland [Mr. PEARCE] says, the clerks in the Coast Survey are as well paid as any class of clerks in the Government. I hope, therefore, my friend from Texas will not embarrass the amendment, for it is literally and truly carrying out what the committee intended to do before, but which has been prevented by one of the officers of the Government.

Mr. RUSK. I am not seeking to embarrass the amendment. I am offering a more meritorious one than the original proposition itself.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of which the Senator from Texas speaks, in regard to the clerks in the office of the Coast Survey, was put in the amendment yesterday, and is therefore a part of the original amendment.

Mr. RUSK. Yes, sir.

Mr. PEARCE. Then, as that provision is in the amendment, I move to strike it out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That cannot be done. It can be reached only by moving to reconsider the vote by which it was inserted yesterday.

Mr. PEARCE. I make that motion.

Mr. RUSK. Did the Senator vote in the affirmative?

Mr. PEARCE. I did not vote at all.

Mr. ADAMS. Before the vote is taken I wish to say, that in fixing the compensation of the clerks, the Committee on Retrenchment and Reform adopted the rule, that, when the head of a Department had the right to fix the compensation, we would not interfere with it. When the law fixed it, we investigated the matter, and determined upon what we considered would be a proper compensation; but in no instance did we intentionally—although we did it in one or two cases by mistake—interfere with it where the head of a Department, as in this case, has the right to fix it. We supposed that the head of a Department would be a better judge of the value of the services of the employees than we could be, and Congress having left it to him, that we should not interfere.

Mr. BAYARD. I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment including the clerks in the Coast Survey was adopted.

Mr. RUSK. If I understood the honorable Senator from Mississippi, [Mr. ADAMS,] he stated that the intention of the committee was only to operate upon such as had their salaries fixed by law, and not upon those which were left to the discretion of the head of the Department. If that was the case, it was gross injustice towards these clerks. I take issue with the honorable Senator from Maryland, [Mr. PEARCE] as to their being well paid. There are men—excellent clerks—there, with families, getting $900 a year.

Mr. PEARCE. I will state to the Senator that I said nothing about their being well paid. I stated that their pay was better graduated, according to their merits and services, than in any other department; of that I am sure. I know that the employees in the Coast Survey begin with low salaries, which I think an excellent thing. They give to a young man employed in the field, I think, about $190 a year and rations. They make him learn something before they undertake to give him high pay.

That is a proper principle, and I think it would be well if it was carried out a little further. I hold that all who are in the Coast Survey, and who are called upon to perform services which entitle them to a large remuneration, get an adequate remuneration; and the thing is better arranged under the system which now prevails, than it will be if we undertake by law to change it.

Mr. RUSK. This does not alter the arrangement by law at all. It only gives to these clerks the same extra additional compensation which is given to all the other clerks. The Senator from Maryland admits that they are upon low pay, and are better graduated than any clerks in any of the Departments. Well, sir, they are more meritorious. Here you have the State Department with the pay not well graduated, some of the clerks running up to $2,000 salary, and clerks in the Coast Survey, with families, running from $450 to $600 or $700 only. Now, while you propose to increase the salaries, which are high, of the clerks in the State Department, on account of the high price of living in Washington, are we to do the gross injustice of refusing it to those who have small compensation, and who discharge their duties faithfully, and are properly graduated?

Mr. PEARCE. We do not propose to do anything of the sort. We leave it where it has been all along, with the Secretary of the Treasury, to make the necessary and proper allowance. I say they are now paid according to their merits, and that is all they ought to ask. We have had a sufficiency of paying clerks without reference to their abilities, and I am getting tired of it. If this provision is not stricken out, I shall vote against the whole amendment.

Mr. STUART. I desire to make an inquiry of the Senator from Maryland. The Secretary of the Treasury, as I understand it, has now the power to graduate and pay these clerks as he pleases, and that by a provision of law.

Mr. PEARCE. Yes, sir.

Mr. STUART. Then I do not see any difficulty on the subject. If the Secretary possesses the power to raise the pay of the clerks at any time he pleases, under an existing law, that is enough.

Mr. RUSK. If the salaries of the other clerks are fixed by an existing law, so are these, whenever the Secretary chooses to fix them, and when you choose, by a special act of Congress, to increase the others so much per cent., is it not fair that they should be increased?

Mr. STUART. If all ought to be increased? But cannot the Secretary of the Treasury judge of that better than Congress?

Mr. RUSK. Then we ought to vest the whole discretion in the heads of Departments.

Mr. STUART. That is another question.

Mr. RUSK. I dislike to see one set selected out, and particularly favored above all others.

Mr. HOUSTON. My attention has been at this moment called to the subject, and it really appears very strange that all other Departments should be provided for specially, and that these should be excluded—that it should be left to a particular officer to afford them the extra compensation if he thinks proper, while all the other Departments receive this per centage on their ordinary pay.

Now, if it is right to give a per centage or advance upon the pay of the regular salaried clerks in the different Departments, why should it not be done in this Department? If the object is to do justice to all, leave it to the Secretary of the Treasury to fix within his discretion the extras to be given to all the clerks, and let not an exception be made of one particular Department. If it is fair to make the increase in one Department it is fair to make it in all. If it is fair to make it generally, it is not fair to make an exception of this particular class of officers, so that I cannot see any reason for excluding these and admitting others. Either make it discretionary altogether, or make it discretionary as to none. It is the plainest thing in the world to my mind.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware [Mr. CLAYTON] moves to reconsider the vote by which the Senate agreed to the amendment increasing the compensation of the clerks in the Coast Survey office.

Mr. RUSK. I understand, from the honorable Senator from Mississippi, that there were some clerks in the Navy Department not included in the provisions of the bill which has been passed; but on a suggestion from him, the Secretary of the Navy increased their compensation pro rata with the allowance made by Congress. This, then, is the only bureau which is left unprovided for.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to, there being, on a division—ayes 25, noes 11.

The question recurred on the original amendment of Mr. RUSK to the amendment of Mr. CLAYTON, to add, after the words "Department of State," the words "and the clerks in the office of the Coast Survey."

Mr. RUSK. I can see no reason for any discrimination. I ask for the yeas and nays upon my amendment to the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CLAYTON. I wish now, as the question is before the Senate for consideration, to suggest that the amendment of the Senator from Texas was originally out of order. My amendment to provide for the clerks in the State Department was in order, because it was to carry out the provisions of an existing law. That was clear; but how is this in order? It is not estimated for; it does not propose to carry out the provisions of an existing law; but is an entirely new matter. I think my honorable friend from Texas will see, upon the very suggestion of it, that his amendment was out of order originally.

Mr. RUSK. I see in the suggestion that they stand upon precisely the same footing as the others. The honorable Senator is mistaken in supposing that his original amendment was to carry out an existing law. It goes upon the very ground, and he so stated, that the clerks in this State Department were not included in the law.

Mr. CLAYTON. The gentleman is mistaken. They were included in the law, and the Senator from Mississippi has so explained it. The committees of both Houses so stated to the Department, and the Attorney General so decided, and yet the Treasurer has not paid it. It is, therefore, clearly a case to carry out the law as it was passed, and as we all understood it.

Mr. RUSK. The Secretary of the Treasury is the person properly charged with interpreting what the law is.

Mr. CLAYTON. The Attorney General.

Mr. RUSK. No, sir; the Secretary of the Treasury, because he has the law to execute. He is, therefore, the proper judge. He has decided that they are not included, and this is to make a law to include them. Whatever may be the understanding of gentlemen as to what the law ought to be, the case is as I have stated.

The question being taken by yeas and nays upon the amendment to the amendment, resulted—yeas 21, nays 19; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Allen, Badger, Brodhead, Cass, Chase, Dodge of Wisconsin, Dodge of Iowa, Gillette, Gwin, Houston, Jones of Tennessee, Rusk, Sebastian; Shields, Stuart, Sumner, Thomson of New Jersey, Wade, Walker, and Weller—21.

NAYS—Messrs. Bayard, Bell, Benjamin, Bright, Clay, Clayton, Cooper, Dawson, Evans, Fish, Fitzpatrick, Foot, Geyer, Hunter, Mason, Pearce, Rockwell, Slidell, and Toombs—19.

So the amendment to the amendment was agreed to, and the question recurred on the amendment, as amended.

Mr. WELLER. If I understand the case, this legislation is now necessary, in order to satisfy the scruples of the First Comptroller of the Treasury. Since I have been a member of the Senate, I believe, at every session, we have been compelled to pass a law to give an interpretation, such as was originally intended by Congress, before accounts could pass the First Comptroller of the Treasury. All the other officers of the Government have given a just and liberal construction to the law, and such a one as would have enabled these clerks to receive their pay; but, in consequence of the peculiar view taken by the First Comptroller of the Treasury, this amendment has now become necessary. Sir, it does seem to me that the intention of Congress ought to have governed in the interpretation of the law. The First Comptroller could not have doubted that. Neither Congress, nor any honest man could have doubted as to the honest construction; but the First Comptroller seems to have entertained his doubts, and, therefore, as I think, the necessity of this legislation.

The amendment of Mr. CLAYTON, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. ATCHISON. I move to reconsider the vote by which the Senate yesterday rejected the amendment proposed by the Senator from Virginia, [Mr. MASON,] in relation to the compensation of our Ministers to France and England.

Mr. WELLER. I trust the vote will be taken on that motion without any discussion, for we are spending the whole of this day in undoing what was done yesterday. I hope the vote will be taken at once.

Mr. MASON. The honorable Senator who made this motion apprised me of his intention. If the vote be reconsidered, I shall propose to take from the amendment that provision which allows the outfit, so as to present it in the original form, to increase the salary without providing the outfit, and I hope it may pass in that form. The Senate will indulge me in saying only this: That it is impossible for those ministers to live with their present salaries. They were fixed at an early period of the Government—I think in 1809, or perhaps before that. The salaries of all the other officers have been increased since then, but they are left exactly where they were at that time. I am informed that the Minister at France now pays for his house $2,000 a year, and he has been obliged to take an inferior house. I learned this morning, in casual conversation, that in the year 1813, Mr. Crawford, then our Minister in France, obtained one of the best hotels in Paris at a rent of $300. There is the difference. I hope the vote will be reconsidered.

Mr. SLIDELL. Did I understand the Senator from Virginia to say that he intends, if the vote be reconsidered, to place in the amendment a provision withholding an outfit in future?

Mr. MASON. The amendment, as rejected, proposed to give them, in addition to the increased salary, an outfit of $9,000. I propose to strike out the outfit.

Mr. SLIDELL. Or, rather, to put in a provision that there shall be no outfit.

Mr. MASON. Yes, sir.

Mr. WELLER. I desire to make a single remark in relation to this amendment. The Senator from Virginia yesterday introduced an amendment to cut off the outfit for these two missions. If I understood him correctly, no such amendment as that was ever agreed to by the Committee on Foreign Relations. No authority, therefore, was given by the committee to report the amendment in any other form than as a simple increase of the salary to $15,000, leaving the outfit to stand where it did, at $9,000.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to, there being, on a division—ayes 18, noes 15.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is now on the following amendment offered yesterday by the Senator from Virginia, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to insert, after the provision for payment of the salaries of foreign ministers, the following:

Provided, That the salaries of the Ministers to Great Britain and to France shall be hereafter at the rate of $15,000 per annum to each, the outfit to each not to exceed the sum of $9,000.

Mr. MASON. I propose to amend the amendment by striking out the words, "the outfit to each not to exceed the sum of $9,000," and inserting "the outfit to each to be hereafter discontinued."

Mr. WELLER. I desire to inquire of the Chair whether those words now proposed as an amendment were not yesterday stricken out from the original proposition introduced by the Senator from Virginia? If those words have been stricken out by a vote of the Senate, is it now in order for the Senate to propose to replace them?

Mr. MASON. I think the facts were these: I offered the amendment originally discontinuing the outfits, but afterwards modified it by allowing outfits at the rate of $9,000. It was altered on my modification. There was no vote of the Senate upon that modification.

Mr. WELLER. I recollect that there was a formal motion made by some Senator on the other side of the Chamber to strike out those words; but it is wholly unnecessary to raise the question of order. Let the Senate pass upon the propriety of the amendment.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from California raise a question of order?

Mr. WELLER. The Senator from Virginia and myself might not be able to agree precisely upon the facts, and therefore I do not press the point.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I do not exactly understand the effect of this amendment, and I wish to make an inquiry in reference to it. Suppose the two gentlemen now at London and Paris should return at the end of the year, would they not have received their outfit, and, under this amendment, at the rate of $15,000 a year, from this time; whereas, those hereafter appointed will only receive $15,000 a year and no outfit. Would not the effect of this be to give the present incumbents more than $15,000 a year? If so, is that right? Why not, at the same time, increase the compensation of the Ministers to Spain and Russia? The expenses at both those courts are nearly as much as at London and Paris.

Mr. MASON. Mr. President, it would be impossible to increase the salaries of the ministers to any of those courts, without making a difference between the predecessors of the incumbents and those coming after them. I will say to the honorable Senator, that at the last session the Senate, by a vote, agreed to increase the salaries of the Ministers, not only to England and France, but the Ministers to Russia and Spain, to the amount of $15,000 a year, and the House disagreed to the whole. London and Paris are the two most important courts. They are the most expensive ones; and I have, by the instructions of the committee, confined the amendment to those two courts, in the hope that it would be more acceptable to Congress.

Mr. BADGER. I hope the Senate will not agree to strike out the provision which now forms part of the amendment. As the amendment stands, it gives $15,000 a year salary to the representatives of the United States at these two courts, with a provision that the outfit shall not exceed $9,000. The Senator now proposes to strike out the provision that the outfit shall not exceed $9,000, and to provide that no outfit shall be allowed hereafter. It is admitted that these two courts are the most expensive courts to which our ministers are sent. They are, therefore, the very courts at which an outfit is particularly required. If this amendment be made, what will be the consequence? A gentleman is sent to London, where the expenses are very much greater than they are at Madrid. For the first year he will receive $15,000. A gentleman is sent to Madrid, where the expenses are much less, and for the first year he will receive $18,000. My own opinion is, that it will operate unjustly and unequally in that respect. Besides, I consider the $9,000 outfit, with the $15,000 salary, is a very poor compensation to defray the expenses of a gentleman, if he is to live there in the society in which he mixes at the courts of London and Paris.

Mr. MASON. Now, sir, is not the simple answer to the argument of the Senator, that yesterday the Senate rejected the amendment in the very form in which the Senator from North Carolina now asks that it shall be put? It is because they rejected it that I modified it in this form. I would prefer it in the shape he proposes, but I believe it cannot be adopted in that way.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I think the amendment proposed by the Senator from Virginia ought to receive our sanction. The proposition, as I understand it, is, that hereafter the salaries of our Ministers at France and England shall be $15,000 instead of $9,000 a year, and that no outfit shall hereafter be allowed to them. I think that is the great principle which ought to be carried into all our missions. The allowance of outfits originated in a period of our Government when our ministers abroad found it necessary to furnish their own houses; and the outfit of $9,000 was intended to enable them to buy furniture, and to fit up their houses. Now, however, the practice there is to rent the houses furnished, so that an outfit is not wanted for that purpose; but you do want a salary sufficient to enable the minister to occupy that house during the four years, or the length of time he may remain there.

Sir, unfortunately, it has been too much the practice under our Government, when a gentleman gets his appointment, to leave his outfit at home, and then go abroad and live upon the $9,000 salary in such a way as he is compelled to live there on that amount. I think the minister should only be permitted to draw his salary by the quarter; and he should have as much the second year as he got the first, and so of the third and fourth years. It is too great an inducement to a minister, if he can go abroad with $9,000 outfit and $9,000 salary, and stay one year and receive $18,000. It is a great inducement on him to resign at the end of the first year, and for another to go, stay a year, draw $18,000, and resign, and so, in that way, to be continually changing our ministers, and paying an outfit to each new minister. Your system of outfits is an inducement to ministers to resign when they have secured their outfit and the first year's salary.

I hope to see the system of outfits abolished everywhere, and let the salary be so much a year, and as much for the second year as for the first, and so on. Then let us rent at each court, for fifteen or twenty years, a house, to remain as the permanent residence of our minister all the time. You can get a house there on a lease of fifteen or twenty years for half the rent that you can a house for one, two, or three years. I would therefore prefer to appropriate about $2,500 or $3,000 a year for permanent rents of buildings. I would require the minister to reside in the building furnished to him, so that he could not go and put himself into a hotel, and thereby save his salary, if you give him a good one. I wish that every American who goes into those cities may know where the American legation is, and that it shall be a respectable building, and one of which, as an American citizen, he will not feel ashamed. Then take away the outfit, and let the minister have just the same salary the second year and the third year that he had the first year, and there will be no inducement to resign at the end of one year. I think this would be the better system. I think the outfit ought to be abolished altogether. We ought to authorize our respective ministers to rent a house for their legations, and give them so much for keeping it up, and let that be uniform during the whole period. By this plan, all inducement to resign after the expenditure of the outfit would be taken away.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. President, I concur most cordially in most of the remarks made by the honorable Senator from Illinois. I have seen something of the working of our system abroad, and I am satisfied that the explanation he has given of the manner in which the outfit is usually expended by the representative before he leaves home, is true. He then goes abroad, and depends upon an inadequate salary, and puts himself in some out of the way place, where one of his respectable countrymen is almost ashamed to visit him. Thus degrading his station in order to eke out his salary, and to make the two ends meet at the close of the year. That I have seen to be the case in more places than one in Europe. I think the salary ought to be a sufficient one, and that this temptation to quit, after a few months' service, should be removed by doing away with the outfit. I have no doubt it would have a salutary influence.

Pay your representatives abroad, if you send representatives at all, a salary adequate to the office which they hold, and which will place them on a par with the representatives of other countries. Every American who has been abroad has seen that unless our ministers possess large private fortunes, they are altogether excluded from the circles in which the ministers of other Governments move. Now, we can talk about republicanism at home, and may say we ought to be above the little court dress, and all things of that sort, abroad; but, sir, it requires other stuff than you have been in the habit of sending abroad, to set themselves in opposition to the condition of things in the cities to which they are sent to reside. You do not send men there of mettle enough to withstand the force of public opinion; and on the salaries you give them, they are unable, without shifts which are discreditable to the representatives of the Government, to live in a style that befits their condition, and the greatness and material splendor of their country at home. Sir, I am decidedly in favor of the proposition of my friend from Illinois, and I think it will be an improvement upon the payment of our diplomatic corps abroad.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I desire to say a word to put myself right, because I do not wish to be misunderstood on this question, for considerations which will suggest themselves to the minds of Senators. I am in favor of the proposed increase of salary. I voted for it last spring, including Spain and Russia. I think we ought to make an increase to our Ministers in Spain and Russia, in a proper proportion, at any rate. If we provide for an increase to our Ministers at London and Paris, we ought to provide for the others at the same time. If $15,000 be necessary for London and Paris, I suppose that $12,000 would be a very proper compensation at Madrid and St. Petersburg. I understand that the difference in expense is very little.

Mr. COOPER. They do not receive so many people. That is the only difference.

Mr. BRODHEAD. Be that as it may, we ought to have some system about this, and not take care of the principal gentlemen, and let our other ministers abroad go upon poor pay. When I was up before, I said that I was willing to pay the present gentlemen at these courts $15,000 a year from the date of their appointments up to this time, and as long as they choose to stay there; but they may choose to return before the year is out, and thus for part of the year they would receive at the rate of $15,000 per annum, and an outfit besides, making about $20,000, or nearly so. I do not know that this will happen; but I should like to know from the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, why we cannot put in an increase for the Ministers at Russia and Madrid.

Mr. MASON. I have said half a dozen times to the Senate, that last winter, by instruction of the Committee on Foreign Relations, I proposed an amendment to increase the salaries of all four of these missions to this amount, but the House would not agree to it; and, therefore, I believe it is impracticable to do it. I now take the half loaf, because it is better than no bread; and simply for that reason. Perhaps when we have done the one, they will allow us to do the other.

Mr. BRODHEAD. There is a very ready answer to that. This is a new Congress, and the proposition to increase the salaries of our ministers abroad has not been submitted to the present Congress. It was presented at the close of the last session of Congress. If this Congress, which is a new one, will agree to increase the salaries of these ministers, may we not suppose that they would also agree to increase the salaries of the others? There is no reason why they should not;

and we are not to presume that the House of Representatives is unreasonable. I therefore move to amend the proposition by inserting $12,000 salary for the Minister at Spain, and $12,000 for the Minister at Russia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That will not be in order at present, as there is now an amendment to an amendment pending. As the amendment to the amendment has been modified by the mover since it was offered, it will be read again.

It was accordingly read. It was to strike out the words "the outfit to each not to exceed the sum of $9,000," and to insert "and that hereafter the outfits of Ministers to England and France shall not be allowed."

Mr. BAYARD. I have no objection to the discontinuance of outfits either to our Ministers to France or England, or any other country. I am rather inclined to the opinion that the system of sufficient salaries would be much better than to provide outfits. I consider, however, that the proposition now made in reference to the Ministers to France and England is a barlesque as regards any increase of compensation. For the first year it is actually a reduction of salary, and for two years (which is the extent of time under the same you pay, that our ministers can afford, unless they are men of fortune, to remain either at Paris or London) the increase would be but $3,000. For two years, under the present law, they receive $27,000, and under the proposition of the Senator from Virginia they would receive $30,000.

Sir, I think there is a necessity for an increase of the salary of these ministers. I am perfectly satisfied myself, from all I have heard, that you cannot expect an American citizen to reside abroad as your minister, especially if you expect him to keep house as is contemplated by the honorable Senator from Illinois, in either London or Paris, at the lowest sum, for less than $18,000 a year. I have no objection to the amendment to the amendment; but if that be adopted, I shall move to amend the original amendment by increasing the salary from $15,000 to $18,000. I believe also that our Minister at St. Petersburg ought to be included, because, that is beyond all question, one of the most, if not the most, expensive Court of Europe; and in these matters you cannot regulate the habits of foreign countries, but you must adapt yourself to them. I am satisfied that a salary of $15,000 will be inadequate as a compensation, if you strike out the outfit. There is no attainable object to be accomplished by it, and yet it is a nominal increase. I shall, therefore, at the proper time, move to amend the original amendment so as to include the St. Petersburg, and to make the salary $18,000 a year. If that be voted down I shall oppose the whole amendment, and leave the present compensation stand as it is until we can change it by substituting a proper system.

Mr. HUNTER. I do not rise to debate this amendment, but merely to suggest to the Senate the importance of getting through with this bill to-day, and to express the hope that we may now have a vote.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I think the manifestation of the conflicting views expressed by different Senators, shows the impropriety of placing this amendment on the civil and diplomatic bill. If any changes are necessary in relation to the compensation of our representatives abroad, the principle which makes it necessary in the cases under consideration, makes similar changes necessary in regard to our ministers at other Governments than those embraced in this amendment. I desire only to call the attention of Senators to the impropriety of attempting to change, on this bill, the existing laws in reference to the compensation of our representatives at these two courts. I have no disposition to consume the time of the Senate, or to enter into this discussion; but surely if it is necessary to change the character of compensation of these representatives, it is necessary to change the character of the compensation of others, and it is evident that we cannot increase the compensation of these without giving dissatisfaction.

I think, sir, such a proposition should be brought forward in a separate and independent measure embracing the whole subject, and not be proposed as an amendment to the civil and diplomatic bill. We have already made a great number of amendments to the bill, and I desire to call the attention of the Senate to the fact, that there is known to be a very great difference of opinion between the two Houses, in reference to many of the questions which we have embraced in our amendments. We hazard the bill by doing so; and I now give it as my judgment, that this bill will not become a law at the present session, owing to the extraordinary amendments which have been made to it by the Senate in reference to all manner of subjects.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Virginia, to the amendment offered by him from the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. SLIDELL called for the yeas and nays; and they were ordered.

Mr. BRODHEAD. Do I understand the Senator from Virginia as willing to accept my modification?

Mr. MASON. No, sir.

The question being taken by yeas and nays on the amendment to the amendment, resulted—yeas 25, nays 17; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Atchison, Bayard, Bright, Brown, Chase, Cooper, Dawson, Dodge of Wisconsin, Dodge of Iowa, Douglas, Foot, Gillette, Hunter, Johnson, Jones of Tennessee, Mason, Rockwell, Slidell, Stuart, Sumner, Thompson of Kentucky, Thompson of New Jersey, Toucey, Walker, and Williams—25.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Allen, Badger, Bell, Brodhead, Evans, Fessenden, Fish, Fitzpatrick, Geyer, James, Mallory, Rusk, Shields, Toombs, Wade, and Weller—17.

So the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BAYARD. I now move to amend the original amendment by striking out "fifteen," and inserting "eighteen," so as to make the compensation $18,000; and on that amendment I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 11, nays 29; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allen, Badger, Bayard, Brodhead, Brown, Cooper, Dawson, Geyer, James, Mallory, and Thompson of New Jersey—11.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Atchison, Bright, Chase, Dodge of Wisconsin, Dodge of Iowa, Douglas, Evans, Fessenden, Fitzpatrick, Foot, Gillette, Gwin, Hunter, Johnson, Jones of Tennessee, Mason, Rockwell, Rusk, Shields, Slidell, Stuart, Sumner, Thompson of Kentucky, Toombs, Toucey, Wade, Walker, and Weller—29.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. The question is now, I understand, on the amendment of the Committee on Foreign Relations, as amended, to increase these salaries.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. On that question I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment, as amended, is to insert after the appropriation for the salaries of our ministers abroad, the following:

Provided, That the salaries of the Ministers to Great Britain and France shall be hereafter at the rate of $15,000 per annum to each; and that hereafter outfits of Ministers to Great Britain and France shall not be allowed.

Mr. BAYARD. I shall vote against this amendment, because I think it is a mere mockery as to any increase of compensation. The amount which it proposes to allow I think entirely inadequate. I know the present salaries are too low; but I believe they had better stand where they are than to make such a mockery of an increase. If it be true that the House of Representatives of the United States are unwilling to pay your foreign ministers an adequate compensation, let it stand as it is until the effect on your service shall be such that they will be forced to do it. I think that this is a mockery on anything like an increase of compensation, and therefore I shall vote against the amendment.

Mr. BRODHEAD. Those are my sentiments exactly.

Mr. CASS. As I know the increase to be proper and necessary, I shall vote for it.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 25, nays 21; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Atchison, Bright, Brown, Cass, Clay, Cooper, Dawson, Douglas, Evans, Fessenden, Foot, Hunter, Johnson, Jones of Tennessee, Mallory, Mason, Rockwell, Shields, Slidell, Stuart, Thompson of Kentucky, Thompson of New Jersey, Toucey, Walker, and Weller—25.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Allen, Badger, Bayard, Benjamin, Brodhead, Chase, Dodge of Wisconsin, Dodge of Iowa, Fish, Fitzpatrick, Geyer, Gillette, Hamilton, James, Pearce, Rusk, Sumner, Toombs, and Wade—21.

So the amendment was adopted.

Mr. WELLER. I move to amend the bill by inserting, after the appropriation for the marine hospital at San Francisco, the following:

And the Secretary of the Treasury shall be authorized to appoint some suitable person to act as inspector of drugs and medicines for the port of San Francisco, in the State of California, at an annual compensation of $3,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BAYARD. I have a number of amendments to move to the bill, by direction of the Committee on Public Buildings. The first is to come in at the end of the provision for compensation of the messenger in charge of the main furnace in the Capitol:

For painting and repairs inside of the Capitol, a new furnace under the Senate Chamber and Supreme Court room, &c., $5,000.

This is in accordance with the estimate of the Secretary of the Interior, and I do not know why it was not put in the deficiency bill. The work was done, I understand, from necessity, and certainly must have been omitted by mistake, or it would have been passed before.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BAYARD. The next amendment which I have to offer is to follow the one which has just been adopted. It relates to the gas fixtures of the Capitol, which absolutely require to be renewed. They were originally, as the Commissioner of Public Buildings states, of lead. They have become very leaky, and the officers have been obliged to turn the gas off. This appropriation is absolutely required. The amendment is to insert:

For repair and renewal of the gas pipes through the Capitol, and fixtures necessary for the lighting of such committee rooms therein as require it, and lighting East Capitol street from the Capitol to Third street $7,000.

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. BAYARD. The next amendment is for a very small sum, to insert, after the appropriation for lighting the President's House and the Capitol, and public grounds, the following:

For furnishing lamps and lamp-posts from Sixteenth to Seventeenth streets, on Pennsylvania avenue, in front of Lafayette square, $500.

At present, sir, Pennsylvania avenue, opposite the President's House, is lighted upon one side, but there are no lamp-posts on the other side, in front of Lafayette square. I presume it is owing to some accident.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BAYARD. The next amendment is to follow the one just adopted, to insert:

For completing the improvement of Pennsylvania avenue west of Seventeenth street, $9,000.

That is among the estimates of the Department for work which is now in progress of construction. It was estimated in the report of the Secretary of the Interior at $4,500; but the Commissioner of Public Buildings informed me that the sum was entirely insufficient. I subsequently called on the Secretary of the Interior and ascertained that it was so, and that this amount is the proper one, and that it will thoroughly complete and finish the work.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BAYARD. I have one more amendment to offer from the Committee on Public Buildings. It is to insert after the appropriation for the Capitol extension, the following:

For the enlargement of the General Post Office building, $300,000: Provided, The same shall be done according to the following described plan: The building, when completed, to cover the entire block bounded by E, F, Seventh, and Eighth streets, and to have a court yard in the center, approached by an archway in the middle of the western front, sufficiently spacious for the ingress and egress of mail wagons; the present walls running parallel to Seventh and Eighth streets to be continued to F street, with rooms on each side, arranged to suit the purposes of the Department; accommodation to be made for the city post office in the center of the block on F street; and an arcade of about sixty feet in length to be made for a letter delivery, the delivery arcade to be surrounded by a recessed portico of four columns, flanked by coupled pilasters; the fronts on Seventh and Eighth streets each to have the present design of the south end repeated on the north end, and a portico of six columns, coupled at the corners, introduced in the center of the block; the style of architecture of the present building to be carried out in the additions; and the whole to be made thoroughly fire-proof, and to be constructed under and subject to the direction of the President of the United States.

Mr. President, this amendment is introduced in consequence of an application of the Postmaster General, made to the Committee on Public Buildings, in the beginning of June, representing the entire inadequacy of the present General Post Office Department building for the performance of the functions of that department of the Government. The plan proposed has, I think, been well arranged. It was scrutinized and examined by the committee, who were perfectly satisfied that it would answer all the purposes, and that the enlargement was necessary. The whole cost of the enlargement will amount to $650,000. The appropriation proposed in the present amendment is $300,000. I have here, and ask the Secretary to read, the communication of the Postmaster General, and the description and estimate of the work by the architect of the public buildings. I am satisfied, myself, that the work is essentially necessary for the performance of the duties of the General Post Office. It will also combine accommodation for the city post office in the same building, and will provide ample room for both at, I do not think, an exaggerated cost; at all events, it is entirely necessary.

The Secretary read the letters, as follows:

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT, June 3, 1854.

SIR: Finding the present Post Office building entirely too small for the business of the Department, I requested the architect of public buildings to prepare plans and estimates for extending it. These plans I herewith submit to you, together with a report and estimate from Mr. Walter, and respectfully request you to bring the subject before the committee, with a view to such action of Congress in reference to it as may be deemed most expedient.

I am of opinion that these plans, if properly carried out, will afford ample and convenient accommodations, not only for the Post Office Department, but also for the city post office, which is now kept in a very frail and unsafe building, adjoining the General Post Office.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JAMES CAMPBELL, Postmaster General.

HON. JAMES A. BAYARD,

Chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings.

ARCHITECT'S OFFICE, UNITED STATES CAPITOL, }
WASHINGTON, D. C., December 21, 1853. }

SIR: I have the honor to lay before you, in compliance with your request, the accompanying design for an extension of the General Post Office, with accommodations for the city post office.

I propose to extend the building around the entire square, leaving a court-yard in the center of ninety-five by one hundred and fifty-four feet, for light and air. The style of architecture of the present structure to be kept up throughout the additions, as represented on the drawings of the several fronts, to which I respectfully refer you, for a general idea of the appearance the building will present, if completed according to this plan.

The front on E street, and the portions now constructed on Seventh and Eighth streets will remain unchanged. The front on Seventh street will have a portico in the center consisting of six columns, in relief, coupled at the corners, which will not only be in harmony with the present building, but afford an imposing center to the composition, and form a pleasing variety with the pilasters and engaged columns on each side. In the center of this front it is contemplated to make a door of entrance for the General Post Office Department, in addition to the present entrance on E street, as Seventh street is the business thoroughfare, and as the eastern wing of the Patent Office building, on the adjoining block, opens upon the same street.

The front on Eighth street is similar to that on Seventh street, excepting that in place of the entrance door there is a gateway leading into the court-yard for the admission of mail wagons.

The front on F street is arranged for the accommodation of the city post office. It has a deeply recessed portico in the center, consisting of four columns, flanked by coupled pilasters, supporting an entablature similar to that on the E street front, and which will give the entire work. The portico is supported by an arcade, in which the letter-delivery is placed. In the arrangement of this part of the building, I have studied to make it as convenient as possible, both for the public and for the clerks in the office, the accommodations are quite as ample as those of the present city post office, and quite as convenient, and the entire building is fire proof.

By thus placing the city post office in the center of the north front, the General Post Office Department is not interfered with, and the connections between the additions on Seventh and Eighth streets, and the present building remain unbroken, the entries or corridors of which will extend in continuous lines from E to F streets, lighted by windows at each end. In the basement story alone, one of these corridors is stopped by the gate or entrance on Eighth street for the passage of mail wagons, but the rooms occurring between this passage and F street will, no doubt, be eventually wanted for the clerks of the city post office. I have, therefore, connected them with that Department, so that there is no connection whatever between the General Post Office and the city post office, each being separate and distinct from the other.

In the present building there are sixty-five rooms, containing, in the aggregate, about twenty six thousand five hundred superficial feet, exclusive of halls and stairways; and in the additions there are ninety-nine rooms, containing about thirty-nine thousand five hundred feet, or one and a half times as much room as in the present building.

The space devoted to the city post office embraces twenty rooms, containing, in the aggregate, about twelve thousand five hundred superficial feet, leaving seventy-nine rooms, measuring twenty-seven thousand feet for the General Post Office Department, which is more than equal to its present accommodations.

Should this plan be carried out, the General Post Office Department will have one hundred and forty-four rooms, containing fifty-three thousand five hundred superficial feet, exclusive of halls and stairways; and the city post office will have twenty rooms, containing twelve thousand five hundred feet.

The entire cost of the work will be about $650,000, provided the finish throughout is not more expensive than that of the present building.

The fronts on Eighth and F streets may be built first, so as not to interfere with the present city post office; and after these portions are completed and occupied, the front on Seventh street may be constructed without inconvenience to the Department.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
THOMAS U. WALTER.

HON. JAMES CAMPBELL, Postmaster General.

Mr. BRODHEAD. Had we not better wait to build this post office for Washington city until we get one provided for the cities of Philadelphia and New York? I believe there are about half a million of people in Philadelphia, and a suitable place for a post office is quite as difficult to be obtained there as it is here. The same remark will apply to New York.

Mr. BAYARD. I only know that this work is represented by the proper officer to be absolutely necessary, and I presume no person can go into the building and not perceive that the enlargement is needed. It may be necessary that there should be post office buildings in Philadelphia and New York; but when those questions come up properly, I shall be perfectly willing to give such votes as I think proper in reference to them on the information before me. But I can see no necessity for entangling this proposition to erect a building which the necessities of the country, connected with the whole postal system of the United States require, by a mere appendage which may, in part, be merely to ornament other cities, and may, in part, be requisite. When it comes up on its own merits, I shall be willing to consider it.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I do not wish to embarrass the bill. When I brought forward a similar proposition yesterday morning in reference to buildings in other cities, I was charged with a desire to embarrass the bill; or at any rate it was said that the effect of my amendment would be to embarrass it. Now, here comes a similar proposition. I am in favor of it, but I say there is a great deal more necessity for post office buildings in Philadelphia, New York and Boston, and certainly in Philadelphia than there is in the city of Washington. I am in favor of this, however.

Mr. STUART. Then let us take the vote on it.

Mr. BRODHEAD. Very well.

Mr. TOOMBS. I rise to a question of order. This amendment I believe is to carry out no existing law.

Mr. BRODHEAD. It is in accordance with the recommendation of the Department.

Mr. TOOMBS. I rise, sir, to enter my protest against the larger portion of Senators here being deprived of their rights under the system now sought to be introduced. You have your committees who may bring in these propositions when individual Senators cannot, and you have but to go one step further to fix it as the French Minister did, by sections, and cut down the rights of a minority altogether. Here, on a money bill, the main object of which is to do nothing but appropriate what is necessary to carry out existing laws, you propose many expenditures for extravagant purposes, because the Executive Departments recommend them. Sir, that is the very reason why they should not pass. If I know anything as to the business of the Senate and House of Representatives, it is to examine and keep in check the practices of your executive officers. But it seems that all the Senate want, as a reason for passing a thing, is, that the executive officers of the Government demand it! Two or three people get here, and propose to one of your committees a project for the expenditure of $1,000,000, and it is to be put through on a money bill. I protest against such a course. The Senator from Delaware says this will involve an expenditure of $650,000. We know when it starts with that amount where it will end. I do not suppose anybody who has had any experience in public life here, is so soft enough to believe that the $650,000 proposed will finish these buildings. If you are to tack propositions for the building of post offices and everything else to the civil and diplomatic appropriation bill, I must enter my protest against it; first, because it ought not to be here; and secondly, because it is wrong in itself. I shall continue to make this protest until, if not the Senate, the country at least will hear it, and stop these infamous abuses.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator object to the amendment as being out of order?

Mr. TOOMBS. Yes, sir.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. It is clearly within the rule as being estimated for by the Department, and recommended by one of the standing committees of this body.

Mr. BAYARD. I have no further remarks to make. The committee investigated the matter thoroughly, and they believe the building is absolutely necessary for the purposes of the Government. The honorable Senator from Georgia may have better information on the subject without having examined into it; but such being the belief of the committee, not merely on the statements of two or three men, but on their own personal investigation, they have reported this amendment to the Senate.

Mr. TOOMBS. That is one of the very difficulties of which I complain. We are not allowed to know anything about these matters; but here on a money bill, what an Executive officer sends, and a committee recommends, we are to vote for without any opportunity for discussion! My objection is, that we are not ready to vote without investigation; and yet we are expected to vote away millions of the public money on a confidence which I am not authorized to give in my position as a Senator.

Mr. JAMES. The Committee on Public Buildings have had under consideration the proposition for the extension of the General Post Office building, and they are perfectly satisfied that the necessity of the case actually demands it; and it is for these reasons that the chairman reported this amendment to the Senate.

Mr. BAYARD. I am as much indisposed as any one to embarrass an appropriation bill; and though the committee would have sanctioned it, I forebore to press, as an amendment to this bill, the appropriation for the completion of the Treasury building and the enlargement of the War and Navy Department buildings, and introduced it in a separate bill. It has passed the Senate in a separate bill; but it became necessary to offer this as an amendment to this bill, because the recommendation came in at too late a day to allow a separate bill to be passed.

The question being taken on the amendment by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 16, nays 25; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allen, Bayard, Benjamin, Brodhead, Dodge of Wisconsin, Dodge of Iowa, Douglas, Hamlin, James, Rusk, Slidell, Stuart, Thomson of New Jersey, Toucey, Walker, and Weller—15.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Bright, Brown, Chase, Clay, Cooper, Dawson, Evans, Fessenden, Fitzpatrick, Foot, Geyer, Gillette, Gwin, Hunter, Johnson, Jones of Tennessee, Mallory, Rockwell, Sebastian, Shields, Sumner, Thompson of Kentucky, Toombs, and Wade—25.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BAYARD. I am instructed by the Committee on the Library to move to amend the bill by inserting among the appropriations for the Library of Congress, the following:

For the purchase of one thousand copies of the proposed edition of Eli Tappan, of the acts of Congress of a general nature now in force, upon the plan contained in his prospectus, $6,000: Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended until a copy of the proposed work has been submitted to the Attorney General of the United States, and been approved by him: And provided further, That the price shall not exceed six dollars per volume, and no payment shall be made for any copy until delivered at the Department of State.

Mr. HUNTER. Is that from a committee?

Mr. BAYARD. It is reported by order of the Committee on the Library. Application was made at the last Congress in reference to this matter. No action was had upon it then; but I had occasion, as a member of the committee, to examine into the proposed publication, and I was satisfied that it would be a work of great value and use, and that the subscription for the number proposed on the part of Congress would not be unreasonable. I believe the work was entered into more for its utility, and the reputation which it would confer upon the author, than from any expectation of profit. The plan is to publish all the laws of a general nature in a single octavo volume of about twelve hundred pages, with such notes and references as will concentrate the laws on different subjects. I think it can be done. There is to be no codification, no alteration about it. It is simply to arrange them into appropriate chapters, so as to have a convenient reference to all the laws on a particular subject of a general nature. I am satisfied that it will be a book of great utility to Congress for ordinary use, as well as to members in committees; because now, in any examination upon almost any subject, you have to go through nine volumes to get at the construction of the law. Believing the book to be of great value, and having sufficient guards imposed that no improper work will be published, because the amendment requires the approval of the Attorney General to the book before it is purchased, the committee were unanimous in recommending that this subscription should be made. I can only say further, that the gentleman who proposes to publish it is a lawyer, personally unknown to me, except in the intercourse which I had with him during the last Congress. I have had none during the present. The impression made upon my mind from several conversations with him, was, that he is entirely competent to perform the work in a proper manner, and that, with his ideas, he will give us really a valuable book. Beyond that I have no personal knowledge of him whatever. I believe the work will be of benefit to us; and coinciding with me in that opinion, the committee have instructed me to report the amendment.

Mr. HUNTER. This is to purchase a book which is not yet published. I think we have gone far enough in this book-making matter.

Mr. BAYARD. The money is not to be paid unless it is published. The amendment requires that every copy is to be delivered before it is paid for; and further, the appropriation is not to be expended until the book has been examined and approved of by the Attorney General.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. JOHNSON. There has been a decision made at the Treasury in regard to officers connected with the legislative department, which renders it necessary that we should have an explanatory clause in this bill. I therefore propose to amend the bill by inserting:

That the joint resolution approved the 20th of July, 1854, shall be so construed as to embrace the Superintendent of Public Printing, and the clerks and messengers in his office.

A decision was given on the 6th of February last, under another act of a somewhat similar character, a portion of which I will read. It relates to the compensation of officers:

"The beneficiaries entitled to receive under that section must have been employed in the executive or legislative departments of the Government. I do not think the Superintendent of Public Printing is in the department of either."

"The whole subject is treated of in a decision on the 18th of October, 1852, which I will place in your hands if you will call at the office. I cannot furnish you with a copy, by reason of not having any clerk to put the work."

Subsequently, on the 6th of March, the following decision was made:

"Having been informed by Mr. HAMLIN, of the Senate, that a different construction had been put upon the act by the Senate, and that an allowance had been made to him, by a vote of the Senate, as to other messengers, and that the Superintendent of Public Printing was deemed to belong to the legislative department of the Government, I now inform you that any payment within the terms of the act mentioned, for such length of time as he served, will be allowed in the settlement of your account."

That connects him with the legislative department. Subsequently, within a few days past, a different decision has been given at the Treasury Department, which has thrown some portion of them upon the executive department. It is necessary that there should be some uniformity in the decisions upon this question, and not have some brought in under one color, and some under another, and some not at all. The Superintendent of Public Printing, and the force under him, certainly, belong to the legislative branch of the Government. It is so; since the Superintendent himself, and the whole force under him, are entirely, under the authority, and peculiar control, and direction, and supervision of the Committees of Printing of the Senate and the House. Their accounts must pass through the hands of the Joint Committees on Printing. They are acted upon entirely by them. The reason why it has been deemed and adjudged that the Superintendent is connected with the Executive Department is more particularly because his appointment is made by the President. At the time that this system of the Superintendent of Public Printing was established, the President was authorized to appoint the Superintendent, for the simple reason that there was no other more appropriate quarter to which the power of appointing could be referred; but all that he has to do is connected with the legislative department, and not with the executive department at all. I am therefore instructed by the committee to offer this amendment, and, if it be adopted, it will render uniform the decisions in regard to his true position, and that of those who are under him. I trust the Senate will adopt it. It gives no compensation beyond that already provided. It simply gives uniformity to the decisions.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON. I have here a matter of importance, which I am instructed by the Committee on Printing to bring before the Senate. Under their instructions, I offer the following amendment, to come in after the item in the bill making an appropriation for lithographing and engraving:

Provided, That hereafter, when any maps, plates, or other engravings, shall be ordered to be engraved and printed for either House of Congress, the Superintendent of Public Printing shall invite proposals for the execution of all engravings and printings, specifying the particulars of style and time; and on the receipt of such proposals, shall contract with the lowest bidder who shall offer for the same; and should such contractor fail to furnish such maps, plates, or engravings, within the time specified in his contract, the Joint Committee on Printing shall have power to abrogate such contract, and require the Superintendent to prosecute such contractor for the penalty of such contract; and when the said Superintendent shall advertise for the annual supplies of printing paper for the congressional and executive printing, he shall, at the same time, and in the same manner, advertise for such paper as may, in his opinion, be necessary for the printing of such maps, plates, or other engravings; and the contracts for the paper shall be made by the said Superintendent, in like manner, and under the same restrictions, as by law are now provided in the purchase of congressional and other printing paper.

The Committee on Printing of the Senate have considered this matter, and it is most imperative that something should be done in regard to the engravings. I will give a short synopsis of the reasons and facts connected with the subject.

The maps, plates, and other engraving are now contracted for by the Secretary of the Senate and Committee on Engraving of the House of Representatives, each for their respective Houses. The amendment proposes to place this authority with the Superintendent of Public Printing for the following reasons:

First, the superintendent now having charge of the printing of Congress, can make the contracts for the engravings correspond in point of delivery with the time the printing is finished, so that the great delay in the delivery of books ordered by either House experienced during the present session, for want of engravings, may be avoided hereafter. Every member of the body is familiar with the extraordinary, to them unaccountable, and to all outrageous, delay that has accompanied the delivery of most of the books ordered to be printed by the Senate.

Second, the Superintendent has now the authority of law to inspect and receive, or reject such engravings as may be ordered by Congress, whilst the contracts for these engravings are beyond his control, thus leaving great room for difficulties to arise between the contractors, the Superintendent, and the contracting authority. Contractors are prone to slight or spoil their work, or procrastinate in its delivery, relying upon the liberality of the contracting power to interfere between them and the execution of their bonds.

The contractor is responsible to the Superintendent of Public Printing; but a committee of the House of Representatives, in one instance, and the Secretary of the Senate in the other, are the only ones that have control of him, to make his contracts, or to govern them, and fix them in accordance with what may be the necessities and interests arising from the action which has already taken place in regard to the printing, either in this body or in the other.

3d. The Government is now paying much more for paper for engravings than it can be procured for by contract, (this we are informed is the case;) and, under the proposed system, paper can be procured of a better quality than that now used, and at a much less price.

The Senate will perceive at once that there is a relation existing directly between the subject-matter of printing, which is under the control of the Superintendent of Public Printing, and the subject-matter of engraving, which has been left, in the reorganization of our system of printing, as it was under the old system, in the hands of the Secretary of the Senate and of a committee of the other House. There is an evident propriety in having the whole matter of printing and engraving connected; and, in order that they may be carried on pari passu, they should be under the control of some one individual, subject to the supervision of the Joint Committee on Printing of the two Houses.

At present I have to say to the Senate what I imagine will surprise them; and yet, if they reflect for a moment, they will at once recognize that something of the sort must have been the case. There are now in the Union office, of this city, one hundred tons of printed matter, not delivered for the simple reason that the plates and engravings have been contracted for in such a manner that the works cannot be issued because the engravings are not prepared and ready. In regard to Marcy's report, which was ordered four months ago, and the copies of which ought to have been delivered by this time, I understand that the engravings and plates were not even ordered until the day before yesterday. I understand it is already printed. The Agricultural Report was ordered on the 30th of March, but the plates are not all even contracted for at this time. Now, how can such a system be carried on? and what a condition of things is this in connection with the public business! The Senate must see that it is out of the question, and will not do at all. We must do something to concentrate this class of business under some one head, and make that head responsible for the work. All this printing, as I understand, could have been delivered if the plates had been prepared. The whole of this matter would have been delivered at this session, and distributed, and been sent to the people, or would have gone to whatever object it was designed for, if all these things had been in the hands of any one who would have attended to it as it should have been done. But now it is certain that the one hundred tons of printed matter cannot be delivered to you up to the end of this Congress—this session and the next session both taken together. The amendment which I have offered I have reason to believe; and the Committee on Printing have reason to believe, will do away with the difficulty.

Mr. GEYER. I desire to make an inquiry of the chairman of the Committee on Printing. I understood him to say that the plates for Marcy's report were not ordered until within a few days.

Mr. JOHNSON. The plates for Marcy's report, as I understand, which was ordered to be printed some four months ago, were not ordered until the day before yesterday.

Mr. GEYER. I have seen that report in the hands of members of the House as a Senate document, ordered by the Senate, with the plates. That has been furnished to members of the House some three or four weeks since.

Mr. BADGER. Is my friend certain that it is Marcy's report?

Mr. GEYER. Yes, sir, on the exploration of Red river.

Mr. BADGER. I am not disposed to throw any unnecessary difficulty in the way of the amendment moved by the Senator from Arkansas, but I confess I have no disposition to pass any law giving the Superintendent of Public Printing any further control than he is now allowed over the public printing.

Mr. WELLER. If my friend from North Carolina will allow me, I desire to say, I shall submit a proposition to insert after "Superintendent of Public Printing," the words "together with the Secretary of the Senate."

Mr. JOHNSON. I imagine there is not a member of the body who has a higher regard for the Secretary of the Senate than I have, but I do not believe he has got anything to do with that business of the Senate. There is no man who would make any movement with more reluctance than I would to take from him the slightest particle of patronage, or who would more positively refuse to do anything which would cast upon him the slightest reflection, than myself. I do not know that the Secretary wants to have anything to do with this; but I have understood the contrary, whether correctly or not, I cannot say, for I have not chosen to ask. This is a matter of public business to be transacted. All these subjects of printing, plates, and engravings, are akin to each other. They cannot be got along with if divided, so as to make them proceed with uniformity. I will further say, that if the Secretary of the Senate even desired to have control of it, I should consider that his desire was more earnest for the control of a matter of that sort than his judgment was good for the interest of the public in that respect.

I do hope that the Senator from North Carolina, who objects to giving this to the Superintendent of Public Printing, will recollect that the Superintendent is bound by the most rigid laws which you have already enacted, and he is made peculiarly subject, in every instance and in all particulars, to the direct supervision and action of the joint committee of the two bodies. The power of removal also rests with the President, so that at any moment when there should be cause for such a course, either or both of the committees would have him displaced upon the spot. If you join the Secretary of the Senate with the Superintendent, I suggest to the Senator from California that the Committee on Engraving, of the other House, when this goes there, will also have to be inserted. Then we shall have the Committee on Engraving, the Secretary of the Senate, and the Superintendent of Public Printing acting upon the matter of letting out engravings, which is a small matter. We shall have them all acting on the engravings and superintending them, while the printing will be superintended by the Superintendent of Public Printing, acting alone. I trust and hope, for the public interest, and in conformity with the wishes and opinions of the Committee on Printing, that the amendment which I have offered may be permitted to pass just as it stands; and I feel disposed to say that I can even guarantee that under it the public service, in this particular, henceforth will be done promptly and uniformly and more cheaply.

Mr. BRODHEAD. The Senator from Arkansas seems to proceed upon the supposition that the Superintendent of the Public Printing can advertise, and make contracts for the engravings sooner than the Secretary of the Senate.

Mr. JOHNSON. Not at all.

Mr. BRODHEAD. Has there been any delay? Is the delay in the delivery of the public documents attributable to this matter of the engravings? If so, it amounts to a considerable charge. I do not know why it is that the Secretary of the Senate cannot make contracts at as early a period for engravings as the Superintendent of the Public Printing. I do not wish to be understood as expressing a positive opinion against the measure of the Senator from Arkansas. I do not wish to cast any reflection upon any one; but I think that the Superintendent of the Public Printing, the Secretary of the Senate, and the Clerk of the House would be a very good board to take charge of this matter.

Mr. WELLER. It might be supposed, from some remarks made by the Senator from Arkansas, that there has been some consultation between the Secretary of the Senate and myself in regard to this matter. I desire to say, that I have never conversed with that gentleman on the subject. I know not what he wishes. Whether he desires to continue in the superintendence of these engravings or not, is a question about which I know nothing. My only object was to divide the responsibility between the Superintendent of Public Printing and the Secretary of the Senate. A large amount of money has been expended, and is constantly expended, by this Government for these engravings. I desire that that responsibility may rest upon the Superintendent of Public Printing, who is under the control of the President, and upon the Secretary of the Senate, who is under the control of this body. The Senator says that if there be anything wrong under his amendment, if it be adopted, the President of the United States can remove the Superintendent. I answer to that, if my amendment be adopted, and anything wrong is done by the Secretary, he can be removed by this body. By agreeing to my amendment, we can better advance the public interest. At all events, I should prefer that the Superintendent of the Public Printing and the Secretary of the Senate should have charge of the engravings ordered to be contracted for by this body. I therefore make the motion—which I indicated a few minutes ago—to put the Secretary of the Senate with the Superintendent of Public Printing.

There is one other point to which I must allude. I understand the Senator from Arkansas to say that there has been a most extraordinary delay in obtaining these engravings; that there are now one hundred tons of printed paper in the Union office—the public printer of the other branch of Congress—not delivered to the House ordering them. If there has been this delay; if this matter has accumulated in that office, because of the failure of a public officer to obtain the engravings, I think it is due to this body that the Senator should say where the responsibility rests. If the public printing is delayed; if we are prevented from sending over the country that which we have ordered to be printed, and if this delay is occasioned by the act of a public officer, it is the duty of the committee who have the special charge of the subject to inform the body where the blame rests.

Mr. JOHNSON. I should be glad to know where the fault rests. I do not know it; and there again is another evidence that something ought to be done in regard to the matter. The Committee on Printing has no control over, has nothing to do with, the letting of these engravings at all. It is not my business to go about and hunt up this; and to tell you the truth, I do not know whose fault it is. There must be a fault somewhere. There are the books; they are printed, ready for delivery, and yet there are no engravings with them. Where the fault is I know not. I know that the House Committee on Engraving has had the benefit and charge of the orders which they have issued for the agricultural reports. As to the matter of Marcy's reports, I do not know whether the order originated first in that body or this.

Mr. WELLER. I should very much like the Senator from Arkansas to inform me what are the duties of the Committee on Printing? I do not pretend to know what object was sought to be obtained by the Senate originally in the establishment of that committee. If I understand its duties, they were to take charge of the public printing that might be ordered by the Senate. If they ordered an extra number of five thousand copies of a work to be distributed among the members, it is the duty of that committee, who thus reported in favor of it, to inform us why it is that the order has not been complied with. To what other committee of this body could I go, if I desired to ascertain why an order of the Senate in regard to the public printing had not been complied with? To what committee could I apply, if not to the Committee on Printing? If they have not the general supervision of this subject, how comes it that they are reporting this proposed change? If the Senator has ascertained all the facts, which I doubt not he has, that he has this morning stated to the Senate, why not also have obtained the facts as to who are to blame for this most extraordinary delay in the public printing? That is a question, in my judgment, of practical importance to the body. We have seen proper to order the printing of an extraordinary number of a certain document. That document has not been presented to us within a reasonable time. I desire to know where the fault attaches, where the blame lies; and if I cannot get that information from the Committee on Printing, I do not see the necessity of having a committee on the subject.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I wish to say one word by way of explanation. This amendment comes from the joint and unanimous action of the Committee on Printing of both Houses. It does not originate from the Senate committee at all. The difficulty does not exist in the action or want of action of the Secretary of the Senate. The matter in the House is managed by a committee of the House, and we all know that he cannot have anything to do with contracts and business managed by the committee of the other branch. I do not understand that there has been the slightest delay, or the slightest want of action, on the part of the Secretary of the Senate. He has been prompt in making his contracts. But I know, as the committee well know, that on the part of the House it has been not unfrequently the case that the contracts for engravings have not been made for months after the order; and in that way, as a consequence arising from the imperfect manner in which the matter is managed in the other branch, has occurred this large accumulation of printed matter; and consequently the joint committee on the part of the Senate and the House unanimously came to the conclusion that the whole matter should be put into the hands of somebody who would see to it, and get the plates along as fast as possible, in order keep up with the accumulation of printed matter. So far as the Senate is concerned, I repeat, and I am instructed to repeat, that there has been no imputation whatever, of any kind, on the officer in charge of it here. The difficulty arises in the other body.

Now, with regard to the amendment of the Senator from California, the only difficulty that arises in my mind is, that if you join the Secretary of the Senate with the Superintendent of Public Printing, it may be necessary, on the part of the House, to join somebody there to them. I do not know that there would be any objection to it; but it would seem natural that both should have an officer on their part connected with it. I only suggest this. I have no particular opposition to the amendment proposed by the Senator from California. I do not know that it is improper, but my experience has been that business of this kind is always done better and more promptly by one individual than by a committee or by a commission, or by a number of individuals.

Mr. BADGER. The supposed necessity for this amendment, as I understand the matter from the explanations which have been made, arises from this fact: When engraving have been ordered for the Senate, and where the contract has had to be made by our Secretary, he has made it promptly; but the contractor, in some cases, delays to execute the contract. In the other House the same thing happens. Now, sir, I do not see how the fact of the contract being made by the Superintendent of Public Printing will have any greater tendency to insure the prompt execution of it by the contractor than if that same contract were made by the Secretary of the Senate. The amendment proposes that suits shall be brought against the contractor. That may all be very well; but why cannot suits be brought upon our system of letting out the engraving now just as well and just as effectually as upon the proposed new system?

Mr. FESSENDEN. Will the Senator allow me to say that the difficulty arises from the fact that the contracts are not made in the other House at the proper time?

Mr. BADGER. If the contracts are not made in the other branch of Congress, allow me to say it ceases to be a matter of any importance to us in the Senate, because, by an amendment which was put upon the deficiency bill during this session, we have separated the connection between the two Houses in regard to their printing. When printing is hereafter ordered by the Senate, it is not to be done by the printer of the House when the House has already ordered the printing of the document, but the printer of each House is to do the printing of that House respectively. Now, therefore, the proposition here is to make a prospective amendment to the law, which is unnecessary; for, according to the statement, the difficulty arises in the House; while our engraving is done promptly. Then there is no necessity for the amendment for past cases; and as to future cases, we have no connection with the House. Our own printer is to do our printing, and our own engraving is to be done under the direction of ourselves. Therefore, if our Secretary makes a contract, and the contractor does not comply with it, he can be sued; and I do not see what virtue there will be, so far as the Senate is concerned, in a bond given by the contractor to the Superintendent of the Public Printing, which would not be in a bond taken by the Secretary of the Senate. Besides, as I mentioned when I commenced, I am exceedingly unwilling to give any further control over the public printing or engraving, or over any of the operations of the Senate, to any executive officer, than he now has by law.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. So far as regards the casting of censure on that officer, I assure the Senate that I have never heard the slightest intimation of it, or any intimation that he has been derelict in his duty.

Mr. BADGER. What officer?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The Secretary of the Senate.

Mr. WELLER. Will the Senator allow me to say—

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I do not charge you with that.

Mr. WELLER. I did not intend, in the slightest degree, to reflect upon the Secretary.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I did not mean that you did. I have never heard any intimation that he has been at all derelict in his duty. But, sir, the proposition submitted by the chairman of the Committee on Printing, is one that engaged the serious attention of the committee, and let me assure Senators that they are not aware of the trouble and embarrassments which are connected with that matter. They are involved in mystery; and although I have been connected with the committee, during the greater part of this session, I am frank to say that I am not well enough informed now of the duties which attach to that office. You must take some gentleman who has clearer senses than mine, to understand all the things which attach to such a question.

The great inducement which prompted the offering of the amendment, was to simplify the subject, to put it in some form and shape which the committee would comprehend, and to enable us to hasten forward the work. Now, I will ask you, sir, and every Senator, where is the necessity of connecting the Secretary of the Senate with this matter, when you have an officer singled out by the President of the United States for his intelligence, for his capacity, to superintend the printing, and everything connected with it? He has charge of, and supervises everything connected with it, and all that we ask now, is, while carrying on the work, to locate the responsibility upon him, and to obviate the necessary embarrassments which now do surround the printing, and to say that he shall contract for all the plates and engravings. Is there anything exceptionable in that? Is there any alarming power to be delegated to that officer? By no means. But, I venture to say, the Secretary of the Senate would be glad to be rid of that duty. We do not ask for the putting of anything at the disposal of the Superintendent, but, we ask simply, as he has to supervise every other matter connected with the public printing, that he shall have the power to advertise for the engravings to carry on the work.

The object, the whole design, the intention of the committee is to simplify and put this matter in such a form that the work shall progress and be accomplished without delay. Is there any great necessity, I repeat, why the Secretary of the Senate should act jointly with the Superintendent of the Public Printing? The proposition simply is, to give the Superintendent the power to purchase the plates under contract, and if there should be anything improper in his conduct he would be responsible to this body. These are the reasons which prompted the joint committee to submit the amendment. We want this matter put in such a shape that this officer can carry on the work with more expedition, so that we need not be delayed in receiving what we order. If the amendment contemplated putting at his disposition a large amount of money, or if the contracts were such as should not be delegated to the discretion of any individual, I assure you that I should be the last man to delegate such a power. But the amount necessary to be involved in the purchase of these plates is small, and I do assure you that by the adoption of this amendment, you will add greatly to the dispatch of the business. I hope the Senate will agree to it.

Mr. BAYARD. I shall vote against this amendment, because it is an attempt to legislate upon the public printing by way of an amendment on the general appropriation bill. I am opposed to the present printing system, and hope when it properly comes up, on the report of a committee, to see a different one introduced. Therefore, I am opposed to amending this bill by attaching to it such a provision in a place where we can have no proper discussion upon it. I shall, therefore, vote against the amendment.

Mr. EVANS. I desire to say a few words on this subject. As chairman of the committee appointed to superintend the contingent expenses of the Senate, this thing has come under my supervision, for the Secretary of the Senate, in no instance, has undertaken to make contracts without the consent of the committee. It seems to me, as we have thought proper to sever the printing of the Senate entirely from that of the House, and to have no connection with it, we ought to have it entirely under our own officer. If the Senate desires a document to be printed, the bare order indicates that the printer of the Senate is to do the work. This amendment proposes to take from the control of the Secretary of the Senate the engravings, and give them to a man who is not an officer of the Senate, but an officer of Congress of both Houses; and, therefore, for consistency and propriety's sake it would seem to me that things had better remain as they are. It is within my personal knowledge that there has been no delay in any of the engravings ordered by the Senate, except perhaps in one instance, in which the contractor instead of furnishing them when he should have sent them here, sent an excuse. In every instance where the thing has been practicable, it has been done promptly and efficiently.

I have thought it necessary to say this much in vindication of the Secretary of the Senate, if he needs any vindication. He does not desire this sort of patronage. It may be desired elsewhere; he does not desire it, and, therefore, it is not because he desires it that I have felt any inclination to say anything; but it is because, if you adopt the amendment, you will spoil the symmetry of your system. The printing of the two Houses is entirely disconnected, and that of each is carried on under its own officers.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California to the amendment.

Mr. WELLER. I do not wish to embarrass the proposition, and for reasons satisfactory to me, which it is not necessary to mention, I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. BADGER. I move, in accordance with the idea thrown out by the Senator from South Carolina, [Mr. EVANS,] to strike out the words "Superintendent of Public Printing," and insert "Secretary of the Senate."

Mr. JOHNSON. This subject was under discussion in the joint committee of the two Houses, and met with their unanimous concurrence. As to agreeing to the amendment or not agreeing to it, I do not care a cent what is done with it. It is perfectly immaterial to me. The Senate may leave its business just as it is if they choose. It is sufficient to say that the committees of the two Houses were unanimous in coming to the conclusion that the matter should be conducted in a different manner, if we hoped to arrive at any good result.

In regard to one point about which some Senators have displayed some sensitiveness unnecessarily, for there was no occasion for it, as far as I was concerned at least, as to the performance of his duties by the Secretary of the Senate. I will state, as I thought I had sufficiently stated before, that there is no blame cast upon that officer for his method in the discharge of his duty, and I have still further reason, on making further inquiry into the matter, to say that that officer has discharged his duty unexceptionably. I have heard nothing to the contrary, and I have implied nothing to the contrary; but the joint committee deemed that it was necessary to do something in order to have an effective system, and they have presented, as the means which they propose, the amendment, believing that the business should be concentrated, if we expect it to be well done. If the Senate chooses to vote it down, I care not.

Mr. BADGER's amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON. The amendment has now been amended. The object, I presume, is attained. The whole amendment is killed. The House cannot be expected to agree that the Secretary of the Senate shall act as their agent, to manage their matter of engraving, and supersede their own Committee on Engraving. I shall therefore vote against the whole amendment.

The amendment, as amended, was rejected.

Mr. JOHNSON. The Committee on Printing have instructed me to offer the following amendment, to come in after the clause making appropriation for the paper and printing of the Senate:

Provided, That whenever it shall be the opinion of the Committee on Printing that the character of any document ordered to be printed may render such change necessary, the size may be changed from octavo to quarto form; but in no case shall the price to be paid for composition and press work exceed the pro rata as established by the printing act of August 26, 1852, for the printing of congressional documents.

This originates in consequence of the fact that in some works—as in the case of Gillies's Report, which has been ordered by the House—the plates cannot be got in the octavo pages, and there is no authority under the law, as it stands, to alter it to a quarto page. This is merely to give the authority, when it may be absolutely necessary in the execution of the work, to change it.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SLIDELL. I desire to offer an amendment, which, it is necessary to state to the Senate, comes within the class of private claims which were decided as being out of order yesterday. I will very briefly state the reasons why I now ask the adoption of this particular amendment.

Mr. HUNTER. If it is out of order, it cannot be received.

Mr. SLIDELL. It can be received by unanimous consent.

Mr. HUNTER. I object to receiving anything out of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. BRIGHT.) The rule is imperative that private claims cannot be received.

Mr. SLIDELL. I will simply state that it is recommended by the Secretary of the Treasury and the Secretary of State as being one of strict justice towards certain Spanish subjects. The Secretary of State considers it important and necessary for the dispatch of certain pending negotiations with Spain to dispose of it. It is one of strict justice. I think the case for which it provides is equal in hardship to that of the Black Warrior. If the Senate chooses to reject it under these circumstances, very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator offer this amendment?

Mr. SLIDELL. I do; and suggest these reasons why it should be received.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

Mr. SLIDELL. There is a letter on file among the papers from the Secretary of State on the subject.

The amendment was as follows:

Sec. — And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and required to release a judgment rendered in the circuit court of the United States, in the fifth circuit and eastern district of Louisiana, on the 13th of February, 1854, in the case of the United States vs. Puig, Mir & Co., of New Orleans, for the sum of $1,310 54, and interest thereon, being the amount of duties claimed to be due, and payable to the United States, on certain coffee imported into the port of New Orleans from Cuba, in the Spanish brig Pepita; and that the said Secretary of the Treasury is hereby further authorized and required to release a judgment rendered in said court, at the same date, in the case of the United States vs. P. Puig, and Puig, Mir & Co., of New Orleans, for the sum of $3,761 12, and interest thereon, being the amount of import duties claimed to be due and payable to the United States, on certain coffee imported into the said port of New Orleans from Cuba, in the Spanish brig Astador; but if the judgments aforesaid, or any part thereof, shall have been paid by the defendants, the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby further authorized and required to refund to them, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the amount so paid.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It belongs to the class of private claims intended to be excluded by the rule.

Mr. SLIDELL. I have stated so; and I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate for its consideration.

Mr. HUNTER. I cannot agree to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Virginia objects, and it cannot be received.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I desire to offer an amendment to the bill. Yesterday, the Senator from Georgia [Mr. Dawson] submitted a proposition to amend the amendment which related to custom-houses, reported from the Committee on Commerce, by its chairman, [Mr. Hamlin], so as to establish a custom-house and post office at some port in his State. The Chair decided that to be out of order under a rule which, I understand, is one of the rules of the Senate. Now, Mr. President, it does seem to me that it is a very strange rule, and as unjust and unequal as it is strange. What is it? Under that rule, it was decided yesterday by the Chair, that the Senator from Georgia could not make a proposition to build a custom-house in his State, where it was very much needed. And why? Because, forsooth, some one of the Departments had not seen fit to recommend it. Now, I submit to you, Mr. President, and to the American Senate, if we are to legislate under such duress as that? Are we to be dependent for our action upon the views and caprices, or upon the judgment of any of the Departments of this Government? Is it not a violation of every principle of equality and justice? Is it not a trespass upon the rights of every Senator here? Your constituents, sir, and my constituents, their rights, and their interests, are to be adjudged by some Secretary of a Department.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I dislike to interrupt my friend, but I must call him to order. I understand him to make an attack upon the rules of the Senate, and as there is no motion pending to modify or repeal those rules, I do not conceive that it is in order.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I would say to my friend from Illinois, that I am only stating this in order to make out my case before the Senate, and then I shall appeal to their justice and their judgment for the remedy. I am only arguing the case of propriety to get a vote which I am sure I shall get.

I repeat, Mr. President, that I am required, and you are required, and the Senator from Illinois is required, before we can offer an amendment here asking for an appropriation for custom-houses in either of our States, or for a hospital or for any other purpose, to get the approbation and consent of some one of the Departments, or else be fortunate enough to secure the consent and approbation of a majority of some one of the committees of the Senate.

Mr. HUNTER. I will suggest to the Senator that if there is anything in the rules which he dislikes, he can move to repeal them; but this is not the proper occasion on which to argue in regard to them.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I hope the Senator will allow me to put myself right. It is all I ask. I do not desire to get a dollar out of the Treasury, but I simply ask to stand right before my constituents, and under this rule I cannot do so. I put it on a question of privilege, if you please. I will state the case distinctly. At the commencement of this session of Congress, a large memorial was sent here from my constituents asking Congress to establish a marine hospital at Memphis. I was required, under the rules of the Senate, to refer it to the Committee on Commerce, which I did with great pleasure.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will allow the Chair to remark that there is nothing before the Senate.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I hope you will allow me to make my speech, and propose an amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator can now propose his amendment, and the Chair will decide whether it is in order.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I am sure the Chair will rule it out of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Then the Senator is clearly out of order.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I am aware of that; but I hope I shall be allowed to put myself right before the Senate and my constituents. I appeal to the magnanimity of the Senate.

Mr. RUSK. Offer the amendment, and then appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Well, here it is. I propose to add, at the end of the amendment which was adopted on the motion of the Senator from Maine, [Mr. Hamlin], as chairman of the Committee on Commerce, the following:

At Memphis, in the State of Tennessee, for the purchase of a site, and the erection of a marine hospital, the sum of $50,000.

I was very well aware, Mr. President, that under the rules it would be ruled out of order, as was the amendment of my friend from Georgia; but it is against that injustice that I want to put myself right. I want to enter my protest against it, state the circumstances, and show to the Senate the injustice which is done to my constituents under that rule. With the consent of the Senate, I will do it in a few minutes; but if there is one Senator here who will deny me the privilege to put myself right—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is clearly out of order, the amendment itself being excluded by the rule. It is in the power of the Senate to overrule the decision.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Then I take an appeal from the decision of the Chair; and I suppose I may be permitted to speak on that question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, whether the decision of the Chair, declaring the Senator from Tennessee to be out of order, is to stand as the judgment of the Senate?

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Before the vote is taken, I desire to argue that matter. I put it upon the ground that it is an act of injustice to me and every Senator on the floor, and to that extent is an infringement of the constitutional rights of every Senator. By what power and authority does the Senate undertake to declare to me that I shall not represent the wishes of my constituents?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is not a debatable one.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. If I have not the right to show that the rule is unconstitutional, I should like to know what power we have here, except that which is exercised by a dominant majority?

Mr. WELLER. There is a rule here abridging liberty of speech. You cannot say anything upon a question of this sort.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair decided that the Senator was out of order in arguing an amendment after it was decided to be out of order.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I am arguing the rule on the appeal.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. From that he appeals. The question is, whether the decision of the Chair shall stand as the judgment of the Senate. That is not debatable.

The decision of the Chair was sustained—ayes nineteen, noes not counted.

Mr. RUSK. I have a small amendment to offer to the third section, which has been adopted as an amendment, on the recommendation of the Committee on Finance. It now provides that

In the office of the First Auditor there shall be one clerk taken from class three, and placed in class four, and four additional clerks allowed of class one.

I understand that these four clerks are performing the duties of the third class. I also understand that it was recommended by the Auditor that they should be put down in the third class, but, by some means in transcribing the recommendation at the Treasury Department, they were put down as in class one. I therefore move to strike out "one" and insert "three."

Mr. ADAMS. The statement of the Senator I understand to be correct. The duties to which those clerks are assigned are in the third class.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RUSK. I have another amendment which I am directed to offer by the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads. It is to strike out:

For improving and repairing the room in the custom-house at Savannah, used as post office, $1,000.

—and insert:

For the erection of a building for the post office at the city of Savannah, in the State of Georgia, $50,000; on condition that the said city shall furnish a site for the building.

Mr. President, I shall make but a few words of explanation in reference to the amendment. In the construction of a custom-house at Savannah, the room which was assigned to the post office department is, I believe, in the basement of the building, and is entirely unsuitable for the purpose of a post office. It is cold and damp, and lights have to be used in it day and night. There is no arrangement in the custom-house there by which the post office can be accommodated. Savannah is a place of growing importance, with its roads extending out west. It is a very considerable seaport town; and I believe it will be a matter of economy to adopt the amendment. The citizens propose to furnish a site for the post office; and $50,000 will make a building suitable for it. I believe it will be a matter of economy on the part of the Government to adopt that plan.

Mr. HUNTER. I suggest to the Senator from Texas that that will lead to an entirely new range of appropriations. The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Brodhead] will come up again with his proposition for the post office in Philadelphia, and thus they will go on accumulating. I think it will be the best plan to keep these buildings out of the bill.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. GWIN. I offer the following additional sections:

Sec. — And be it further enacted, That the seventh section of the act of January 18, 1837, entitled "An act supplementary to an act establishing the Mint and regulating the coins of the United States," be so amended as to extend the allowance for the annual salary of the clerks in the Mint of the United States to $1,800 each, from and after the 1st day of July, 1854 at the discretion of the officers authorized by law to appoint, with the approbation of the President of the United States, including also one clerk in the office of the assistant treasurer at Philadelphia.

SEC. —. And be it further enacted, That the second section of the act of July 3, 1852, entitled "An act to establish a branch mint of the United States in California," be so amended as to allow to the clerks authorized to be employed therein, $3,000 per annum each, to take effect from and after the first day of July, 1854; and such additional sum as, together with those elsewhere provided in this act, will equal the respective salaries authorized by this section of this act, are hereby appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the payment thereof.

SEC. —. And be it further enacted, That all the appointments of clerks and assistants authorized to be employed in the office of the assistant treasurers of the United States, and in the offices of the Mint and branches thereof, and assay office, New York, shall respectively be made with the approbation of the President, by the assistant treasurer, director, superintendent, and treasurer of the Mint, said branch Mints and assay office, whose bonds are held in the Treasury Department in trust for the proper performance of their respective duties.

That is the form of a bill which was reported by the Committee on Finance, and passed the Senate, fixing the compensation of the clerks in the Mints and branches. It is reported from the committee.

Mr. SLIDELL. I have no objection to the amendment of the Senator from California, so far as regards the Mint of New Orleans, raising the salaries of the clerks there. I desire to suggest to him, however, that by the present allowance the clerks receive $1,500 a year, and the cashier $1,800. Now, if the salaries of the clerks be increased, so as to be made equal to what the cashier now receives, the cashier, whose duties are much more arduous and responsible, ought also to have his increased, and I suggest to the Senator from California that he should increase the salary of the cashier to $2,200.

Mr. GWIN. The amendment, as I offer it, is in accordance with the recommendation of the Department.

Mr. SLIDELL. Then I shall move to amend it by raising the salary of the cashier.

Mr. HUNTER. I suggest that it is better not to depart from the estimate in relation to the clerks. It is shown to be actually necessary to increase their salaries in order to get an experienced class of men; but as to increasing the salaries of the higher officers; I think they had better come in as a separate measure hereafter, and not be put in this bill.

Mr. SLIDELL. I will state, for the information of the Senator from Virginia, that it is impossible to retain the services of an efficient cashier at the present salary. A man capable of occupying the position, can get a much higher salary in commercial houses in New Orleans. My colleague, who has received several letters on the subject, will confirm that statement. The clerks now receive $1,500 a year, and the cashier $1,800. It is utterly impossible to obtain the services of a responsible man at the rate of salary now given. They are obliged to have an inferior class of men. It is only within the last two or three weeks that the cashier of the Mint at New Orleans left his place, because he obtained a much higher salary in a mercantile house. I shall, therefore, offer the amendment to increase the salary of the cashier in a corresponding ratio with that of the clerks.

Mr. GWIN. I will accept that amendment.

The question being put on the amendment, as modified, the Presiding Officer declared that it appeared to be rejected.

Mr. BRODHEAD. There is no objection to the amendment. The Committee on Finance are in favor of it; everybody agrees to it; the Senator from Virginia [Mr. HUNTER] agrees to it; and the Secretary of the Treasury has especially called for it.

The question was again put; and, on a division, no quorum voted.

Mr. BRODHEAD. There is no objection to the amendment. The Committee on Finance agree to it; we all agree to it. [Laughter.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is a matter which the Chair cannot decide except by a count.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I ask for another count.

Mr. STUART. The Senator who called for a division can withdraw his call.

The amendment was then agreed to—ayes 21, noes not counted.

Mr. GWIN. I propose the following amendment:

SEC. —. And be it further enacted, That from and after the 30th June, 1854, the annual salary of the director of the Mint shall be $5,000; that of the superintendent of the branch mint, and the assistant treasurer of the United States at San Francisco, California, $6,000 each; that of the superintendent of the assay office at New York, and of the assistant treasurer at Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, $4,500 each; that of the superintendent of the mint, and the assistant treasurer at New Orleans, Louisiana, and of the treasurer at Boston, Massachusetts, $4,000 each; and that of the assistant treasurer at Charleston, South Carolina, $3,000: Provided, That it shall be their further duty, when designated by the President of the United States, to perform the services now authorized by law to be performed by the agents for paying pensions, or any other duties, without any greater aggregate of compensation than is herein provided.

Mr. HUNTER. I hope this will be laid over until the next session. I went for the increase of the salaries of the clerks, because it is indispensable; but it is not necessary to raise these salaries to retain the services of those superior officers. I hope it will go over. We have already put a great deal upon this bill, and we should not add such items as this.

Mr. GWIN. I will make a statement in regard to the officers in California, and, I suppose, other gentlemen can speak of those in their several States. The treasurer of the branch Mint at San Francisco has a salary of $4,500. In addition to that, and the duties which are placed upon him as assistant treasurer, he has to superintend the accounts of all the disbursing officers in California. He has to receive, on deposit, and he is liable for, as treasurer of the Mint, and Assistant Treasurer of the United States, the amount of from $50,000,000 to $75,000,000 a year. His salary is only $4,500, while our appraisers get $6,000. He gives a bond of $400,000. So much for the assistant treasurer. There is no officer of the Government who has to disburse such large amounts as the treasurer of that branch Mint. Now, it is proposed to increase his salary $1,500. It is the same in regard to the superintendent. He has important duties to perform. By the establishment of the assay office in New York, and the Mint in California, more money will be coined at that point than all the other Mints in the United States. It is estimated that the amount coined there will be $30,000,000 a year.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I beg to say a few words in regard to the two officers in Philadelphia. One is the Director of the Mint. He has charge of all the Mints in the United States. When his salary was fixed in 1837, there were about $3,000,000 coined annually; now there are $60,000,000 alone in Philadelphia, besides the California Mint, and at the assay office in New York, which are added to him. His salary is fixed at $5,000. The salary of the treasurer of the Mint, and the Assistant Treasurer of the United States in the city of Philadelphia—which office is now occupied by Dr. Sturgeon, with whom Senators are acquainted—is $4,000. This proposes to give him $4,500. His salary was fixed when there were about $3,000,000 coined; now there are $60,000,000, and he is answerable for that, and gives a bond in $300,000. He receives now $2,000 as treasurer of the Mint at Philadelphia; $1,000 for his additional duties as Assistant Treasurer of the United States, and $1,000 for paying pensions—making $4,000. This proposes to give him for all $4,500. It therefore increases his actual compensation but $500.

All the officers of the Mint and branch Mints in the United States are under the charge and control of the Director of the Mint at Philadelphia. His salary is proposed by the amendment to be fixed at $5,000, and that of the Treasurer at $4,500, and for that he is to perform all the duties which he now performs. Can there be any objection to this? I know that the Senator from Virginia objects to it; but why? He says that the bill is already loaded. Did he not yesterday vote for an increase of the salaries of the judges of the Supreme Court of the United States? They hold their office for life. But here are gentlemen temporarily in the public service, subject to the mutations of politics, handling millions and millions of dollars belonging to the Government; and it becomes, therefore, an imperative duty, in view of many considerations, that their salaries should be increased. I hope the amendment will be agreed to. I hope the Senate of the United States will not ask gentlemen to give bonds in $300,000, and handle $60,000,000 for less than $4,500 a year. The amendment is right and proper in every respect. The scale of salaries mentioned in it was sent here by the Secretary of the Treasury, in a letter which I have read. I therefore hope, as it is recommended by the Secretary of the Treasury, and as it is justified by such reasons as I have stated, that the Senate will agree to it.

Mr. DAWSON. I am as liberal as any man ought to be in the distribution of the public money, but I ask the Senator from Pennsylvania what salary is given to the Governor of his State?

Mr. BRODHEAD. We give him $3,500. At the last session of the Legislature, I believe, they increased it; I do not know how much.

Mr. DAWSON. Three thousand five hundred dollars is the salary of the Governor. The salary of the Superintendent of the Mint is $5,000.

Mr. BRODHEAD. No, sir; the salary of the Director of the Mint is now $3,500, and he controls all the Mints in the United States.

Mr. DAWSON. He controls all the Mints of the United States! What control does he exercise over them? What hour of his time is taken up by that control? He never goes to one of those branch Mints. He receives a report of not more than fifteen lines as to the amount of coinage at the other Mints; and, sir, he has no responsibility growing out of the bonds which are spoken of. The honesty of the superintendent or director constitutes his bond. Are we to pay men because a large amount of money goes into a box or into the Treasury over which they have superintendence, because they give a bond? Why, sir, a bond is no security at all. I would not give a snap of my finger for it. It is the honesty of the man to which I look. Well, are we to pay for that? Every man is an honest man. Why is it that men who are appointed to superintend working establishments are to receive greater salaries than you give to the intellectual men who control the State—your Governors and your chief justices? No man in the State receives such a compensation as is here proposed to be given to these officers. Sir, by doing this, you hold out an inducement by your high salaries to make every man who is in an elevated position, where he may be useful to his State and to the country, come down to labor for the General Government because of the salary.

Mr. BRODHEAD. My friend from Georgia commenced by asking me a question. Now, I ask him, why he voted yesterday to increase the salaries of the judges of the Supreme Court?

Mr. DAWSON. I voted to increase them because the position requires men of high attainments. They must spend all their life in study to make themselves acquainted with legal knowledge. Are we, because we raise the salaries of men of their attainments, men who control the rights of the people and the constitutional rights of the States, and superintend the laws of the country to raise the salaries of all other officers under the Government? Sir, this thing of raising the salaries has gone already too far. You make your clerks receive as much as your major generals who fight the battles of your country. The lowest clerk, in one of your Departments, receives more than the major who fights your battles. Why is all this? You are prostrating all your proceedings. You are so acting as not to bring down the higher class who are engaged for the interests of the country to low salaries; but you are bringing all the small ones to the highest point.

Your Doorkeeper here receives more than you do, Mr. President, for the discharge of your duties. There is not a dependent on the Senate Chamber who does not receive more money than those who are engaged in transacting the legislative business of the country. We have forgotten ourselves. No man can touch his own salary here, when he knows that he cannot subsist with the means which are appropriated for his sustenance, and yet he may go down and raise the salaries of others while he will not touch his own.

Mr. BRODHEAD. The Senator from Georgia commenced with a sort of argumentum ad hominem reply to me. I should like to know how many dollars per day he yesterday voted to foreign ministers?

Mr. DAWSON. I voted to increase the salaries of foreign ministers to such an amount as under the laws and Constitution of the country they are entitled to.

Mr. BRODHEAD. How much per day?

Mr. DAWSON. I do not know that their salary was $9,000 per annum and an outfit, and we have raised it. But why does the Senator ask that question? Is it an argument in favor of raising the salaries of men who are not employed from one day to the other? Not at all. The reason why I resist this proposition is this: The General Government is now raising the salaries of the officers whom they have the power to appoint in the different States to such a degree, that the salaries allowed by the States to their officers are being degraded. I have adopted it as a rule, that I should vote for giving to no district judge in any one of the States a higher salary than the chief justice of that State receives; for I have no idea of letting the General Government bid off, and take the most elevated characters in the State, merely because Congress may be able to give them a larger salary. That is the reason of my action. I have voted for the increase of salaries in California. The Senator may ask me why I did that. I have done it because the expenses there are so extravagant. But the day is soon coming when a man will be able to live there as cheaply as he does here; and when that day arrives, I venture to say that the Senator from California will not ask for an increase of salaries to a point higher than are given in the other States. It is a mere temporary inconvenience, which does not exist in Philadelphia. A judge of the supreme court in Pennsylvania receives nothing like the amount proposed to be given to these officers, and he is engaged from morning to night, nearly every day, either in the court-house or in his private chambers. I have looked over the salaries of the officers of various States, and I find nothing to justify an increase of what is given to the director and superintendent of the Mint. My friend, Dr. Sturgeon, for whom I have the greatest possible respect, served many years as Secretary of State in Pennsylvania, where his duties were much more continuous and arduous, and required much more devoted attention than the duties of his present office.

Mr. COOPER. He was not Secretary of State.

Mr. DAWSON. What then?

Mr. COOPER. Treasurer.

Mr. DAWSON. As treasurer of the State his duties were much more arduous than those which he has to perform now. I should sooner see him have this increase than almost any other man in Pennsylvania; but I object to the principle. As to the superintendent of the mint in Georgia, I might ask you to raise his salary upon the same principle; but I do not think he deserves it, because he gets now more than the officers of the State of Georgia generally get.

Mr. COOPER. I do not like to find myself in opposition to the chairman of the Committee on Finance, whenever I can vote with him; but I must vote in favor of this amendment, and I desire to say a word in reply to the remarks of the Senator from Georgia.

I do not think his argument has much force in it. He asks how much we pay our Governor, and how much we pay our other executive and judicial officers who are engaged in the discharge of their respective duties in Pennsylvania. My colleague answered that we pay our Governor $3,500. We pay him but $3,000. We did pay him $4,000, until a spirit of demagogism, designed to elevate certain individuals in the popular favor, swept over the State, and reduced the salaries below a respectable grade. But, sir, is the amendment which is proposed unreasonable? I shall not argue it further than the State of Pennsylvania is concerned; but I am sure the proposition is not unreasonable. The Senator is very widely mistaken in regard to the duties incumbent upon the treasurer of the Mint. They are very large and most responsible. As my colleague has informed the Senate, he gives bonds, in pursuance of law, to the amount of $300,000. The Senator from Georgia tells you that that is nothing; that every man is honest. But the law exacts the bond. He has been obliged to give it, and it was with difficulty that he did give it; and let me tell the Senator that a number of gentlemen declined this very office. How many, my colleague can tell; three I think, two I know declined it, because of the inadequacy of the salary, and the largeness of the security demanded. He has to discharge the duties, onerous in themselves, of treasurer of the Mint; he pays all the pension certificates drawn on the office at Philadelphia, and he has other duties besides.

Now, sir, I know something of his duties from a conversation which I had with him; and I know what the duties of a State treasurer are; and there is no comparison between the two. The duties of his office are perhaps as onerous, and indeed more onerous, I believe, than the duties of any other officer, State or National, within the limits of Pennsylvania. The director has far less duties, and they are less responsible, although the office is higher, and a higher salary has been attached to it. Now, I am sure that anybody who will undertake to examine the character of the duties incumbent upon the treasurer will not say that they require less mind, although it may be of a different kind than that which is applied to the adjudication of the rights of individuals and States. It requires as high a degree of talent to discharge the duties of that station as it does to discharge the duties of chief justice of the State. The talents required for the two offices are of a different kind; but, sir, they both require talents of a high character, in order to discharge the duties satisfactorily. Dr. Sturgeon possesses that kind of talent in an eminent degree. He was not a man who shone here, although he was universally esteemed; but he is a man whose financial abilities, whose honesty and integrity every man confides in. He ought to be paid for the duties which he performs. I have no doubt that the amendment is equally just, as applied to the other officers whose salaries it raises.

Mr. HUNTER. I hope we shall take the question. I understand it is the intention of the Senate to sit this bill out to-day.

Mr. WELLER. I have an amendment to propose to the amendment. I know of no other place to which it more properly applies than here. I think it will commend itself to the favorable consideration of my friend from Georgia. It simply proposes to give an adequate compensation to an officer in California, who is literally starved out under the existing law. It provides that he shall be allowed the same compensation that is paid for similar services under the laws of that State. It is as follows:

The fees and compensation of the marshal in California shall correspond with the fees and compensation allowed to sheriffs or other officers for similar services in the courts of that State.

I offer that amendment.

Mr. BRODHEAD. That can come in as a separate and independent proposition.

Mr. HUNTER. I suppose there is not a State in the Union in which there is not some ground for Senators' saying that the marshal's fees should be increased. If this amendment in regard to marshals in California be agreed to, Senators from all the other States will feel it their duty to offer amendments in relation to theirs. This proposes to apply to the marshal in California what I understand was the old law in regard to marshals, but repealed by the late one. I believe we shall have to make some general provision in regard to marshals, but it cannot be done on this bill.

Mr. WELLER. I think we have been promised for the last two or three years that the inconvenience and hardship, to which I have alluded, should be removed. But the reform spoken of by the Senator from Virginia is like some of my reforms. They are a day ahead of me, and retain their position. I can never find a proper time at which to correct these evils. I know an instance myself in which the marshal in California was required, under the law, to perform services which were absolutely necessary, and in which he expended some $400 or $500. Every Senator who would examine the account would be perfectly satisfied with the propriety of every item in it; and under the law as it now stands he is entitled to some forty dollars. It is utterly impossible to obtain any responsible man to discharge the duties of the office of marshal in California for a less compensation than is paid to our sheriffs. The fair and legitimate presumption is, that the State Legislature, who have the keeping of the public money in their hands, will take the care of fixing the rates of compensation for their public officers at the lowest point at which they can be fixed. In California there has been recently a great reduction in the fees allowed to some of the public officers. Under the law of 1850, the fees of nearly all the civil officers were much higher than they are now; but the people having turned their attention to the subject, through the Legislature, they reduced the fees of the sheriffs and all the other officers to the lowest point at which their services can be commanded. All I propose is, that for similar services the marshal of the United States shall be allowed the same compensation as, under the State law, is allowed to sheriffs. I know, sir, that there are some States in the Union where the State laws allow a much smaller amount than the law of the United States allows a marshal. I first inclined to the opinion that the better course was to introduce a general proposition allowing the marshals in all the States the same amount of fees as are allowed to sheriffs for similar services; but I understand the operation of that would be to reduce the fees of the marshals in some of the New England States. Therefore, I have introduced the amendment in relation to this particular instance, in which I know the grossest injustice is done to an active, efficient, and energetic public officer. Whenever the Senator from Virginia comes forward and proposes to correct any defects that exist in the marshal's fees in the State of Virginia, he shall have my support. I will go with him to correct abuses wherever I find them, and I will attack them whenever they are presented.

Mr. BRODHEAD. The original amendment relates to the officers of the Mint and sub-treasurers. The amendment of the Senator from California to that amendment, relates to marshals. It ought to be a separate section. It is not a germane amendment. I therefore hope he will permit us to take a vote on the amendment offered by his colleague.

Mr. JOHNSON. In regard to this matter of marshals, I have no doubt in the world that there is justice in the suggestions of the Senator from California, and I do believe that when the rates of fees were established for them, there was an outrage committed upon that particular branch of the service. I know, sir, that in my State that is the case; I should, therefore, be glad to see something done in reference to the whole matter; but as to taking up this isolated single proposition I will not agree to it. I believe that our legislation throughout this session, in regard to salaries, showing a general spirit of increase, is altogether distinguished by the most extraordinary inequality, and by the most exceptionable manner. I think that it ought to be done with some regularity. I presented, at the commencement of this session, petitions asking for a revision of the fees in these cases in my State, and also introduced a resolution which was passed, and referred to the Judiciary Committee, from which committee I have never heard in regard to these matters, nor in regard to the salaries of the judges of the district courts.

The proposition to which the Senator from California [Mr. WELLER] has proposed his amendment, is to increase the pay of the treasurer and superintendent of the Mint. I understand that $4,500 a year is the salary that is proposed to be given to the treasurer of the Mint. Well, sir, that is all going wrong; I do think most solemnly $4,500 a year is a large amount.

Mr. BRODHEAD. For the treasurer of the Mint?

Mr. JOHNSON. For the treasurer of the Mint $4,500 is ample, and ought to be satisfactory. I understood the Senator to say that it was $4,500.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I know that my friend from Arkansas wants to be right. Dr. Sturgeon is at present treasurer of the Mint at Philadelphia. He is also Assistant Treasurer of the United States, and therefore has the control of about $60,000,000. He is also the person who pays pensions. For all these services he now receives $4,000, and for them all we propose to give him $4,500.

Mr. JOHNSON. Do all these services belong to one office, or different offices conferred on the same individual?

Mr. BRODHEAD. They are different offices which, by this amendment, are put in one.

Mr. JOHNSON. They are different offices to which the same individual is appointed; the gross amount of receipts that he has from all is what?

Mr. BRODHEAD. It is now $4,000. It is proposed to make it $4,500.

THE CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE.

THE OFFICIAL PROCEEDINGS OF CONGRESS, PUBLISHED BY JOHN C. RIVES, WASHINGTON, D. C.

33d CONGRESS, 1st Session.

FRIDAY, JULY 28, 1854.

NEW SERIES....No. 124.

Mr. JOHNSON. If we give him $4,500 for this, I am to understand that the operation and effect of it will be, that all the offices will be combined in one.

Mr. TOOMBS. We have never allowed anything for the payment of pensions, and it is only brought in as an excuse.

Mr. BRODHEAD. They have received since 1846 about two per cent., which entitles them to about $1,000 a year. It is provided that it shall not go over $1,000 a year. That is in the $4,000.

Mr. JOHNSON. I was not aware of the fact. There is no man in the United States for whom I have a higher esteem than I have for Dr. Sturgeon, or to whom I should more gladly pay the highest tribute in my power; but I must say that I think the whole matter is going too far. I believe that the party to which I belong are to suffer for this; and I have listened to the invective and the denunciation that I have heard, in one or two instances, from the other side of the Chamber, with something like a feeling that there was justice in it. I should be glad to see it stopped. We have heard nothing but increase, increase all around, and to everybody. The rivalry has been as to who should increase the most, or to the greatest number. The criticism I make upon it, I say, can hardly be said to be unjust, for such is actually the case. Ceaselessly, proposition upon proposition comes, and you turn round and speak of judging relatively as to what has been done, to create a rule by which to govern yourselves in what you will do in another instance. You can establish no rule in this way that will attain any species of justice. I look to the district judges of the United States now serving, and I find what? I cannot speak from examination in regard to other States, but I can in regard to my own, and I believe it to be no more correct than in some of the others. I find that they are paid only $2,000 yearly. There is one of the highest class of functionaries known to this Government, one of the most power, one that is expressly, from the nature of their avocation and occupation, deprived of the power to engage in any other business. Their position requires, from the very nature of their duties, a superior class of intellect, and the highest class of moral integrity, and they must be men of standing in the community.

That is what I find in regard to the judiciary; but I find here scarcely anything said in regard to their salary except in the single case of the judges of the Supreme Court of the United States, for you have raised their salaries—that of the chief justice to $7,000, and that of the associate judges to $6,500. They are to receive pay at that rate; but the poor judges out upon the circuits, in the country are to receive but $2,000, while the directors of the Mint are receiving $4,500 or $5,000, and the clerks about this Capitol $3,000 and $3,500. I believe every head of a Bureau gets $3,500, certainly $3,000; and at this rate we are paying all around.

I do hope sincerely to see these propositions begun to be voted down; for the voting down of any of them I have not yet seen commenced; and I have felt that there has been justice in the denunciation to which I have listened of the—I would hardly like to characterize it as profligate, but certainly the very improvident—manner in which we have been voting on the subject of salaries. No increased pay is given to us here, and yet the compensation of Senators and members of the House is acknowledged, all around, to be entirely inadequate. For my own part, I know that I am compelled to borrow the money with which to pay my debts here, before I leave the place, and I believe it is the case with a large number of others. Neither my position nor my standing in the body authorizes me to come forward to endeavor to procure a change in our compensation, or I should do it, and take the responsibility at once; but nothing is proposed to be done in our case, while every other case, whether pitiful or important, is brought forward to have added twenty or thirty per cent., and some times one hundred per cent.

to it. I think it is time to stop upon others, or commence upon ourselves.

Mr. MALLORY. The amendment now, I understand, is in favor of the marshals in California. I desire to ask the honorable Senator from California what the marshal's office in that State is worth? What are the fees and emoluments of that office? Can he inform me?

Mr. WELLER. The maximum is fixed by law; and out of that, of course, he is required to pay his assistants. I think the limit is $10,000.

Mr. GWIN. At the present rate of fees the marshal's office in California is not worth $2,000 a year after all the expenses are paid. It was supposed, when the rates were fixed, that he would receive $12,000; but the expenses of his office eat up nearly all the profits.

Mr. MALLORY. I know of no Federal office in which a maximum is fixed, where the officer does not reach the maximum. I have never known a case of that kind. The fees of all our marshals and district clerks are fixed in that way: not to extend beyond a certain maximum. But it is well known that they always reach it, and sometimes go beyond it, and pay money into the Treasury over and above the maximum of receipts allowed to them.

Mr. President, all salaries, I presume, are, or should be based upon the responsibilities of the office, and the duties to be performed. Now, we have occupied about one third of our time during the consideration of this bill in the determination of the increase of salaries. We have increased the salaries of the clerks of the Departments throughout. We have increased the salaries from the heads of Departments, foreign ministers, and judges of the Supreme Court, down to our door-keepers, without taking into consideration the important fact that no extra duties have been devolved upon them, but simply that the means of living are now more expensive than they were when these salaries were fixed.

A proposition is made to increase the salary of the treasurer of the Mint at Philadelphia, and the Senator from that State brings forward two considerations, one of which has not been presented heretofore: that is, that not only have the expenses of living increased in this case, as in others, and not only have the duties been increased by the handling of $60,000,000 instead of $3,000,000, but that the responsibilities of the office have been increased in proportion as $3,000,000 are to $60,000,000; and it is to such a proposition, made under such circumstances, that for the first time we heard the cry raised against an increase of salaries. I have no doubt that a number of honorable men, capable of accepting offices of that kind are deterred from doing so because they cannot give a $300,000 bond. It is only the wealthy men who can receive an office of this character at such a salary as is now allowed, when they have to give such a large bond. If there has been any reason whatever for the large increase of salary that has been made since we have been discussing this bill, from door-keepers to heads of departments, foreign ministers, and judges of the Supreme Court, there are certainly three reasons to one to be given why this salary should be increased.

Mr. WELLER. I have no disposition whatever to embarrass, in the slightest degree, the original amendment proposed by my colleague; but I regard the one which I have submitted as quite as important as the other. I believe that much greater injustice is done to the marshal in California, than is done either to the superintendent of the Mint, or the assistant treasurer. The Senator from Florida must remember that out of the maximum of $10,000 to which I alluded, the marshal must pay the necessary expenses of his office. I undertake to say, that after deducting those expenses, the marshal for the northern district of California will not receive at the rate of $2,000 per annum. Why, sir, he is compelled, in the performance of his duty under the fee bill, instead of charging the mileage allowed by law, to charge the actual expense of serving process. Your law authorizes either the charging of mileage or the actual expenses. He is compelled to charge the actual expenses, and he is allowed nothing for the time spent by his deputies in executing such process, though none of those deputies can be employed for less than five dollars a day. The most indifferent cannot be obtained for less; so that the more writs that officer has to serve outside of the city of San Francisco, the more money he loses, and the less valuable his office becomes.

But, Mr. President, if the friends of the original proposition think this embarrasses it, I will withdraw it for the present, but I shall feel it to be my duty to submit it as a separate amendment to the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. BRIGHT.) That amendment being withdrawn, the question is on the original amendment offered by the Senator from California, [Mr. GWIN.]

Mr. GWIN. Mr. President, we were compelled to pass yesterday, I think, a bill to authorize the accounting officers, in the adjustment of the accounts of the late marshal for the northern district of California, to allow him the amount which he paid for criers of the court, which was certified by the judge who held the court to be reasonable. It was three times as much as was allowed by law, but he could not get proper persons for less. The bill passed the Senate without opposition. The present compensation allowed the officers under that miserable abortion, called the fee bill of last session, will not pay one third the expenses which the officers have to incur in my State. The amendment of my colleague, however, has been withdrawn for the present. I wish now to modify my amendment by striking out the assistant treasurer of the Mint at New Orleans, so as to provide for an increase only of the superintendent of the Mint at New Orleans. I find that the assistant treasurer is already provided for.

Mr. SLIDELL. I will state for the information of the Senator from California, that his amendment, so far from increasing the salary of the assistant treasurer at New Orleans, will reduce it.

Mr. GWIN. I will modify my amendment by striking out all that relates to the assistant treasurer at New Orleans.

Mr. SLIDELL. I think he is entitled to an increase of $500, to put him on a footing with the other officers.

Mr. GWIN. He has $4,500 now.

Mr. SLIDELL. I move to make it $5,000.

Mr. GWIN. I modify my amendment by leaving out the assistant treasurer of New Orleans.

Mr. SLIDELL. I withdraw my motion.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I have an amendment to offer to the amendment of the Senator from California. It is in relation to some of the subordinate officers of the Mint at New Orleans. I offer it, not for the benefit of the officers, but for the benefit of the public.

I can bear full testimony to what my colleague stated a few moments ago, that the branch Mint at New Orleans is losing its most valuable officers daily. I speak of the subordinates alone. The salaries allowed to them are so insufficient that they are daily withdrawn from the Mint, tempted away by higher offers from the banks, and insurance offices, and merchants, at New Orleans. As soon as an officer is ascertained to be a valuable clerk, when employed in these subordinate offices, the offices of other public institutions at New Orleans offer an increased salary, and take him away. Quite recently the superintendent of the Mint was compelled to allow an increased compensation to three or four of the officers, in regard to whose compensation he had a discretion by law, in order to prevent the banks from getting them. He has been obliged to increase the salary of his porter, and of his runner or messenger, the banks having need of officers of that kind of experience.

I propose to provide for the salaries of the melter, coiner, and refiner, and the subordinate officers. They are all below what they ought to be.

Without making, however, any specific increase of salary, I propose this amendment to the amendment, so that the salaries of the assayer, melter, and refiner of the branch Mint at New Orleans, shall be increased twenty per cent. on the amount now allowed by law.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana is an amendment to the amendment of the Senator from California.

Mr. BENJAMIN. Yes, sir. I will state, however, that the salary of the superintendent of the Mint at New Orleans, as proposed to be increased by the proposition of the Senator from California, is too great. He proposes to give him $4,000 per annum. I prefer that the increase should be taken from the superintendent's salary, and that this diminution should be added to the inferior officers. I propose, therefore, a further amendment to place the salary of the superintendent of the Mint at New Orleans at $3,000, and that these inferior officers be increased twenty per cent. That will save as much on one as we give to the others.

Mr. SLIDELL. I understand the Senator from California to have stricken out the treasurer at New Orleans, because his amendment, as offered, in fact reduced his salary from what it now is.

Mr. GWIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. DAWSON. Will the Senator from California be kind enough to say whether the officers of the Mints in North Carolina and Georgia are also increased?

Mr. BRODHEAD. The Secretary of the Treasury did not recommend them.

Mr. DAWSON. Then the doctrine is, I suppose, that the Secretary of the Treasury is to govern all the legislation of the country.

Mr. BENJAMIN. My amendment is to make the salary of the superintendent of the Mint at New Orleans $3,000, and to increase the salaries of the inferior officers twenty per cent.

Mr. GWIN. I am willing to agree to that.

Mr. DAWSON. Do I understand that the Secretary of the Treasury also recommends the increase of salaries proposed by my friend from Louisiana?

Mr. GWIN. No, sir. I was going to make that statement. I have no objection to the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana; but it goes outside of the estimates of Secretaries of the Treasury; and I am now acting entirely on the estimates sent from the office. I agree in everything that the Senator from Louisiana has said; but if he wishes to accomplish his object, I think he had better wait until the next session, and get estimates for this purpose from the head of the Department. If you vary from the estimates at all, you run the risk of losing the whole.

Mr. DAWSON. I wish to ask whether we consider ourselves bound here by the rules of the body in such a way as that we cannot increase the salaries of the officers of the Government until a recommendation for the purpose comes to us from the Treasury Department?

Mr. GWIN. It is not in order, unless it comes from a Department, or from a committee.

Mr. BADGER. Allow me to suggest to my friend, that he can move to increase the salary of every officer of the Government without the authority of a committee, or that of the head of a Department; but he cannot move to make an appropriation for that purpose without that sanction. That is the rule.

Mr. DAWSON. I want to know if a proposition depends upon the request of a head of a Department; for instance, the Secretary of the Treasury?

Mr. GWIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. DAWSON. I never understood that to be the construction of the rule; but if it be so, I desire to know who recommended the increase of the salaries of the judges of the Supreme Court? What Department recommended that? This, sir, is strange legislation, confining ourselves in the powers of this body as a part of the legislative branch of the Government, and especially in the appropriation of money, to what the heads of Departments may have recommended.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I wish the Senate to understand the precise question. The Senator from California offered an amendment, by which the salary of the superintendent of the branch Mint at New Orleans was increased to $4,000. Believing that it is better to increase the salaries of the inferior officers, my motion is simply to take off $1,000 from the proposed salary of the superintendent, and divide it among the inferior officers, who are inadequately paid. I do not propose to increase the appropriation at all.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to; and the question then was on the amendment; as amended, as follows:

Sec. —. And be it further enacted, That from and after the 30th of June, 1854, the annual salary of the Director of the Mint shall be $5,000; that of the superintendent of the branch of the Mint, and of the assistant treasurer of the United States at San Francisco, California, $6,000 each; that of the superintendent of the assay office at New York, and of the assistant treasurer at Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, $4,500; that of the superintendent of the branch Mint at New Orleans, Louisiana, $3,000; that of the treasurer at Boston, Massachusetts, $4,000; and that of the assistant treasurer at Charleston, South Carolina, $3,000: Provided, That it shall be their further duty, when designated by the President of the United States, to perform the service now authorized by law to be done by agents for paying pensions, or any other additional duties that may be required, without or other greater aggregate measure of compensation than is herein provided, and that the salaries of the assayer, coiner, melter, and refiner, in the branch Mint at New Orleans, be increased twenty per centum over the amount now allowed them by law.

Mr. HUNTER called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 11, nays 29; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Benjamin, Brodhead, Cooper, Dodge of Iowa, Gwin, Pettit, Shields, Slidell, Sumner, Thomson of New Jersey, and Weller—11.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Allen, Bright, Chase, Dawson, Dodge of Wisconsin, Douglas, Evans, Fessenden, Fitzpatrick, Foot, Geyer, Gillette, Houston, Hunter, James, Johnson, Jones of Tennessee, Mason, Norris, Pearce, Rockwell, Rusk, Sebastian, Stuart, Thompson of Kentucky, Toombs, Wade, and Walker—29.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. WELLER. I now move, as an additional section, the amendment which I offered a short time ago, and which I then withdrew. The Senate have already decided, so far as my State is concerned, that two public officers shall be starved out. I am anxious to see whether they are also determined that the marshals shall be starved out. I have no objection to modify the amendment, so that it shall apply to all the States, so as to allow the same fees that are allowed to sheriffs and similar officers of the higher courts of the States. I do not ask that my State shall have any particular advantages over any other State of this Union. I know that the Legislature of California, in fixing the fees of these public officers, was as economical as any Legislature in the Union, and surely you do not expect that your Federal officers there shall perform public duties for one fourth what is allowed by the State laws to State officers for similar services. I am not an advocate for large salaries, nor should I propose to increase the compensation of any of these officers, if I were not satisfied of the fact that it is absolutely indispensable. Look, if you please, at your judges in California. You pay the district judge of the United States for the northern district of California, $3,500 a year, while the circuit judges of the State receive $7,500, and the judges of the supreme court of the State $10,000 a year. I undertake to say that the Legislature of California would have reduced the compensation of all these officers if they could obtain competent men to fill them for less. All we now ask is, that you will give to the marshals in California the same compensation that is paid by the State authorities for similar services there, and that you ought to be willing to do.

The Secretary read the amendment, as follows:

Sec. —. And be it further enacted, That the fees and compensation allowed the marshals of the United States for the northern and southern districts of California, and to the marshals in all the States, shall correspond with the fees and compensation allowed by State laws to sheriffs or other officers for similar services in the higher courts of those States.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I concur in what has been said by the honorable Senator from California, in reference to the inadequacy of the compensation allowed to the marshals of the United States. It will be recollected that at an early period of the session I submitted a memorial on the subject, and had it referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and at that time I called their special attention to the subject; and other Senators also made suggestions in regard to it. From the intimations thrown out on that occasion, I am perfectly satisfied that the law regulating the compensation of marshals needs revision. I know it was intended to cut down the enormous fees which had been allowed in some of the large cities, and was intended to protect the inhabitants of these cities from speculation; but the effect has been to cut down the compensation in some of the States to such a low point that it is almost impossible to get men to discharge the duties of the offices. If it is the sense of the Senate that the compensation of the marshals of California shall be increased, I shall feel it to be my duty to offer an amendment providing for an increase of the compensation of the marshals in my State.

But, sir, there is a reason which prompts me to withhold my support from this amendment. I do not concur in the propriety of loading down this bill. It is out of place, and altogether improper, in my estimation, to attempt to ingraft on this bill amendments of this character. The question raised by the amendment is now pending before the Judiciary Committee; and I trust that at the next session, if not at this, we shall be able to agree upon some proposition by which we shall increase the compensation of these officers to a proper amount by a general and not a partial system of legislation. Under this view of the subject I shall be constrained to vote against this amendment.

Mr. BRODHEAD. My friend from Alabama talks about loading down this bill. Let me ask him whether he did not vote for the increase of the salaries of the judges of the Supreme Court?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I did not.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I am satisfied.

Mr. ADAMS. I hope the Senator from California will modify his amendment so as to restore it to what it formerly was, and not include other States than his own. The existing law gives to the marshal in Mississippi almost double what the State laws allow to sheriffs, and yet it is a very poor compensation to the marshal. I presume it is so in nearly all the States; so that by his amendment, as it now stands, instead of increasing, you will greatly diminish the compensation of the marshals. They have but few processes to serve, and have no perquisites but those embraced in the fee bill. You will, therefore, by this amendment, ruin the business of the marshals.

Mr. MALLORY. I trust the Senator from California will restore his amendment to what it was before. If I am to vote for the amendment at all, I should prefer it in its original state, because I believe injustice will be done by including all the other States, my own among the number. I will also say to my friend from California, that I think he is mistaken in supposing that out of the maximum of $10,000 allowed to the marshal, he has to pay his deputies and all the expenses of his office. If the Senator will reflect on it, I think he will perceive that the $10,000 is the maximum beyond which the marshal cannot receive, and that all the expenses of the office are first to be paid. I will say nothing against allowing the marshals in California what the State officers receive for similar services, because I know that their duties there must be arduous. But I simply protest against including in the same proposition all the other States, because it will be a reduction instead of an increase.

Mr. WELLER. I did not wish to modify my amendment by including all the other States. I merely suggested that if it were more acceptable to the Senate, I would agree to that; but I did not modify it myself. I therefore strike out the words "and to the marshals of all the States," so as to confine it simply to the marshals in California. Now, let me say to my friend from Alabama, [Mr. FITZPATRICK,] that at the last session of Congress my colleague and myself were as well satisfied as we are now that the fee bill was an iniquitous one, and would work a great injustice to a large number of meritorious officers. We were told, however, that the last session was too short to allow a remedy, and now this is too long a one! Sir, I should like to know when my friend from Alabama will soberly and seriously set himself to work to correct this crying abuse? At the last session of Congress, nothing could be accomplished because the session was too short. Now we have had some eight months, and here, at the close of this session, it is said that at the next session we can correct this evil! Well, sir, the next session, so far as reform is concerned, will never come. As regards my own State, my anxiety is to save a useful public officer, and place him in a position where he will not be compelled to resign. At the present compensation it is utterly hopeless to suppose that he can continue to discharge the duties of his office.

Mr. JOHNSON. If there is any member of the Judiciary Committee present, I should be glad to hear from him on this subject. The whole matter was referred to them, and I should like to know to what conclusion they have arrived. The Senator from Indiana, who is a member of that committee, is present; perhaps he can inform me.

Mr. PETTIT. I will state to the Senator frankly all that I know upon that subject. The Judiciary Committee, as is the practice of all other committees, I believe, divides out its business, specially charging one member with the examination of this, that, or the other matter, and he reports his views to the committee. The whole subject of increasing salaries and fees of judges, clerks, and marshals, was put in the hands of the Senator from Georgia, [Mr. TOOMBS], and I am inclined to think he is averse to any alteration or change. I think, therefore, that the Committee on the Judiciary will not probably report anything at this session upon the subject of the compensation of these officers.

Mr. JOHNSON. Then, as the subject was referred to the Senator from Georgia, I would ask him whether he ever reported it to his committee, and whether the committee has taken any action on the matter?

Mr. TOOMBS. On the question of the compensation of judicial officers?

Mr. JOHNSON. Yes, sir. It is a pretty hard case if we are to refer subjects to that committee, and never hear of them afterwards.

Mr. TOOMBS. The state of the case is this: I prepared, after a great deal of trouble, some information on the subject of the compensation of the judges, clerks, marshals, and attorneys of the United States courts, and I reported it to the committee, and there was some understanding in reference to it among them. The Senator from Delaware, [Mr. BAYARD], however, had a substitute for the bill which I proposed; but I think we virtually came to an agreement. The committee, however, instructed me not to report the bill until after action should be had on the bill for the reorganization of the judiciary. That has now been before the Senate for about four months, and has not been acted on. In obedience to that command of my committee, I have not made any report upon the subject.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. In answer to my friend from California, who asked when I would seriously and soberly consider the subject of increasing the compensation of these officers, I will say that, at an early part of the session I introduced a resolution in relation to it, and had it referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. I do not now see in his seat the honorable Senator from South Carolina, who is chairman of that committee, but I presume he will bear testimony that I repeatedly called on him and urged action on the subject. I do not know, whether, from my repeated importunities, he would consider that I was sober or not. [Laughter.]

Mr. TOOMBS. I can answer the gentleman. That matter was referred to me also. The whole subject as to the increase of compensation of marshals, district attorneys, and clerks, and raising the salaries of the judges, was referred to me, and they all stand in the condition I have just stated.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. So I understood.

Mr. WELLER. I hold in my hand the law fixing the compensation of these Federal officers, and I propose to read three lines from it:

"The expenses of the marshal while employed in endeavoring to arrest, under process, any person charged with or convicted of a crime, the sum actually expended, not to exceed two dollars per day, in addition to his compensation for service and travel."

I know a case where the marshal of the northern district of California was applied to by a captain of a vessel immediately after he had left the harbor of San Francisco, upon information properly filed, that sixteen of his crew were in a state of mutiny. They placed themselves in a state of mutiny as soon as the vessel left the harbor of San Francisco. One of the officers reached the shore, and gave information to the marshal. The marshal was compelled to go and employ some eight or ten men to accompany him, in order to arrest the mutinous seamen, who were then ten miles from the city of San Francisco. The whole expense was about $500. Every man who went on that service went at the hazard of his life; for there was a violent gale blowing at the time. For that service he is allowed under this law forty dollars, and he paid for it out of his own pocket $500; and that you call justice!

The amendment was rejected; there being, on a division—ayes 17, noes 19.

Mr. JAMES. I am instructed by the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office to offer the following amendment, to come in after the appropriation for the contingent expenses of the Patent Office:

To reimburse the patent fund for expenses already incurred and paid for furnishing the new wing of the Patent Office, the sum of $16,000; and the appropriation made by the act approved the 31st of May, 1851, for finishing said wing be, and the same is hereby, authorized to be transferred by the proper accounting officers of the Treasury to the credit of the patent fund.

It will be seen, sir, by the amendment, that no appropriation is called for. It is simply a transfer which is recommended by the Commissioner of Patents, and also by the Secretary of the Interior.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JAMES. I have another amendment to offer from the same committee, to come in before the appropriation for contingent expenses of the Patent Office:

For the purchase of books for the library of the Patent Office, and for supplying a deficiency in former appropriations the sum of $5,000, to be paid out of the patent fund.

This calls for no appropriation from the Treasury. I hope there will be no objection to it.

Mr. HUNTER. Is there an estimate for it?

Mr. JAMES. It is recommended by the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Patents.

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. JAMES. I have one more amendment to offer from the same committee. It is to come in immediately after the one which has just been adopted:

For the annual compensation of a librarian, to be appointed by the Commissioner of Patents, the sum of $1,600, the amount now allowed by law to clerks of the third class, to be paid out of the patent fund.

Mr. HUNTER. This is an additional office.

Mr. JAMES. It is called for by the Commissioner of Patents, and recommended by the Secretary of the Interior. It is to be appropriated out of the patent fund, and not out of the Treasury.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I am authorized by the Committee on Territories to offer a few amendments in pursuance of the act of Congress which recently passed for the organization of the Territories of Kansas and Nebraska. It will be recollected that the act contained a provision that the usual appropriations should thereafter be made for the erection of public buildings, and for libraries in those Territories. In pursuance of that provision, I offer amendments to appropriate $25,000 for public buildings in Kansas, and the same sum for public buildings in Nebraska, and also to repeal so much of the provision of that act as located the seat of government of Kansas at Fort Leavenworth. The reason for that is, that the Secretary of War has notified the Governor of Kansas that the buildings at Fort Leavenworth and the military reservation cannot be spared for the seat of government; that it is all necessary for military purposes, and that a divided jurisdiction would be destructive to the military operations there. For these reasons the Secretary of War cannot surrender the control of the public buildings at that place for a seat of government. I therefore propose to allow any other place to be selected as the seat of government for the Territory, the same as for Nebraska. The first amendment which I offer from the Committee on Territories is to add at the end of the territorial appropriations the following:

For the erection of public buildings in the Territories of Kansas and Nebraska, to be expended under the direction of the Governors thereof respectively, $25,000 for each of said Territories; and so much of the act for the organization of said Territories as locates the seat of government of Kansas at Fort Leavenworth is hereby repealed.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I wish to ask whether that act does not make these appropriations for Nebraska?

Mr. DOUGLAS. The act contains no appropriations at all. They were all stricken out from the original bill; but it authorized the usual appropriations to be made hereafter. This, therefore, is merely to carry out that act.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. Is the amendment to appropriate $25,000 for this purpose?

Mr. DOUGLAS. For each Territory.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. I think $40,000 has been the usual amount appropriated.

Mr. DOUGLAS. That has been when there has been an extra appropriation. I merely wish now to make the usual appropriation which has been made at first for public buildings. I should not like to go beyond that.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I am also directed by the same committee to offer the following amendment, to come in after the one just adopted:

For libraries at the seat of government of each of the Territories of Kansas and Nebraska, under such regulations as shall be prescribed by law, $5,000 for each of said Territories.

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. BELL. I have waited for some time to offer an amendment, which is to do what I consider to be an act of sheer justice. I offer the following amendment, to come in at the end of the appropriations for New Mexico:

For the payment of Richard H. Weightman, for mileage and per diem compensation for the second session of the Thirty-first Congress, as an agent claiming to be a Senator elected from New Mexico, $2,460.

Mr. HUNTER. Is that in order? Does it come from a committee?

Mr. BELL. It is from a committee, I will inform the honorable Senator—the Committee on Territories.

Mr. SLIDELL. I think it is a private claim, if I understand what a private claim is.

Mr. BELL. It certainly cannot be a private claim.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. BRIGHT.) If the amendment be recommended by a committee, it is in order of course.

Mr. SLIDELL. I have already had several claims of this sort ruled out of order, and I should feel that I was not doing justice to myself if other claims of a similar character were allowed to pass without objection.

Mr. BELL. This certainly is not a private claim.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is an existing law, as a matter of course, paying Senators their mileage and per diem. This is an appropriation recommended by the Committee on Territories, to carry out the law.

Mr. SLIDELL. It is denied that Mr. Weightman ever was a Senator. I cannot call it a doubtful question. He has not the least pretension to be called such, and I cannot allow it to be considered that he was a Senator.

Mr. BELL. Does the Chair decide the amendment to be out of order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair decides that it is in order.

Mr. BELL. Now, I think I can appeal to the sense of justice of the honorable Senator from Louisiana in regard to this matter. I will not argue the question at this late period, for I know this is not the time for argument; but I wish to state a few facts.

Mr. SLIDELL. If the Senator from Tennessee is addressing his argument solely to me, allow me to say to him that I think I understand the case very well, and know all the facts.

Mr. BELL. Then, I will address the statement to other honorable Senators, excluding the honorable Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. SLIDELL. Oh, no; not at all.

Mr. BELL. A provisional government was organized in Oregon before the organization of that Territory, and they sent a Delegate or agent here. He made application for mileage and per diem, and it was acceded to him, though no territorial government had then been formed in Oregon. The same thing occurred in Utah. They sent a Delegate here to know in what relations they were to stand to this Government, no territorial government having been organized for them. After you formed a territorial government for Utah, you paid the Delegate sent here by the Mormons there. This case comes from the Territory of New Mexico. They organized in 1850 a State government, and supposed they would be accepted as a State of the Union. They therefore sent no delegate, but their Legislature chose two Senators, and the people elected one Representative who, it was of course presumed, would act as Delegates or agents. It was supposed that, even if they were not accepted as members of the two Houses, they would be here in such a position as to represent the wishes and wants of that Territory. One of the persons selected as Senators [Mr. Weightman] came on to this city; the other did not.

Well, sir, you did not accept the constitution of New Mexico, but refused her admission as a State. You, however, paid the Representative whom she sent to the other House as an agent his mileage and per diem; but, by an accidental omission, you failed to provide for the payment of Mr. Weightman, who came here claiming to be Senator elect from New Mexico. I learn from Senators who were privy to the transaction, that it was by an accidental omission that he was not provided for. I have no personal connection whatever with this gentleman. I know him; but I have not seen him for a long time. This is a question that has been presented to the Committee on Territories for two or three sessions past, and has always been favorably acted on by them. I make the proposition to pay Mr. Weightman on the same ground that you paid the Delegate from Oregon, who came without authority, on the same ground that you paid the Delegate from Utah, who came without authority, and on the same ground that you paid the Representative from New Mexico, who was sent here with Mr. Weightman. Upon what principle of justice can there be a discrimination between them? What objection, after these precedents, can there be to paying Mr. Weightman? The honorable chairman of the Committee on Territories, if he were now present, would confirm every fact I have stated, and would show that it was by an accidental omission Mr. Weightman was not paid with the others.

Mr. STUART. I rise only for the purpose of calling the attention of the Senate to the fact that we had a very lengthy discussion of this subject upon the deficiency bill, in the course of which the Senate was advised of every fact in relation to the case, and the majority then voted in favor of the proposition. I had the fortune or misfortune to vote against it; but I only ask that we shall now come to a vote upon it, believing that we have all the knowledge which we can get by discussion.

Mr. SLIDELL. I do not desire to be misunderstood in reference to this matter. I have a very decided opinion about the question. I voted with the Senator from Michigan on the occasion to which he refers, after an examination of the subject; but I have raised the question of order, whether this is not obnoxious to the same objection which various other amendments that have been offered to this bill have met with on the part of Senators, and which have been ruled out of order. I wish to know whether it is not a private claim. I think it is.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has decided that, in his opinion, the amendment is in order. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. I recollect well the circumstances under which this individual came here. I never was more sensibly impressed with the justice of a claim in my life than I am of the justice of this claim, in view of all the precedents and of the condition of the country at the time. As I stated on a former occasion, this allowance would have been made at the compromise session of 1850 by an overwhelming majority, but for the unfortunate opposition of my friends from Texas, who, by their capital management, got $10,000,000 for their State to settle the boundary difficulty.

Mr. HOUSTON. Let me say to my friend from Iowa that I have had time to look into this matter, and that I am satisfied that it is a just claim. I cannot speak for my colleague; but for myself I am prepared to vote for the amendment as a just allowance which ought to be made.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ADAMS. I have one little amendment to offer. It is the only amendment I have offered, or shall offer, to this bill. It is to add the following additional section:

Sec. — And be it further enacted, That the act of April 22, 1854, is hereby so construed as to allow the clerks in the Patent Office, appointed under the second section of the act of March 3, 1839, who were not embraced in the said act of April 22, the same increase of compensation as was allowed to messengers, watchmen, and laborers, by said act of April 22: Provided, however, That no clerk shall receive a greater amount of additional compensation than was allowed to clerks of like grade by said act of April 22.

I only wish to say, that all the clerks not embraced in that law of April 22, 1854, have been embraced in this bill, with the exception of these clerks. Their salary was fixed in 1839, and there is the same reason for increasing it as for increasing the salaries of the other clerks.

Mr. HUNTER. These, as I understand, are the copying clerks in the Patent Office. I went to see the Secretary of the Interior on the subject, and I understand that they are compensated by the word, and well compensated. It is a kind of business at which an adroit and skillful clerk can make more money than many of the regular clerks. I think it would be improper to disturb that arrangement. I understand it is one of the best arranged of all the classes of temporary clerks. I do not think they are entitled to come under the benefits of the general provisions of the act of April 22d last.

Mr. ADAMS. I was governed in this matter by the opinion of the Commissioner of Patents, under whom these clerks labor. If their salary was correctly fixed, in 1839, at ten cents per one hundred words, with the present expense of living, I suppose it would hardly be a reasonable compensation now.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. CHASE. I desire to move a reconsideration of a vote on an amendment which has already been adopted.

Several SENATORS. Let us first get through with the amendments which we have to offer.

Mr. CHASE. I yield to the general sense of the Senate.

Mr. GWIN. I have an amendment to offer as an additional section:

Sec. — And be it further enacted, That the district judges for the State of California, while in the discharge of their duties, imposed by the act of the 3d March, 1851, entitled "An act to ascertain and settle the private land claims in the State of California," be allowed at the rate of $2,000 per annum, in addition to their salaries as district judges for the State of California, which shall be in full for their services.

I will state, Mr. President, that it has been the practice of the Government for the last thirty years, where additional duties in the settlement of land claims have been imposed on the judges of the district courts, to allow them additional compensation for services thus performed. There was a law passed in 1824 for the judges of Missouri and Arkansas for similar services, and this amendment is in the very words of that law furnished to me by the Attorney General. The same case has occurred in Louisiana, Mississippi, and Florida. It has been the case in every State where these additional duties have been imposed on the judges.

To show the necessity of some additional compensation to these judges in California, I will inform the Senate of some statements which I have from the Attorney General, in answer to inquiries which I put to him. He says that this has been the practice of the Government for thirty years—from the time the first act passed to bring these cases into the United States courts. He then states, in regard to the number of cases, that:

"The number of land claims on the docket of the commissioners in California, at the date of the last report thereof, was about four hundred and fifty. The number now in my office is ninety; and according to the present course of business before the commissioners, the number of cases certified to me will be greatly increased before any decision of the Supreme Court can be had, so as to establish general principles, and remove the necessity of appeals to the district courts."

There were upwards of eight hundred cases before the commissioners originally. The residue have been acted upon. There are now, as the Attorney General states, ninety cases of appeals to the district courts. I presume that every case decided against the United States, and every case decided against private claimants, will be appealed to the district courts. The lands are so valuable, and the amounts involved so great, that it will be impossible to settle these cases until some few of them are decided in the Supreme Court of the United States. The district judge for the southern district of California gets but $2,800, and the judge for the northern district only $3,500. There has not been a day, since the northern district was organized, that the judge was able to sit on the bench, that his court has not been in session. There is not a judge in the United States, not excepting the judges on the Supreme Court bench, who has more duties and more responsibilities. All I wish, is to give the judges in California compensation in proportion to their services.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. Mr. President, I am friendly to the object which the Senator from California has in view, that of compensating judicial officers for extra labor which has been imposed upon them since the acceptance of their offices; and, in moving to amend the amendment, as I propose to do, I do it, not with any view to embarrass that proposition, but in the utmost good faith. I am for the consideration of as much of this subject together as is germane to the common purpose in view. I therefore move to amend the amendment of the Senator from California by adding to it:

For payment of salary, in addition to that now allowed by law to the district judge of the State of Arkansas, at the rate of $2,500 per annum in future, $500.

Mr. GWIN. I hope the Senator from Arkansas will not embarrass my proposition by his amendment. They relate to entirely different matters.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. The only difference between the two cases is this: The additional duties imposed on the district judge of Arkansas are permanent in their character, and running through all future time, whereas the proposition of the Senator from California is to pay for temporary services already performed. The two propositions are alike for extra services in both cases, and I can see no reason why you should make any discrimination between them. Neither is now ingrafted in any existing law, but both alike bring up the question of compensation for extra services.

The compensation of the district judge of the State of Arkansas is grossly inadequate, as every Senator who can well appreciate the value of legal services, and the order of talent required for a district judge, must readily perceive. The salary now allowed by law is but $2,000 for holding two protracted terms of the district court at the seat of government, and two additional terms near the boundary of the Indian nation, with an additional jurisdiction and an additional court for the purpose of trying Indian cases. That duty has been imposed upon him by law. It was something beyond what he expected, and what he had a right to expect at the time he accepted the office; and to that extent it is literally extra duty. I insist that it is not only right to pay extra compensation in this case, but it is right in all cases similarly circumstanced. I allude now not to those general considerations which have been adduced here in favor of an increase of all salaries, in consideration of the changed condition of things in the country, but I speak of a condition of affairs which applies to this particular judgeship and no other that I am aware of in the western country. I hope, therefore, that the amendment which I have offered will not be considered an embarrassment to the proposition of the Senator from California. The only difference between the two cases is, that my proposition is for permanent and extra service, while his is for temporary services already performed.

Mr. GWIN. I trust the Senator will not insist upon his amendment. I wish to have a vote on mine as a separate proposition. It is one entirely in accordance with all the precedents where district judges have had imposed upon them duties connected with the settlement of private land claims. I know that the judge in Arkansas does not get enough, and I am perfectly satisfied that he should have increased compensation; but here is an extraordinary necessity in California. These judges will not try the cases unless they get a sufficient compensation, and you cannot force them to try them, so that all our land cases may lie over for years. They can resign, if they choose, and leave the land claims in their present unsettled state. In the present condition of land claims in that State, there are great conflicts arising, and unless we give the judges a sufficient compensation to discharge these duties which have been imposed upon them since their office were created, we cannot expect them to work day and night to clear their dockets.

Mr. DAWSON. Will the Senator from California state to me how it is that they are not bound, as judges, to investigate land claims?

Mr. GWIN. Why, sir, the judges of the Supreme Court of the United States laid over land cases for six years, because they were not prepared to take them up.

Mr. DAWSON. But the question I ask, is, whether it is not part of the duty of these judges, as judges, to attend to this business?

Mr. GWIN. It is an additional duty which has been imposed on them, and for which judges in all the other States have always been paid. It was imposed on them by a separate and distinct law, and not by the act under which they were appointed. My object is not to bring up the general question of raising the salaries of the judges of the district courts, which I know are wholly inadequate. I have confined my amendment strictly to the precedents cited by the Attorney General in his letter, in which he shows that in every State of the Union where these land claims by special laws have been brought within the jurisdiction of the district court, the district judges have always been allowed extra compensation.

Mr. DAWSON. I think there is a mistake about this matter. The laws of Congress prescribe what shall be the duties of judges; and they are as much bound to consider questions relating to land titles as those relating to the titles to personalty, if they fall within their jurisdiction. Now, there never has been any deficiency in the powers of the courts in reference to title to personalty or to real estate.

Mr. GWIN. If the Senator will permit me, I will read the law to which I refer, to show him that this is nothing but what is usual. It is in these words:

An act enabling the claimants to lands within the limits of the State of Missouri and Territory of Arkansas to institute proceedings to try the validity of their claims.

Sec. 13. And be it further enacted, That the district judge for the State of Missouri shall, while in the discharge of the duties imposed by this act, be allowed at the rate of eight hundred dollars per annum, in addition to his salary, as district judge for the State of Missouri, which shall be in full for his services.

Approved May 26, 1824.

This was the first law which authorized these cases to be brought into the United States courts. Prior to that time, they were brought before Congress by the commissioners. Subsequently they were tried in the district courts, and then the district judges were always allowed additional compensation.

Mr. DAWSON. The Congress of the United States have no power to take away from the courts the cases which they shall try. The Constitution regulates that.

Mr. BENJAMIN. Will my friend from Georgia allow me to explain?

Mr. DAWSON. Certainly.

Mr. BENJAMIN. The cases of which the Senator from California speaks are cases where claimants claim titles to land, as against the General Government, under grants made by foreign Governments previously to the acquisition of the States where the claims are made to the Union, and, consequently, there is no jurisdiction in the courts of the United States to try those claims, unless it be specially imposed on them.

Mr. DAWSON. That is what I supposed.

Mr. BENJAMIN. This is an additional duty imposed on the judges, and for such special duty they have always been paid extra.

Mr. DAWSON. Now, I wish to know of the Senator from California whether there has been any special act of Congress requiring the judges of the United States courts there to try these titles to land?

Mr. GWIN. The law is, that the claims are to be examined by the board of commissioners, and the same law gives a right of appeal from their decision to the district court.

Mr. DAWSON. It gives a right of appeal to the district court, and thus changes the whole character of the precedent cited from Missouri. In that case the judge was a commissioner to try the land cases. He tried all the cases as commissioner; and then, if the parties were dissatisfied, they could appeal to the court. That is the way in which he received additional compensation; but this is a different case. Now, I will say to the Senator that, at the proper time, whenever we ascertain the extent of the duty discharged by these judges, if it shall be thought that it does not come within the general purview of the duties assigned to the district judges, I will vote for proper additional compensation; but I cannot vote to increase their salaries $2,000 a year, when there is no law requiring of them the discharge of this duty.

Mr. GWIN. The Senator is mistaken. They are bound, by law, to try those cases.

Mr. DAWSON. They are bound to try appeals from the commissioners, in order that the cases may go from the district to the Supreme Court. That is all.

Mr. GWIN. But they try them as entirely new cases.

Mr. MALLORY. Mr. President, my friend from California always speaks in such a tone of earnest indignation against the parsimonious legislation of the country for California, that I generally feel disposed, without questioning the matter, to vote with him. Here, however, he asks an increase of salary to the extent of $2,000 per year in addition to the salary now allowed to the district judges of California. The district judge of the northern district of California already receives $3,500. If we allow the increase now proposed, it will be a far greater increase than ever has been given to a district judge on similar grounds. If the Senator would take the increase to the judges in Missouri and the other Territories, including Florida, for such services, and confine himself to that, there would be some parallel between them; but he goes further. The salaries of the district judges of California have been already based upon the increased expenditure necessary to live in that State; and, therefore, in giving them additional allowance, we need not take that matter again into consideration. But in the case to which the Senator from California alludes, the judges were not called upon to act on those land cases as judges, but they sat as commissioners, not as judges, and no appeals lay from them as judges, or as commissioners, to the circuit or supreme court. I can be corrected if I am wrong in this.

Mr. GWIN. The gentleman speaks of his own State. It was not so in Missouri.

Mr. MALLORY. But if the honorable Senator will look at one of the last decisions of the Supreme Court on this subject, he will find that a case brought up from the northern district of Florida was set aside exclusively on the ground of a want of jurisdiction in the judge of the district court sitting as judge. If these district judges in California are to try causes in appeal as judges, then I should be willing to vote an increase of salary to them, but not upon the ground that we are giving them a salary to try land causes; because, as has been remarked by the Senator from Georgia, they will be bound to take jurisdiction of those causes any how, with their present salary. If that salary is not sufficient, and it seems to be low for California, I am willing to vote an increase, but not in this way.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, I am not unfavorable to the proposition of the Senator from California, and I shall be glad to see it adopted. I have, however, already made some remarks today which will show him that I am sincere in endeavoring to get for my own State the proposition which has been offered by my colleague as an amendment to the amendment of the Senator from California. The amendment offered by my colleague only proposes to give $500 additional to the district judge of Arkansas. I make no complaint of the Senator from California for bringing forward his proposition for a larger increase in his State. On the contrary, I think it necessary, and shall support it.

There is a peculiarity in the case of Arkansas which eminently entitles the amendment of my colleague to the favorable consideration of the Senate. Before I touch on that, however, let me remind the Senator from California that, in the cases to which he refers in Missouri and Arkansas, the district judge was allowed the additional compensation for doing this duty as a land court; and in that view, perhaps, a distinction could be drawn between that increase of compensation and the one proposed by the Senator. The jurisdiction given over land cases in California to the district court is but an appellate jurisdiction, not inconsistent at all with the regular business of that court, but being in fact a part of the business of the court at the time it was established by law, and before the judge was appointed to it. So I understand the case to be. I do not understand that it is a separate and distinct burden which was put upon the district judges in California.

Mr. GWIN. The Senator is mistaken; it is.

Mr. JOHNSON. The Senator from California says it is. At any rate, the judges in California have only an appellate jurisdiction over these land causes. It has been a jurisdiction attached to those judges since their offices were created, and since the judges were appointed, according to the statement now made by the Senator. That renders the case presented by him more meritorious, but still it does not give it any precedence over the application made by my colleague, particularly when the additional salary asked for by him is not, by any means, so great as that proposed by the amendment of the Senator from California.

My colleague and myself ask for additional compensation for additional services, which have been imposed on the district judge in Arkansas since his appointment. We might well, in support of this proposition, appeal to the clause in the Constitution of the United States, familiar to the mind of every Senator, that the judges of the United States shall "receive for their services a compensation which shall not be diminished during their continuance in office." It cannot be denied, that if you impose extra services upon an officer after he has been appointed at a fixed salary, you may put such an amount of services on him as to overburden him, and thereby effectually diminish his salary, in fact, so as to drive him from the office rather than submit to it.

Now, sir, the case submitted by my colleague is this: The district judge of the United States, in Arkansas, receives only $2,000 a year. Since the time he was appointed to that office, an additional district court has been provided there. It is one which takes jurisdiction of all the Indian territory west of our State, and embracing with it some five or six counties of Arkansas, in order that there may be places within the State for the selection of juries and other facilities for carrying on the business of the court. That district embraces, as I have said, all the Indian territories west of Arkansas, and its business is very heavy. By the creation of this new district, a large class of business, of which the district court of Arkansas never before had jurisdiction, has now been added to the duties of the present judge. The consequence of it is, that he has to travel one hundred and seventy miles, twice a year, to hold that court. The terms are long. The jurisdiction extends over the vast tract of country lying west of Arkansas, and some of it west of Missouri, and running on to the boundaries of New Mexico.

From this statement any Senator can see at once the difference between the duties now imposed on the district judge in Arkansas, and those which were required of him when he was first appointed. He is now required to hold five court terms, and he is necessarily constantly engaged in them. His compensation remains at $2,000, as it was when he was originally appointed, although the traveling and incidental expenses thrown upon him by the creation of the new district in that State, as well as the labor and service required of him, have been greatly increased.

I cannot believe, under these circumstances, but that the case of the judge in Arkansas is one which ought to be provided for. The judge himself has felt how onerous it is. He has hitherto been unable to get his representatives in the Senate and House to act upon the subject, or at least they have been unable to get it before the two Houses. At an early period of the session, we had the question referred to the Committee on the Judiciary; but we have never heard, from that day to this, a word from the Judiciary Committee in reference to it, and we now learn that, under an order of the committee, the gentleman to whom they referred the subject was directed not to bring forward a remedy for such injustices as this until the bill for the reorganization of the judiciary department should be taken up and acted on. I have seen no effort to take up that bill. I regret exceedingly that there has been no effort to bring it to the consideration of the Senate; or at least, such a slight and comparatively unimportant effort as to show that the feelings of the committee could not be very strongly in favor of action. This is an isolated case, and I hope it will be provided for on its own merits. I am, sir, sorry that I have had to support my colleague in his amendment to add this to the amendment of the Senator from California; but I feel constrained to support it in that mode; and I hope it will be adopted.

Mr. GWIN. Mr. President, the difference between the two cases is, that the Senator from Arkansas proposes a permanent increase of the salary of the district judge in that State, whereas the proposition I make is to give increased compensation to the judges in California per annum, just so long as Congress chooses to give this compensation for extra services rendered. It is only to be paid from year to year, as appropriated by Congress. It is for additional services, not connected with the general question of judicial salaries at all. I did not want to introduce the subject of increased judicial salaries, because I knew that would break down of its own weight as an amendment to this bill; but these are isolated cases. My proposition is to pay for duties imposed on the district judges in California by the act of March 3, 1851, to settle private land claims in California, and not included in the act to establish judicial districts in that State, which was passed in September, 1850. It is well known that that bill, as it passed the Senate, established the salary of the judge of the northern district of California at $6,000, and of the southern district at $4,000. It was amended in the House, so as to allow the salaries which are now paid. When it came back to us from the House, the member of the Judiciary Committee, who had it in charge, [Mr. Dayton, of New Jersey,] appealed to the Senators from California to accept that; and said there could be no doubt that the salaries would be increased the next year; but from that day to this we have never been able to get an increase. It was an entirely insufficient salary, and I declared, then, that I was opposed to giving less than $6,000 for the judge of the northern district of California. Every member of the Senate knows that I protested against fixing the salaries at the rate at which they were then established; but now we have put additional duties on these judges, and I ask no increased salary for them, but simply additional compensation for the additional duties imposed on them by the act of March 3, 1851.

Mr. WELLER. I have but a few words to say in addition to what has been so well said by my colleague. There is nothing now operating so detrimentally on the interests of California as the unsettled condition of land titles. There has not been a single mail from that State opened in this city during the last three months, which has not brought intelligence of violence and bloodshed, growing out of these difficulties. In every portion of the State there has already been a vast amount of bloodshed because of the unsettled condition of land titles there. It is a contest between the claimant and the settler. The settler will not yield that which he has cultivated, until the highest tribunal known to your laws, has finally confirmed the validity of the original claim.

Now, the law imposes on the district judges in California, the duty of passing on these land claims. You established a board of land commissioners; you allow an appeal from their decision to the district court, and from the district court to the supreme court. I know that the judge of the northern district of California, in the discharge of the duties which already belong to his office, is constantly employed. I do not see for myself, how it is possible for the judge of the northern district to discharge the duties imposed upon him, even without these land cases being submitted to him at all. I know that during the past summer his court was in session nearly every day, and he was not allowed scarcely an hour for recreation or amusement. In the discharge of the ordinary business of her courts he finds enough to put his physical and mental energies to the fullest test.

You have imposed the examination of the land claims upon that court. In order to pass upon them speedily, the judge will have to draw upon his physical energies to the utmost extent they are capable of enduring. In order to induce him to do that, it is proposed, during the period that these additional duties are imposed upon his court, to allow him an additional compensation of $2,000. The board of commissioners to investigate land claims expires on the 4th of March next by limitation of law, and the probability is that there will be no extension of their service. In the mean time the vast multitude of cases passed upon by them must be submitted to the district courts. My colleague and myself are anxious to afford every inducement to the speedy settlement of these claims. If there be more riots, if there be more bloodshed, as there already have been, we desire that the bloodshed shall be upon other hands, and not upon ours. There is an obligation resting on us to do everything in our power to procure a speedy settlement of the land claims. We have endeavored to urge it this day on the consideration of the Senate. If the Senate choose to take the responsibility of all the difficulties that will result from the unsettled condition of these land claims, let them do so; but no part of it shall rest upon me. If you are willing to do gross injustice to these judges, by exacting the most onerous service from them without compensation, let it be so decided. But I must say there is neither reason nor justice in this.

Mr. GWIN. I appeal again to the Senator from Arkansas not to embarrass my proposition by insisting on his amendment; but let him bring it up as a separate measure. I am in favor of it, and will vote for it as a distinct amendment.

Mr. STUART. I wish to make a suggestion to the Senator from California, and to the Senator from Arkansas. Undoubtedly, I apprehend, there will be a proposition to increase the salaries of the judges of the district courts. If no other Senator moves it, I shall offer it myself. Their present inadequate salaries are a crying evil, and they ought to be increased, and it ought to be done upon this bill. It is equally true, however, that there are a great many things upon this bill that ought not to be done.

While I am on the floor, I wish to correct what the Senator from California [Mr. Gwin] said, in one particular. He said it had always been customary to pay for such services. The fact is, that these services were imposed upon the territorial judges of Michigan. The Senate has again and again passed bills to pay them for that duty, but down to this day they have not been paid. It is a striking fact; but still it does not go to prove that the judges in California ought not to be paid. I think a compromise may be got at, and if we are disposed to save time I think it will be better for the Senators from Arkansas to withdraw their proposition, and let it come up as it will in a few minutes on a proposition to increase the salaries of the district judges which should be increased, and increase them on a proper basis on which we can agree without difficulty.

Mr. PETTIT. I will offer such an amendment, if the Senators who have offered the pending amendments will withdraw them.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. To avoid prolonging this debate, I will, under the assurance of the Senator from Indiana that the subject shall be brought up, withdraw my amendment; but if it be not brought up by others, I shall bring it up myself.

Mr. GWIN. Now, I hope the Senate will take into consideration the special case provided for in my amendment. It is to pay for special services under a special law, and it is only an increase from year to year, as those services may be continued.

Mr. BUTLER. Originally, Mr. President, it was proposed that these land claims in California should be decided by commissioners as a separate body, and that their decisions should be subject to revision by the Supreme Court, or should be subject to the revision of Congress. The Senator from California himself, and I think very properly, said that he wished to bring these claims within the jurisdiction of the district court as a court, so that they might be brought up to the Supreme Court to be decided, and not left to mere commissioners. Now, sir, so long as a judge is a judge with the jurisdiction, and no more than the jurisdiction of a judge, he must abide by the salary which is awarded to him by law. Whenever, however, you make him a commissioner, separate from his functions as a judge, and give him a jurisdiction different from that of a judge, you ought to pay him as a commissioner. But in this case I cannot vote for this increase because these duties were incident to the judicial functions of the judge. I have said, as the Senator from California knows, that I believed the salaries of the district judges in California were too low, and I have always been willing to raise them; but, consistently with my opinions that this judge is exercising no more than the jurisdiction of a judge incident to the very law which the Senator himself insisted upon, and I think very properly, I cannot vote for this proposition.

Mr. GWIN. It is very true that I insisted on these cases coming up to the Supreme Court of the United States through the district courts; but the Senator from South Carolina ought to recollect, and I am sorry he seems to have forgotten the fact, that, when the act extending the judicial system to California was proposed, a bill was reported from the Judiciary Committee, and it passed the Senate, without a dissenting voice, giving the judge of the northern district of California $6,000, and of the southern district $4,000.

Mr. BUTLER. I was in favor of it.

Mr. GWIN. Certainly; but when it went to the House, they struck the salaries down to $3,500 in the one case, and $2,800 in the other. The Senator from New Jersey, [Mr. Dayton,] then a member of the Committee on the Judiciary, who had charge of the bill, appealed to the Senators from California, rather than defeat the measure, to agree to the salaries fixed by the House, and he said that at the next session we could obtain an increase. I regret that I ever agreed to have any judicial system established there with such insufficient salaries. He promised, however, that the salaries should be increased at the next session; but they never were; and now the proposition which I bring forward is to pay these judges for duties imposed upon them subsequent to the creation of the districts. It is very true that I was always in favor of these claims going to the Supreme Court of the United States, but I never supposed the judges of the district courts were properly compensated, independent of these duties.

Mr. PETTIT. If the Senator from California insists on his amendment, I shall move to strike it out, and insert the proposition which I hold in my hand, which is the House bill of this session, adjusted with great care, in reference to the proper and reasonable compensation of district judges throughout the United States. It is a bill which has been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary of that House. I will say to the Senator from California, that it provides for his State at the rate of $5,000 for the judge of the northern district, and $3,000 for the judge of the southern district, which I think is a liberal compensation, and one which they ought, at any rate, to be glad to take.

Mr. GWIN. I will withdraw my amendment, and let the Senator offer that, if he will make the salary of the judge of the southern district $3,500. I am sure it ought to be that.

Mr. PETTIT. If the amendment of the Senator from California is withdrawn, I offer the amendment which I hold in my hand. It is the House bill of this session regulating the salaries of the district judges of the United States.

Mr. ADAMS. I rise to a question of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Senator insists, it will require unanimous consent to withdraw the amendment of the Senator from California, as the yeas and nays have been ordered on it.

Mr. ADAMS. I know nothing of the merits of the proposed amendment of the Senator from Indiana, but I am opposed to anything being offered to this bill which is not according to the rules of the Senate. I raise that question of order.

Mr. PETTIT. I believe the Senator from California accepts this as a substitute for his proposition.

Mr. GWIN. I am willing to accept it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The yeas and nays have been ordered on the amendment of the Senator from California, and it requires unanimous consent now to withdraw it, or to change it as proposed.

Mr. HUNTER. Is it in order to accept that? It is not reported by any committee, as I understand.

Mr. PETTIT. It is reported by the committee of the House.

Mr. HUNTER. But that does not bring it within our rule.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has not decided that question. The first question is, will the Senate consent to the withdrawal of the amendment of the Senator from California?

Mr. HUNTER. No one objects to that.

Mr. ADAMS. I make no objection to the withdrawal of that amendment.

The amendment was withdrawn.

Mr. PETTIT. Then I offer, as an amendment, the House bill of this session, to which I have referred, without alteration.

Mr. HUNTER. Is that in order?

Mr. ADAMS. If I understand the rules, the fact that a bill has been reported by a committee of the House does not confer jurisdiction upon this body to receive it as an amendment to an appropriation bill. It must come from a committee of this House. Though this may be a bill reported by a committee in the other House, it now becomes the proposition of the Senator from Indiana, as an individual Senator; and the fact that he has concluded to adopt it, does not give it the character of the report of a committee.

Mr. STUART. It is just such an amendment as was offered here yesterday by the Senator from Tennessee, increasing the salaries of the judges of the Supreme Court. It is not excluded by the rule at all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will, if desired, submit the question to the Senate whether the amendment is in order.

Mr. WELLER. If I understand this proposition, it is to increase the salaries of officers already created by law. If that be the proposition, I apprehend it is clearly within the rules of the Senate. I can move at any time to increase the salary allowed to any officer provided for in the civil and diplomatic appropriation bill, if I see proper, or the salary of any officer who is provided for under the laws of the United States. If I suppose at any time that a public officer ought to receive more pay than he is allowed, I can make a motion to increase it.

Mr. PETTIT. This is not an appropriation of money.

Mr. HUNTER. If it contains no appropriation, I admit there is no rule against it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yesterday the Senate entertained a proposition introduced by the Senator from Tennessee on the same subject. The Chair, therefore, thinks that this is in order.

Mr. PETTIT. Before any vote is taken on my amendment, I will, at the suggestion of the honorable Senator from Wisconsin, strike out the word "Wisconsin" where it occurs. I modify the amendment in that way at his instance.

Mr. WELLER. I should like to hear what the amendment is as it stands.

The Secretary read it, as follows:

Sec. —. And be it further enacted, That the judges of the district courts of the United States shall receive, as compensation for their services, the following yearly salaries, to be paid quarterly from the Treasury of the United States, to wit:

The judges of the district courts of the States of Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Rhode Island, Connecticut, Delaware, New Jersey, and Iowa, $2,000.

The judge of the northern district of Florida, $2,250.

The judge of the western district of Virginia, North Carolina; eastern, western, and middle districts of Tennessee; northern and southern districts of Mississippi; western district of Pennsylvania; western district of Louisiana, Texas, Kentucky, Ohio, Indiana, Missouri; eastern and western districts of Arkansas, Illinois, and Michigan, $2,500.

The judges of the districts of Georgia, South Carolina, eastern district of Virginia, northern district of New York, northern and southern districts of Alabama, $2,750.

The judges of the districts of Maryland, Massachusetts, eastern district of Pennsylvania, southern district of Florida, and southern district of California, $3,000.

The judge of the eastern district of Louisiana, $3,500.

The judge of the southern district of New York, $3,750.

The judge of the northern district of California, $5,000.

Mr. GWIN. I hope the Senator from Indiana will put the judge of the southern district of California at $3,500. His salary is $2,800 now, and that is entirely insufficient.

Mr. PETTIT. I have no objection to that. I amend my amendment in that way.

Mr. DAWSON. I will state to the Senator that there are two places for holding the courts in the State of Georgia—Marietta and Savannah. There are two districts, and one judge presides over both, and the amount of his salary, strange to say, is not so much, by one half, as that proposed for the small State of Louisiana or Arkansas.

Mr. PETTIT. The House committee adjusted that to their liking; and I do not wish to make any material alteration in what they agreed on. I think the amendment suggested as to the southern district of California is proper, and I have included it.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Let me suggest to the Senator from Indiana that, instead of there being two districts in Alabama, as provided for in this amendment, there are three, and but one judge to hold the court in the three districts. If the object really be to increase the compensation of that judge to what is reasonable and fair, let me ask, why was it not proposed to increase it to $3,000? That is the proposed salary of the district judge of western Louisiana, and I am satisfied it is a fair one.

Mr. PETTIT. I relied very much upon the action of the House committee on that subject.

Mr. STUART. I wish to suggest to the Senator from Alabama, that I presume there is not a single case in the amendment which meets exactly the judgment of any Senator here. It is to a great extent a compromise. It must necessarily be so. It is probably as nearly right as we can get it. The House committee perfected that scale of salaries after a great deal of consultation and care, and I think we had better take it as it is.

Mr. HUNTER. It seems to me that we cannot go into such a system as this upon the civil and diplomatic bill. Gentlemen are already differing on the details of this measure. We have but a few days of the session left, and I think it is highly improper to be adding on these immense sums of appropriation to this bill.

Mr. WELLER. Let me say to the Senator from Virginia, that notwithstanding we may differ as to some of these details, I trust there will be a majority of the Senate in favor of the amendment; and that ought to be entirely satisfactory to him. However widely we may differ among ourselves, if we agree to take this as a compromise, my friend from Virginia will be placed in the situation of the Irishman who was enlisted. He will be forced to volunteer. [Laughter.]

Mr. ATCHISON called for the yeas and nays upon the amendment, and they were ordered.

Mr. ADAMS. I am not advised as to other States; but this amendment gives to the district judge of the United States court in my State a higher salary than our State pays to the circuit judges who are upon an equality in point of dignity; and, according to my recollection, I have never voted, nor will I ever vote, to pay a Federal officer more than the States pay for similar services to their State officers.

Mr. MALLORY. I shall vote for this amendment; but I feel bound, in doing so, to say, that in consideration of the fact that the judge of the northern district of Florida has to travel entirely over the State twice a year, and hold court in numerous places, this increase of $250 is a paltry matter. I will, however, go for the amendment.

Mr. PETTIT. I hope the Senate will consent to take it as a compromise. It is the best we can do.

Mr. TOOMBS. Mr. President, having had charge of this matter as a member of the Committee on the Judiciary, I feel bound to state that I will not accept this amendment as a compromise, or in any other form; and I do not know but that it is my duty to go at length into the whole history of this judiciary question, and show the various ramifications which it has undergone, and the principle on which the compensation of our judges has been based. There is immense difficulty, I know, in fixing such a system. I was willing to vote for an increase of salary in California, as an exceptional case; but here, sir, we are now called to pass upon a proposition to which my attention was not called until the reading of it; and it is to be added to a money bill—the civil and diplomatic bill—to be put through in five minutes, without consideration, by the Senate. I know the Committee on the Judiciary have had difficulties in regard to it, and my friend from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD] offered a substitute for the bill reported to the committee by myself. The committee had the subject under consideration for months, and yet now, it seems, we can take it up in half an hour, and put it on a money bill! I think it shows an utter disregard of that consideration which questions of this magnitude and importance ought to receive from the Senate of the United States. It is extraordinary to the last degree. I do not suppose that any gentleman has looked to it, except as regards the judges in his own State. That is about all that attracted his attention. I am in favor of increasing many of these salaries, and had prepared a bill to do it upon certain well defined principles. This amendment, it seems to me, has departed in several cases from those principles. The idea of picking up and attaching to a money bill a proposition to reorganize the judiciary, to increase judicial salaries all over the United States, on the idea that the legislative bodies of the country have neglected their duties for eight or nine months, is a mode of transacting the public business that ought to be scouted from this body, and I enter my protest against it. I will not go into the subject. I simply content myself with voting against the amendment, and saying that there is not a man who can rise up in his place and state that the salaries in that proposition are fixed properly in all the districts. I do not think my friend from Indiana can do it.

Mr. PETTIT. I do not recollect every one from memory.

Mr. TOOMBS. Nor anybody else. The old principle was that we should give the judges of the United States courts the highest compensation given to the judiciary in the States where they sat. There are some cases which are to be exceptions to the rule, where you compel the judges to reside in places like New York, and Boston, and Philadelphia. I recollect a case in Connecticut, where you passed a law making that district judges serve also in New York. That duty threw him under extraordinary additional expenses, and made his case one which I was willing to except from the general principle. But here, now, Senators propose to vote for the amendment merely on being satisfied of one fact, that the salary of the judge in their own State is raised. It seems to be a proposition to increase all these salaries, generally, with the idea of providing for particular cases, and we are to take whatever the House committee may have fixed, without enquiring into it. It seems as if gentlemen acted on the principle "the Devil take the hindmost, so you increase the salary of my judge; that is all."

Mr. ATCHISON. I move that the Senate do now adjourn. I wish an opportunity to look into this matter.

Mr. HUNTER. I hope the motion to adjourn will not be agreed to. I ask for the yeas and nays on it.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 11, nays 32; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allen, Atchison, Butler, Chase, Dawson, Fitzpatrick, Norris, Sumner, Toombs, Wade, and Weller—11.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Bayard, Bell, Benjamin, Bright, Brodhead, Brown, Cooper, Dodge of Iowa, Douglas, Evans, Fish, Geyer, Gillette, Gwin, Houston, Hunter, James, Johnson, Jones of Tennessee, Mallory, Mason, Pettit, Rockwell, Rusk, Sebastian, Shields, Slidell, Stuart, Thompson of Kentucky, Thomson of New Jersey, and Walker—32.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, the impatience of the Senate shall not prevent me from doing justice to the committee with which I am connected. We prepared a bill which would regulate this whole subject. By that bill we provided for circuit judges with a salary of $4,000. If that bill, providing for these circuit judges, shall go into operation, it will change the duties of the district judges materially. It is found upon the idea of subordination—supreme judges, circuit judges, and district judges. But, if you increase the salaries of these district judges as now proposed, you cannot diminish them. Gentlemen who have considered the subject are, perhaps, prepared to vote for this amendment on their independent judgments. I am not. I can only say, as far as regards the consideration I have given it, that I am not prepared to commit myself to the arbitrary system laid down in this proposition. California, Florida, and some other places I would make exceptions, but when gentlemen interposed with other bills, and refused to let me take up the judiciary bill, when I moved for its consideration, and claimed from me the day which was assigned for it, let the blame rest upon others.

I am not going at this late period of the session to embark in the general discussion of the judiciary system. I have given notice that I shall ask the Senate to take up the judiciary bill at the next session, and when that system comes to be adopted, perhaps it will be found that, by this very proposition, you will have given to the district judges a larger salary than to the circuit judges, who will have to travel over several States and to perform very onerous duties. We are now going into these matters because each gentleman supposes he understands what his district judge has to do. Well, sir, under the system that may be adopted these duties may be very much modified. And here I may say that as far as regards the old States—the Atlantic States—we are not interested materially in a change of the present judiciary system; but a modification of it is obviously required in order to meet the wants of the western and northwestern States, and California. It is in regard to them that I think the system should be modified; but do not modify it by this patchwork of bringing up a proposition to change our system of salaries in this bill, when, perhaps, you cannot fix them properly hereafter if this be now done. If gentlemen choose to vote blindfold, let them swallow it on faith. I wish to act with intelligence and understanding.

Mr. STUART. I wish to put a practical application of the Senator's doctrine which in itself is sound. The district judge of my State is obliged to live in Detroit, where his ordinary expenses for house rent, and diet for himself and family will equal his salary—$1,500. He cannot even clothe himself properly, he cannot educate a child that he has out of his salary. In the mean time, is he to go badly clad, his children without education, and upon the very brink of starvation, to wait for a general reorganization of the judiciary system? Sir, it never will be. He must have something, and I am for taking this.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I voted some time since against the amendment of the Senator from California, [Mr. WELLER,] to increase the compensation of the marshals in his State, on the ground that it was improperly attempted to be placed on this bill. I am satisfied that the proposed increase of compensation allowed in this amendment to the district judge of Alabama, is not so much as it should be; but whether it is so or not, I am utterly opposed now, on this bill, to adding such a proposition. I am not able to say whether the increased compensation allowed to the several judges throughout the United States is adequate. I know nothing of the amount which should be allowed to them; and yet, at the heel of the session, when the question has not been discussed, when but few can speak for anything beyond the limits of their own State, it is proposed to reorganize the whole judicial system of the United States, so far as the district judges are concerned, and at an enormous expense. I cannot consent to any such thing. I will not detain the Senate, but I will content myself with voting against the amendment.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Mr. President, I have made up my mind to vote against this bill. Other gentlemen are giving their reasons why they will vote for and against amendments; I will give you my reason. I have made up my mind to vote against the whole bill on its final passage, because I believe it would kill any man in the world who would vote for it, and kill any party who would attempt to sustain it. With that honest conviction, I shall vote against it, because I cannot approve it; but as a majority here have a right to legislate upon this subject, I am going to vote with the majority for everything they offer; and, therefore, unless it conflicts with my constitutional duties, I will vote for this amendment. We have a judge in our State, as you know, sir, [Mr. BELL, in the chair,] who performs more service than any man I ever knew for less money; and I am willing to vote him an increase of salary. If the majority wish to put this amendment on the bill, I am willing to vote for it, but I do so with the express declaration that, on the final passage of the bill, I shall vote against the whole of it.

Mr. BAYARD. The amendment now offered, Mr. President, proposes to adjust the salaries of all the district judges of the United States, by way of increase. That it is desirable in itself, I do not doubt. It ought to be done; but I confess that I am somewhat opposed to doing it in this shape; but it seems to me that we can do it in no other mode than by attaching it to an appropriation bill. I have looked over the classification of salaries proposed in the amendment of the Senator from Indiana. It does not exactly agree with all my opinions, but it comes pretty near to them; and I dare say I may have erred in some of the items which I endeavored to introduce into the bill that I drew up as a substitute for that which received the sanction of a majority of the Committee on the Judiciary. I find this amendment so nearly resembling my own views, that I can see no objection on that score to voting for it.

Next, sir, comes the objection of the honorable Senator from South Carolina. If it existed in point of fact, it would be sufficient to induce me to vote against the amendment. The honorable Senator from South Carolina seems to think that it will interfere with the bill reported by the Committee on the Judiciary in reference to the reorganization of the judiciary system of the United States. If I supposed that, I should unhesitatingly vote against the amendment; but I do not think so. That bill, according to my recollection, has no relation to the district judges at all. It organizes circuits; it provides for the circuit judges, and gives to them the performance of duties now performed by the Supreme Court judges; but it leaves the districts mainly as they were before, and the labors of the district judges what they were before. That their salaries are inadequate, I am satisfied. Then, sir, no one salary in this amendment, with the exception of the judge of the northern district of California, exceeds $3,750. I think the amount proposed for New York is too little, and so for Boston and Philadelphia, and perhaps one or two other places. None of the salaries come up to the amendment which the committee agreed to recommend as the salary of the circuit judges. On the whole, I think the amendment not so objectionable as to compel me to vote against it; and I see no other mode of accomplishing this desirable object.

Mr. BENJAMIN. As a great deal has been said about changing the system of the judiciary, and the enormous increase of salaries by this amendment, I wish to state that the whole amount of this amendment distributes less than $10,000 to increase the salaries of the district judges of the United States. That is the whole amendment.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 18, nays 23; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allen, Bayard, Bell, Benjamin, Brodhead, Brown, Foot, Gwin, James, Johnson, Jones of Tennessee, Mallory, Pettit, Sebastian, Shields, Stuart, Thomson of New Jersey, and Weller—18.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Atchison, Butler, Chase, Cooper, Dawson, Dodge of Iowa, Evans, Fessenden, Fish, Fitzpatrick, Gillette, Houston, Hunter, Mason, Norris, Rockwell, Rusk, Slidell, Sumner, Thompson of Kentucky, Toombs, and Wade—23.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. PETTIT. I wish to offer another amendment.

Mr. GWIN. I hope the Senator will allow me to renew the amendment which I withdrew, in order to enable him to offer his.

Mr. PETTIT. After a while. I have been waiting very patiently for five or six days, and I will give the Senator a full opportunity when I am through, and vote with him besides. I think it is the worst policy, and the greatest curse that ever befell a people, to starve their officers. I want the judges paid, so that they shall not be under the necessity of taking bribes, or stealing.

Mr. CHASE. Are they doing it?

Mr. PETTIT. I am a little afraid they will be reduced to it. [Laughter.] I have an amendment to offer in pursuance of an estimate made under the law by the present Commissioner of Public Buildings. It is to appropriate $8,000 for the improvement of Indiana avenue in this city, not for the State of Indiana; but I take it, the amendment comes very properly from an Indiana Senator, if there is any doubt about the estimate, I will turn to it.

Mr. HUNTER. I think the Committee on Public Buildings had this question before them. The chairman can state.

Mr. BAYARD. The subject was before the committee, and the committee decided not to recommend the appropriation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. BELL in the chair.) Does the Senator from Indiana offer this amendment by direction of a committee?

Mr. PETTIT. No, sir; but as an estimate from the proper Department under the law. My amendment is:

For gravelling Indiana avenue, from New Jersey avenue to Third street west, setting the curb-stone on each side thereof thirty feet from the building line, paving with brick a width of six feet next the curb-stone, paving the gutters, planting trees, and extending the brick arch the full width of the street, $8,000.

So far as the question of estimate is concerned, I understand that anything estimated for by the appropriate department is properly offerable as an amendment. Now, the law provides "that all estimates of the public buildings and grounds shall hereafter be submitted by the Commissioner of Public Buildings to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to be examined and approved by them before they are reported to the House." And it further provides, that the commissioner shall "annually, at the commencement of the year, report the manner in which the appropriations for the public buildings and grounds have been applied." That is the law requiring him to submit his estimates. I have his regular estimates here, and among them I find one in the very words of the amendment which I have offered, as follows:

For gravelling Indiana avenue, from New Jersey avenue to Third street west, setting the curb-stone on each side thereof thirty feet from the building line, paving with brick a width of six feet next the curb-stone, paving the gutters, planting trees, and extending the brick arch the full width of the street, $8,000.

Mr. ATCHISON. I rise to a point of order. This estimate does not come from the head of a Department, as I understand.

Mr. PETTIT. It comes from where the law requires.

Mr. ATCHISON. But the rule of the Senate requires it to come from the head of a Department, or to be reported by a committee. This comes from neither.

Mr. PETTIT. I do not know what particular consequence a head of a Department may have.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. BELL.) The Chair understands the rule to require an estimate from the head of a Department.

Mr. PETTIT. Very well; but here the law requires that this officer, the Commissioner of Public Buildings shall make the estimates; and I take it that that office is a department in itself, and that Mr. French is the head of that department, and is as valuable a one as any other. Let me remind the Senate that this avenue has recently become more occupied than Pennsylvania avenue itself.

Mr. ATCHISON. I call the Senator to order. I wish to know whether the point has been settled—whether the amendment is in order or not?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the rules are observed, the Chair must say that this amendment is out of order.

Mr. PETTIT. I will not take an appeal; but I have another amendment which is in order.

For continuing the improvement of the harbor of Michigan City, Indiana, $19,000.

This recommendation comes from the head of a Department. I take it from the report of the Secretary of War, where there is an estimate in so many words: "For continuing the improvement of the harbor of Michigan City, Indiana, $19,000." I ask that it shall be inserted here. It is the only harbor in Indiana.

Mr. HUNTER. What is the date of the estimate?

Mr. PETTIT. This year. Here I find it in the report of the Secretary of War, for the first session of the Thirty-Third Congress. This is the only port in Indiana; and the Secretary of the Treasury has prepared a bill creating it a port of entry, instead of a port of delivery, as heretofore. That bill is in the House of Representatives in the charge of the Committee on Commerce; and it will undoubtedly become a law, I think. Unless this money shall be appropriated, the works already commenced there will go to decay and ruin.

Mr. DAWSON. Was there any appropriation for it at the last Congress?

Mr. PETTIT. Yes, sir; $20,000 were appropriated.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. GWIN. I now renew the amendment which I offered a short time ago, but withdrew. It is to add the following additional section:

Sec. — And be it further enacted, That the district judges for the State of California, while in the discharge of the duties imposed by the act of the 3d of March, 1851, entitled "An act to ascertain and settle the private land claims for the State of California," be allowed, at the rate of $2,000 per annum each, in addition to their salaries as district judges for the State of California, which shall be in full for their services.

The amendment was agreed to; there being, on a division—yeas 19, nays 13.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I have a small amendment to offer, which I will explain. There was an appropriation made some years ago to pay the outstanding loan office and final-settlement certificates; but one of them, No. 265, was lost, and I ask to have a sufficient sum to pay it reappropriated, upon certain proof being produced that the man who claims it is the proper legal owner, and upon his giving bond to indemnify the Government. I offer it in pursuance of a recommendation of the Treasury Department, and by the unanimous consent of the Committee on Revolutionary Claims of this body. It was ruled in order at the last Congress, and was adopted by the Senate as an amendment to the civil and diplomatic appropriation bill; but it was lost in the committee of conference, where I am afraid it will be lost again. My amendment is to add the following:

For the payment of a lost final-settlement certificate, No. 265, issued for $14,180 56, a claim for which has been presented at the specie value thereof, to be computed by the Register of the Treasury, payment to be made to Henry G. Carson, administrator of bonis non cum testamento annexo, of Curtis Grubb, deceased, surviving partner of the late firm of Curtis & Peter Grubb, to whom said certificate was issued: Provided, Satisfactory evidence be produced to the Secretary of the Treasury that said administration is the bona fide holder of said claim: And provided further, That the said holder of said claim shall give bond, with security to be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, to indemnify the Government and refund the amount he shall receive by virtue of this act, in case the said certificate should ever be presented by any other person, and payment thereof demanded. And so much money as is necessary to pay the specie value of said certificate shall be paid out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. HUNTER. I ask for the decision of the Chair whether that is not a private claim.

Mr. BRODHEAD. The amendment is in order, for two reasons; first, because the amount is asked for by the Treasury Department, and second, because I have the authority of a standing committee to offer it. Besides that, when it was offered at the last Congress, by my colleague, as an amendment to the civil and diplomatic appropriation bill, it was ruled to be in order. I have the record of that transaction before me in the Congressional Globe, and can refer to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. BELL.) If it has been ruled by the Senate to be in order, the Chair will observe that precedent, though, in his own opinion, according to the strict terms of the rule, it would be excluded.

Mr. WALKER. It was decided to be in order at the last session, to my recollection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If such was the decision, the Chair rules it to be in order. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. TOOMBS. I should like to understand when this certificate was issued; and how do we know that it is due? I do not know whether this case belongs to a class that was before Congress some years ago, but I remember that not long since, when statements from the books of the Treasury were printed, there was a large class of cases where it appeared that sums were due to various people on the Treasury books. Persons immediately took out letters of administration all over the country, and attempted to get payment for the claims. Now, I want to know when this certificate was lost, and what evidence we have of its loss. Is the evidence of it simply the fact that there appears on the Treasury books to be so much due to A, B, or C? That is not the slightest evidence that anything is due to anybody. That class of cases has been elaborately considered in Congress for the last eight or ten years, and condemned—justly condemned. I wish to understand what this case is. I do not know when this certificate was issued. I wish to know something about it. Does it belong to the class of which I have spoken? I ask for information.

Mr. BRODHEAD. It does not belong to that class.

Mr. TOOMBS. Then I want to know to what class it does belong. I wish to hear some explanation of how this money is due by the Government. That ought to be a matter of some consequence, I think.

Mr. WALKER. This case is entirely dissimilar to the class of cases mentioned by the Senator from Georgia. At an early period of the Government these loan office and final-settlement certificates were issued by the Government when it had no money to pay. They were a species of bills of credit issued at the Treasury Department; and as they were presented when the Treasury had money, they were paid. If this certificate was in existence, and had not been lost, it would be paid immediately on its presentation at the Treasury, but it has been lost; and the reason why it has not been paid is, that at the Treasury they demand the surrender of the certificate itself before liquidating it. This amendment provides for the loss, and requires ample security to be given in case the original should ever be found.

Mr. TOOMBS. That cannot be the state of the case at all, because then you put the Government, after the lapse of forty or fifty years, to show that the certificate was paid. That is exactly the class of cases which we have condemned.

Mr. WALKER. Not at all. The Senator does not understand me. It has been sufficiently proved before the Committee on Revolutionary Claims that this certificate did exist in the hands of the claimant, and its loss has been proved. After proper search and diligence, it cannot be found. If it was in existence, it could be presented at the Treasury and payment of it made; but at the Treasury the surrender of the certificate is required before payment. This amendment provides that the amount shall be paid, and requires the parties to give ample security to the Government that, if the certificate is ever found by any one and presented, they will indemnify the Government. Consequently the Treasury cannot lose anything.

I will mention another fact. An appropriation was made some years ago for taking up these loan office and final-settlement certificates. This one could not be presented, and, of course, could not be paid; and, consequently, the balance which was appropriated has lapsed, and this is but a reappropriation of what was formerly appropriated for the very purpose. I think it provides sufficiently for guarding the Government against any possible contingency of loss.

Mr. TOOMBS. This is precisely one of the class of cases that I supposed. The books of the Treasury show that a loan office or final-settlement certificate was issued to A, B, or C forty, or fifty, or sixty years ago. A great many persons, on seeing publication of that fact, said: "why, here was a certificate issued to my ancestor, and I am entitled to it." Such people accordingly came here, and claimed the amount. They, in effect, said to the Government, after forty, or fifty, or sixty years, "though the presumption is that these certificates have been returned and canceled, yet, unless you can show that they were redeemed, we will presume the existence of the certificate, and hold you responsible." I say, sir, that a party who received a loan office certificate fifty or sixty years ago, is to be presumed to have received payment for it, unless there be peculiar circumstances showing, beyond question, that it was lost, and never canceled. On the statement of the gentleman from Wisconsin, this is precisely one of the class of cases which have been condemned, and justly condemned by Congress. Why, sir, you may take out of the Treasury hundreds of thousands of dollars if you are to appropriate merely on the ground that the books of the Treasury show that an amount was at some time due to this or that individual, and that the Government cannot show that those debts were canceled. If that principle be sound, the administrator, at this time, of the party to whom a certificate was issued half a century ago, may come forward and say, "I find that a certificate was issued to the original parties for whom I am administrator, and unless you can show that you have canceled the debt, you must pay me." Will the Senate sanction such a doctrine? Sir, under the appropriation which we made to pay a portion of these certificates, the Government was plundered to a large amount. It was one of the most wretched acts ever passed by Congress. I had occasion, a few years ago, as a member of the Committee of Ways and Means of the other House, to examine the subject thoroughly, and I was satisfied then, as I am now, that people came here with these cases, and that money was poured out of the Treasury to pay them, without a shadow of right.

Mr. WALKER. I venture to say, Mr. President, that the Senator from Georgia, cannot show that under the former appropriation, one of these certificates was ever paid without a surrender of the instrument. The reason why this one was not paid was, because the certificate could not be surrendered as others were. In consequence of the non-ability of these parties to surrender the certificate, the appropriation has lapsed, and now when there is complete proof of the loss of the certificate, the holders simply ask that they shall be paid the amount.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. President, I think that this is a just claim against the United States. Two years ago, I examined the claim and urged its passage in this body. It was passed by the Senate as an amendment to the civil and diplomatic appropriation bill, but, as my colleague stated, was lost in the committee of conference.

The Grubbs, at the time of the Revolution, were the founders of cannon, and they manufactured for the Government a large quantity of cannon and cannon balls, which were furnished by them. The Government, as was stated by the Senator from Wisconsin, not being in a condition to pay at the time, issued its certificate of indebtedness to the Grubbs. That certificate went into their hands. They were a wealthy family, and it remained with them. Payment was not made by the United States, but the certificate remained in the hands of old Mr. Grubb until his death, some thirty years ago. After the transfer to the hands of an administrator de bonis non, the certificate was lost; and at the time of the appropriation made to pay a certain class of these claims on presentation at the Treasury, this certificate could not be found, and four years ago, I think, application was first made for the payment of the claim. I had charge of it at the time, and I remember that on a vote by yeas and nays it passed this body.

I admit, sir, what my friend from Georgia says, that the mere fact of a certificate standing unpaid on the books of the Treasury, to any particular person is very little evidence of its authenticity. It is evidence of this fact, and perhaps no more: that at one time the Government was indebted to A, B, or C D, to such an amount; but the presumption of time—which is a substantial one, regarded in all judicatories—is against its existence at this period, unless there be something to rebut the presumption of payment by lapse of time. Here the facts were such as satisfied the Senate that that presumption was rebutted, and the Senate allowed the amount, but it was stricken out, as I have said, by the committee of conference.

Mr. WELLER. If I understand this proposition, it is a very simple one. If I were to give my promissory note to an individual, payable two years hence, and it should not be paid at that time, but after the lapse of some eight or ten years the payee should lose the note, and produce satisfactory evidence to me of its loss, I should consider myself bound as an honest man, to pay that debt. I am in favor of compelling this Government to do whatever integrity and honesty would demand in the case of common individuals. Now, sir, the issuing of the certificate was evidence of the indebtedness of the Government. That certificate has been lost, and I would compel this Government to observe the same rules which honest men are compelled to observe in their transactions.

Mr. DAWSON. This is equivalent to an absolute appropriation of the amount of principal and interest due upon this paper. The amendment is to provide for a claim which has been interposed for the amount of this certificate, which appears upon the books of the Treasury. There is no evidence whatever, that I have heard, that this paper was at any time, or has been during the last thirty years, in the possession of any one of these claimants. The only restriction placed on them in the amendment is:

"Provided, satisfactory evidence be produced to the Secretary of the Treasury that said administrator is the bona fide holder of said claim."

What is the claim? Suppose they presented it; what will the Secretary of the Treasury have to do? He will find the name of Grubb upon the books for such a certificate, and that will be all the evidence. The man to whom it was issued is dead. The executor or administrator upon his estate is dead. Then, when this matter is discovered, some twenty, or thirty, or I do not know how many years afterwards, administration de bonis non cum testamento annexo, is taken out for the purpose of getting this claim. It is not required that the parties shall go back and show that the original holder is dead, that the first administrator is dead, and that this man is now authorized to receive payment of the claim; but he is to receive it merely on the ground that it is entered on the books of the Treasury that such a certificate was issued to the Grubbs. There is not a particle of proof that it has been in the possession of any one of these individuals for years, or that it has been lost. In any court in the world they would have to prove the existence of the paper, and the loss of the paper, and then the doctrine of my friend from California would come in.

Mr. WELLER. I apprehend, in this case, that the record shows the issuing of the certificate.

Mr. DAWSON. But where is the evidence of the loss of it?

Mr. WELLER. The loss of the paper is to be proved by the person who is now administrator.

Mr. DAWSON. There is no provision of that sort in the amendment.

Mr. WELLER. You allege that it has been paid by the Government; then the onus is thrown on the Government.

Mr. DAWSON. The presumption always is when time runs, and a paper of this sort has not been presented, that it has been paid. The law presumes payment after the statute of limitations commences to run. Up to that period you can come in and prove the loss of the paper and other facts necessary to require payment.

Mr. WELLER. I do not think there is any statute of limitations as to the Government.

Mr. MALLORY. I wish to ask whether the amendment contains interest?

Mr. DAWSON. Certainly. It is necessarily to pay the face of the paper with interest.

Mr. WALKER. These certificates on their face bear interest.

Mr. ALLEN. The certificate ought not to draw interest for any longer period than when debts of the same class were paid. The interest ought not to be allowed to go beyond such a day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator move an amendment to the amendment?

Mr. ALLEN. No, sir, I merely suggest that the certificate ought not to draw interest beyond the day when debts of the same class were paid by the Government, which was about the year 1822 or 1823. At that time all that were presented were paid off. This amendment, therefore, includes thirty years' interest, to which the parties have no right.

Mr. RUSK. I vote with great distrust on all these old claims. I remember one which was before the Committee on Military Affairs some years ago, which gave rise to this distrust in my mind. It was a claim for upwards of $40,000. It was prosecuted by as honest a man, I suppose, as ever came before Congress to make a claim. He came here and urged it session after session, at considerable expense to himself. The Committee on Military Affairs examined it closely. The claimant had been a quartermaster in the war of 1812, and there were a large number of accounts to be examined. He was honestly impressed as any man could be that the Government owed him over $40,000. There were two or three reports in his favor, but by some means or other they did not come up, and were not acted upon. The question was re-referred to the Committee on Military Affairs when I was a member of it. We had sent to the Departments over and over again, and got all the papers connected with these accounts. Finally, at the last session at which it was referred to the committee, before we reported on it he came into the committee room one morning, and said he wanted to withdraw his papers; for, on examining to find a little more testimony, he actually found his receipt to the Government for the amount.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I move to amend the bill by striking out of the second section this clause:

And further, that all appropriations which are herein made, or may be hereafter made, for repairs or improvements of the public buildings, grounds, and streets within the District of Columbia, and now under the charge of the Commissioner of Public Buildings and Grounds, shall be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, and that all laws or parts of laws inconsistent with this section shall be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

Mr. HUNTER. I am willing to agree to that amendment. I believe it is right.

Mr. TOOMBS. Probably some of the rest of us do not know what it is. Let us hear it.

The Secretary read the amendment again.

Mr. TOOMBS. Why should this clause be stricken out?

Mr. BRODHEAD. If Congress orders a certain improvement to be made, the Secretary of the Interior, under this section, has to come down and inspect it. That is business which pertains to the Commissioner of Public Buildings. His accounts are settled at the Treasury upon proper vouchers. I hope the amendment will be agreed to.

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I have one more amendment to offer. It speaks for itself. It is to add the following additional section:

Sec. — And be it further enacted, That there shall be allowed to the Assistant Secretary of State, to the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, to the First Comptroller of the Treasury, to the Second Comptroller of the Treasury, and to the Commissioner of Customs, an annual salary each at the rate of $4,500; as to the First Auditor of the Treasury, to the Second Auditor of the Treasury, to the Third Auditor of the Treasury, to the Fourth Auditor of the Treasury, to the Auditor of the Treasury for the Post-Office Department, to the Treasurer of the United States, to the Register of the Treasury, to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, to the Commissioner of Pensions, to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and to the Commissioner of Patents, each at the rate of $4,000. The said salaries to commence from and after the first day of July, 1854; and so much thereof as is not otherwise appropriated by this or former acts, shall be paid out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is this offered from any committee of the Senate?

Mr. BRODHEAD. It is offered in pursuance of the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. HUNTER. I ask for the yeas and nays upon that amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. JOHNSON. I understand that this proposition is to increase the salaries of the auditors, comptrollers, and other heads of bureaus. Do they not all now get as much as Senators and Representatives?

Several Senators. More; more.

Mr. JOHNSON. Then, sir, I would suggest whether it is proper now in this bill to go into the subject of increasing all the auditors, and the head of every bureau and Government establishment in the city of Washington, when their pay is more than we receive. I think that at present some of these auditors and other officers get a great deal more than they are entitled to.

Mr. BRODHEAD. By the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury, it appears that the salaries of the comptrollers were fixed some fifty-five years ago, and at that time the comptrollers received more than the Postmaster General. The salaries of all the officers in and about Washington have been increased except the comptrollers. They are high officers, having responsible functions. The Senate can do as they please with this amendment; but I wish to justify myself for offering it. The same necessity exists for increasing the salaries of these other officers. They are meritorious men, performing highly responsible duties. They dispose of large quantities of public business. They guard the public Treasury. For these, and other reasons which appear on record in the communication from the Treasury Department, I urge the amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON. I wish to ask the Senator what these officers now receive. Is it not $3,000 a year? Do not the Comptrollers receive that amount?

Mr. BRODHEAD. I think the Comptrollers receive $3,000 or $3,500.

Mr. GWIN. The First Comptroller receives $3,500, and the Second $3,000.

Mr. JOHNSON. Then, let me ask, what does a Senator receive?

Mr. BRODHEAD. That is an argumentum ad hominem. I know that my pay as a Senator is less, perhaps, than that of any gentlemen on this floor.

Mr. JOHNSON. Less than $3,000 a year?

Mr. BRODHEAD. Yes, sir, less than $2,000; but that has nothing to do with the question under consideration. The question is not whether we receive enough, but whether these officers receive enough.

Mr. GEYER. Mr. President, I have voted against several amendments which have been offered for the increase of salaries. I have thought for a long time that this was about the largest omnibus that ever was attempted to be built in the Senate. A moment ago we refused to receive what I considered some of the most respectable passengers who have been offered, the judges of the district courts of the United States. We refuse to receive them, and we are now increasing the salary of every clerk, auditor, and comptroller, and making this, instead of being an appropriation bill, a salary bill.

Mr. BADGER. Perhaps it would be appropriate for the Committee on Retrenchment. [Laughter.]

Mr. GEYER. It is properly suggested by the Senator from North Carolina, that it would be very appropriate for the Committee on Retrenchment. [Renewed laughter.] I do hope that, before the close of this session, or, at the furthest, at the commencement of the next session, we shall have some regulation by which we shall prevent the general legislation of the country from being introduced upon the appropriation bills. I hope yet to live to see the day when an appropriation bill will be what its name purports, an appropriation of money for the public service authorized by law. I shall vote very cheerfully, when a proper bill is presented, for an increase of salaries which ought to be increased, but I regret very much that I, among others, have been seduced into voting for any increase of salaries on this bill.

The question being taken by yeas and nays on the amendment, resulted—yeas 9, nays 30; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allen, Brodhead, Cooper, Fitzpatrick, Gwin, Jones of Tennessee, Rusk, Thomson of New Jersey, and Toombs—9.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Atchison, Badger, Bayard, Bell, Benjamin, Butler, Chase, Dawson, Dodge of Iowa, Evans, Fessenden, Fish, Foot, Geyer, Gillette, Houston, Hunter, Johnson, Mallory, Mason, Pearce, Rockwell, Sebastian, Shields, Silldell, Sumner, Thompson of Kentucky, Wade, Walker, and Weller—30.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. THOMSON, of New Jersey. I wish now to submit an amendment, to come in at the third section, which provides somewhat for a redistribution of the clerks in the Executive Departments. It is an amendment which I explained yesterday, in the few remarks I then made. I will not detain the Senate by saying anything further on it. My only object is that the clerks shall be paid according to the work they perform. This amendment is to provide for that. It is to insert:

And provided, That whenever clerks of the first class shall perform the same or similar duties with any of the other classes, they shall receive the same compensation as is allowed to such classes.

Mr. HUNTER. I hope that will not be adopted. The effect of it will be to allow each Auditor, or other head of a bureau, to break up the classification, and to say that certain clerks of the lowest class are performing the duties of those of the higher classes.

Mr. BADGER. It is to abolish all classifications.

Mr. HUNTER. It is. That is the effect of it. Mr. THOMSON, of New Jersey. The words of this amendment are the very words of the act which was passed on the 22d of April, 1854, which was intended to provide for this class of cases. There were a set of clerks known as temporary clerks. They have been abolished by name, but they have been incorporated into a class called first-class clerks. The act of April 22d provides that all clerks not provided for in it, that is, the temporary clerks, who are now called first-class clerks, "performing the same or similar duties with any one of the other classes shall receive the same compensation as allowed to such class." When a clerk in the first class is performing the duties of a clerk of the second or third class, I think he should be entitled to the pay of the grade whose duties he is performing. That seems to me to be manifestly proper. It is, of course, very much a matter of discrimination with the head of a bureau or the head of a Department. He is to say whether a clerk is doing more duty than belongs to the class to which he is assigned. The object of my amendment is, in such cases, to allow the clerks to receive pay in proportion to the duties they perform.

Mr. BADGER. I wish only to say in this matter that it may, or it may not, be proper to abolish the classification which has been adopted in the Departments in reference to the clerks. If it is proper to abolish it, it ought to be done. If it is proper to retain it, this amendment ought not to be adopted, for it allows the classification, but also allows the head of a Department or of a bureau to select his favorites, and pay them the highest rates.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. WELLER. I desire now to offer an amendment which seeks to effect in part what I desired to accomplish a while ago with regard to the marshals of California. I have changed the proposition so as to put it in a shape that will be more acceptable to other gentlemen. Though this does not accomplish what I desire, it remedies to some extent the evils of which I complained before. It is to insert:

And be it further enacted, That the marshals in the northern and southern districts of California shall be entitled to thirty per cent. in addition to the fees and compensation allowed by the act of February 26, 1853, entitled "An act to regulate the fees and costs to be allowed clerks, marshals, and attorneys of the circuit and district courts of the United States, and for other purposes."

Mr. RUSK. I intend to vote for that amendment; and if the Senator from California thinks the proposition I am about to make will embarrass it, I will not offer it. I propose to amend the amendment by adding after the word "California," the words "and the State of Texas." I will, in a few words, state the reason for this. The mileage allowed in the fee bill which we passed last year to the marshal is ten cents, which does not begin to pay him. The State of Texas has a territory of two hundred and seven thousand square miles, and there are four places in the State for holding the United States courts. The marshal there is a gallant and noble man. He is absolutely losing money by the rate of mileage now allowed him. If, however, my proposition is regarded as embarrassing the other, I will withdraw it; but I think it cannot be so considered.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to; and the amendment, as amended was rejected; there being, on a division—ayes 17, noes 20.

Mr. STUART. I have an amendment to propose, by the instructions of the Committee on Commerce, to which I hope there will be no objection. We have made certain appropriations in the bill for life-boats on the Atlantic coasts, and upon the lakes; but the amount provided for does not come up to the recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury, and what is required by a bill which has passed the Senate, and which is now pending in the House of Representatives, and which may, and probably will, become a law, at this session. If not, the amendment I now propose will not have any effect. It is simply to provide for appropriating a balance that will become due should that bill pass into a law. My amendment is in these words:

For the purpose of carrying out the provisions of an act entitled "An act for the better preservation of life and property from vessels shipwrecked on the coasts of the United States," $52,460; to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury.

The whole amount estimated for by the Secretary of the Treasury for this purpose was $92,460; but $40,000 have been appropriated for in this bill and the amendments already adopted.

Mr. HUNTER. What is the act which is referred to in the amendment?

Mr. STUART. That act contains no appropriation. It is a bill which has passed the Senate, and is now pending in the other House. I proposed this on the recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury, to cover the whole ground. In order to facilitate the passage of that bill, there was no appropriation in it.

Mr. DAWSON. We are now late in the month of July, and the appropriations which we have already made in this bill for life-boats cannot be expended between now and the next session of Congress, unless they are hurried on unreasonably in every direction.

Mr. STUART. I can assure the Senator from Georgia that he is greatly mistaken. These boats are furnished with facility, and can be sent to California before the commencement of the next session.

Mr. ATCHISON. I move that the Senate now adjourn.

The motion was not agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER put the question on Mr. STUART's amendment, and announced that it was rejected.

Mr. STUART. I call for a division. The amendment is founded upon an estimate made and furnished to the Committee on Commerce by the Secretary of the Treasury.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands the question to be decided.

Mr. STUART. It is not too late to ask for a division. I will ask that the recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury may be read. It seems to me that there can be no difficulty about the matter when it is understood.

Mr. HUNTER. We have decided the question. It is getting late in the evening, and we are anxious to dispose of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thought the noes had it very decidedly.

Mr. STUART. I am aware of that; but it has been the commonest thing all day, after the Chair has announced a result, to call for a division, or to order the yeas and nays. Now, sir, if appropriations which are necessary to carry on the business of the Government are to be defeated, after we have been spending all day talking about things that do not belong to the bill, simply from want of time, I will vote to adjourn, and let us take another day for it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there any objection to taking the question again?

Several SENATORS. None at all!

Mr. STUART. Now I ask for the reading of the paper.

The Secretary read it, as follows:

SIR: In compliance with the request contained in your letter of the 7th instant, I have the honor to submit the estimate of the appropriation which will be required to carry into effect the provisions of the bill entitled "A bill for the better preservation of life and property from vessels shipwrecked on the coast of the United States:—"

For establishing twenty-eight additional boat stations on the coast of New Jersey and Long Island, at $2,000 each.....	$58,660
For repairing twenty-six existing stations.....	10,000
For compensation of keepers at fifty-four stations, at $200 per annum.....	10,800
For compensation of two superintendents, at $1,500 per annum each.....	3,000
For the annual appropriation for the purchase of boats for other portions of the coast.....	10,000
	$92,460

JAMES GUTHRIE.

HON. HANNIBAL HAMLIN, Chairman of the Committee on Commerce, United States Senate.

Mr. STUART. Allow me to say again, that I hope there will be no difference of opinion in the Senate about this matter. We have by special provisions added to this bill appropriations for $40,000 of that amount. The general bill to which I alluded, which has passed the Senate, and which is now pending in the House, will, unquestionably, become a law at this session. So I am assured by the chairman of the Committee on Commerce in the House. It will require the additional $52,460 to carry out the provisions of that act, and the effect of this amendment is to provide means for giving that law effect throughout the coasts of the United States.

Mr. BADGER. Now, sir, I wish to ask the Senator from Michigan this question. He refers to a certain act which he supposes will be passed. How is it possible that we should refer, in a bill which we are passing, to an act which has not yet passed? Suppose it does not pass.

Mr. STUART. I can answer the Senator very readily. If it does not pass, the appropriation contained in this amendment will go for nothing.

Mr. BADGER. But in what a position would the Senate be presented to the public, as not knowing what acts have passed?

Mr. JOHNSON. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. HUNTER. I hope the Senate will consent to finish the bill before an adjournment.

Mr. JOHNSON. Many Senators have gone away, and I think we have hardly a quorum here.

Mr. HUNTER. I think we have a quorum. I hope we shall not adjourn now.

The motion to adjourn was not agreed to; there being, on a division—ayes 16, noes 24.

Mr. MALLORY. I wish to suggest to the honorable Senator from Michigan not to ask for any more expenditures on account of life-boats at present. The two life-boats which have been stationed at the point where I reside have been there now for two years, but have never been used in a single instance, and repeated requests have been made by the collector there to have them withdrawn. I believe that such is the condition of the life-boats in the State in which I reside, that every one of them is perfectly useless. I believe now, that if a redistribution of life-boats is to take place, perhaps we have enough on hand already.

Mr. STUART. I am not at liberty to withdraw the amendment. It is one which I have been instructed to offer by the Committee on Commerce, and it is not within my power to withdraw it. It is in the power of the Senate to vote it down.

Mr. BADGER. I am satisfied that there is no chance of getting through with this bill to-night. I hope, therefore, that the Senate will adjourn. I make the motion that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. ADAMS. No question has been taken since the last motion to adjourn was put.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. BELL in the chair.) That is true; the motion, therefore, cannot be entertained.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. FISH. I move to amend the bill by adding the following additional section:

Sec. — And be it further enacted, That all vacancies in any of the classes of clerks authorized by the third section of the act approved March 3, 1853, entitled "An act making appropriations for the civil and diplomatic expenses of the Government for the year ending 30th of June, 1854," shall be filled by promotion according to seniority.

That is one of the provisions which was contained in the bill which passed the Senate by a large majority. The House struck it out; I propose now to put it in this bill.

Mr. STUART. That is one amendment of all others connected with these clerkships which ought not to be adopted. To carry out the clerkship grade by seniority cuts off all authority on the part of the head of the bureau or Department to determine anything about qualifications. It operates badly enough in the Army and Navy. I hope never to see it introduced into the civil service.

Mr. BADGER. I believe a question has intervened since the former motion to adjourn was put. I now renew the motion that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was lost—ayes 13, noes not counted.

The question was taken upon Mr. FISH's amendment; and it was rejected.

Mr. JOHNSON. A few moments since a vote was taken upon the proposition of the Senator from California, [Mr. WELLER,] to amend the bill by increasing the compensation of marshals. I move, at the special instance of my friend—because I shall certainly not change my vote on the final result—to reconsider the vote, so that he may have the yeas and nays upon it.

Mr. WELLER. I hope the Senate will agree to the reconsideration, and then give us the yeas and nays upon the adoption of the amendment. My only desire is to obtain the yeas and nays upon it. That will supersede the necessity of asking for them upon the motion to reconsider.

Mr. BADGER. I was in favor of the amendment; but I cannot vote for the motion to reconsider at this stage of the session. If we act upon propositions and reject them, and then reconsider them, we shall never get through with the bill. I advise the Senator, therefore, to call for the yeas and nays upon this motion.

Mr. WELLER. We may just as well have them on the direct vote. I do not want to discuss the question. I only want the yeas and nays upon the direct proposition.

The question was taken; and the Presiding Officer declared that the motion appeared to be lost.

Mr. WELLER called for the yeas and nays; and they were ordered.

Mr. JOHNSON, when his name was called, said: As this is a test question, I shall vote against my own motion.

The yeas and nays were taken, and resulted—yeas 18, nays 19; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bell, Brodhead, Chase, Dodge of Iowa, Douglas, Fitzpatrick, Foot, Gillette, Gwin, Jones of Tennessee, Mallory, Pettit, Rockwell, Sebastian, Stuart, Sumner, Wade, and Weller—18.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Allen, Atchison, Badger, Bayard, Benjamin, Cooper, Evans, Fessenden, Fish, Geyer, Hunter, Johnson, Mason, Sebastian, Shields, Slidell, Thompson of Kentucky, and Walker—19.

So the motion to reconsider was rejected.

Mr. SHIELDS. I move to amend the clause

"for compensation of three inspectors of said penitentiary," (in the District of Columbia) "$300," by striking out "three hundred," and inserting "seven hundred and fifty."

Mr. HUNTER. If we increase the salary of a portion of these officers, we ought to increase the others. Why except the inspectors?

Mr. SHIELDS. What I propose to reinstate is the old salary. They only get a hundred dollars each. All I want is a vote.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. SHIELDS. The committee appointed to report upon the atmospheric telegraph, have instructed me to report the following amendment, to come in under miscellaneous appropriations.

Mr. WELLER. I should like to have an opportunity of seeing that that amendment is inserted in the proper place; and in order to enable me to accomplish that object, I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. SHIELDS. This is the last amendment that I have. I simply wish the Senate to vote upon it.

Mr. WELLER. I withdraw my motion.

The amendment was to insert the following:

For the construction of an atmospheric telegraph, on the plan of Ethel Richardson, under the direction of the Postmaster General, from the President's House to the Capitol, $10,000.

The amendment was rejected—ayes 18, noes 20.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. I move to amend the clause in the bill appropriating $1,000 for contingent expenses of the Territory of Utah, by striking out "$1,000," and inserting "$1,500." I ask that a letter from the Governor of Utah to the Delegate may be read.

Several SENATORS. It is not necessary.

The amendment was rejected—ayes thirteen, noes not counted.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. I move to amend the fourth section of the bill by inserting after the words "Auxiliary Guard," in the clause relating to the increase of their salaries, the words:

The said Auxiliary Guard to be hereafter appointed by the Commissioner of Public Buildings.

I will state that we are appropriating some $15,000 for the Auxiliary Guards, who are appointed by the Mayor of the city. My amendment proposes to take from that officer the appointment, and confer it upon an officer of our own, to wit: the Commissioner of Public Buildings.

Mr. GWIN. If the Senator will insert Secretary of the Interior, instead of Commissioner of Public Buildings, I will agree to it.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. I will do that. I make that modification.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I hardly know whether to vote for this motion or not; but I have a word to say upon that item of expenditure. We have been paying this Auxiliary Guard, so far as I know, from time immemorial.

Mr. BADGER. Since 1842.

Mr. DOUGLAS. We pay them, and I have never seen but one of them in the course of the eleven years which I have been here; and the one that I did see I met at a livery stable. He told me that his beat went by my house, and he wanted us to raise his pay. I have lived there three years. His beat is by my house every day and night, and I have never set my eyes upon him since. I doubt whether the guard are on duty. I doubt whether they render service. I doubt whether the money which we appropriate is not so much thrown away, and I do think that, until they are on duty so that they can be called, so that they can be of use, so that you can find somebody who has ever seen them when they are needed, we ought to strike out the annual appropriation.

Several SENATORS. Make that motion.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I will make the motion to strike out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. Upon that I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. BADGER. These Auxiliary Guards are not intended to be found or seen by well disposed persons; therefore it is not at all surprising that the Senator from Illinois has not seen them. [Laughter.]

Mr. DOUGLAS. I would like the Senator from North Carolina to give his testimony. Has he ever seen them?

Mr. BADGER. I am like the Senator from Illinois. I have never seen them, and I never expect to see them. [Renewed laughter.]

Mr. DOUGLAS. I do wish to see them.

Mr. BADGER. Get into a row, then. [Continued laughter.]

Mr. DOUGLAS. I am speaking seriously. I have had occasion sometimes to have the guard called for protection. We know that houses are burning down in the city as regularly as sunrise and sunset follow each other. I have sat in my house at night and seen six houses burnt by incendiaries within two hundred yards—all burning at once—and when the guard were called for, none could be found. Sometimes every night for a week, in that quarter, houses have been on fire. I want to know what becomes of this guard at such times. I only raise this question for the purpose of calling the attention of the Senate and the authorities of the city to the fact, that if a guard are on duty, those who require their attention do not know where they are.

Mr. RUSK. I had some doubts at first about voting to strike out this provision; but when they have been able to find the Senator from Illinois but once in three years, and the Senator from North Carolina not at all, I am satisfied that they are of no use. [Laughter.]

Mr. ADAMS. I think the Senate is about to act unadvisedly in reference to this question. I understand this Auxiliary Guard to have their duty to perform at nights. There are thirty of them. Each one has his beat. One thing I know, sir; we have not one fire now to ten which we had two years ago. This guard perform their duty from dark until daylight. Not one of them ever lies down or sleeps at night. They are not permitted to engage in any other kind of business. They have detected and been the means of convicting some half dozen persons who were engaged in setting houses on fire, and they have several others now in custody; and perhaps we have no public officers in the District of Columbia who render more service in the protection of the property of this place, and who are more poorly paid, according to the services they render to the city, than this Auxiliary Guard.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I cannot concur with the Senator that there were ten fires two years ago to one which we have now. There has hardly been a night this spring in which houses have not been burnt down in this city. There have within sight of my own house been thirty or forty burnt within the last three months. There is scarcely a night in which there is none burnt. On one occasion, while there were six houses being burnt down near my dwelling, a man left his house on New Jersey avenue to go to the fire, and while he was absent, his own house was set on fire, and his wife burnt nearly to death in bed before she could get out. These things are frequently occurring. I have never known a period when there was so much danger in the city as within the last two or three months. I can say nothing about these men, only that I do not see them.

A SENATOR. Perhaps you do not know them when you see them.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I think they should be required then to carry some badge, so that they may be recognized. We ought to know who they are, so that we may call on them for protection; but when a man's beat is by your own house, and in three years you never set your eyes on him, either night or day, and when these fires take place and he cannot be found, seen, or heard of, I have my doubts whether he is on duty. I do not believe that that man in that part of the town does go on his duty.

The yeas and nays were ordered on the amendment.

Mr. STUART. I have full confidence in the statement presented by the Senator from Illinois. The question is as to the remedy. As it stands now, I believe these officers are appointed by the corporate authorities, and the United States Government pays them. If there is a mode better calculated than any other to get a set of men good for nothing, that would be the one. I am inclined to think that the proposition now before the Senate, submitted by the Senator from Iowa, will remedy this evil. If this guard shall be appointed by the authority that pays them, I think you will have an efficient set of men. The Senator from Illinois has shown very clearly the necessity of a guard, provided that guard can be a good one. If this plan fails, if the guard appointed by a responsible officer of this Government, and subject to the Government, will not answer the purpose on a fair trial, I shall go with the Senator from Illinois, when he moves to strike the provision out; but I submit, that at this time, perhaps, we had better take the proposition of the Senator from Iowa, and change the mode of appointment, and try that.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I am willing to do that.

Mr. MASON. The Auxiliary Guard is a part of the police of the city of Washington. The city of Washington covers so much ground that it is found impossible for the resources of the city to furnish a police. As there was a large portion of the public property of the United States in the city, it was considered a proper policy that the Government should contribute to the support of the police. Although the Government pays them, they are appointed by the head of the police in the city—the Mayor—and are under his control. I would ask how the Secretary of the Interior, who now comes from Michigan, or any future Secretary of the Interior, coming from a distant portion of the country, can know the qualifications of the people of Washington, in order to form the police. If you give him the power, you will have it a matter merely of political patronage, and a sort of political infirmity.

Mr. HOUSTON. I in part concur with the Senator from Virginia. I am not in favor of discharging this guard. I think they ought to be retained. I do not think that they act to the satisfaction of every one; but it does appear that a police is necessary for the extent and peculiar situation of this place. If the appointment of this guard be left to the Superintendent of Public Buildings, and if he is acquainted with the population of the place generally, with their capabilities, their industrious habits, and all these matters, he can make a better selection than the Secretary of the Interior would have it in his power to do. The Secretary has business accumulating upon his hands, and a great addition is made to it by this bill. Now, if you compel him to give his personal attention to this subject, he must be acquainted with the individuals he appoints; and it does seem to me that he would have to rely either upon the corporation or some other person entirely independent of himself, and that he would, therefore, be a bad hand to select suitable persons to constitute the guard. The appointing power should have a personal knowledge of the population of Washington, in order to give efficiency to the guard, and we can get no person on whom the responsibility could better rest than the Commissioner of Public Buildings. I shall, therefore, move to amend the amendment by striking out "Secretary of the Interior," and inserting "Commissioner of Public Buildings."

Mr. PEARCE. Mr. President, I am afraid that the Senate are likely to be misled by the Senator from Illinois. It should be remembered that he has such an aversion to public places, and is so passionately fond of privacy, that he has withdrawn himself almost altogether from public haunts, and sequestered himself in seclusion. I have no idea that any body would find him anywhere but at home, [laughter;] and I should, therefore, have been surprised if the Auxiliary Guard had been able to find him. I think it likely that that guard perambulates the streets of Washington where they are needed.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I never should have dreamed that the man of whom I spoke was one of the Auxiliary Guard. He found out where I lived, and stated to me that he was one, and made himself known to me because he wanted his salary increased. I asked him where his beat was. He described it "right by your house." Three years have elapsed since that, and I have never set eyes on him or heard of him since. I do not believe he is there, and I do not want him to take his pay unless he attends to his duty.

Mr. PEARCE. The guard are never stationed at any particular places. The Senator lives almost at the ultima thule of the city, and they might pass his house two or three different times during the night, and it would be no marvel if they were not seen by him. I do not think, sir, that we can draw an unfavorable conclusion from the statement made in relation to this guard. The Senator does not mingle among his fellow-citizens; he does not know everything that is being done; he does not have a hand in it; and, therefore, I contend he cannot charge them with being derelict in their duty. [Laughter.] I think, sir, the expenditure for this guard is a wise and proper one; and I hope that the amendment of the Senator from Iowa will not prevail.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on striking out "Secretary of the Interior," and inserting, "Commissioner of Public Buildings."

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. If I have the power, I accept that modification.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on the amendment as modified.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. I have never seen any guard here, auxiliary or any other. I do not know whether they are appointed or whether they are not appointed; but I am unwilling to place in the power of the Secretary of the Interior, or of the Treasury, or any other man who is in power here, under the influence of a political party, the privilege of appointing the guard—I will not say the legion of honor and the imperial guard around the royal person—but the guard that would belong to the political party in power, and by which it could have a police and surveillance and watchmanship, and guardianship over the men who may be opposed to them in politics. I think it would lead to perversion and injustice toward those who should happen not to be in the favor of the party in power, whoever they may be.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. I named the Commissioner of Public Buildings, because he is an officer responsible to us, having charge of a vast amount of property, for which we are called upon to vote millions. We have been called upon to bring water into the city; and one of the arguments used was, that that property might be protected. I undertake to say that, when this guard is appointed by the Commissioner of Public Buildings, you will hear no Senator rise upon this floor, and, upon his responsibility, make the statement which the Senator from Illinois has made. As to the tirade of the Senator from Kentucky about partisans, allow me to say that there is a most singular discrepancy between the practice when in power and the preachings of that party to which he belongs; and if there has been any party in the country which has gone as much as any other to establish the doctrine that to the victors belong the spoils, in the face of their assertion that they have no friends to reward, and no enemies to punish, it is his party. I have none of that disregard for party which is manifested by the Senator from Virginia, [Mr. Mason,] who takes the opportunity to give a side blow to my amendment. I have partisan politics. Sir, the Secretary of the Interior, or the Commissioner of Public Buildings, will know as well the qualifications of the men to be appointed on this guard as he does in regard to other officers, when, after the presidential election, he is called upon to appoint a Commissioner, or to decide who will make proper clerks. Who are they that remove the clerks and appoint others? They are those who come in in the exercise of that power; and in this instance the Commissioner will be familiar with his duties, will be familiar with the police of the city, and will be perfectly competent to make the appointment.

Mr. PEARCE. This is not a party question.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Party has nothing to do with it.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I do not think it is a question of party. I deny that there is any Whig party or Democratic party. I should like to have some police here who could find them out. [Laughter.] I will vote for any police that will find either of these parties. Now, Mr. President, I am not in favor of the amendment of my friend from Iowa, for these plain reasons: I do not mean by any vote of mine to make the Secretary of the Interior the captain of police. The amendment proposes that the Commissioner of Public Buildings shall have this power of appointment. I am unwilling to impose that upon him. I do not think he is an officer suitable to act as a policeman. You have established a city here, and have erected for that city a corporate authority. I think the corporation is competent to manage its affairs. I have not been here very long, but I am prepared from two years residence, to say that I believe it is the best administered city in some respects I ever saw. Sir, I have an argument which is clear to my mind that the system which we have now is the best system that we can devise. Why? I draw that conclusion from the intimate acquaintance which I have with the habits of the Senator from Illinois, and the Senator from North Carolina. I say intimate knowledge of their habits; and when they have not seen a policeman for three years, it is perfectly conclusive that it is a good police. Another argument, in regard to my friend from Mississippi, is conclusive that they are always in the performance of their duty. Now, we understand why it is. The Senators from Illinois and North Carolina never go out; how then can they expect to see a policeman? But my friend from Mississippi, who stands up for them, and knows them, sees them, and can see them whenever he wants to see them.

A SENATOR. Where does he go?

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I do not know where he goes. [Laughter.] That is none of my business; but from my knowledge of the gentlemen from intimate personal association with them, I think these policemen have vindicated their character for vigilance, because they have never seen the Senators from Illinois and North Carolina, but they have constantly seen the Senator from Mississippi. [Laughter.]

Now, Mr. President, in all seriousness, all I have to say is, in the name of God, if you have a corporate authority here, let that corporate authority manage its own affairs, and do not put it upon the President, or the head of a Department, to select their officers down to the police, and say that this man is to be appointed and that man not. I think they are able to take care of themselves.

Mr. PETTIT. I am decidedly in favor of taking these appointments from the Mayor of the city, and I think I can show my reasons for it very briefly. We have taken upon ourselves, or rather they have been forced upon us, all the expenses of this city. All the public improvements are made, all the streets are paved, at our expense. The water-works are made at the expense of the Government. The police, the auxiliary police, are paid at the expense of the Government. The Government and the city are partners; and, as a Senator said to me a few moments ago, we have a very unfortunate or unequal partnership with the city. We are the paying partner, the furnishing partner, and the city is the disbursing partner. When we furnish the money for the employment of these men, it seems to me exceedingly proper that we should appoint and select them by some person whom we designate. The public money is to be expended to pay these men, and there is no reason why a public functionary of the United States should not have the selection of these pensioners, or those to whom this money is to be paid. I think this city occupies a different position from what Philadelphia, Baltimore, New York, or other cities occupy. There they rely upon taxation, upon their own property and resources, and it is quite proper that they should have the entire control of their subalterns—the control not only of the appointment of the chief, but of the subalterns. It is not so here. This city applies to us to be entirely maintained in its expenditures, and it ought not to complain if we gave it the officers, as we make the expenditure. Upon every principle this power of appointment ought to be changed from the mayor.

Mr. WELLER. I think it must be obvious to all that it is impossible to get through with the bill to-night, for the amendment which is now pending has opened a wide door for discussion; and I do not know that it will terminate until a late hour. I have only this remark to make: I have heard but one Senator say that he has ever seen any of this Auxiliary Guard, and that was my friend from Mississippi. Now, I will venture to say that he never did see any of them, unless they came to him to apply for an increase of pay. I ask him whether he ever did see them at any other time?

Mr. ADAMS. They thought they were very badly treated by the committee of which I have the honor of being chairman, in not being provided for in the increase of salaries, and they did come to me, and that is the only acquaintance I had with them. [Laughter.]

Mr. WELLER. I supposed that to be the case. I have, therefore, a simple motion to make, and that is, that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was lost.

The yeas and nays having been taken on the amendment of Mr. DODGE, of Iowa, resulted—yeas 16, nays 22; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Atchison, Dodge of Wisconsin, Dodge of Iowa, Douglas, Fitzpatrick, Gwin, Houston, Hunter, Mallory, Norris, Pettit, Rusk, Sebastian, Stuart, Walker, and Weller—16.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Allen, Badger, Bell, Brodhead, Chase, Cooper, Evans, Fessenden, Fish, Foot, Geyer, Gillette, James, Jones of Tennessee, Mason, Pearce, Rockwell, Slidell, Sumner, Thompson of Kentucky, and Wade—22.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SLIDELL. I move to strike out all that part of the bill which makes any appropriation for the Auxiliary Guard.

Mr. HUNTER. This Auxiliary Guard was established in 1842. I have never heard it disputed, until this evening, that it was useful. I think we ought not to strike out these things without a little more consideration. The guard has been very useful in maintaining the peace and order of the city; and I confess I was surprised to hear the criticism of the Senator from Illinois. I hope the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana will not prevail.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Louisiana point out the clause to which his amendment applies?

The Secretary read from the bill, "and the Auxiliary Guard, and the watchmen of the Capitol extension, shall be $750."

Mr. SLIDELL. My amendment is to strike out the appropriation for the Auxiliary Guard.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that has been inserted in the bill by a vote of the Senate.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I do not understand that that is the portion of the bill which the Senator proposes to amend. He moves to strike out the appropriation for the guard, not the increase of pay.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands the proposition is to strike out the increase of pay.

Mr. DOUGLAS. No, sir; the total pay.

Mr. SLIDELL. The clause which I move to amend is the following:

For compensation of the Auxiliary Guard, fuel, and oil for lamps, $16,400.

I move to strike out that portion which applies to the compensation of the Auxiliary Guard.

The Secretary read the clause.

Mr. SLIDELL. My amendment will be to add, "and the Auxiliary Guard is hereby abolished."

Mr. HUNTER. Does the Senator propose to strike out the appropriation for fuel and oil for lamps?

Mr. SLIDELL. No, sir, I do not propose to do that; but I have not the means at hand to know how much of the appropriation to strike out, as that which relates to the Auxiliary Guard.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would suggest to the Senator from Louisiana that he should put his amendment in some form.

Mr. SLIDELL. I shall prepare it in form.

Mr. CHASE. If there is no question before the Senate, while the Senator from Louisiana is preparing his amendment, I will move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment, relating to the water-works was adopted. On that motion I will say all I have to say in a very few words. This bill has swelled out of all proportion as an appropriation bill; and I think the friends of the Administration ought to be thankful to anybody who makes a motion to reduce, in any degree, the appropriations provided for in it. I voted for this proposition with a great deal of reluctance, upon the understanding that the cities were to contribute one fourth of the whole expense of this establishment.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Will the Senator allow me to say a word?

Mr. CHASE. Certainly.

Mr. DOUGLAS. On consultation with the Senator from Louisiana, we have come to the conclusion to let this guard go over till next winter, and give them one session to redeem themselves, if they can do so.

Mr. CHASE. I was saying that I voted upon it with the understanding that the cities were to contribute one fourth of the whole expenditure. I find, upon examination, that instead of being one third, as proposed by the Senator from Louisiana, or one fourth, as was understood by the Senate, it is to be but one fifth. The Government appropriates $500,000, and the amendment requires the cities to contribute one fourth of that amount in addition, so that, together, the appropriation of the Government and the cities will be $625,000, making one fifth of the whole as the contribution of the cities. I merely refer to that, as showing a misunderstanding of mine; it may have been a misunderstanding of other Senators.

Upon further reflection, also, I have come to the conclusion that this is an extravagant appropriation. The city in which I reside contains a population of two hundred thousand inhabitants. The water-works by which the whole city is supplied, from the Ohio river, have fallen short in the whole cost of construction, from the commencement to this day, of $1,000,000. Here we are about to enter into a plan which is variously estimated for from $2,300,000, the estimate of the engineer, to $5,000,000, which is the estimate of other persons, for the purpose of supplying this city with water. I am satisfied that, upon a discrete and prudent plan, the city can be supplied with an abundance of water for less than half the first sum. These are the grounds upon which I have moved the reconsideration. I hope the Senate will agree to it. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.
Mr. BAYARD. The motion, I believe, is to reconsider the amendment which authorizes the introduction of an appropriation into this bill for the continuance of these water-works. I should vote for that motion, were it not that I think it would lead to a long debate; and this bill ought to pass to-day, if we mean to get through with the other appropriation bills. I shall, therefore, vote against the reconsideration.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 19, nays 21; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Atchison, Chase, Dodge of Wisconsin, Dodge of Iowa, Evans, Fitzpatrick, Foot, Geyer, Gillette, Houston, James, Pettit, Sebastian, Slidell, Wade, Walker, Weller, and Williams—19.

NAYS—Messrs. Allen, Badger, Bayard, Bell, Brodhead, Cooper, Douglas, Fessenden, Fish, Gwin, Hunter, Jones of Tennessee, Mallory, Mason, Norris, Pearce, Rockwell, Rusk, Shields, Stuart, and Thompson of Kentucky—21.

So the motion was lost.

Mr. GWIN. The Senator from Maine, [Mr. Hamlin,] who was called suddenly home to-day by a telegraphic dispatch, announcing sickness in his family, left with me an amendment to be proposed to this bill. The object is to equalize the compensation of the keepers of naval stores.

Mr. HUNTER. That ought to come in on the naval appropriation bill. I suggest to the Senator to withhold it, and offer it to that bill.

Mr. GWIN. I withdraw that. Mr. President, there is no question in which my colleague and myself feel so much interest as in regard to the judiciary of our State. It is perfectly notorious that the judges there have not the power to discharge the duties imposed upon them. I will state, Mr. President, my reason for offering the amendment which I shall now propose, and the reason which exists for the appointment of a new circuit judge. I consider that the supreme bench should be perfectly familiar with the land claims coming up before it. It is perfectly notorious that we passed an appropriation to obtain Mexican law books, and we paid a large amount to have them translated; but when the consideration of these cases came up during the last term of the supreme court, it was ascertained that there were unexpected side issues which the judges could not examine. Therefore I offer these additional sections:

Sec. — And be it further enacted, That the Supreme Court of the United States shall hereafter consist of the Chief Justice and nine associate justices, of whom any six shall constitute a quorum; and for this purpose there shall be one additional justice of the said court, with like duties, powers, and compensation, and who shall take the same oath as the other associate justices.

Sec. — And be it further enacted, That a tenth circuit be, and the same is hereby, constituted, consisting of the State of California, and the Territories of Oregon and Washington, in and for which a circuit court shall be held on the first Monday of August, in each and every year, at San Francisco; and to this circuit the associate justice hereby directed to be appointed is hereby assigned; or the Supreme Court may, from time to time, as often as said court may see right, assign any other associate justice to said court, and arrange their duties, so as to provide for holding the courts, from which any associate justice may have been withdrawn and assigned to said tenth circuit.

Mr. PETTIT. Mr. President—

Several SENATORS. There is no danger of that passing.

Mr. PETTIT. Well, if it will not carry, I shall say nothing about it. I am satisfied.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. GWIN. I have another amendment to offer. I shall not make a speech on it. It is to give to the clerk in the office of the First Comptroller what was intended to be given him by the law of 1850. The Comptroller has requested to have the law so altered as to enable him to draw his salary as the law was intended. This was sent to me by the First Comptroller of the Treasury. He recommends it:

That the increase of the salary of the clerk in the office of the First Comptroller provided to be paid by the act of September 30, 1850, shall date from the 1st of July, 1849, the commencement of his increased services; and that a balance of $333 33 be paid to him.

Mr. HUNTER. Is not that a private claim?

Mr. GWIN. No, sir; that was the original intention of the law, but an interpretation was given to it so as to deprive him of the compensation. I hope there will be no objection to it.

Mr. HUNTER. That is a private claim. I submit to the Chair if it is not.

Several SENATORS. Let it go.

Mr. WELLER. I have only one remark to make. I believe this is the third amendment which has been to-day offered to the civil and diplomatic bill to remove difficulties existing in the office of the First Comptroller of the Treasury. Now, it is astonishing that we are called upon to legislate so often in regard to the Comptroller of the Treasury, to define what we intended when we passed certain laws. I say it is a very remarkable fact that we should be called upon, after we have passed laws, to pass other provisions to remove the scruples of the First Comptroller. I shall vote for the amendment.

Mr. HUNTER. Let us have the question.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. NORRIS. I have a small amendment to offer. It is to insert:

For one additional clerk in the office of the assistant treasurer in Boston, Massachusetts, $1,200.

This is recommended by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. HUNTER. That is right.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MALLORY. I offer the following amendment:

Sec. — And be it further enacted, That whenever it shall be necessary for the head of any Department or office to employ special agents other than officers of the Army or Navy, who may be charged with the disbursement of the public moneys, they shall, prior to entering upon their duties as such, give bonds in such form, and with such security, as the head of the Department or the office employing said agents may approve.

Mr. HUNTER. I hope the Senator will not press that amendment here. We had to strike out a provision of the bill which provided for the engineers. They disbursed money and got nothing for it; and we never lost a cent by them. I am afraid this will reach further than the Senator intends; at any rate, I hope he will reserve it for another appropriation bill.

Mr. MALLORY. There is no more proper place for it than this. To show the propriety of it, I will say that it was drawn up in the Department, and the only exception is to inserting the officers of the Army and Navy excepted, which meets the objection of the Senator from Virginia. One of the most flagrant abuses in this power of appointing special agents for the disbursement of money, is exhibited in a document on your table which you have not taken the trouble to read. It happened to occur in my State; I am, therefore, very well acquainted with it. Here, the Department of the Interior tells you, are $14,600 yet unpaid out of $70,000 entrusted to agents. No bonds were taken. This amendment does not call for an appropriation, but it meets a crying abuse in the appointment of special agents for the disbursement of the public moneys without proper guards.

Mr. HUNTER. I have no objection to it; let it go.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SLIDELL. I wished to correct a clerical error in the amendment which was introduced by the Senator from California regulating the salaries of clerks in the different Mints. I offered an amendment to it which passed the Senate, allowing a certain additional salary to one of the clerks in the Mint at New Orleans, by the name of the cashier. He performs the duties of cashier; but in looking at the law under which he holds office, I find he is designated as "chief clerk." I presume there can be no objection to making that alteration.

Mr. HUNTER. None at all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That alteration will be made, if there be no objection.

Mr. WELLER. I desire to submit an amendment to modify the law of the 26th February, 1853, to obviate a difficulty in regard to California. It is:

That so much of the act passed the 26th February, 1853, being an act to regulate the fees and costs to be allowed to clerks, marshals, and attorneys, of the circuit and district courts of the United States, and for other purposes, as fixes the compensation to be allowed "for expenses while employed in endeavoring to arrest under process any person charged with, or convicted of, a crime, the sum actually expended, not to exceed two dollars a day, in addition to his compensation for such services and travel," be amended so as to read, "for expenses while employed in endeavoring to arrest under process any person charged or convicted of a crime, the actual necessary expenses in addition to his compensation for services and travel."

That law reads in this wise: "for expenses while employed in endeavoring to arrest under process any person charged with, or convicted of, crime, the sum actually expended, not to exceed two dollars per diem." I propose to strike out those words, so that the Department may be authorized to allow him what was actually expended, and what was absolutely necessary to accomplish the object.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendments were then ordered to be engrossed; and the bill was ordered to be read a third time.

Mr. SLIDELL. I have prepared an amendment in relation to the Auxiliary Guard.

Mr. HUNTER. The bill is ordered to be engrossed, and it cannot be amended now.

The bill was read a third time.

Mr. ATCHISON. I ask for the yeas and nays upon the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I am requested by my friend from Mississippi [Mr. Brown] to say that if he had been here he would have voted for the bill; but he was necessarily called to his residence.

The question being taken by yeas and nays on the passage of the bill, resulted—yeas 25, nays 16; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allen, Badger, Bayard, Bell, Brodhead, Cooper, Douglas, Evans, Fish, Fitzpatrick, Geyer, Gwin, Houston, Hunter, James, Mallory, Mason, Pearce, Rockwell, Rusk, Sebastian, Shields, Slidell, Stuart, and Williams—25.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Atchison, Chase, Dodge of Wisconsin, Dodge of Iowa, Fessenden, Foot, Gillette, Jones of Tennessee, Norris, Pettit, Sumner, Thompson of Kentucky, Wade, Walker, and Weller—16.

So the bill was passed; and,

On motion by Mr. BADGER, its title was amended by adding "and for other purposes."

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

While the civil and diplomatic appropriation bill was under consideration,

Mr. PEARCE, by unanimous consent, made the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill "making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1855, and for other purposes," having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend, and do recommend to their respective Houses, as follows:

That the Senate concur in the amendments of the House of Representatives to the first, second, fifty-ninth, sixty-eighth, and eighty-first amendments of the Senate.

That the Senate concur in the amendment of the House of Representatives to the fourteenth amendment of the Senate, with amendments, as follows: In line fifteen of the amendment of the House of Representatives, strike out the word "seven" and insert "seventy;" in line twenty-four of said amendment, strike out the word "five" and insert "one;" and in line thirty-three of said amendment, strike out the word "five" and insert "one."

That the Senate do recede from its seventy-fourth amendment; and that the following be substituted for its seventy-fifth amendment:

And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized, if, in his judgment, the public interest will be promoted thereby, to cause to be disbursed such of the moneys appropriated in this act for the Utah Indians, either under treaty stipulations or for general incidental expenses, by the Indian agent in that Territory, as he may think proper: Provided, That said agent shall, under no circumstances, receive any additional compensation therefor.

That the Senate do recede from its seventh, seventy-third, eightieth, and eighty-second amendments.

That the House of Representatives concur in the sixty-seventh amendment of the Senate, with the following amendments:

After the word "rendered," in the fourth line of the amendment of the Senate, insert the words "within or upon any Indian territory;" and in the same line, strike out the words "in cases," and in lieu thereof insert "for medical or manual services, or in cases of humanity."

And that the House of Representatives do recede from their disagreement to the tenth amendment of the Senate, and agree thereto.

JAS. ALFRED PEARCE,
S. ADAMS,
W. K. SEBASTIAN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
GEO. S. HOUSTON,
S. G. HAVEN,
GALUSHA A. GROW,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. PEARCE. I should like to have the unanimous consent of the Senate to consider this now. I will give such explanations as may be necessary in regard to the report.

Unanimous consent was given.

Mr. STUART. I should like to have some explanation of the report.

Mr. PEARCE. I shall make very brief explanations of the different recommendations. The first amendment of the Senate was to insert in the bill the following provisos:

Provided, That the President may, from time to time, in his discretion, remove or change the location of any of the superintendencies now or hereafter to be established by law: And provided further, That whenever the President may order the transfer of the duties of superintendent of Indian affairs from the Governor of the Territory of Minnesota, the salary of said Governor shall thereafter be $2,500 per annum.

The House struck out the second, and the committee recommend that the Senate recede from it. The House were fixed in their determination not to allow it. The President may, in his discretion, separate those duties, and they were unwilling to make this provision in anticipation of action by him.

The second amendment of the Senate was to insert:

For pay of five Indian sub-agents for California, at an annual salary of $1,500 each, $7,500.

For pay of four Indian sub-agents in Oregon Territory, at an annual salary of $1,000 each, $4,000.

The amendment of the House to it was to strike out "five," and insert "three," and decrease the total of salaries accordingly from $7,500 to $4,500. There are but three settlements of Indians there, and three sub-agents. The committee recommend the Senate to concur in the House amendment.

The amendment of the House to the fifty-ninth amendment of the Senate is merely verbal. The Senate amendment was to insert:

For payment to the Winnebago nation of Indians of certain unexpended balances of appropriations under various treaties, on account of annuities, education, provisions, goods, &c., $30,004 69.

The House amended it by putting "in full" after "payment." The committee recommend a concurrence in that.

The sixty-eighth Senate amendment was to insert:

For defraying the expenses of continuing the removal and subsistence of Indians in California, three military reservations, in accordance with the plan submitted by the superintendent of Indian affairs of that State, and approved by the President, the sum of $200,000: Provided, That no portion of this amount shall be paid over to the present superintendent of Indian affairs, until he shall account satisfactorily for the amount already drawn by him out of former appropriations. And that, hereafter, no more than $20,000 shall be drawn by the said superintendent, or be in his hands unexpended at one and the same time: And provided, The sub-agents created by this act shall be appointed by the superintendent, subject to confirmation by the Secretary of the Interior, not to exceed one for each reservation, nor three in all, said reservations to contain not less than five nor more than ten thousand acres; and the said superintendent is authorized to apply, out of the sum hereby appropriated, not exceeding $25,000 in the extinguishment of conflicting titles and rights to said reserved lands at a price not exceeding $1 25 per acre, for a valid and indefeasible title to the land so purchased: And provided, The State of California shall cede the necessary jurisdiction in such cases with regard to the land so purchased.

The House amended it by striking out the words:

That no portion of this amount shall be paid over to the present superintendent of Indian affairs, until he shall account satisfactorily for the amount already drawn by him out of former appropriations.

They propose to strike that out because the superintendent, to whom it especially referred, has been superseded, and another now holds the office. The committee recommend a concurrence in that.

Then they propose that the Senate agree to the House amendment to our eighty-first amendment, which is merely verbal. As it passed the Senate, it read:

Sec. 10. And be it further enacted, That to enable the Secretary of the Interior to settle and pay the claims on file for reservations, and for rents and improvements, under the thirteenth and sixteenth articles of the Cherokee treaty of 29th of December, 1835, in pursuance of the stipulations of the third article of the treaty of August 8, 1846, the sum heretofore appropriated for those purposes, and carried to the surplus fund, is hereby reappropriated.

The House amended it so as to make it read:

That to enable the Secretary of the Interior to settle and pay the awards of commissioners, on file for reservations, preemptions, and for rents and improvements, under the twelfth, thirteenth, and sixteenth articles of the Cherokee treaty of 29th of December, 1835, in pursuance of the stipulations of the third article of the treaty of August 8, 1846, the sum heretofore appropriated for those purposes, and carried to the surplus fund, is hereby reappropriated.

The committee recommend a concurrence in that.

Mr. HUNTER. I hope, by general consent, the Senate will dispense with particular explanations, and let us have the vote. The House has agreed to the report.

The report of the committee was concurred in.

The other points of difference between the two Houses were the following:

The fourteenth amendment of the Senate was to insert:

For expenses of the transportation of the first of ten installments of goods, provisions, and agricultural implements, stipulated in the sixth article of the treaty of the 27th of July, 1853, $5,000: Provided, That the goods, provisions, and agricultural implements which may be purchased and transported, out of any moneys hereby appropriated, shall not be delivered until the said tribes of Indians shall have assented to the amendments of the Senate of the United States to the said treaty, on account of which they are procured.

The House amended it by adding the following:

Delawares.—For the expenses of surveying the lands, as provided in the second article of the treaty of the 7th of May, 1854, $11,146 95.

For the first of eight equal installments for payment of five chiefs, per third and sixth articles of the treaty of the 6th of May, 1854, $1,250.

For the first of two installments per fourth article of the treaty of the 6th of May, 1854, $74,000.

For the purchase of four sections of land for the Christian Indians, per thirteenth article of the treaty of the 6th of May, 1854, $6,400.

For payment, under the direction of the President of the United States, the sum of $5,600: Provided, That the said Christian Indians shall relieve the United States from all claims or demands for lands or money arising under the third and fourth articles of the agreement of the 8th of November, 1823, made with said Indians, the payment of $6,400 and $5,600, as above provided, being in lieu thereof, and in full consideration of the same.

Iowas.—For the expenses of surveying, as provided in the third article of the treaty of the 17th of May, 1854, $1,987 20.

For the payment of a portion of the $157,500 due the Iowas, under the second clause of the second article of the treaty of the 19th of October, 1838, to be applied as an agricultural fund, per ninth article of the treaty of the 17th of May, 1854, $55,000: Provided, That the appropriation herein made "for interest on $157,500, at five per centum, stipulated in the second article of the treaty of the 19th of October, 1838," be reduced to the sum of $5,375.

For the payment in consideration of removal to their reservation, and of a release of all claims per twelfth article of the treaty of the 17th of May, 1854, $5,000.

Kickapoos.—For the expenses of selecting the reservation provided in the first article of the treaty of the 18th of May, 1854, and for surveying and marking the exterior lines of the same, $1,000.

For the first installment of interest at five per centum on $100,000 for education, per second article of the treaty of the 18th of May, 1854, $5,000.

For the payment of this sum as the first installment in money, per second article of the treaty of the 18th of May, 1854, $25,000.

For the payment for improvements and the expenses of appraising the same on the land ceded, per fourth article of the treaty of the 18th of May, 1854, $15,000.

For removal and subsistence, and in consideration of a release of all claims, per eighth article of the treaty of the 18th of May, 1854, $20,000.

Sacs and Foxes of Missouri.—For expenses of selecting the reservation provided for in the first article of the treaty of the 18th of May, 1854, and for surveying and marking the exterior lines of the same, $500.

For the first of four installments per second article of the treaty of the 18th of May, 1854, $15,000.

For removal and subsistence, and in satisfaction of all claims and demands, per sixth article of the treaty of the 18th of May, 1854, $5,900.

For defraying the expenses of the Creek delegation now in the city of Washington, and with whom a treaty has lately been concluded, $1,199 55.

The committee recommend the Senate to concur in the amendment of the House, with amendments to correct the phraseology of it.

The seventy-fourth amendment of the Senate was to insert the following:

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That the President be authorized, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint a superintendent of Indian affairs for the Territory of Utah, who shall receive an annual salary of $2,000, and whose duty it shall be to exercise a general superintendence over all the Indian tribes in Utah, and to exercise and perform all the powers and duties assigned by law to other superintendents of Indian affairs.

The House disagreed to it; and the committee recommend the Senate to recede from it.

The seventy-fifth amendment of the Senate was to insert:

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That so much of the act to establish the territorial government of Utah, approved the 9th of September, 1850, as requires the Governor of said Territory to perform the duties of superintendent of Indian affairs, and authorizes him to receive a salary therefor, in addition to the salary allowed for his services as Governor, be repealed, and that the Governor of said Territory shall hereafter receive an annual salary of $2,500.

The House disagreed to it; and the committee recommend the Senate to recede from it, and substitute in its place the following:

And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized, if, in his judgment, the public interest will be promoted thereby, to cause to be disbursed such moneys as are appropriated in this act for the Utah Indians, either under treaty stipulations, or for general incidental expenses, by the Indian agents in that Territory, as he may think proper: Provided, That said agent shall, under no circumstances, receive any additional compensation therefor.

The amendments from which the committee recommend the Senate to recede were the following:

No. 7, to insert:

For salary of five Indian agents, of the second class, according to existing laws, at the rate, in future, of $500 each per annum, $2,500.

No. 73, to insert:

For a clerk to the superintendent of Indian affairs in the Territory of Washington, $1,800; and for a clerk to the superintendent of Indian affairs in the Territory of New Mexico, $1,000; to be allowed in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior.

No. 80, to insert:

Sec. 9. And be it further enacted, That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized, by and with the assent of the Indian tribes, respectively, to be obtained in due form, to enter into treaties with the various Indian tribes, to redeem and extinguish the perpetual annuities, or the payment of interest perpetually upon sums of money required to be held in trust, or invested in stocks, by either paying to said tribes the par value or equivalent of the said annuities and perpetual interest, either in whole or in annuities, for a term of years, as he, in his judgment, may deem most advantageous to the Indians, respectively.

No. 82, to insert:

Sec. 11. And be it further enacted, That, for the payment of the balance of per capita due the Cherokee Indians residing in the States east of the Mississippi river, under the treaty of 1835, and supplemental treaty of May, 1836, according to the stipulation of the tenth article of the treaty of August 8, 1846, the sum of $92,625 18: Provided, That the same shall be reimbursed from the sums of money hereafter to be paid to the Western Cherokees, in such manner and in such amounts as the President of the United States may direct.

The sixty-seventh amendment of the Senate to which the House disagreed, was to add to the following section:

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That no existing provisions of law, prescribing the manner in which payment shall be made to Indians, shall be so construed as to repeal or contravene the seventeenth section of an act entitled "An act to regulate trade and intercourse with the Indian tribes, and to preserve peace on the frontiers," approved June 30, 1834.

the words:

Or to prohibit the payment of any claim or claims (other than those of agents or attorneys for claims) for bona fide services rendered to any Indian tribe, in cases where the President may adjudge such service necessary, and the claim or claims therefor just and reasonable.

The committee recommend the House to concur in the amendment with amendments, so as to make it read:

Or to prohibit the payment of any claim or claims (other than those of agents or attorneys for claims) for bona fide services rendered within or upon any Indian territory, to the Indian tribes, for medical or manual services, or in cases of humanity.

The tenth amendment of the Senate to which the House disagreed, but from which disagreement the committee recommend them to recede, was to insert:

For erecting buildings for Indian agents in Washington Territory, $5,000.

The report having been concurred in, the bill is finally passed.

On motion, the Senate adjourned at seven o'clock, p. m.

IN SENATE.

FRIDAY, July 28, 1854.

Prayer by Rev. HENRY SLICER.

On motion by Mr. BADGER, the reading of the Journal was dispensed with.

BOMBARDMENT OF SAN JUAN.

Mr. PEARCE submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to communicate to the Senate all the information in his possession respecting the bombardment of Greytown or San Juan de Nicaragua, by Captain Hollins, in command of the United States ship Cyane, with copies of all orders or instructions, if any, given by the Executive to said Hollins in relation thereto.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a report of the Secretary of the Interior, communicating, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate, a certified copy of the register of "heads of families" entitled to life estate reservations under the Cherokee treaties of 1817 and 1819; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Also, a message from the President of the United States, communicating, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate, the fourth meteorological report of Professor Espy; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Mr. BRODHEAD presented the petition of Frances C. Elliott, widow of the late Captain J. D. Elliott, United States Navy, praying indemnity for extraordinary expenses incurred by her late husband while in command of the Mediterranean squadron, and compensation for serving during the war of 1812; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a memorial of citizens of Philadelphia, remonstrating against the repeal of the duty on railroad iron; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I beg to say that I understand that some of these railroad speculators intend to offer an amendment to some appropriation bill for that purpose.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa, presented the petition of Fallot A. Whitney, praying the confirmation of his title to a lot of ground in the city of Washington; which was referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

REPORTS FROM STANDING COMMITTEES.

Mr. RUSK, from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, to whom were referred the following bills from the House of Representatives, reported them back without amendment:

A bill for the relief of James S. Graham and Walker H. Finnall; and

A bill for the relief of J. C. Buckles, of Louisville, Kentucky.

Mr. MASON, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the memorial of Horatio J. Perry, secretary of legation of the United States at Madrid, praying compensation as chargé d'affaires at times when he discharged the duties of that office, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for his relief; which was read, and passed to a second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of R. M. Walsh, praying compensation for his services as chargé d'affaires at Mexico, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for his relief; which was read, and passed to a second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of George W. Lippitt, United States consul at Vienna, praying compensation for diplomatic services, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for his relief; which was read, and passed to a second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the memorial of Henry Savage, praying compensation for diplomatic services rendered the United States, in Central America, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for his relief; which was read, and passed to a second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of J. B. Holman, praying extra compensation as secretary of legation of the United States at Chili, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for his relief; which was read, and passed to a second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Peter Parker, secretary of legation, &c., at Canton, China, praying compensation as chargé d'affaires from the 24th of May, 1852, to the 31st of December, 1853, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for his relief; which was read, and passed to a second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Joseph Graham, United States consul at Buenos Ayres, praying compensation for services as chargé d'affaires, ad interim, at that place, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for his relief; which was read, and passed to a second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the memorial of Ferdinand Coxé, late secretary of legation of the United States to Brazil, praying compensation for diplomatic services, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for his relief; which was read, and passed to a second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. GWIN, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the memorial of James R. Howison, secretary of the Naval Academy, praying to be allowed the same compensation from the date of his appointment, as that which he now receives, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the memorial of Thomas Ap Catesby Jones, a captain in the Navy, praying the restitution of his pay, suspended by the sentence of a court-martial, reported a bill for his relief; which was read, and passed to a second reading.

Mr. JOHNSON, from the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred a motion to print additional copies of the eighth annual report of the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution, reported the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That there be printed, for the use of the Senate, ten thousand extra copies of the eighth annual report of the Regents of the Smithsonian Institute, five hundred of such copies to be given to the secretary of the Smithsonian Institution for its use.

Mr. WADE, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred a bill from the House of Representatives, for the relief of Sylvester Humphrey, and the heirs of Alexander Humphrey, deceased, reported it back without amendment.

Mr. PETTIT, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom were referred the following bills from the House of Representatives, reported them back without amendment:

A bill for the relief of the inhabitants of school township forty-five, range one, in Warren county, Indiana;

A bill for the relief of William J. McElhiney, E. P. Matthews, and Lawrence Cribben;

A bill for the relief of A. S. Laughery;

A bill for the relief of Rosalie Caxillo;

A bill for the relief of Patrick Gass;

A bill for the relief of Enoch Moore;

A bill for the relief of William Curran;

A bill for the relief of John McVey and John F. McKneely, of Louisiana;

A bill for the relief of Robert F. McGuire and Louisa, his wife, late Louisa Larny;

A bill for the relief of the legal representatives of John Rice Jones, deceased; and

A bill for the relief of Thomas C. Greene.

Mr. CHASE, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred a bill from the House of Representatives, for the relief of Daniel Steenrod, reported it back with sundry amendments.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the memorial of Henry Savage, praying compensation for diplomatic services rendered the United States, in Central America, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for his relief; which was read, and passed to a second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

FORTIFICATION BILL.

Mr. HUNTER, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred a bill from the House of Representatives, making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, and for repairs of barracks and quarters, for the year ending the 30th of June, 1855, reported it back without amendment.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HUNTER, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred a bill from the House of Representatives, making appropriations for the support of the Army for the year ending the 30th of June, 1855, reported it back with sundry amendments.

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HUNTER, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred a bill from the House of Representatives, making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department during the fiscal year ending the 30th of June, 1855, reported it back without amendment.

PACIFIC RAILROAD.

Mr. GWIN submitted the following resolution for consideration; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That ten thousand copies of the several reports of the officers in charge of explorations to determine the practicability of a railroad from the Mississippi to the Pacific, be, and the same are hereby, authorized to be printed for the use of the Senate, in quarto form; and that five hundred copies are authorized to be printed for the Secretary of War, and two hundred and fifty for each of the officers aforesaid.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Mr. MALLORY asked and obtained the unanimous consent of the Senate to introduce a bill to amend the "Act requiring foreign regulations of commerce to be laid annually before Congress," approved 16th of August, 1842, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message was received from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McKean, Chief Clerk, announcing that the Speaker had signed the following enrolled bills:

An act for the compensation of James W. Low and others, for the capture of the British private armed schooner Ann, during the late war with Great Britain;

An act for the relief of Purser T. P. McBlair;

An act for the relief of George Mattingly;

An act for the relief of the Pine Grove Academy in Louisiana;

And act for the relief of John Frazer, and the administrator of the estate of John S. Clendenin, deceased;

An act supplementary to an act entitled "An act to authorize notaries public to take and certify oaths, affirmations, and acknowledgments in certain cases; and

An act for the relief of John S. Jones and William H. Russell, surviving partners of the firm of Brown, Russell & Co.

Which were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

LOUIS E. SIMONS.

Mr. MALLORY. The Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill from the House of Representatives, for the relief of Captain Louis E. Simons, have instructed me to report the bill back without amendment, and ask the consent of the Senate to have it acted on now. I will state the character of the bill. Mr. Simons, as naval officer on the coast of Africa, seized a vessel supposed to be a slave. She was tried in Boston and found not to be so, and he was prosecuted for damages and mulcted in $800, but the court found that he had probable cause of seizure. It is simply to relieve him from these liabilities that this bill is asked.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

It proposes to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to pay $300 to Captain Simons, for his expenses incurred in defending himself against two suits brought against him for arresting and detaining the brig Casket, on the coast of Africa, on the charge of being engaged in the slave trade in 1846, he being then in command of the United States armed vessel Marion, and acting in the line of his duty.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

POST ROUTE BILL.

A message was received from the House of Representatives during the consideration of the river and harbor bill, by Mr. McKean, their Chief Clerk, announcing that the House had passed a bill entitled "An act to establish certain post roads," in which they requested the concurrence of the Senate.

Mr. RUSK. Mr. President, I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to permit that bill to be read a first and second time now.

There being no objection, the bill was read a first and second time by its title.

Mr. RUSK. Mr. President, I now ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to put it upon its passage. It contains all the post routes in the United States. There is great difficulty existing now in ascertaining what is a post road and what is not. Some of the laws establishing post routes were passed seventy or eighty years ago. This bill, which has been prepared with great labor, contains a compilation of all the post routes in the United States, with perhaps an exception of one or two for which provision will be made hereafter in a supplemental bill.

One reason why I ask for its immediate passage is this: On looking at the Secretary's desk, Senators will see the immense mass of manuscript of which the bill consists, and it must be obvious that it will require nearly all the leisure time of the clerks, from the present to the closing hour of the session, for its enrollment.

The PRESIDENT. It requires unanimous consent to put the bill on its passage now.

Mr. CASS. I am not sure that I ought to consent to the passage of the bill without amendment. I have an amendment, to establish a post route, which I desire to offer.

Mr. RUSK. If it has been sent to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, it has been incorporated in the bill.

Mr. CASS. But I did not send it to the honorable member's committee.

Mr. RUSK. The effect of amending the bill, and sending it back to the House would be to delay it to such a period as to lose it entirely. I propose to have the post-route referred to by the honorable Senator, and two or three others, provided for in a supplemental bill.

Mr. CASS. I withdraw the objection.

There being no further objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole, reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message was received from the President of the United States, by Mr. WEBSTER, his Private Secretary, announcing that he had, on the 27th instant, approved and signed the following acts and joint resolution:

- An act for the relief of Joseph Mitchell;
- An act for the relief of the legal representatives of Joshua Kennedy, deceased;
- An act authorizing Victor Morass to relinquish certain lands, and to enter the same quantity elsewhere;
- An act for the relief of Charles Cooper & Co.;
- An act for the relief of James Dunning;
- An act for the relief of Ezra Williams;
- An act for the relief of Rebecca Freeman;
- An act for the relief of John Phagan;
- An act for the relief of Thomas S. Russell;
- An act to confirm the claim of Dusan de la Croix to a lot of land therein described;
- An act to ascertain and adjust the titles to certain lands in the State of Indiana;
- An act for the relief of Mary Carlton;

An act for the relief of James Edwards and others;

- An act for the relief of Lavinia Taylor;
- An act for the relief of James Wormsley;
- An act for the relief of Ira Baldwin;
- An act for the relief of Thomas Snodgrass;
- An act for the relief of Passed Midshipmen George P. Welsh and Clark H. Wells;
- An act for the relief of William Miller;
- An act for the relief of Sarah Crandall;
- An act for the relief of Mrs. Sally T. B. Cochran, widow of the late Lieutenant R. E. Cochran, United States Army;

An act for the relief of Conrad Wheat, jr., or his legal representatives;

- An act for the relief of Sylvester T. Jerauld, assignee of the interest of Henry Richard;
- An act for the relief of Richard King;
- An act for the relief of Thomas D. Jennings;
- An act for the relief of the legal representatives of Samuel Prioleau, deceased;
- An act for the relief of Richard M. Bouton, George Wright, and the widow of Marvin W. Fisher;

An act authorizing a patent to be issued to Peter Poncin for certain lands therein described; and

A resolution authorizing the Secretary of the Territory of New Mexico to adjust and pay to Juan C. Armigo, José L. Perea, and James L. Collins, the amount by them loaned to the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of New Mexico, under authority of a joint resolution of that body, approved 17th of June, 1851.

INCREASE OF THE ARMY.

A message was received from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McKean, Chief Clerk, announcing that the House had passed a bill entitled "An act to increase the pay of the rank and file of the Army, and to encourage enlistments," in which they requested the concurrence of the Senate.

By unanimous consent the bill was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

TEXAS NAVY.

Mr. RUSK. I move to dispense with the prior orders of the day, and proceed to the consideration of the bill to provide for the surviving officers of the late Texas navy.

Mr. WADE. Will the Senator allow me to make a report?

Mr. RUSK. I may lose the floor if I do so.

Mr. WADE. It is very manifest, from our knowledge of the bill which the Senator from Texas proposes to take up, that it will lead to debate. I shall, therefore, be obliged to ask the Senate not to take it up, in order that we may proceed at once to Executive session.

Mr. RUSK. I hope the bill will be taken up. There can then be no difficulty in making reports by unanimous consent. It has been done two or three times, and I shall not object to reports being made after the bill shall be taken up.

Mr. MASON. If the bill be taken up, it will interfere with the Executive session, which it is well known is imperiously demanded by the interests of the public service.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. I shall be much obliged to the Senator from Texas if he will allow me to call up a resolution in regard to the printing of some documents, in reference to which a motion to reconsider was made. The printing has been done long since, but, in consequence of the pendency of the motion to reconsider, it has not been delivered to us.

Mr. RUSK. I would yield in a moment, but that is a thing which can be done at any time by unanimous consent, whereas, if I lose the floor I may not be able to get it again. I insist on my motion.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. I ask that it be done by unanimous consent?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas withdraw his motion?

Mr. RUSK. No, sir.

The PRESIDENT. Then the question is on proceeding to the consideration of the bill to provide for the surviving officers of the late Texas navy.

Mr. JOHNSON. If the question is put on that motion, before we can get our reports off our hands, I shall be compelled to vote against it. I wish to make some reports, and I hope the usual morning hour will be allowed for that purpose.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair must put the question on the motion of the Senator from Texas, unless it be withdrawn.

Mr. RUSK called for the yeas and nays; and they were ordered.

Mr. WELLER. I understand the Senator from Texas has no objection to the introduction of reports which will not give rise to debate. There seem to be several Senators who desire to report bills. If such be the fact, I think their reports had better be received by general consent.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair did not so understand the Senator from Texas.

Mr. RUSK. There can be no difficulty about making reports, by unanimous consent, after the bill shall be taken up. That is a thing which has been done three or four times, and I shall make no objection to it, and I presume no other Senator will.

Mr. MASON. I hope the Senate, in voting on the motion of the Senator from Texas, will make it a test vote between taking up the bill to provide for the Texas navy, and going into Executive session. I must ask for an Executive session.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 19, nays 22; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bell, Bright, Brodhead, Dawson, Dodge of Iowa, Fitzpatrick, Gwin, Houston, James, Jones of Tennessee, Mallory, Pettit, Pratt, Rusk, Sebastian, Stuart, Thomson of New Jersey, Toombs, and Weller—19.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Allen, Atchison, Badger, Benjamin, Brown, Chase, Clayton, Dodge of Wisconsin, Fessenden, Fish, Foot, Geyer, Gillette, Johnson, Mason, Pearce, Rockwell, Seward, Sumner, Wade, and Walker—22.

So the motion was not agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION—ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MASON. I ask the Senate now to postpone all other business, and proceed to the consideration of Executive business.

Mr. RUSK. I hope the Senator will allow us the morning hour.

Mr. STUART. A few days ago when I reported back, from the Committee on Commerce, the House bill to continue the improvements of rivers and harbors, I gave notice that, on the disposition of the civil and diplomatic bill, I should ask the Senate to take up that bill. I may be mistaken, but I think that the bill is in such a condition—the committee recommending no further appropriations than those which have passed the House—that it may be disposed of here without a lengthy debate; and I am in hope, without any debate at all of any consequence. I think it can be disposed of in an hour or two. I shall, therefore, vote against going into Executive session now, and shall insist upon taking up that bill. So far as my own action goes, however, I am ready to say to the Senator from Virginia, that if the Senate take up the bill, and, contrary to my expectation, a lengthy debate shall spring up on it, I will, after a while, give way for an Executive session.

Mr. HUNTER. I should like to propose a compromise to the two Senators. I think they had better let me report the Post Office and Army appropriation bills. I think we can dispose of them to-day.

Mr. WELLER. Why, Mr. President, we had the promise of the Senator from Virginia yesterday, that if we passed the civil and diplomatic appropriation bill, he would no longer be in the way; and now he is the first Senator this morning to propose his own business to the exclusion of other business.

Mr. BADGER. He meant that he would no longer be in the way with the civil and diplomatic appropriation bill. [Laughter.]

Mr. MASON. I must insist on my motion.

Mr. BELL. I am sorry to hear the Senator from Michigan say that if any debate arises on the river and harbor bill he will give way.

Mr. STUART. I said that if it ran into a lengthy debate, by and by I would give way for an Executive session.

Mr. BELL. Now, Mr. President, I appeal to that honorable Senator to say whether, if this bill is not taken up, we have any prospect of getting the decision of the Senate on it this session. If we allow it to be overlaughed now by an Executive session, and then by appropriation bill after appropriation bill, all of which must and will pass, as you know, we shall have this bill postponed until the last night of the session, and then we know what will become of it.

Mr. STUART. If the Senator will allow me to interrupt him, I do not believe that he and I, being firm friends of this bill, can do better than just vote against Executive session, and against all the appropriation bills until this is disposed of. That is my intention, and I shall vote to take up no other appropriation bill until this bill is disposed of. I think we had better not spend much time in discussing it.

Mr. BROWN. I shall vote against going into Executive session, for the reason which I have assigned two or three times before: that I see no necessity for pressing Executive business upon us to the exclusion of matters of legislation. I should not have said anything now except to say, that if we fail to go into Executive session, I shall vote against taking up the river and harbor bill. I do not wish to be understood as voting against the Executive session for the purpose of taking up that bill. I am opposed to taking it up at all.

Mr. GWIN. The chairman of the Committee on Finance has the fortification bill ready to report without a solitary amendment. In my opinion, it will pass in five minutes. There will be no debate upon it at all. It contains the estimates of the Department only. It passed through the other House, and it is not proposed by any one here to amend it. I believe the same thing may be said of the Post Office appropriation bill; and if we should spend a short time this morning on those appropriation bills, to which there will be no objection and no amendment, we shall make very important progress before we go into Executive session, if the Senate determine to do that. I therefore hope the Senator from Virginia [Mr. HUNTER] will ask the privilege of reporting these appropriation bills, in order that they may be passed at once.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I hope the friends of the river and harbor improvement bill will insist upon supporting the motion of the Senator from Michigan. It is very obvious that unless the friends of those improvements, now make a stand, and agree to vote against everything until the decision of the Senate can be had on taking up that bill, we shall not reach it at this session. As the bill now stands, I believe, with my colleague on the Committee on Commerce, [Mr. STUART], it will occupy but little time of the Senate. As regards the Executive session sought for by the Senator from Virginia, it will be perfectly easy for the Senate, if it is found that this bill leads to a protracted debate, at one or two o'clock to postpone its further consideration until to-morrow morning. We can go on with it for a time, and leave the rest of the afternoon for Executive session. It is said that these appropriation bills can be passed in an hour or two. If they can be passed in an hour or two before the river and harbor bill is taken up, they can be passed in an hour or two after it is disposed of just as well. The river and harbor bill is a House bill. Our action upon it makes it complete; and there will then remain nothing but the action of the Executive to determine whether it shall become a law or not. I hope that the vote on taking up this bill will be considered as a test vote with the friends of the measure.

Mr. HUNTER. I would suggest to the Senator from Louisiana that if I could be permitted to report these two bills, to which I imagine there will be neither amendment nor opposition, they would not interfere with his taking the stand which he desires to take in reference to the river and harbor bill. I think we can get through with them in fifteen minutes.

Mr. GWIN. The Senator from Louisiana certainly will not object to the fortification bill. His State, as well as mine, is interested in it.

Mr. BENJAMIN. If the river and harbor bill be taken up, I will agree to lay it aside, by unanimous consent, for a minute or two, so as to pass those appropriation bills, and then go on with it again. I want the bill taken up.

Mr. HUNTER. I do not promise to take up the river and harbor bill.

Mr. WELLER. I hope we shall have a vote on this proposition. We are in the habit of consuming a great deal of time in discussing the question whether we shall do anything or not, or the order in which we shall do it. If this river and harbor bill pass, under the Constitution the President will be entitled to ten days to consider it. There are not ten days of this session left; and, in my opinion, he would require full ten days to satisfy himself of the constitutionality of it. I do not know what we should gain by taking it up.

Mr. JOHNSON. I may get the ear of the Chair, probably, by raising a question of order. It is this: We have a morning hour set apart for the transaction of specific business. It seems to be impossible to get that business transacted. The whole hour seems to be consumed in this debate on the river and harbor bill. Now, is it in order, in any way, to bring forward a motion to take up the river and harbor bill during the morning hour?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is in order to suspend the usual order of business by a vote to that effect.

Mr. JOHNSON. Is there any motion pending in regard to the river and harbor bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is a motion pending to go into Executive session.

Mr. JOHNSON. I hope very much that the Senator will allow us, before he asks us to go into Executive session, to get clear of the regular morning business, because we have not had an opportunity for a week, I believe, to devote the hour to that business.

Mr. MASON. If the Senate will determine to proceed to the consideration of Executive business, I shall then, with great pleasure, allow half an hour, by unanimous consent, to be devoted to morning business before actually going into Executive session.

Mr. JOHNSON. That is all I want.

Mr. SEWARD. I desire to say that I think we had better proceed with the river and harbor bill. The appropriation bills are sure to pass—there is no fear of them; but the river and harbor bill may not pass. I hear only one reason why we should not take it up; that is, that it is so late in the session that it will not leave ten days for the President to examine it after we have passed it. That is a reason for taking it up immediately. I hope, therefore, that the friends of the bill will insist upon taking it up, and taking it up now, and not give way for the Executive session.

Mr. DAWSON. In reply to the argument of the Senator from New York, I beg to say that it has been intimated by the friends of the river and harbor bill that it will take less time to consider it than any of the appropriation bills. We had better, therefore, agree to the proposition of the Senator from Virginia; for the President will then have more time to consider bills that may require mature examination. There is no bill, gentlemen may be assured, upon which the President will require so little time for consideration, as the river and harbor bill; for upon that subject his mind has been long since made up.

Mr. CHASE. I trust the river and harbor bill will be taken up. If there are votes enough to confirm any treaty, there are, as everybody knows, votes enough to sit it out and compel the fulfillment of it. We can take up the treaty any day next week; and if the friends of the treaty desire it, and they are in the majority, they can accomplish the whole object in a single day.

It is impossible to do that with the river and harbor bill. So also with the appropriation bills. No appropriation bill, during my period of service here, has ever failed. We know from experience that in one instance, at least, and I think in more than one, the river and harbor bill has failed, in consequence of being taken up at too late a period in the session; and I think we shall risk nothing now in saying, that if the river and harbor bill is not taken up this week, it will not be taken up for definite action at all.

Mr. BRODHEAD. The Senator from Ohio says there is no danger of the appropriation bills. That may be; but how do we pass them? On the last nights of the session? Suppose the chairman of the Committee on Finance, or the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means in the other House, should, under the terrible labor which they have to encounter, break down during this oppressive weather, what kind of condition should we be in? They are especially in charge of these matters; and they are especially acquainted with them. It is not the way to legislate upon appropriation bills to put them off to the last.

Mr. BADGER. Will my friend from Pennsylvania allow me to suggest to him that if we consume the whole morning in debating whether we will do anything, we may break down the appropriation bills, the river and harbor bill, and everything else. By continuing this course we shall do nothing.

Mr. BRODHEAD. That is true; but as I only occupy about half the time which the honorable Senator does in making speeches, I shall make a few more remarks now. I consider legislative business much more important than any Executive business that we can transact, at any rate during the present session; and if either class of business is to go over, I prefer that it should be the Executive business; because if it should be very pressing, and the interests of the country should require us to assemble here again, the Executive can call us together. For these reasons I shall vote against going into Executive session.

The PRESIDING OFFICER put the question on Mr. MASON's motion, and declared that it was lost.

Mr. MASON called for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is too late. The Chair has decided.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

Mr. STUART. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the river and harbor bill.

Mr. MASON. I ask for the yeas and nays upon that motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. ADAMS. I desire to say that yesterday morning I made a motion to take up the bill for the relief of Mrs. Batchelder. I gave way, with the view of considering the civil and diplomatic appropriation bill, with the understanding that that bill was to be called up this morning. I shall, therefore, vote against this motion, for the purpose of calling up that bill, if it should fail.

The yeas and nays were taken, with the following result:

YEAS—Messrs. Allen, Atchison, Badger, Bell, Benjamin, Bright, Cass, Chase, Clayton, Dodge of Wisconsin, Dodge of Iowa, Douglas, Fessenden, Fish, Foot, Geyer, Gillette, James, Johnson, Jones of Tennessee, Pearce, Pettit, Pratt, Rockwell, Rusk, Sebastian, Seward, Shields, Shidell, Stuart, Sumner, Thomson of New Jersey, Wade, Walker, and Weller—35.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Brodhead, Brown, Butler, Dawson, Fitzpatrick, Gwin, Houston, Hunter, Mallory, Mason, and Toombs—12.

So the motion to take up the river and harbor bill was agreed to.

After the motion was agreed to, and before proceeding to the consideration of the bill, various memorials and reports were received by unanimous consent, which are classified elsewhere, and the following business was transacted:

CHAH-TAH-KEE, MUSCOGEE, AND CHAH-TAH TERRITORIES.

Mr. JOHNSON. Early in the session I introduced a bill to establish the Territories of Chah-tah-kee, Muscogee, and Chah-tah, which was referred to the Committee on Territories. I am now directed by the committee to report it back. I ask that the usual number of the bill and reports in the case may be printed; and, under the instruction of the committee, that the bill be made the special order for the 15th of December next.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is first on making it a special order.

The motion was agreed to, and the motion to print was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON. I am instructed by the Committee on Printing to recommend that five thousand extra copies of the bill and report be printed for the use of the Indian department, with the view of distribution among these different tribes of Indians, that they may be heard from distinctly through their councils, their chiefs, and their principal people, by the next session of Congress. I ask, then, under the instruction of the Committee on Printing, that five thousand additional copies may be ordered for the Indian department. The motion was agreed to.

BRIG GENERAL ARMSTRONG.

Mr. GEYER. I ask the Senate to consider the motion which I submitted some time ago to reconsider the vote by which the bill for the relief of the owners of the private armed brig General Armstrong was rejected. The object is simply to place it on the Calendar.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to, and the bill goes on the Calendar.

GOVERNOR RAMSAY.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. I hope the Senate now will oblige me by taking up the resolution for printing additional documents in regard to the investigation of charges against Governor Ramsay. It will lead to no debate at all. It is absolutely necessary to act upon it now.

The motion to proceed to the consideration of the resolution was agreed to.

The resolution was as follows:

Resolved, That in addition to the documents in the case of Alexander Ramsay, late Governor of the Territory of Minnesota, ordered to be printed on the 8th instant, all the papers on file, as well as the correspondence between the Commissioners and the First Comptroller, be printed in Executive document No. 61, of the present session.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. I move to strike out the words "as well as the correspondence between the Commissioners and the First Comptroller," and insert, "all the papers on file referred to said committee."

That amendment, I believe, suits all parties and interests, and has been agreed upon.

The amendment was agreed to; and the resolution, as amended, was adopted.

ROCK ISLAND.

Mr. SHIELDS. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to take up the bill granting the right of way across Rock Island for a railroad.

Mr. STUART. I think the Senate had better not take up that now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It requires unanimous consent. Does the Senator from Michigan object?

Mr. BENJAMIN. I object.

BOSTON, PHILADELPHIA, AND NEW YORK COURTS.

Mr. TOUCEY. I ask leave to report back from the Judiciary Committee the Senate bill which passed the House with an amendment, providing temporary accommodation for the courts in Boston, New York, and Philadelphia. I ask for its consideration now.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I object to taking up anything for consideration but the river and harbor bill. I object to anything but reports and memorials. I am compelled to do so, or we shall not get at the river and harbor bill at all.

POSTAGES.

Mr. RUSK. I want to make an appeal to the honorable Senator from Michigan, [Mr. STUART], to the honorable Senator from Louisiana, [Mr. BENJAMIN], and to the Senate generally.

A very important bill has come from the House of Representatives in relation to postage, which will simplify the business of the Post Office Department and increase the revenue, two things which are very desirable. It is a very short bill, and the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads propose but a very short amendment. I am sure there can be no objection to it, and unless it returns immediately to the House, it may fail.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It requires unanimous consent to consider it.

Mr. CHASE objected.

Mr. RUSK. I understand the Senator from Ohio interposes objection.

Mr. STUART. Let us now proceed to the consideration of the river and harbor bill.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

The Senate accordingly proceeded to consider the bill from the House "making appropriations for the repair, preservation, and completion of certain works heretofore commenced under authority of law."

It was considered until half past four o'clock, when the Senate adjourned.

[See Appendix for the debate on the River and Harbor bill.]

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, July 28, 1854.

The House met at eleven o'clock, a. m. Prayer by Rev. HENRY SLICER.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I rise to a question of privilege. I desire to say, in reference to the special committee appointed by the House the other day—

Mr. OLDS. That is not a question of privilege.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not know yet whether it is or not.

Mr. WASHBURN. The House will recollect that a special committee was appointed a few days since to inquire into the circumstances connected with the alteration of bill No. 342, "making a grant of land to the Territory of Minnesota for the construction of a railroad therein;" and also as to interpolations made in a certain joint resolution. The committee have nearly finished their investigations in relation to the first subject committed to them. As to the second subject—in relation to the interpolation of any joint resolution of this House—the investigation involves matters of delicacy to me, which, with other considerations, render it proper, in my judgment, that I should be excused from further service on the special committee. I therefore ask the House that I may be excused.

Mr. LETCHER. What is the matter of delicacy involved?

Mr. WASHBURN. It is not proper for me to state it.

Mr. COBB, (in his seat.) I would move that the whole committee be excused. It is too delicate a subject.

Mr. WASHBURN was excused; and the Speaker thereupon appointed Mr. SIMMONS as his substitute.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting to the House a report from the Colonel of Engineers, submitting a report and estimate on the improvements of Brazos river, in Texas; also, reports on surveys of Georgetown harbor, South Carolina, and Savannah river, from Savannah to Augusta, in conformity to the act of August 30, 1852.

On motion by Mr. HOUSTON, the communication and accompanying documents were ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

ENROLLED BILLS.

Mr. HENN, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported as correctly enrolled Senate bills of the following titles; which thereupon received the signature of the Speaker:

An act for the compensation of James W. Low and others, for the capture of the British private armed schooner Ann, during the late war with Great Britain;

An act for the relief of Purser T. P. McBlair; and

An act supplementary to an act entitled "An act to authorize notaries public to take and certify oaths, affirmations, and acknowledgments, in certain cases."

Also, the following House bills:

An act for the relief of John S. Jones and William H. Russell, surviving partners of the firm of Brown, Russell & Co.;

An act for the relief of the Pine Grove Academy, in Louisiana;

An act for the relief of George Mattingly; and

An act for the relief of John Frazer, and the administrator of the estate of John G. Clendenin, deceased.

POST ROUTE BILL.

Mr. HOUSTON. There is one appropriation bill still behind, and to dispose of which will take but a very short time, and for the purpose of acting upon it now, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. I am anxious to get rid of it, and I hope we may go into committee.

Mr. OLDS. I call for the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER. This is private bill day. The post route bill was introduced the other day under a suspension of the rules; and day before yesterday it was postponed, and by unanimous consent, the House proceeded to the consideration of another matter.

Mr. HOUSTON. I hope the gentleman from Ohio will allow us to dispose of this remaining appropriation bill first.

Mr. OLDS. The disposition of the post route bill will not occupy more than ten minutes.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. Is not this private bill day?

The SPEAKER. The Chair states that this is private bill day under the rules. The Chair also states, however, that the House is now acting under a suspension of the rules, which makes the post route bill the first and only business in order before the body.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to offer now the resolutions which I offered yesterday? I think they contain nothing which can be objected to.

Mr. OLDS. Let us dispose of the post route bill first, and then I shall have no objection to the gentleman's resolution.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon seconding the demand for the previous question.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Before that question is put I desire to have the bill read. I call for its reading now.

Mr. OLDS. It will take two days to read it.

Mr. JONES. We have been here eight months, and I cannot, for one, consent to the passage of any bill without having it read to the House, so that they may know what there is in it.

Mr. OLDS. If the House will permit me to make a statement not exceeding three minutes, I think I can obviate all difficulty.

Mr. HOUSTON. I desire to ask a question before the gentleman makes his statement. If the gentleman from Tennessee intends to persist in his demand for the reading of the bill, it is useless to have the statement. But if it will satisfy the gentleman, and obviate the necessity for the reading of the bill—

The SPEAKER. Then the gentleman from Alabama objects.

Mr. HOUSTON. Not at all. If there is any prospect of dispensing with the reading of the bill I shall be glad to hear it.

Mr. OLDS. I wish to state to the House that this bill contains nothing except post routes. I have a letter from the Postmaster General recommending the reestablishment of these post routes. I have also a certificate from the clerk in the Post Office Department, who prepared these routes so far as the work was done in the Post Office Department. But, sir, I have a precedent for making the motion that the reading of the bill be dispensed with. The present Speaker entertained such a motion at the last session. I move, therefore, that the reading of the bill be dispensed with. I will repeat what I said the other day, that this bill would make seventy columns of the Globe, and would take the Clerk two days to read it.

Mr. JONES. It should have been here six months ago, when we could have had it printed.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I would inquire of the gentleman whether, besides the establishment of these post routes, there are not one or two sections of the bill of a general character? If so, I would like to have them read it.

Mr. OLDS. There is no section relating to anything except the establishment of post routes.

Mr. WASHBURN. But I thought, perhaps, there were one or two sections relating to their establishment besides that merely defining them.

Mr. OLDS. None at all.

Mr. HOUSTON. I desire to ask the gentleman from Ohio a question which may obviate some of the difficulty in reference to this bill. I ask him whether this bill proposes to repeal any post route which has heretofore been established?

Mr. OLDS. None whatever. They are all retained; and if any of them should have been omitted in the bill, they would not be repealed. There is no repealing clause in the bill.

Mr. WHEELER. I demand the yeas and nays upon the motion to dispense with the reading of the bill.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. PHELPS. I call for tellers. We shall find ourselves without a quorum unless they are ordered.

Tellers were ordered, and Messrs. JONES, of Louisiana, and COX, were appointed.

The question was taken; and the tellers reported—yeas 103, noes 20.

So the motion was agreed to, and the reading of the bill was dispensed with.

The previous question then received a second, and the main question was ordered to be now put. The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read a third time, and passed.

Mr. OLDS. I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, and that that motion be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

INDIAN HOSTILITIES IN WASHINGTON TERRITORY.

Mr. FAULKNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask the unanimous consent of the House to permit to be read a communication, which I received last night from the Secretary of War, showing the existence of alarming hostilities in the Territory of Washington. The communication is short. The Secretary of War states his utter inability to command the requisite force for the protection of the settlements there.

The SPEAKER. Is it the pleasure of the House to have the communication read?

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I would inquire of the gentleman from Virginia why the Secretary of War did not make his communication to Congress?

Mr. FAULKNER. He made his communication to me as acting chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, to advise me of the state of things which is set forth in the paper. It is short, and I hope that the gentleman will permit it to be read.

Mr. JONES. He ought to have sent a communication to Congress.

There was no objection, and the Clerk read the communication, as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
WASHINGTON, July 27, 1854.

SIR: I have the honor to submit herewith, for the information of the Committee on Military Affairs, a copy of a communication from Governor I. J. Stevens, of Washington Territory, to the effect that the Fort Simpson Indians have recently made an attack on the border settlements of that Territory; and killed several persons, and among them it is feared the chief justice of the Territory.

This information is submitted with a view to advise the committee of the inadequacy of the military force in that country, and of the inability of the Department to increase it.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JEFF. DAVIS, Secretary of War.

Hon. C. J. FAULKNER, Chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, House of Representatives.

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 25, 1854.

SIR: By the last mail I have received advices from the Hon. C. H. Mason, Secretary of the Territory of Washington, and acting Governor, to the effect that the Fort Simpson Indians, a numerous and warlike race, have recently made an attack on the border settlements of the Territory, and have killed some four to eight persons. It is rumored that the Hon. Edward Lander, the chief justice of the Territory, is among the missing.

I will earnestly call the attention of the Department to the inadequacy of the force stationed on Puget's Sound, and to the absolute necessity of some adequate means of transportation other than canoes and sailing vessels.

These Fort Simpson Indians are in English Territory, and it is unquestionable that a force of ten large war canoes have gone up the waters of the Sound to opposite the head of Whitby's Island. They have returned, it is said, to renew their depredations with a larger force.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your most obedient,

ISAAC J. STEVENS,

Governor Territory of Washington.

Hon. JEFF. DAVIS, Secretary of War, Washington, D. C.

Mr. FAULKNER. I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, for the purpose of taking up what was made the special order of the House.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The special order expired yesterday. It was only made for one day, and the bill is at the foot of the Calendar, and you will have to lay aside every bill upon the Calendar before you can get to it.

Mr. FAULKNER. I should like to have the opinion of the Speaker upon that point.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that debate was closed yesterday.

Mr. ORR. The committee were instructed to vote upon the amendments, and report the bill back.

The SPEAKER. The resolution is, that when the committee shall resume the consideration of the bill, they shall do so. Can they resume its consideration in preference to other bills, is the question? The Chair doubts if they can do so.

Is the order of the House upon the committee to resume the consideration of the bill? The Chair doubts.

Mr. ORR. With a view of carrying out and executing in good faith the proposition which I made to the House yesterday, I ask a suspension of the rules, so as to continue the consideration of this bill from the Military Committee, and make it the special order when the House shall again resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. I think that we can dispose of the bill in one hour after we take it up. We have already spent one day upon it. Is it not better that we should go on and mature the bill in two hours?

Mr. JONES. You cannot do it in the remainder of the session.

Mr. CHANDLER. Before that question is put, I ask permission of the House to present the resolution which was ruled out yesterday.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Is it in order to present a resolution while the House is engaged upon another subject?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asked the unanimous consent of the House.

Mr. PHILLIPS. I object.

Mr. BALL. I rise to inquire whether a motion to go into the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar—this being the day set aside for the consideration of private business—would not take precedence of the motion now pending?

The SPEAKER. The motion to go into the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar is in order; but it is also in order to move to suspend the rules generally, or for any particular purpose; and the Chair thinks that the motion first submitted is first in order. The Chair has no doubt of the correctness of this decision. The rule is clear that it is as much in order to suspend the rules generally as for any particular purpose.

Mr. HOWE. I appeal to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. ORR] to withdraw, for a moment, his motion to suspend the rules for the purpose of taking up the Army bill. I desire him to do so, for the purpose of enabling me to offer a resolution that the standing committees of the House having charge of private bills may be permitted to report them at the Clerk's desk, for the purpose of having them referred merely. As this is private bill day, I think it but fair that this opportunity should be given of having these bills thus referred.

Mr. McMULLIN. I feel compelled, under the circumstances, to object to the proposition.

The question was then taken on Mr. ORR's motion to suspend the rules; and it was not agreed to—two-thirds not voting in favor thereof.

DESTRUCTION OF GREYTOWN.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to introduce the resolution which has been already read from the Clerk's desk this morning.

Mr. HOUSTON. Is there not a motion pending, submitted by the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. FAULKNER,] to go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union?

The SPEAKER. That motion could not be in order, because it would have been in order before the motion to suspend for a special purpose, as made by the gentleman from South Carolina, [Mr. ORR.]

Mr. ENGLISH. Before the resolution submitted by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CHANDLER] be read, I desire to know whether a motion to go into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar will not take precedence of that gentleman's motion?

The SPEAKER. In the opinion of the Chair it will not.

Mr. CHANDLER's resolution was then reported, as follows:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be respectfully requested to furnish to the House of Representatives any official information which may have been received at the Departments, relative to the destruction of Greytown (or San Juan del Norte) by Captain Hollins of the United States vessel Cayene; and also that the President be requested to furnish to the House copies of the instructions given to Captain Hollins relative to the demand for satisfaction, which was made in the name of the United States upon the authorities of Greytown, (or San Juan del Norte,) before the bombardment and destruction of that place.

Mr. DISNEY. I object to the introduction of that resolution.

Mr. CHANDLER. Then I move that the rules of the House be suspended, so as to enable me to introduce it; and on that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. OLDS. I would like to inquire of the Chair whether the resolution contains the clause usually inserted in resolutions calling for information—"if, in the opinion of the President, it is not incompatible with the public interests?"

Mr. CHANDLER. It does not contain that clause, but it is unnecessary to insert anything of the kind, as it is always understood.

Mr. OLDS. Well, suppose the gentleman embodies it in his resolution.

Mr. PECKHAM. The resolution is in itself simply a request, and there is no need of such a clause.

Mr. CHANDLER. I have no objection to have it inserted. (To the Clerk,) Let that clause be embodied in the resolution.

The question was then taken on the suspension of the rules; and there were—yeas 122, nays 35; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. James C. Allen, Appleton, Ashe, David J. Bailey, Ball, Belcher, Bennett, Benson, Benton, Bocoock, Breckinridge, Brooks, Campbell, Carpenter, Caruthers, Chamberlain, Chandler, Churchwell, Cobb, Cook, Corwin, Cox, Crocker, Curtis, John G. Davis, Thomas Davis, Dawson, De Witt, Dickinson, Eastman, Edgerton, Edmands, Edmundson, Thomas D. Eliot, Ellison, Everhart, Farley, Faulkner, Flagler, Florence, Fuller, Giddings, Greenwood, Grow, Aaron Harlan, Sampson W. Harris, Wiley P. Harris, Harrison, Haven, Hendricks, Hill, Houston, Howe, Hughes, Hunt, Daniel T. Jones, George W. Jones, Kerr, Kittredge, Knox, Kuriz, Lamb, Latham, Lindley, Lindsey, McCulloch, Matteson, Maurice, Mayall, John G. Miller, Millson, Morgan, Morrison, Murray, Nichols, Norton, Andrew Oliver, Mordecai Oliver, Parker, Peckham, Phelps, Phillips, Pratt, Preston, Pringle, Puryear, Ready, David Ritchie, Robbins, Rogers, Russell, Sabin, Sage, Sapp, Shaw, Simmons, Skelton, Gerrit Smith, Samuel A. Smith, Sollers, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Alexander H. Stephens, Stratton, Andrew Stuart, John J. Taylor, John L. Taylor, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Thurston, Trout, Upham, Wade, Walbridge, Walley, Elihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, Wells, Tappan Wentworth, Wheeler, Witte, Daniel B. Wright, Hendrick B. Wright, and Zollcoffer—122.

NAYS—Messrs. Barry, Chastain, Clark, Craige, Disney, Dowdell, Dunbar, Eddy, John M. Elliott, English, Goode, Henn, Hibbard, Johnson, Roland Jones, Letcher, McMullin, McNair, McQueen, Macy, Maxwell, Noble, Orr, Ruffin, Shannon, Shower, William Smith, George W. Smyth, Heator L. Stevens, Straub, David Stuart, Vail, Vansant, and Walker—35.

So (two thirds voting in favor thereof) the rules were suspended; and Mr. CHANDLER's resolution was introduced.

Mr. BOCOOCK. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania will consent to modify it, I would wish to have the resolution put in the usual form.

Mr. CHANDLER. It has been already so modified.

The question was then taken on Mr. CHANDLER's resolution; and it was adopted.

Mr. CHANDLER moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted, and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table; which latter motion was agreed to.

SUPERINTENDENT OF FOLDING ROOM.

Mr. WITTE. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to enable me to submit the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House be directed to pay to Thomas J. Galt, superintendent of the folding room, the same compensation now paid to the librarian of the House, to commence from 1st July, 1853.

Mr. EDGERTON. I propose to amend that resolution.

Mr. WITTE. I ask for the previous question on my resolution.

Mr. EDGERTON. I suggest that the gentleman should hear what my resolution is, and perhaps he will accept it as an amendment. I will state that I know no reason why the superintendent of the document room should not have the same compensation; and the object of my resolution is to give to the superintendent of the document room the same pay that the superintendent of the folding room receives.

Mr. WITTE. I insist upon the previous question.

Mr. McMULLIN. I desire to know of the gentleman from Pennsylvania what the increased pay will amount to?

Mr. WITTE. About $250.

Mr. McMULLIN. What is his present compensation?

Mr. WITTE. About $1,250.

The previous question was then seconded; and the main question was ordered to be put.

Mr. EDGERTON. I appeal to the gentleman to allow my resolution as an amendment.

Mr. WITTE. I would say to the gentleman from Ohio, that I would readily accommodate him, but I cannot do it.

The main question question upon the adoption of the resolution, it was put, and decided in the affirmative.

So the resolution was adopted.

Mr. WITTE moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted, and also to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table; which latter motion was agreed to.

SUPERINTENDENT OF DOCUMENT ROOM.

Mr. EDGERTON. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House of Representatives be, and he hereby is, authorized to pay to Samuel H. Lamborn, superintendent of the House document room, in lieu of his present pay, the same per diem compensation as is now received by the messenger of the Speaker, commencing with the present session, and to continue until otherwise ordered by the House.

The object of the resolution is simply to put the superintendent of the document room upon the same footing as the superintendent of the folding room.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. EDGERTON moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted, and also to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table; which latter motion was agreed to.

REPEAL OF FUGITIVE SLAVE LAW.

Mr. ELIOT, of Massachusetts. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to introduce a bill of the following title:

An act to repeal an act entitled "An act to amend, and supplementary to, an act entitled an act respecting fugitives from justice, and persons escaping from the service of their masters," approved September 18, 1850.

Mr. BRIDGES. I object.

Mr. ELIOT. I move to suspend the rule to enable me to introduce the bill, and I call for the yeas and nays upon my motion.

Mr. SOLLERS. I wish to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts a question. Do I understand that the bill proposes an alteration of the fugitive slave law?

Mr. PHILLIPS. It repeals it.

Mr. ELIOT. It certainly does propose to repeal the fugitive slave law of 1850.

The bill, which was read for information, is as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That an act entitled "An act to amend and supplementary to, an act entitled an act respecting fugitives from justice, and persons escaping from the service of their masters," approved September 18, 1850, be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

The question was taken, and there were—yeas 45, nays 120; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ball, Bennett, Benson, Campbell, Carpenter, Corwin, Crocker, Thomas Davis, De Witt, Dick, Dickinson, Eastman, Edmands, Thomas D. Eliot, Everhart, Giddings, Goodrich, Aaron Harlan, Howe, Daniel T. Jones, Knox, Matteson, Mayall, Morgan, Norton, Parker, Pennington, Pringle, David Ritchie, Russell, Sabine, Sage, Sapp, Simmons, Gerrit Smith, Andrew Stuart, Thurston, Trout, Upham, Wade, Walley, Elihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, Wells, and Tappan Wentworth—45.

NAYS—Messrs. Aiken, James C. Allen, Willis Allen, Ashe, David J. Bailey, Barry, Benton, Boveck, Boyce, Breckinridge, Bridges, Brooks, Caruthers, Chamberlain, Chastain, Chrisman, Churchill, Clark, Clingman, Cobb, Cook, Cox, Craig, Curtis, John G. So two thirds not voting in the affirmative, the rules were not suspended.

Mr. GREEN stated that if he had been within the bar when his name was called, he should have voted no.

Mr. McMULLIN desired to make a short statement before he voted.

Objection was made.

INCREASE OF PAY TO SOLDIERS.

Mr. FAULKNER. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to report a bill "to increase the pay of the rank and file of the Army, and to encourage enlistments." I will state to the House that my purpose is to strike out all those features of the bill which is now in Committee of the Whole, which have given rise to discussion, and to confine it simply and solely to the encouragement of enlistments. I hope there will be no objection.

No objection was made.

The bill was read the first time in extenso. The first section provides that the pay of the non-commissioned officers, musicians, and privates of the Army shall be increased at the rate of four dollars per month, to continue for the term of three years from and after the 1st day of January next, and until otherwise fixed by law.

The second section provides that every soldier, who, having been honorably discharged from the service of the United States, shall, within one month thereafter, reenlist, shall be entitled to two dollars per month in addition to the ordinary pay of his grade, for the first period of five years after the expiration of his previous enlistment, and a further sum of one dollar per month for each successive period of five years, so long as he shall remain continuously in the Army; and that soldiers now in the Army, who have served one or more enlistments, and been honorably discharged, shall be entitled to the benefits herein provided for a second enlistment.

The third section provides that soldiers who served in the war with Mexico, and received a certificate of merit for distinguished services, as well those now in the Army as those that may hereafter enlist, shall receive the two dollars per month to which that certificate would have entitled them, had they remained continuously in the service.

The fourth section provides that non-commissioned officers who, under the authority of the seventeenth section of the act approved March 3, 1847, were recommended for promotion by brevet to the lowest grade of commissioned officer, but did not receive the benefit of that provision, shall be entitled, under the condition recited in the foregoing section, to the additional pay authorized to be given to such privates as received certificates of merit.

The fifth section authorizes the promotion of non-commissioned officers.

The sixth section provides an allowance of twenty-five cents per day to soldiers who are employed to work on fortifications, &c., and of forty cents when employed as mechanics; and thirty-five and fifty cents respectively when employed west of the Rocky Mountains.

The bill was then read a second time by its title.

Mr. BARKSDALE. I would be glad if allowed to make a brief statement.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Virginia yield to the gentleman from Mississippi?

Mr. FAULKNER. If the gentleman desires to make an inquiry in regard to the bill, I yield. I do not yield for any other purpose, because the necessity of the bill is too urgent.

Mr. BARKSDALE. I wish to state, Mr. Speaker, that I was necessarily absent when the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Eliot] made his motion to suspend the rules in order that he might introduce a bill to repeal the fugitive slave law. If I had been present, of course I should have voted against the motion.

Mr. FAULKNER. I demand the previous question.

The previous question received a second, and the main question was ordered to be now put.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read a third time.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. Does the bill propose to increase the pay of the rank and file of the Army four dollars per month?

Mr. FAULKNER. It does.

Mr. SMITH. Then, their pay will be twelve dollars per month.

Mr. FAULKNER. If the bill pass, the pay of infantry will be eleven dollars per month, and that of dragoons twelve dollars per month. I call for the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question was ordered to be put.

The bill was passed.

Mr. ORR moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, and that that motion be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

EXTRA PAY TO OFFICERS OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. ASHE. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to introduce the following resolution:

Resolved, That the usual extra compensation be paid to the pages, folders, and such other employees who have heretofore received the same, and who have not and shall not receive the benefits of the joint resolution approved July 20, 1854.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I object.

Mr. ASHE. I move to suspend the rules.

Mr. HOUSTON. I ask the Chair whether it is in order to entertain that resolution in the face of the law that passed a few days ago?

The SPEAKER. As the Chair understands the reading of the resolution, it does not conflict with the law at all.

Mr. HOUSTON. The resolution passed this month applies, as I understand it, to all the employees in the legislative department of the Government.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not recollect the precise terms of the joint resolution referred to by the gentleman from Alabama. The Chair again states that it is his opinion that it does not conflict with the resolution introduced by the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. McMULLIN. I desire to be informed by the gentleman from North Carolina, whether, under the resolution to which the gentleman from Alabama has called the attention of the Chair, the pages and other employees of the Government will not receive the twenty per cent. extra compensation which has been allowed to others?

The SPEAKER. This resolution proposes the usual compensation to such as have not received additional pay in the shape of twenty per cent.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. If I understand the resolution, it does not provide the usual compensation for those who were provided for in the joint resolution, but it provides for such as shall not avail themselves of its benefits. They may waive taking the increased compensation under that, and take it under this.

Mr. McMULLIN. I then understand the further operation of this resolution to be this.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio. Is this resolution debatable?

The SPEAKER. It is not debatable. The proposition is to suspend the rules.

Mr. McMULLIN. I do not mean to debate it. I only desire to be informed, so as to vote understandingly.

The CHAIRMAN. That may be so; but the gentleman is called to order on the left of the Chair.

Mr. McMULLIN. Who called me to order?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman who called to order will rise in his seat.

Mr. TAYLOR, (rising.) I did not specially call the gentleman to order; but I meant that if the matter be debatable, we all want to be heard upon it.

The SPEAKER. That is the same thing. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from South Carolina to suspend the rules.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. PRATT. I should like to be informed whether the folders are employees of the House. They work by the piece. I take it they are not. [Cries of "Order!" and "Question!"]

The question was taken on the motion to suspend the rules; and there were—yeas 90, nays 63; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Aiken, Ashe, Ball, Bell, Bennett, Carpenter, Caruthers, Chamberlain, Chandler, Chastain, Corwin, Crocker, Thomas Davis, Dawson, De Witt, Dickinson, Diency, Dowdell, Eddy, Edgerton, Edmands, Edmundson, Thomas D. Eliot, Ellison, Everhart, Florence, Giddings, Goodrich, Greenwood, Andrew J. Harlan, Harrison, Hill, Howe, Hughes, Hunt, Johnson, Keitt, Kerr, Knox, Kurtz, Lamb, Latham, Lindley, Mc-

Washburne, John Wentworth, Tappan, Wentworth, Westbrook, Wheeler, Hendrick B. Wright, and Zollcoffer—90.

NAY—Messrs. Willis Allen, Appleton, Barksdale, Barry, Belcher, Bocock, Boyce, Bridges, Brooks, Christian, Clingman, Cobb, Colquitt, Cox, Curtis, John G. Davis, Dick, Dunbar, Dunham, Eastman, English, Farley, Faulkner, Fuller, Grey, Grow, Aaron Harlan, Sampson W. Harris, Haven, Hendricks, Henn, Hibbard, Houston, Ingersoll, Daniel T. Jones, George W. Smith, George W. Smyth, John J. Taylor, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Wells, and Daniel B. Wright—63.

So (two thirds not voting in the affirmative) the rules were not suspended.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

[Here a message was received from the President of the United States, by SIDNEY WEBSTER, Esq., his Private Secretary, notifying the House that he had approved and signed bills of the following titles:

- An act for the relief of Charles Lee Jones;
- An act to create and provide a pension for David Fowle;
- An act creating a collection district in New York, to be called the district of Dunkirk, and to constitute Dunkirk a port of entry, and the ports of Barcelona, Silver Creek, and Cattaraugus Creek ports of delivery; and
- An act making appropriation to defray the expense of the Cayuse war.]

[A message was received from the Senate by ASBURY DICKINS, Esq., their Secretary, informing the House that the Senate had passed a bill of the House, establishing certain post routes.]

PRIVATE CALENDAR.

Mr. ENGLISH. I move that the House do now resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, (Mr. ENGLISH in the chair.)

The CHAIRMAN. This is objection day. All the bills on the Private Calendar previous to bill No. 449 having been objected to when the committee was last in session, the bill first on the Calendar is House bill (No. 449) "granting bounty land to Cornelius Coffey."

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Chairman, on a former occasion I made an objection to Senate bill "for the relief of the legal representatives of Major Caleb Swan, deceased." Since then I have looked into the matter, and am now satisfied that the provisions of the bill are right. I therefore ask leave to withdraw my objection.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I object. We cannot go back in that way.

Mr. FAULKNER. I hope the gentleman from Maine will be permitted, by unanimous consent, to withdraw his objection to the bill in question. He objected without having examined it, and now he is satisfied that it ought to pass.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. JONES] as objecting.

Mr. JONES. Yes; we cannot go back.

The Clerk then reported the bill for the relief of Cornelius Coffey. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to issue to Cornelius Coffey, late a private in company G of the light infantry of the United States Army, a land warrant for one hundred and sixty acres of land.

From the report, which was read, it appears that the memorialist was enlisted on the 19th of June, 1848, into the Army of the United States, at Milwaukee, Wisconsin, by Lieutenant E. W. Wright, of the fifteenth infantry; that the war with Mexico had terminated on the 30th of May previous, but that the news of its termination had not reached Milwaukee at the time of the enlistment of the memorialist; that Lieutenant E. W. Wright, acting on orders received on the 13th of June, 1848, offered those who enlisted, (among whom was the memorialist,) as an inducement to enlist, the land bounty and a bounty of twelve dollars in money; that the said inducements were held out until the latter part of July, a date subsequent to the enlistment of the memorialist, when Lieutenant Wright received orders to cease offering those inducements; that the memorialist has received the money bounty, but has been deprived of the land bounty, for the reason that he enlisted after the termination of the Mexican war, and therefore could not have served, actually or constructively, in that war.

No objection being made, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it pass.

House bill "for the relief of the heirs of James Greer, deceased." [Objected to by Mr. JONES, of Tennessee.]

House bill "for the relief of John H. King."

The bill and report were read.

Mr. LETCHER. That bill comes within the principle established by our committee, and I must object to it.

Joint resolution "giving one hundred and sixty acres of land to Francis M. Gwin, of Indiana."

The resolution proposes that the Secretary of the Interior be directed to issue to Francis M. Gwin, of New Albany, Indiana, a land warrant for one hundred and sixty acres of land, in consideration of his gallant services in serving during the Mexican war whilst he was a minor.

From the report of the committee it appears that Francis M. Gwin, soon after the outbreak of the Mexican war, expressed a desire to join the armies of his country; that he applied to be admitted into Captain Sanderson's company in the Indiana volunteers; but being at that time hardly fifteen years of age, he could not be mustered into the service, and therefore could not receive any pay or emolument from the United States; that, undaunted by the disadvantages which on that account would occur to him, he marched to the seat of war with that company, and served in Taylor's line twelve months, during which time he performed gallant services in the battle of Buena Vista; that on the day of that memorable battle, with musket in hands, doing duty in the ranks, he fell in the rear by a rapid movement, and was run over by the enemy's cavalry, and was left for dead; but soon after sprang up, and, by pushing rapidly forward, again joined the forces; and that he continued with the command until the expiration of enlistment, and only left when the troops were mustered out of service.

The joint resolution was laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it pass.

House bill "for the relief of Eleanor Hoople, of the Province of Canada."

The bill and report were read.

Mr. McMULLIN. I object.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I rise to express the hope that the gentleman from Virginia will withdraw his objection.

Mr. McMULLIN. I do not want to be understood as being wanting in chivalry or gratitude towards a poor woman who took care of one of our wounded soldiers. But it is the duty of every State in the Union to look after its own volunteers or private citizens.

Mr. FAULKNER. This man was not a volunteer; he was a soldier of the American Army.

Mr. McMULLIN, (after the next bill had been read.) Well, at the instance of the gentleman from Virginia, I waive my objection. I did not understand that the old lady was a Canadian.

Mr. PECK. I rise to a question of order. I inquire of the Chair whether it is in order to go back on the Calendar in this way?

The CHAIRMAN. Not unless by the unanimous consent of the committee.

Mr. PECK. Then I object.

Mr. FAULKNER. Well, I am glad, at all events, that the objection to this bill will not appear on the record as coming from one of the Virginia delegation.

Mr. PECK, (after the next bill had been reported.) I desire to withdraw my objection in the case of bill No. 452.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I object to the gentleman doing so. It is not in order to go back on the Calendar.

The bill was passed over.

House bill "providing for the grant of land to the Vermont volunteers for their services at the battle of Plattsburg."

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I object; that bill is contrary to the general law.

The bill was passed over.

House bill "for the relief of Charles W. Carroll."

Mr. JONES, of Louisiana. I object.

Mr. McNAIR. I hope the gentleman from Louisiana will withdraw his objection.

Mr. JONES. No, sir; I cannot.

Mr. WITTE. I ask for the reading of the report.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection has been made to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. WITTE. I rise to a point of order. Although objection has been made, I desire the Chair to state whether it is not competent for any member of the House to ask for the reading of the report?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is not advised on that point; but it occurs to him that if objection be made after the reading of the bill, it is a sufficient objection to the further consideration of the bill.

Senate bill "for the relief of Jean Baptiste Beaubien."

Mr. WHEELER. I object to that bill.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. If the gentleman from New York will listen to the reading of the report in that case, I think he will withdraw his objection.

Mr. McDUGALL. I saw no gentleman in his place rise and object to that bill.

The CHAIRMAN. It is objected to by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. WHEELER. I object to it.

Mr. McDUGALL. I wish to have a letter read in reference to that case.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I would say, in reference to House bill (No. 452) "for the relief of Eleanor Hoople, of the Province of Canada," that I have no objection to it. My objection was to going back upon the Calendar.

The objection to that bill being withdrawn, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House.

Senate bill "for the relief of Jean Baptiste Beaubien," was then read.

It authorizes the Commissioner of the General Land Office to issue a patent to Jean Baptiste Beaubien for certain lots of land in the State of Illinois.

The report was then read.

Mr. McDUGALL. I have received a letter in reference to this case from the honorable gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. BISSELL,] which I would ask be read.

The Clerk read the letter, as follows:

BERKELEY SPRINGS, VIRGINIA, July, 1854.
I feel great interest in the success of Senate bill No. 299, which you were so kind as to report for me. It involves no appropriation of money, and merely does an act of long delayed justice to a very meritorious and early settler of Illinois. I am confident that, if the members of the House understood the merits of the bill as well as you and I do, it would pass that body as unanimously as it did the Senate.

Should the bill not be reached in its regular order on the Calendar, I hope that you will ask for me that the Committee of the Whole be discharged from the bill, and that it be brought before the House on its merits.

I have the honor to be your obedient servant,

W. H. BISSELL.

General J. A. McDUGALL.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it pass.

House bill "for the relief of John Cole."

The bill proposes that the Secretary of the Interior be directed to pay to John Cole, of Lake county, Ohio, now a pensioner of the United States, the sum of ninety-six dollars per annum, in lieu of any pension heretofore allowed to him, such pension to be computed from the day of the passage of this act, and to be continued during his natural life.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it pass.

House bill "for the relief of George Lynch."

The bill proposes that George Lynch, of St. Charles county, Missouri, shall be paid a full pension of eight dollars per month, in lieu of six dollars per month, the amount which he is now receiving under a special act of Congress heretofore passed for his benefit. The pension of eight dollars a month is to commence on the sixth of June, 1852, the time at which his proof of total disability was perfected.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it pass.

House bill "for the relief of Evelina Porter, widow of the late Commodore Porter, of the United States Navy." [Objected to by Mr. HENDRICKS.]

House bill "for the relief of Joseph Webb." The bill proposes that the pension of Joseph Webb be increased so that he shall be entitled to receive, from and after the first day of January, 1852, the sum of eight dollars per month, during his natural life, in lieu of the pension which he now receives under the act of June 25, 1854.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it pass.

House bill "for the relief of John Steene." The bill, which was read, proposes that the Secretary of the Interior be instructed to place the name of John Steene upon the roll of invalid pensions, and to pay him a pension, at the rate of eight dollars per month, during his natural life, commencing on the first of January, 1853.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it pass.

House bill "for the relief of George Elliott." The bill proposes that George Elliott, of Franklin county, Missouri, shall be allowed a pension of eight dollars a month, instead of the pension of six dollars a month which he is now receiving, under a special act of Congress, the increase of pension to commence and be calculated from the first of January, 1852, when his proof of total disability was perfected.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it pass.

House bill "for the relief of Mary Rutherford, widow of Samuel Rutherford."

The bill directs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Mary Rutherford, widow of Samuel Rutherford, upon the roll of invalid pensions, and to pay her a pension, at the rate of four dollars per month, for the period of five years, commencing on the 1st of January, 1854.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it pass.

House bill "for the relief of Warren Raymond."

The bill directs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Warren Raymond, of the State of New York, upon the roll of invalid pensioners, at the rate of four dollars per month, to commence on the 1st of January, 1853, and to continue during his natural life.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it pass.

Senate bill "for the relief of the heirs and representatives of Colonel Alexander G. Morgan."

The bill directs the accounting officers of the Treasury to settle and pay the claims of Alexander G. Morgan, of Missouri, for services in raising troops for the Florida service, in the year 1837, and also for military services in Florida; provided, that the pay and allowances to him shall not exceed the compensation of a captain of cavalry, from September 11, 1837, to March 18, 1838.

Mr. MILLSON. I would inquire of the gentlemen who reported this bill, if this is the same individual for whose benefit a law was passed in 1838?

Mr. HOWE. The same individual, but that was for different services. I will explain the matter in a very few words. This individual seems to have been an amateur Indian fighter. He served in the Black Hawk war as a volunteer, and as aid to General Brady, without commission. He formerly applied to Congress for pay for services rendered in that war, and he was allowed a compensation by a law passed for that purpose.

This bill is for pay of subsequent services rendered in the Florida war. He seems to have been a gallant man and a brave soldier.

Mr. MILLSON. I notice that the former law for his relief, passed subsequent to the date of the services which he asks pay for now. Did his application then embrace a claim for these services?

Mr. HOWE. Not at all. In looking over the records, my eye fell upon that claim, and I examined it with great care.

No objection being made, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

Senate bill "for the purchase of the copyright of a work published by Thomas H. Sumner, wherein he describes his new method of ascertaining a ship's position at sea."

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. That is a case which requires examination. Let it go over.

Mr. APPLETON. If the committee will allow me a moment to explain, I think the gentleman will withdraw his objection.

Mr. LETCHER. Let the report be read.

Mr. SMITH. I withdraw my objection until the report is read.

The report was read.

Mr. APPLETON. If the committee will allow me a moment for explanation of the case, I am satisfied the gentleman from Virginia will withdraw his objection. Mr. Sumner having received the best education which this country affords, chose for his profession that of a mariner, and seeing the hazard and loss resulting from not being able to ascertain a ship's position when the meridian of the sun could not be obtained, he gave his whole mind to the investigation of the matter, and produced a work which is now in universal use in the United States Navy and mercantile marine. Not being satisfied with the discoveries which he then made, he pursued the subject with such intensity, that he became deprived of God's greatest blessing to man on earth, and he became a maniac, and has ever since been confined in a mad house, and supported by those who can ill afford it.

Mr. SMITH. I withdraw my objection.

No objection being made, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it pass.

House bill "for the relief of Isaac Adams." [Objected to by Mr. JONES, of Tennessee.]

House bill "for the relief of Julia Aiken."

The bill directs the Secretary of the Interior to pay to Julia Aiken, the only child of William Yool, who died in the naval service of the United States in the year 1801, on her sole and separate receipt, and for her sole use and control, the amount of pension she would have been entitled to receive under the provisions of the act of March 3, 1837, if her claim had been allowed while that act was in force.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it pass.

House bill "for the relief of the legal representatives of Gustavus B. Horner, deceased."

Mr. MILLSON. I think, as a matter of propriety, after a bill has been several times reported upon adversely, and laid upon the table by the House, that it should not pass without objection.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. Why, sir, I do not understand that bill to have ever been reported against to the House at all. It has several times passed the Senate.

Mr. MILLSON. I object, if the facts are as I understand them to be. I ask whether the bill has not heretofore been rejected by the House?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is not informed. Mr. MILLSON. Then I object. But if I find that I am mistaken, I will withdraw my objection.

Mr. SMITH. I ask that the report be read.

The CHAIRMAN. There is no report.

Mr. SMITH. Well, sir, I hope my colleague will withdraw his objection.

Mr. MILLSON. I stated that this bill had several times been considered and rejected by the House. If such is the case, it appears to me the bill ought not to pass by unanimous consent without consideration. If, however, I find myself mistaken, I will withdraw my objection.

Senate bill "for the relief of Phineas M. Nightingale, administrator of the estate of General Nathaniel Greene, deceased."

The bill was reported by the Committee on Revolutionary Claims, with amendments to strike out the word "nine," in the fifth line, and to insert "eight;" to strike out "eighteen," in the same line, and insert "five," and to strike out the word "sixty," in the sixth line, and to insert "fifty." The amendments were agreed to.

The bill, as amended, directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Phineas M. Nightingale, administrator of the estate of General Nathaniel Greene, deceased, $8,005 53, with interest, at the rate of six per cent. per annum, from July 6, 1850, until paid—the same being in liquidation of a balance due to the estate of said Nathaniel Greene for becoming security for Banks & Co., Army contractors in the Revolution. The said sum to be paid out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated.

The bill, as amended, was laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it pass.

House bill "for the relief of the heirs of Lieutenant Andrew Finley."

Mr. LETCHER. I object. This is the first time that this bill has been reported on favorably, while it has been reported against four times.

Mr. ROGERS. I think the gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. LETCHER. I have the record here, and I do not think that I am.

House bill "for the relief of the administrator of Thomas Wishart."

The bill, which was read in extenso, proposes that the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the legal representative or representatives of Thomas Wishart, late a lieutenant in the continental line of the Army of the United States in the war of the Revolution, five year's full pay of a lieutenant of infantry; also, the interest thereon from January 13, 1854, the time at which the first favorable report was made in the case.

It appears from the report of the committee, which was read, that Sidney Wishart, and other heirs of Thomas Wishart, claim the commutation pay due to Thomas Wishart for his services as lieutenant in the Army of the United States in the war of the Revolution. The Army records of that war, on file in the War Department, show that Thomas Wishart was appointed, in November, 1776, a lieutenant in the fifteenth Virginia regiment on the continental establishment of the Army of the United States; that as such he received land bounty from the United States, and the pay of lieutenant to the — day of September, 1778; at which time he became, as it is fair to presume, a supernumerary, under the arrangement of the Army made about that time. His name is not on the list of officers retained in service, nor on the list of those who became supernumerary in pursuance of the reduction of the regiments in 1778; nor do any of the pay accounts now in existence show that he received pay subsequent to September, 1778. Upon this state of facts, and for the service aforesaid, Thomas Wishart had no claim on the United States for half pay or commutation; nor does it appear that Thomas Wishart in his lifetime, or his heirs since, set up a claim to commutation for that service; but it does appear that in 1793 Thomas Wishart petitioned Congress for the commutation pay due to him as a lieutenant in the continental service, and in support of his claim he adduced evidence to prove his service as a continental officer, after he became supernumerary, as aforesaid, in 1778, so as to entitle him to the benefit of the resolution of Congress of the 20th of October, 1780, which allowed half pay to all such officers as thereafter should become supernumerary, or retire for the want of service.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it pass.

House bill "for the relief of Lincoln Bates."

The bill proposes that the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to pay to Lincoln Bates, out of moneys not otherwise appropriated, the sum of fifty-five dollars, in full of the damages sustained by him as a night watchman in the public stores at New York, in July, 1849, in suppressing a fire therein, being the amount of his account as now on file in the Treasury Department.

From the report, of the committee, which was read, it appears that previous to and on the 12th of January, 1849, Lincoln Bates was employed by the Government as a night watchman in the appraiser's department of one of the public stores of the New York custom-house, at No. 12 Broad street; that during the night of the day mentioned, while he was so employed, he discovered that the store in which he was engaged had taken fire from the spontaneous combustion of vitriol; that the fire was extending with great rapidity, and threatened the entire and immediate destruction of the building and contents; that the store was at that time filled with valuable goods on storage; that he, at the imminent peril of his life, and by extraordinary efforts, succeeded in suppressing the fire and saving the property; that in these efforts his hands and face, and other parts of his person, were badly burned, and his clothes destroyed; that he has suffered great pain and distress, and was confined for upwards of a month, losing his time and subjected to expenses for medical attendance; and that for this damage he rendered a bill to the Treasury Department of fifty-five dollars, in November, 1849, through Hugh Maxwell, Esq., then collector of the port of New York.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House, with the recommendation that it pass.

House bill "for the relief of the legal representatives of Charles Pavie."

The bill, which was read, proposes that the Commissioner of the General Land Office be authorized and required to correct the error in the description of the claim for land by Charles Pavie (No. 37) in the report of the register and receiver of the land office at Ouachita, Louisiana, dated July 24, 1837, and confirmed by the act entitled "An act confirming certain land claims in Louisiana," approved July 6, 1842, and to have the same located on the south or right side of Red river descending, not exceeding the quantity claimed and confirmed as aforesaid; provided, that this is only to operate as a quit claim on the part of the United States.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it pass.

House bill "to revive the act approved March 3, 1823, and the act approved May 26, 1824, supplemental thereto, in reference to the Rio Hondo claims to land in Louisiana."

The bill provides that the act approved March 3, 1823, entitled "An act providing for the examination of the titles to land in that part of the State of Louisiana situated between the Rio Hondo and the Sabine river," and the act approved May 26, 1824, entitled "An act supplementary to an act providing for the examination of titles to land in that part of the State of Louisiana situated between the Rio Hondo and the Sabine," shall be revived for and during the space of two years from the promulgation of this act. And it also provides that the register and receiver at Natchitoches shall, severally, receive, as a full compensation for the duties required of them by the acts herein revived, the sum of fifty dollars whenever they shall have finished the business required of them by the acts herein revived, and shall forward their reports to the Secretary of the Treasury.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it pass.

House bill "authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to pay John Charles Fremont for beef furnished the California Indians."

The bill authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to pay the sum of $183,825, with interest thereon from June 1, 1851, at the rate of ten per cent. per annum, to John Charles Fremont, in full of his account for beef delivered to Commissioner Barbour for the use of the Indians in California in 1851-'52.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it pass.

House bill "authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to settle the accounts of Thomas Jordan, assistant quartermaster in the United States Army."

The bill authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to audit and settle, upon the principles of equity and justice, the accounts of Thomas Jordan, assistant quartermaster in the United States Army, arising out of his disbursements as disbursing officer of the quartermaster's department at the city of Vera Cruz, Mexico, from August 10, 1847, to August 1, 1848.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it pass.

House bill "for the settlement of the claims of W. P. Buckner and Pierce Crosby, passed midshipmen in the United States Navy."

The bill was read. It authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Treasury to adjust and settle the claims of W. P. Buckner, passed midshipman, and Pierce Crosby, passed midshipman and acting master in the United States Navy, for a share of the proceeds of the sale of the schooner Oregon and cargo, seized and confiscated in the month of April, 1843, under the President's regulations of March 1, 1847, at the port of Tampico during the war with Mexico, and to pay the said claims out of any moneys in the Treasury arising from military contributions collected in Mexico in pursuance of the regulations of the President, before referred to; provided, that before any money is paid in these cases, any claim submitted by the owners of the vessel before mentioned, for remission of the penalty and the payment of the proceeds under the confiscation, shall first be duly examined and decided by the Secretary of the Treasury, under the direction of the President of the United States.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it pass.

Senate bill "for the relief of Dr. S. R. Addison, passed assistant surgeon in the United States Navy."

The bill was read. It requires the accounting officers of the Treasury to allow and pay to Dr. S. R. Addison, passed assistant surgeon in the Navy of the United States, the difference of pay between that of his grade and a surgeon, from April 4, 1848 until June 1, 1850, being the period during which he served as surgeon on board the United States sloop-of-war Saint Mary's, and that the same be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it pass.

House bill "for the relief of Herman Chittenden."

The bill requires the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Herman Chittenden upon the pension roll, and cause to be paid to him the sum of eight dollars per month so long as he shall live, commencing March 1, 1854.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it pass.

House bill "for the relief of William Gove, of Maine."

The bill directs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of William Gove, of the State of Maine, upon the pension rolls, and cause him to be paid the sum of eight dollars per month, so long as he shall live, commencing January 1, 1854.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it pass.

House bill "for the relief of Jonathan Pearce."

The bill requires the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Jonathan Pearce, of Muskingum county, Ohio, upon the pension rolls, and cause to be paid to him the sum of eight dollars per month, so long as he shall live, commencing January 1, 1854.

Mr. BALL. I ask that the report be read.

The report of the Committee on Invalid Pensions was read. It appears from it that Jonathan Pearce was a private in Captain James Brown's company of Colonel Miller's regiment of Ohio militia, as substitute for his brother, who was drafted in August, 1812, at Zanesville, Ohio, and served six months, when he was honorably discharged. The original certificate of discharge is on file in the Pension Office in an application for bounty land. That Pearce was one of a company despatched on an expedition against the Indians, and was absent eight days, and had food for five days only. That in consequence of lack of food and exposure he took sick, and remained so for six weeks, then partially recovered, and served out his time. That soon afterwards his disease settled in his limbs, producing chronic rheumatism, and he has suffered from it ever since. And that, for the last twenty or twenty-five years he has hobbled round on crutches; he is now aged sixty-three; incurable, and a man of good character.

Mr. BALL. I ask the attention of the committee for a very few moments. I presume there is no objection to this bill, but I want the pension of this man to commence two years back. The application was made two years ago, but the case has been delayed to this time. He is confined to his bed, and is able neither to get in or out of it, and for the last twenty-five years he has not been able to perform a single day's labor, all resulting from exposure upon the Maumee river, and sleeping on the snows during the campaign of 1812. I move that the bill be amended by striking out "eighteen hundred and fifty-four," and inserting "eighteen hundred and fifty-two."

The amendment was agreed to. No objection being made, the bill was then laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it pass.

House bill "for the relief of William Parker."

The bill, which was read, directs the Secretary of the Interior to cause to be paid to William Parker, of New York, the sum of four dollars per month so long as he shall live, commencing January 1, 1853. This sum to be in addition to the pension of four dollars per month granted him by the act of May 19, 1824.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it pass.

House bill "for the relief of Zebina Rawson."

The bill, which was read, directs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Zebina Rawson upon the pension roll, and to pay him eight dollars per month from March 1, 1852, during his natural life.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it pass.

Senate bill "for the relief of Gideon Hotchkiss." [Objected to by Mr. PECK.]

Senate bill "for the relief of David Myerle."

Mr. HENDRICKS. It is hardly worth while to read the bill in that case, as it is a very much controverted one.

Mr. FLORENCE. Let the bill be read. Mr. HENDRICKS. I will not object, if any one insists upon having the bill read.

The bill was read.

Mr. MURRAY. I object to that bill.

The bill was accordingly laid over under the rule.

Joint resolution "for the relief of John A. Bryan."

The resolution, which was read, directs the Secretary of War to receive proof of the number of days that John A. Bryan was engaged in the discharge of the duties of a commissioner to make and carry into effect a treaty with the Wyandotte Indians, being appointed commissioner for the purposes aforesaid by the Secretary of War, on the 19th of April, 1836, and to pay the said Bryan at the rate of eight dollars per day whilst so engaged, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, deducting therefrom any amount that said Bryan may have heretofore received for said services.

The report shows the facts upon which the petitioner's claim against the Government is founded to be as follows: On the 19th of April, 1836, the petitioner was appointed a commissioner, by the Secretary of War, Mr. Cass, to make and carry into effect a treaty with the Wyandotte Indians. His duties were prescribed by the Secretary of War, and his compensation fixed at eight dollars per day. The petitioner discharged the duties thus imposed upon him.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it pass.

House bill "for the relief of Andrew H. Patterson." [Objected to by Mr. EDGERTON.]

House bill "for the relief of Polly Carver, widow and executrix of Nathan Carver, deceased."

The bill, which was read, provides that the sum of $334 79 be appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the payment and full satisfaction of the claims against the Government of the said Polly Carver, as widow and executrix of the said Nathan Carver, deceased.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it pass.

Senate bill "for the relief of Asbury Dickens." [Objected to by Mr. JONES, of Tennessee.]

Senate bill "for the relief of Zachariah Lawrence, of Ohio."

The bill, which was read, provides that there be paid to Zachariah Lawrence, of Morgan county, in the State of Ohio, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $2,645 40, his portion of the prize money for capturing and taking into the port of Passamaquoddy, in 1813, the British sloop Venture.

The Committee of Claims reported the following amendment:

Add at the end of the bill these words: "And there shall be paid to each of the other persons composing the boat's crew, severally, or to their legal representatives, the sum of $1,322 70, as the share of each in the capture of the said sloop Venture, on satisfactory proof being made to the Secretary of the Treasury of their being such persons, or their legal representatives."

Mr. MILLSON. I find that this bill has been twice adversely reported on, and I therefore now object to it.

Mr. EDGERTON. When reported on adversely there was no record evidence of the court's condemnation of the vessel. The committee called for the evidence, and on it reported favorably on the bill.

Mr. MILLSON declined withdrawing his objection.

Mr. ORR. There is no necessity for reporting the next six bills. The standing committees recommend that they do not pass.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I think it would be better to report them to the House, with a recommendation that they do not pass.

Mr. ORR. I have no objection to the course suggested by the gentleman from Tennessee, as it will rid the Calendar of these cases.

Mr. MILLER, of Missouri. I hope the gentleman from South Carolina will adhere to his first motion.

Mr. ORR. Very well, then. I object to the consideration of the following Senate bills next in order upon the Calendar, as they are reported with a recommendation that they do not pass.

An act for the relief of Michael Nourse;
An act for the relief of the sureties of Daniel Winslow;

An act for the relief of J. Boyd, of Louisiana;
An act for the relief of the legal representatives of the late Captain William G. Williams;
An act for the relief of Jacob Gideon;
An act for the relief of John McAvoy; and
An act for the relief of John Devlin.

House bill "for the relief of Lloyd Dorsey and others."

The bill authorizes Lloyd Dorsey, of the county of St. Charles, and State of Missouri, to enter, at the proper land office in said State, at the minimum price of the public lands, the southeast fractional quarter of section twenty-two, township forty-six, range four east, containing one hundred and forty-two and eighty-nine one hundredth acres; and to enter, for the use and benefit of the heirs of George Pitzer, deceased, the southwest fractional quarter of section twenty-two, township forty-six, range four east, containing one hundred and four acres, and the northeast fractional quarter of section twenty-seven, township forty-six, range four east, containing forty-six acres; provided, that nothing in this act contained shall prejudice the rights of any person or persons having any legal or equitable claim to the lands herein mentioned, or any part thereof.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it pass.

House bill "for the relief of Sidney P. Pool, of the State of Maine."

The bill directs that the Secretary of the Interior place the name of Sidney P. Pool upon the roll of invalid pensioners; and that said Pool be paid a pension, at the rate of six dollars per month, from January 1, 1854.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it pass.

Senate bill "for the relief of Jonas P. Levy and José Maria Jarrero." [Objected to by Mr. JONES, of Tennessee.]

House bill "for the relief of George J. Rallston."

The bill instructs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of George J. Rallston upon the pension roll, and to pay him at the rate of eight dollars per month, from January 1, 1854, to continue during his life.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it pass.

House bill "for the relief of Joseph McMinn."

The bill was read.
It instructs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Joseph McMinn upon the pension roll, and to pay him at the rate of four dollars per month during his natural life, commencing the pension from the 1st of August, 1854.

Mr. EDMANDS. I move to amend the bill by substituting the word "January" for the word "August," so as to make the pension commence from the 1st of January, 1854.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it pass.

House bill "for the relief of Asa Leach."

The bill was read. It instructs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Asa Leach upon the pension roll, and to pay him at the rate of four dollars per month, commencing August 1, 1852, to continue during his life.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it pass.

Senate bill "for the relief of Thomas C. Nye." [Objected to by Mr. JONES, of Tennessee.]

Senate bill "to authorize the payment of invalid pensions to the heirs of Lieutenant Robert White and others."

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it pass.

Mr. ORR. I make the same motion, in reference to the next seven cases, which I made a few minutes since in reference to some already passed by. The Committee of Claims have reported them, with a recommendation that they do not pass.

The following seven Senate bills, to which Mr. ORR objected, were then laid aside under the rule:

An act for the relief of Mary D. Blaney, widow of the late Major General Blaney;
An act for the relief of Rufus Van Brunt;
An act for the relief of the legal representatives of the late Colonel John Anderson;
An act for the relief of the legal representatives of Daniel Loomis, deceased;
An act for the relief of Lieutenant A. J. Williamson;
An act for the relief of Hezekiah Miller;
An act for the relief of John P. McElderry.

The next bill in order was Senate bill for the relief of James Dixon. [Objected to by Mr. HENDRICKS.]

Senate bill "for the relief of Levi Pierce and Andrew Hodge, jr."

The bill, which was read, authorizes the Postmaster General to settle with and discharge Levi Pierce and Andrew Hodge, jr., sureties on the official bond of William H. Ker, formerly postmaster at New Orleans, on their paying or securing to pay, within one year, the sum of $12,500; and either of the said sureties may thus be discharged on his paying, or securing to pay, one half of the above sum; provided, the Postmaster General, and the United States district attorney for the eastern district of Louisiana, shall be satisfied that it is for the interest of the United States that such settlement should be made; and provided further, that such settlement with, and discharge of one surety, shall not be construed to discharge the other.

No objection being made, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it pass.

Senate bill "for the relief of Henry La Reintrie."

The bill, which was read, authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Henry La Reintrie the sum of $593, which shall be in full satisfaction and discharge of said La Reintrie's claim for services rendered to the United States legation near the Government of Chili, and as bearer of dispatches from that legation to Washington.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it pass.

Senate bill "to provide compensation for the services of George Morrell in adjusting titles to lands in Michigan."

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Maria Morrell, widow of George Morrell, late a judge of the United States for the Territory of Michigan, for the services of the said George Morrell, in ascertaining, adjusting, and settling claims to land, and performing other duties in conformity with the act entitled "An act to provide for the adjustment of titles of land in the town of Detroit and Territory of Michigan, and for other purposes," approved the 21st of April, 1806, and with "An act relative to the plan of Detroit, in Michigan Territory," approved the 28th of May, 1830, at the rate of $500 per annum, from the time of his appointment as a judge of the United States for said Territory, to the 24th day of September, 1836, to be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. STUART, of Michigan. I desire to amend that bill before the question is taken upon it. I move to insert after the words "George Morrell" where they first occur, the words "and William Woodbridge and Henry Chipman;" to strike out the words "George Morrell" where they last occur, and insert the word "judges," and to change words in the singular to the plural where it is necessary to make the bill conform to such amendments.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I object. Are those amendments reported from a committee?

Mr. STUART. They are not; but there is a bill pending for the relief of those gentlemen, which, in its provisions, is exactly the same as this one.

Mr. KERR. I never objected to any proposition here in my life. But I understand that the claims of these two individuals have not been before any committee for investigation.

Mr. STUART. Certainly they have been investigated by a committee, and a bill reported for their relief. All three of these persons were judges of the Territory at the same time, and stand upon precisely the same footing.

Mr. KERR. Then I do not object.

The amendment was then adopted, and the bill as amended, laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it pass.

Senate bill "for the relief of Asa Andrews."

The bill, which was read in extenso, authorizes and requires the proper accounting officers of the Treasury to settle and adjust the accounts of Asa Andrews, late collector of customs for the district of Ipswich, in the State of Massachusetts, for office rent and expenses, including clerk hire, and for the services of a deputy, during the time he performed the duties of said office, and that the amount found due, not exceeding $1,983 80, be paid to said Asa Andrews, or his legal representatives.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it pass.

Senate bill "for the relief of William Darby." The bill, which was read, provides that there be paid to William Darby the sum of $1,500, in full compensation for his labor and materials furnished in surveying and making a map of the territory of Louisiana, in the years 1812 and 1813.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it pass.

Senate bill "for the relief of William G. Smith."

The bill, which was read in extenso, proposes that the Secretary of the Treasury be authorized and required to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, $500, to William G. Smith, for recapturing a vessel in the war of 1812, together with a midshipman and four seamen of the British navy; which prisoners were delivered to Commodore Perry, at Newport, Rhode Island.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it pass.

House resolution "to pay Jonas W. Nye, out of the contingent fund, the sum of $525, in full satisfaction of his claim for compensation for the use of horses and carry-alls furnished the post office of the House under a contract with the postmaster, dated June 15, 1844."

The resolution was laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it pass.

Senate bill "for the relief of Sylvester Pettibone."

Mr. McMULLIN. I have examined this case and am not disposed to object, if the friends of the bill will accept an amendment increasing the amount from $500 to $1,000.

Mr. KERR. The bill does not require the payment of any sum, though the committee recommend that he should pay $500 and the costs. I submit to my friend from Virginia, with all deference, that $500 and costs is quite enough to require a man to pay under such circumstances. I think, if the committee will hear the report, they will be satisfied that $500 and the costs are all we ought to require.

Several MEMBERS. Read the report.

The report was then read by the Clerk.

Mr. McMULLIN. I propose to amend the bill by making the amount $1,000.

Mr. SMITH, of New York. I knew this old man well. I appeal to the pity of the gentleman from Virginia, and I hope he will consent to the sum of $500.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I propose an amendment which I hope will be acceptable to the committee; it is provided the party shall pay $500 and costs.

Mr. KERR. Very well; I am willing to accept that amendment.

Mr. SMITH. I think it will be accepted all round.

[Cries of "Question!" "Question!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia, who first addressed the Chair, [Mr. McMULLIN] proposed that the party should pay $1,000. His colleague, who last addressed the Chair, [Mr. SMITH,] proposes to make it $500 instead of $1,000.

Mr. SMITH. I ask my colleague to modify his proposition as I have suggested.

Mr. McMULLIN. I have thought, Mr. Chairman, that the—

[Cries of "Order!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The question cannot be debated. Does the gentleman accept the modification of his colleague?

Mr. McMULLIN. I do.

The question was put; and the amendment was amended.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the bill will be laid aside, as amended, to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it pass.

Mr. STUART, of Ohio. I object.

House bill "for the relief of L. R. Lyon and Dean S. Howard, of the State of New York."

The bill directs the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States to cause to be paid to L. R. Lyon and Dean S. Howard, late partners, under the name and style of Lyon & Howard, of the State of New York, or their legal representatives, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $8,617 81, in full for the balance due them for constructing a dredging machine at Whitehall, New York, under contract entered into November 2, 1836; and a dredging machine to be delivered at Monroe, in the State of Michigan, by contract entered into October 15, 1836.

Mr. McMULLIN. I call for the reading of the report.

The report was read.

No objection being made, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it pass.

House bill "further supplemental to an act entitled, 'An act to authorize the payment for property lost, captured, or destroyed by the enemy while in the military service of the United States, and for other purposes.'"

Mr. LETCHER. It seems to me that bill is out of place upon this Calendar. It is a general law and not a private claim. I think it should go to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. EDGERTON. I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to.

Senate bill "for the relief of Urban Stoll."

The bill, which was read, directs the Secretary of the Interior to pay to Urban Stoll, now a pensioner of the United States, a sum equal to seventy-two dollars per annum, from July 4, 1845, to the time when his present pension was allowed.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it pass.

House bill "to refund to the officers of the customs and others, of the district of Passamaquoddy, certain moneys."

Mr. LETCHER. I object, unless there is a report.

Mr. FULLER. Those moneys were paid by the Clerk, by mistake, into the Treasury, instead of paying it to these officers. There are letters from the Secretary of the Treasury and Attorney General which show the facts.

Mr. LETCHER. I think a report from a committee ought to accompany the bills in all these cases. And unless there is a report, I object.

Senate bill "for the relief of Captain Charles G. Merchant."

It directs the proper accounting officers of the Government to settle the accounts of Charles G. Merchant, brevet captain of the United States Army for the second quarter of 1849, on just and equitable principles, without reference to the usual forms, so as to relieve the said Charles G. Merchant of the effect of the loss of his quarterly returns for said quarter; provided the amount to be allowed to the said Charles G. Merchant in such settlement shall not exceed $215 69.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it pass.

House bill "for the relief of John Frink."

It directs the Postmaster General to pay to John Frink, out of any money appropriated for mail transportation, $750, the amount of two fines—one in the third and the other in the fourth quarter of 1839—wrongfully imposed on said Frink, and deducted from his pay for carrying the mail on route No. 2811, from Joliet to Danville, Illinois, in said year.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it pass.

House bill "for the relief of Jacob Boker, of Sandusky City, Ohio."

It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Jacob Boker, of Sandusky City, Ohio, upon the pension roll, and cause to be paid to him the sum of eight dollars per month, for and during his natural life, commencing June 27, 1854.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it pass.

Mr. STUART, of Ohio. I objected to the bill of the Senate for the relief of Sylvester Pettibone. Understanding, however, that it is a very hard case, I withdraw the objection.

Mr. JONES, of Louisiana. It seems to me that we had better go through the Calendar first, and then return and take up such bills as the objections to are withdrawn. I therefore object now to the withdrawal of the objection.

Senate bill "for the relief of Thomas Ellis."

The bill requires the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Thomas Ellis, of Platte county, in the State of Illinois, upon the roll of invalid pensions, at the rate of eight dollars per month, from May 11, 1852, during his life.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it pass.

House bill "for the relief of Tunstall Quarles."

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. There is no report accompanying that bill. I object.

Mr. HENDRICKS. If the committee will allow me I will state—

Mr. WALSH. I object to any statement.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I understand that the gentleman who reported the bill for the relief of Tunstall Quarles, did so with a recommendation that it do not pass.

The CHAIRMAN. It does not so stand on the Calendar. The Chair understands that the bill was reported without any recommendation at all.

Mr. HENDRICKS. The Chair is mistaken, and I hold that the gentleman from New York has not the right to object to correction of the Calendar. I reported the bill from the committee with a verbal recommendation that it do not pass. There is no written report.

The CHAIRMAN. The Calendar will be corrected as indicated, unless objection be made.

There was no objection, and the correction was accordingly made.

House bill for the relief of "Reginald alias Nick Hilary." [Objected to by Mr. LETCHER.]

Senate bill "for the relief of Gaston T. Raoul."

The bill authorizes Gaston T. Raoul to enter, free of cost, six hundred and forty acres of land, according to legal subdivisions, on any of the public lands of the United States, subject to entry at private sale, in full compensation for claim No. 456 of the report of James O. Cosby, dated June 7, 1813, and for which a certificate of confirmation, No. 168, was issued on the 24th January, 1838, by the register and receiver of the land office for the John Core claim, for his son, a minor, in the parish of Livingston, State of Louisiana.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it pass.

Senate bill "for the relief of A. G. Penn."

The bill in this case authorizes A. G. Penn, of the parish of St. Tammany, Louisiana, to enter, by way of preemption, the southwest quarter of section twenty-three, township six south, of range ten east, in the Greensburg land district, State of Louisiana, upon his paying therefor to the proper officer of the land office $1 25 per acre, provided, the act shall not be so construed as to interfere with any adverse claim to the land authorized to be purchased, if any such there be.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it pass.

Senate bill "for the relief of François Consin."

Mr. NICHOLS. I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it be laid upon the table, for the reason that a bill of precisely the same import passed the House last Saturday.

The motion was agreed to.

Senate bill "for the relief of W. P. S. Sanger." Objected to by Mr. WALSH, of New York.]

Senate bill "for the relief of the legal representatives of George McGirk," was the last upon the Calendar.

The bill was read. It authorizes the legal representatives of George McGirk to enter without payment, one hundred and sixty acres of land in any land office in the State of Missouri, in lieu of a tract of land claimed by them in said State; and it directs the Register of the Land Office, on payment of his fee, to issue the necessary certificate, on the return of which a patent shall issue in favor of said legal representatives.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it pass.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Mr. Chairman, I objected to-day to bill No. 457, "for the relief of Emeline Porter, widow of the late Commodore David Porter, of the United States Navy." That bill was reported from the committee of which I am a member—the Committee on Invalid Pensions. But the evidence in that committee did not satisfy my mind of the truth of the facts reported by the committee. I therefore objected to the bill to-day. Still, I am unwilling to continue an objection to a bill reported by the committee of which I am a member; and I now ask the unanimous consent of the committee to permit me to withdraw my objection.

Mr. LETCHER. I object to his withdrawing it.

Mr. JONES, of Louisiana. The Chair understood me as objecting to Senate bill No. 239, "for the relief of Sylvester Pettibone," and the bill was passed over. Now, the Chair misunderstood me. I did not object to the bill, but I insisted on going through the Calendar first. I had no objection to the bill at all.

The CHAIRMAN. It was objected to by the gentleman from Ohio on the left of the Chair, [Mr. STUART.]

Mr. JONES. He has withdrawn that objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair states that it is not in order to go back on the Calendar without the unanimous consent of the committee.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I appeal to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. LETCHER] not to oppose my withdrawing objection in the case of Mrs. Porter. I do not wish to appear as objecting to a bill that has come from my own committee.

Mr. LETCHER. The gentleman from Indiana does not wish to be found objecting to a bill reported from his own committee; but if he is not satisfied that the bill is right, I think it but proper that he should object to it.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I think I have a right to withdraw my objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Not unless by unanimous consent. Does the gentleman from Virginia withdraw his objection?

Mr. LETCHER. I do not, sir. I say so distinctly.

The CHAIRMAN. Then it will not be in order to go back on the Calendar.

Mr. FAULKNER. The committee will recollect that the gentleman from Maine [Mr. FULLER] objected last week to the Senate bill "for the relief of the legal representatives of Major Caleb Swan." This morning he rose in committee and asked unanimous consent to withdraw his objection. But the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. JONES] objected to his doing so, because we had not gone through the Calendar. We have now passed through the Calendar, and I ask—

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair decides that under the standing objection it will not be in order to go back to the Calendar.

Mr. LETCHER. What standing objection? Does the Chair refer to the objection made by me?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes. The Chair understood the gentleman from Virginia as objecting to going back on the Calendar.

Mr. LETCHER. Then the Chair misunderstood me. I made no such objection. The simple question was, whether the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HENDRICKS] should have leave to withdraw his objection to a certain bill, and to that I objected.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the Chair will hear the proposition of the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. FAULKNER.]

Mr. FAULKNER. I have stated all that I designed to say. I trust now that there will be no objection to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. FULLER] being permitted to withdraw his objection, which he made without consideration, and without knowledge of the facts. He has since examined the bill, and he is perfectly satisfied that it ought to pass.

Mr. HOWE. What bill is it?

Mr. FAULKNER. Senate bill No. 33.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has not heard the gentleman from Maine ask to withdraw his objection to any bill.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I withdraw my objection to Senate bill (No. 363) "for the relief of Jonas P. Levy and José Maria Jarrero."

No further objection being made, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it pass.

Mr. FULLER. On a former occasion I objected to Senate bill "for the relief of the legal representatives of Caleb Swan, deceased." I have since examined the bill and papers, and am satisfied that the bill is right, and I therefore withdraw the objection.

No further objection being made to the bill, it was laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it pass.

Mr. STUART, of Ohio. I withdraw my objection to Senate bill "for the relief of Sylvester Pettibone."

Mr. WALSH. I object.

The bill was laid over under the rule.

Mr. RUSSELL. On Friday last the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. NICHOLS] objected to House bill to authorize Robert Graham to locate six thousand nine hundred and ninety-three acres of land in lieu of one undivided half part of certain lands patented to John Edgar and John Murray St. Clair by the Governor of the Northwestern Territory. The gentleman from Ohio is now willing, I believe, to withdraw his objection.

Mr. BRIDGES. I object to it.

The bill went over under the rule.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I now move that the committee rise and report the bills to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

So the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the Chairman of the committee reported that the Committee of the Whole had had the Private Calendar under consideration, and had directed him to report back to the House, House bill further supplemental to an act entitled "An act to authorize the payment for property lost, captured, or destroyed by the enemy while in the military service of the United States, and for other purposes," with a recommendation that the same be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union; also Senate bill "for the relief of François Cousin," with a recommendation that the same be laid on the table. Also, that the committee had directed him to report back to the House the following resolution and bills, with a recommendation that they pass.

A joint resolution for the relief of John A. Bryan;

An act for the relief of the legal representatives of Major Caleb Swan, deceased;

A bill granting bounty land to Cornelius Coffey; Joint resolution giving one hundred and sixty acres of land to Francis M. Gwin, of Indiana.

A bill for the relief of Eleanor Hoople, of the Province of Canada;

An act for the relief of Jean Baptiste Beaubien;

A bill for the relief of John Cole;

An act for the relief of Phineas M. Nightingale, administrator of the estate of General Nathaniel Greene, deceased;

A bill for the relief of the heirs of Lieutenant Andrew Finley;

A bill for the relief of the administrator of Thomas Wishart;

A bill for the relief of Lincoln Bates;

A bill for the relief of the legal representatives of Charles Pavie;

A bill to revive the act approved March 3, 1823, and the act approved May 26, 1824, supplemental thereto, in reference to the Rio Hondo claims to land in Louisiana;

A bill authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to pay John Charles Frémont for beef furnished the California Indians;

A bill authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to settle the accounts of Thomas Jordan, assistant quartermaster in the United States Army;

A bill for the settlement of the claims of W. P. Buckner and Pierce Crosby, passed midshipmen in the United States Navy;

An act for the relief of Dr. S. R. Addison, passed assistant surgeon in the United States Navy;

A bill for the relief of Herman Crittenden;

A bill for the relief of William Gove, of Maine;

A bill for the relief of Jonathan Pearce;

A bill for the relief of William Parker;

A bill for the relief of Zebina Rawson;

A bill for the relief of Polly Carver;

A bill for the relief of Lloyd Dorsey and others;

A bill for the relief of Sidney P. Pool, of the State of Maine;

An act for the relief of Jonas P. Levy and José Maria Jarrero;

A bill for the relief of George J. Rallston;

A bill for the relief of Joseph McMinn;

A bill for the relief of Asa Leach;

An act to authorize the payment of invalid pensions to the heirs of Lieutenant Robert White and others;

An act for the relief of Levi Pierce and Andrew Hodge, jr.;

An act for the relief of Henry La Reintrie;

An act to provide compensation for the services of George Morrell in adjusting titles to lands in Michigan;

An act for the relief of Asa Andrews;

An act for the relief of William Darby;

A bill for the relief of William G. Smith;

A resolution to pay Jonas W. Nye, out of the contingent fund, the sum of five hundred and twenty-five dollars, in full satisfaction of his claim for compensation for the use of horses and carryalls furnished the post office of the House under a contract with the postmaster, dated June 15, 1844;

A bill for the relief of L. R. Lyon and Dean S. Howard, of the State of New York;

An act for the relief of Urban Stoll;

An act for the relief of Captain Charles G. Merchant;

A bill for the relief of John Frink;

A bill for the relief of Jacob Baker, of Sandusky city, Ohio;

An act for the relief of William Brown;

An act for the relief of Gaston T. Raoul;

An act for the relief of A. G. Penn;

An act for the relief of the legal representatives of George McGirk.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. If it is in order, I move that the House concur in the report of the Committee of the Whole House.

[Cries of "Right!" "Right!"]

Mr. JONES. And then the Clerk can put the bills in regular order upon the Journal.

The SPEAKER. There are various other recommendations in reference to particular bills. The Chair understands the proposition to be to concur in the report of the committee in all its recommendations in reference to the bills which have been reported to the House.

There was no objection; and the report of the Committee of the Whole House was concurred in.

CIVIL AND DIPLOMATIC BILL.

A message was here received from the Senate by ASBURY DICKINS, their Secretary, informing the House that the Senate had passed the bill of the House (No. 48) making appropriations for the civil and diplomatic expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending the 30th of June, 1855, with amendments, in which he asked the concurrence of the House.

Mr. HOUSTON. It is impossible for the House to consider these amendments properly unless they are printed. I ask, therefore, that the bill, with the amendments, may be referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, and that it may be printed. If the House will assent to the proposition, I think I can get it printed by to-morrow morning.

There was no objection; and the bill and amendments were accordingly referred and ordered to be printed.

SYLVESTER PETTIBONE.

Mr. WELLS. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to discharge the Committee of the Whole House from the further consideration of Senate bill (No. 239) "for the relief of Sylvester Pettibone."

There was no objection, and the bill was reported to the House.

Mr. WELLS. I now move to put the bill upon its passage.

The bill was read through. It provides that Sylvester Pettibone, of Wisconsin, and his real and personal property, be released and relieved from two judgments in favor of the United States, obtained against him, the said Pettibone, in the district court of the United States for the district of Wisconsin, and from all liens and encumbrances created by said judgment: Provided, That the costs of the suit in which said judgment was rendered shall first be paid by said Pettibone.

Mr. LETCHER. The committee made an amendment to that bill.

The SPEAKER. So the Chair understands, but it does not necessarily come up with the bill. The committee is simply discharged from the consideration of the bill.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I suppose the amendment may come up by general consent.

The SPEAKER. Certainly, it may come up, if there be no objection.

The amendment was reported. It alters the proviso at the end of the bill, so that it will read:

Provided, That $500 and the costs of the suit in which said judgment was rendered, shall first be paid by said Pettibone.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. This is a case in which the whole property of a very respectable old man in Wisconsin has been sold for forfeiture of bail on his part in favor of the United States. It is either sold, or about to be sold.

Mr. KERR. It has been sold.

Mr. STANTON. This relief is a mere act of grace on the part of the Government of the United States; and I think that it is a small business to propose to reserve $500. If the bill is to be passed at all, give the old man his land back on the payment of the costs, and without other reservation.

[Cries of "Agreed!"]

Mr. SMITH, of New York. With the permission of the gentleman from Wisconsin, I will say a word. I know this old man. I have known him more than thirty years. He removed from my neighborhood to Wisconsin. He was one of the pioneers who broke the way to the settlement of that country. His little all has been sold under this judgment. Is it not punishment enough for his imprudence to require him to pay the bill of costs? I acquiesce in the spirit and letter of the remarks of my honorable friend from Tennessee, and I hope that the House will be content to release the poor old man on the payment of the two bills of costs.

Mr. KERR. I wish to add one word to what has been said. As a member of the Judiciary Committee, I had charge of this particular case. I myself entertained the opinion that he ought to be released entirely. I have always insisted on that; but we went into committee to-day, and in order to induce gentlemen to withdraw their objections, we agreed to an amendment, that Mr. Pettibone should be made to pay $500. I think that it would be bad faith to back out from that amendment now. I think the House ought to agree to it. Had not the amendment been adopted in committee, we would not have got the bill into the House.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. If gentlemen will let the vote be taken, the amendment will be voted down.

Mr. WELLS. I call for the previous question. The previous question received a second, and the main question was ordered to be now put.

The question was taken on the amendment; and it was rejected.

Mr. McMULLIN. I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was rejected. The friends of this bill—

[Cries of "Order!"]

The SPEAKER. Discussion is not now in order.

Mr. McMULLIN. I withdraw the motion I made, and move to recommit the bill.

The SPEAKER. The previous question is resting upon the bill, and no motion to commit is in order.

Mr. McMULLIN. May I not make an appeal to the friends of the bill?

[Cries of "Object."]

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. Is it in order to move to lay the bill upon the table?

The SPEAKER. That motion would be in order.

Mr. SMITH. I make that motion, and call for the yeas and nays. I want a record of the vote. I call on every honest man upon this floor—

[Cries of "Order! order!"]

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. SINGLETON. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to make a personal explanation.

Several MEMBERS. Let us get through with this bill first.

Mr. SINGLETON. I was necessarily absent this morning when the vote was taken upon suspending the rules, for the purpose of introducing a bill repealing the fugitive slave law. I wish merely to say that, if I had been present, I should have voted against suspending the rules.

The question was then taken upon Mr. SMITH's motion, and it was decided in the negative.

So the House refused to lay the bill upon the table.

The question now recurred upon Mr. McMULLIN's motion, that the vote by which the amendment was rejected be reconsidered.

Mr. EDGERTON. I move to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The question was taken; and Mr. EDGERTON's motion was agreed to.

The bill was then ordered to be read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WELLS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, and to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table; which latter motion was agreed to.

W. P. S. SANGER.

Mr. WALSH. I objected to Senate bill No. 169 for the relief of W. P. S. Sanger, on the ground that it was for extra pay, and that the bill did not state the amount due. But I have been assured by a number of gentlemen that the bill is perfectly correct; and I therefore ask leave to move that the Committee of the Whole House be discharged from the further consideration of the bill.

Mr. LETCHER. I object. We have just had a sample of that mode of doing business.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I rise to a privileged question. I move to reconsider the vote by which the House concurred in the report of the Committee of the Whole House, in relation to the various bills and resolutions reported by it; and I also move to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The question was taken; and the latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOUSTON. The amendments to the civil and diplomatic appropriation bill, which have been just sent in from the Senate, and committed to the Committee of Ways and Means, will require the consideration of that committee during the hours of the session of this House. I therefore ask the permission of the House to enable the Committee of Ways and Means to sit in committee during the hours of the session of this House.

Mr. HENN. I wish to amend that proposition so as that it may include in the same permission the Committee on Enrolled Bills. They are in the same condition as the Committee of Ways and Means, and have to be in and out of the House every five minutes. I also propose that they be allowed to vote whenever they come into the House.

The order was made in respect to both these committees.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I move also to include in the same order the select committee appointed to examine the charges in reference to the alterations in the Minnesota railroad bill.

Mr. LETCHER. I should like to amend the proposition by including all the other committees.

The motion of Mr. CAMPBELL was agreed to.

Mr. JONES. I think it is very good time now for this House to adjourn; and I submit that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The House thereupon (at a quarter before four o'clock, p. m.) adjourned till to-morrow at eleven o'clock, a. m.

IN SENATE.

SATURDAY, July 29, 1854.

Prayer by Rev. HENRY SLICER.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal; but he was interrupted by

Mr. COOPER, who moved that the further reading of the Journal of yesterday be dispensed with; which was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a report of the Secretary of War, accompanied by reports on the improvement of the Brazos river, Texas, and surveys of Georgetown harbor, South Carolina, and the Savannah river, from Savannah to Augusta, in the State of Georgia; which was read, and ordered to be printed.

PETITION, ETC.

Mr. RUSK submitted an additional document in relation to the claim of Betsey W. Eve; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Also, the petition of Samuel D. Hay, United States district attorney for the district of Texas, praying compensation for services in prosecutions for violation of the neutrality laws on the Rio Grande; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

PETITION WITHDRAWN.

On motion by Mr. GEYER, it was Ordered, That R. H. Miller have leave to withdraw his petition and papers.

REPORT FROM A STANDING COMMITTEE.

Mr. BUTLER, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill for the relief of Thomas Ap Catesby Jones, surety for a former postmaster at Norfolk, Virginia, reported it back without amendment.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill for the relief of the legal heirs of Benjamin Metoyer was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message was received from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McKean, Chief Clerk, announcing that they had passed the following bills from the Senate:

An act for the relief of the legal representatives of Major Caleb Swan, deceased;

An act to authorize the payment of invalid pensions to the heirs of Lieutenant Robert White and others;

An act for the relief of the heirs and representatives of Colonel Alexander G. Morgan;

An act for the purchase of the copyright of a work published by Thomas H. Sumner, wherein he describes his new method of ascertaining a ship's position at sea;

• An act for the relief Sylvester Pettibone;

An act for the relief of Levi Pierce, and Andrew Hodge, jr.;

An act for the relief of Henry La Reintrie;

An act for the relief of Dr. S. R. Addison, passed assistant surgeon in the United States Navy;

An act for the relief of Jean Baptiste Beaubien;

An act for the relief of William Darby;

An act for the relief of Jonas P. Levy, and José Maria Jarrero;

An act for the relief of Captain G. Merchant;

An act for the relief of William Brown;

An act for the relief of Gaston T. Raoul; and

An act for the relief of A. G. Penn.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills of the Senate, with amendments, in which they asked the concurrence of the Senate:

An act to provide compensation for the services of George Morrell, in adjusting titles to land in Michigan; and

An act for the relief of Phineas M. Nightingale, administrator of the estate of General Nathaniel Greene, deceased.

Also, that the House had passed various bills, in which they requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The bills received from the House were accordingly read a first and second time by their titles, and referred—the following to the Committee on Pensions:

An act for the relief of Julia Aiken;

An act for the relief of George J. Rallston;

An act for the relief of Mary Rutherford, widow of Samuel Rutherford;

An act for the relief of John Steene;

An act for the relief of William Parker;

An act for the relief of Herman Chittenden;

An act for the relief of Warren Raymond;

An act for the relief of Zebina Rawson;

An act for the relief of William Gove;

An act for the relief of George E. Elliott;

An act for the relief of Joseph Webb;

An act for the relief of George Lynch;

An act for the relief of Joseph McMinn;

An act for the relief of Jonathan Pearce;

An act for the relief of John Cole;

An act for the relief of Asa Leach; and

An act for the relief of Jacob Baker.

The following were referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims:

An act for the relief of Sidney P. Pool;

An act for the relief of Loyd Dorsey;

An act for the relief of the legal representatives of Charles Parie; and

An act for the relief of the legal representatives of George McGirk.

The following were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs:

An act granting bounty land to Cornelius Coffey;

An act for the relief of Eleanor Hoople, of the Province of Canada; and

An act authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to settle the accounts of Thomas Jordan, assistant quartermaster in the United States Army.

The following were referred to the Committee on Claims:

An act for the relief of Lincoln Bates;

An act for the relief of Polly Carver, widow and executrix of Nathan Carver, deceased; and

An act for the relief of L. R. Lyon and Dean S. Howard, of the State of New York.

The following was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads:

An act for the relief of John Frink.

The following was referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims:

An act for the relief of the administrator of Thomas Wishart.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

The message also announced that the House of Representatives had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with the various Indian tribes for the year ending the 30th of June, 1855, and for other purposes.

The Speaker of the House having signed the above enrolled bill, the President pro tempore accordingly affixed his signature thereto.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message was received from the President of the United States, by Mr. WEBSTER, his Secretary, announcing that he had this day approved and signed the following acts:

An act for the compensation of James W. Low and others, for the capture of the British private armed schooner Ann, during the late war with Great Britain;

An act for the relief of Purser T. McBlair; and An act supplementary to an act entitled "An act to authorize notaries public to take and certify oaths, affirmations, and acknowledgments in certain cases."

PHILADELPHIA, NEW YORK, AND BOSTON COURTS.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair will present to the Senate the bill to provide for the accommodation of the courts of the United States in the district of Massachusetts, which has been returned from the House with an amendment.

Mr. TOUCEY. I hope that the Senate will now act upon the amendment. I think there will be no discussion in regard to it. I will state that the Senate passed a bill providing for the temporary accommodation of the courts in Boston. The House amended it by providing for the temporary accommodations for the courts in Philadelphia and New York, and annexed a second section, authorizing the President to make contracts for the purchase of sites and plans for the erection of buildings. The Committee on the Judiciary have reported to concur in that amendment, with a further amendment making the contracts conditional, and subject to the approval of Congress, to which there can be no objection.

The amendment to the amendment of the House was agreed to; and the amendment, as amended, was concurred in.

WASHINGTON AND ALEXANDRIA RAILROAD.

The PRESIDENT. There is also a bill upon the table authorizing the extension of the Alexandria and Washington railroad into the District of Columbia, which has been returned from the House of Representatives with amendments.

Mr. ADAMS. One of the amendments is very important. I move the reference of the bill and amendments to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. BRIGHT. I hope that will not be done. I think we can act upon it. I shall ask the Senate to disagree to the amendments of the House.

Mr. ADAMS. I withdraw my motion.

The PRESIDENT. The question then is on concurring in the amendments of the House.

The amendments were published among the proceedings of Friday, the 21st instant.

Mr. SHIELDS. I desire to ask a question for information. I was not in the Senate when this bill was originally passed. I was very much opposed to a railroad crossing the Avenue between this and the Executive Mansion; and I desire to know whether that is authorized by this bill.

Mr. BRIGHT. This is the same bill which was before the Senate on the application of the Washington and Alexandria Railroad Company, asking the right of way across the Long Bridge. The Senate refused to grant that privilege; but, as the bill shows, gave the privilege of building a bridge across the Potomac river, at or above the aqueduct, and granted the right of way through the District of Columbia, to connect with the Baltimore and Ohio railroad on the western side of the city. In that situation it went to the House, and the House have appended an amendment, giving the right of way on the eastern side of the city to a point on the Potomac river opposite to Alexandria. I am opposed to that on the ground that it is calculated to embarrass the original bill. If the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company desire a privilege of that kind, they ought to apply for it in a separate bill. For that reason I move that the Senate disagree to the amendment of the House.

Mr. COOPER. I am told if the Senate concur in the amendment, it will defeat the road provided for in the bill; for it will be impossible to get subscriptions to that road. I am, therefore, in favor of the motion made by the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. PRATT. The original charter, to which the amendment of the House was placed, was a charter authorizing an individual to make a railroad connecting with the Baltimore and Ohio railroad on the west of the city, by making one through Georgetown across the Potomac river above the aqueduct. The amendment of the House is to authorize the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company to make a connection with the Virginia works at Alexandria, by carrying a road from the terminus of the company in Washington to the east, so as to strike the eastern branch of the Potomac river above the navy-yard, and crossing at that point, and going on the Maryland side of the District of Columbia on that side of the eastern branch of the Potomac, along the margin of the river, until it arrives opposite to Alexandria, where it is calculated by boats to take the passengers across to Alexandria. My friend from Indiana says that he is altogether opposed to this; that if the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company want this connection, they ought to introduce a new bill. Why, Mr. President, if the privilege ought to be granted to them, it will strike every one that there could be no place so proper as the present bill in which to grant it. Here you are about to give a private individual, for private purposes, the right to make a railroad to connect with another road which has cost some $1,500,000, and you are asked to refuse to that road which has made the great connection between this city and Baltimore, and consequently with the East and the West, the privilege of connecting their road with the Virginia roads running south.

Now, sir, except for the mere isolated desire of giving to this private corporation the pecuniary advantages which the charter would give to him, there is no member who will rise in his place and assert that this privilege ought not to be granted to the road.

When the original bill was here, something was said by my friend from Wisconsin, [Mr. WALKER,] about the charges made on the Baltimore and Ohio railroad. Mr. President, that road is not to blame, and never has been to blame, for the charges supposed to be exorbitant in carrying passengers between this city and Baltimore. When the application was made to the Legislature of Maryland for a charter, at my instance—for I was then a member of the Legislature—for the purpose of relieving the State from a debt which she had incurred, a per capita tax of fifty cents was placed upon passengers over that road, or one fifth of the gross receipts of the road went to the State as a bonus. The charge which was made, therefore, of fifty cents, which goes into the State treasury, is one from which it is not within the compass of the company to relieve themselves; and they ought not to be blamed, as they have been by my friend from Wisconsin, and others, for the charge which is supposed to be exorbitant.

But I state again, the rejection of the amendment of the House will give to a private corporation, instead of to a company that has already done so much, the exclusive right of making the connection between the Baltimore and Ohio railroad at the East, and the Virginia works of internal improvement in the South. I was in favor of authorizing this individual to make this road, and I do not care (if it does not interfere with the convenience of the people of Washington, which is protected by the amendment absolutely, by requiring the authority of the corporation before it can be made) how many railroads are built here. The more that are made the better, if they do not interfere with private interests. This is the first time in the legislation of the country that I have ever heard of excluding from a participation in such a benefit a company which has gone to all the expense of making an extended connection between the seat of Government and other places, and also to the Virginia companies going south, because you want to give the exclusive privilege to an individual. Mr. President, I do hope that a sense of common justice will induce the Senate to concur in this amendment. If they do not prefer to concur in it, and there be doubt about the policy of it, let them reject the whole bill. In the present position of things, as I said before, there is no immediate necessity for its passage. We might at another session, perhaps, be better advised as to the proper course to pursue.

My friend from Indiana [Mr. BRIGHT] tells me that this is a public company, for whose benefit the bill was passed. I have never seen its charter. It is immaterial, however. The Senator says it is a chartered company—chartered through Mr. French and somebody else, who are associated with him in making this road. You are then to give to a new and independent company, which has expended no money and made no improvement, the exclusive patronage of making a connection between roads which have expended millions for the convenience of the country, induced, I admit, by a sense of what is necessary for their own profit. Virginia has spent, and is spending, some $15,000,000 or $20,000,000 on roads. Many of these roads concentrate here. The Baltimore and Ohio railroad has spent some $15,000,000 or $20,000,000, by which communication between the seat of Government and the far West, and between the seat of Government and New York and other places, has been established. I ask, can any one announce any principle why a new company should be incorporated to make this communication, instead of allowing a company which has been long incorporated, and spent so much money, to do it for themselves? The object is to connect the southern roads with the northern roads. Let the Virginia and Maryland roads do it. I know, at least I am notified by the directors of the Virginia roads, that they are altogether opposed to putting this into the hands of a private individual. I hope, therefore, if the amendment be wrong in any particular, the Senate will alter it and send it back to the House; but do not let us, by hasty legislation, do injustice to those persons who have spent so much capital in producing the benefits which have resulted from this connection with the seat of Government.

Mr. RUSK. I shall say but a very few words upon this subject, for I know that time is very important. The original bill which passed the Senate, passed under very strong guards. It had undergone the thorough investigation of a committee. One of the strongest oppositions which it met with when it was introduced and proposed that the railroad should cross the river at the Long Bridge, and one of the most difficult to overcome, and which, unless the objectionable provision had been stricken out, would have prevented the passage of the bill, was, that it would obstruct the navigation of the river. Now, here is a privilege in the amendment to the same effect, accorded to the Baltimore and Ohio railroad.

Mr. PRATT. My friend is mistaken. I do not desire him to fight shadows while he is arguing a point. This road is to strike the eastern branch of the Potomac above navigation.

Mr. RUSK. The original bill, as it will be well remembered by Senators, had many of its provisions, which were regarded as too liberal, stricken out, and it was restricted. It was restricted with regard to the avenue. No private property was allowed to be gone through at all. The Senator from Maryland is mistaken in supposing that it is for the benefit of private individuals. The bill proposed that an incorporated company should do the work. There is also incorporated by the Legislature of Virginia a company for the other side of the Potomac. But here is an amendment sprung upon us to give to an incorporated company, the Baltimore and Ohio railroad, the privilege of going through the streets; and if they can get the consent of the corporation of condemning and using private property; and if they can get the consent of the President of the United States, of going through any of your reserved grounds. This I ought to investigate before I agree to grant such privileges. It would be wrong to encourage two rival companies within three or four miles of each other, because both would be broken down, and we should not get the connection which is so desirable to the public. But if it were desirable that we should have two roads within two or three miles of each other, who in the Senate is prepared to give the privilege to the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company, when we do not know anything about the provisions of its charter? If there were no other objections, I should vote against it on that ground. The original bill which went from the Senate received the careful examination of a committee, underwent a lengthy discussion in the Senate, and was adopted on mature deliberation; but this amendment is sprung upon us, and it proposes to give to another company a great deal more extended privileges than the bill originally proposed to give to the other company.

Mr. BROWN. This bill is taking up all the morning hour. We have very little time to debate a bill of this sort, and, therefore, I move that it lie on the table.

Mr. TOUCEY. I hope the motion to lay the bill upon the table will not be agreed to.

Mr. BROWN. We cannot get a vote upon the bill. If the Senate would consent to come to a vote, I would withdraw my motion; but really we ought not to consume the time with its discussion.

Mr. BADGER. In effect it would only be postponing the bill to the next session. We have no time to consider it now.

Mr. PRATT called for the yeas and nays on the motion, and they were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 14, nays 28; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allen, Atchison, Badger, Bayard, Bell, Benjamin, Brown, Cass, Chase, Pearce, Pratt, Rockwell, Slidell, and Stuart—14.

NAYS—Messrs. Bright, Butler, Cooper, Dawson, Dodge of Wisconsin, Dodge of Iowa, Evans, Fessenden, Fish, Fitzpatrick, Geyer, Gillette, Hunter, Johnson, Jones of Tennessee, Mason, Morton, Norris, Rusk, Sebastian, Seward, Sumner, Thompson of Kentucky, Toombs, Toucey, Wade, Walker, and Weller—28.

So the motion to lie on the table was rejected.

Mr. MASON. I wish to say a single word in reference to the State of Virginia, which I represent here. My impressions are favorable to the railroads proposed to be benefited. Both propositions are that this road shall be done by private companies, and by those companies alone; and my disposition would be, wherever the public interest would admit it, to give to those companies the largest liberty to construct ways for the public convenience. But I do not know how far the interest of the State which I represent may be affected by terminating the railroad at the point proposed by the amendment. I shall, therefore, vote against the amendment, with the knowledge, that although the Baltimore and Ohio company has been operating their road for twenty years, this plan did not occur to them until an apparent rival interest started up in Virginia to make a railroad to cross the Potomac at a different point. I shall therefore vote against the amendment.

Mr. TOUCEY. I am opposed to this amendment in toto. I am in favor of the legislation which has already taken place on the part of the Senate. I think it is due to the people of this District, both the inhabitants of Washington and the inhabitants of Georgetown, that the Senate should adhere to the bill as they passed it before. I ask a moment's attention. After we had provided that there should be a railroad from Alexandria by way of Georgetown, without interfering with the navigation of the river, to connect with the Baltimore road at this depot, the Baltimore and Ohio company steps in and proposes to extend a branch to the east of this Capitol, opposite to Alexandria, by which they will have the power of carrying all the freight and all the passengers down to a point upon the Potomac, opposite Alexandria, and thus break up the legislation which was intended by the Senate, and which was intended in Virginia. I hold that it is due to the people of this District, as well as to the people of Virginia, that the railroad from Alexandria, by way of Georgetown to the depot in this city, should be carried out, and that we should not incorporate into the bill an amendment that will defeat it.

Sir, I am in favor of that road for two or three considerations. In the first place, it is the shortest way, and by the route which is proposed by the bill as it passed the Senate, passengers can come from Alexandria to the depot in a shorter time than they can by any other way, because they are not interrupted by the passage of any ferry which requires slow movement. According to the celebrated engineer whose report has been laid on our tables, it is the shortest route in point of time. In the second place, it is due to the citizens of Georgetown. They are entitled to the accommodation of this road. Cars passing through to the south by way of Georgetown can take passage there, and can connect with the northern roads by that route in less time than by any other, according to the report of the engineer. I am also in favor of it, because I desire to get rid of any obstruction in the river below Georgetown. Whether there will be a bridge across that river in any place, either below or here, whether it will ultimately lead to one or not, I do not know. I say I am utterly opposed to it. I think it is due to the citizens of Georgetown that the river should be kept open. I am opposed to closing up these great channels of communication which the God of nature has opened. I say they have a right to have the channel kept open, and not have it obstructed.

Mr. PEARCE. I ask the Senator from Connecticut whether the amendment provides for a bridge across the Potomac?

Mr. TOUCEY. It does not; but I suggest that it will probably lead to a bridge there.

Mr. COOPER. If the Senator from Connecticut will allow me, I will state a fact that will fortify his views. The bill, as it passed the Senate, I am told by an authority that I will vouch for, was satisfactory to the Councils both of Washington and Georgetown, and they are opposed to the amendment.

Mr. TOUCEY. I have the same information. I understand that the bill, as it passed the Senate, is satisfactory to the inhabitants of Georgetown and Washington, and I say that we, the exclusive Legislature of this District, are bound to look to the interests of our constituents, the inhabitants in the District; and I am unwilling to allow this company, that already has a road in the North, to step in merely for the purpose of interrupting the communication that is proposed in that bill. I consider the bill, which has already passed the Senate, as the only means that will ever clear out the obstructions of this river, and give to the citizens of Georgetown their rights—their equitable rights; and it will relieve the inhabitants of Washington from the obstruction in the river that already exists, and which, in my judgment, and I think in the judgment of every prudent man, is prejudicial to the health of the city. I say that upon every consideration we ought to oppose this amendment and adhere to the bill as it passed the Senate, and the House of Representatives will probably approve of it.

Mr. DAWSON. It is a great mistake on the part of the Senator from Connecticut to suppose that the city of Georgetown alone is interested in this matter.

Mr. TOUCEY. I do not suppose it.

Mr. DAWSON. They have scarcely any interest in it at all. Here is a disconnection from the Baltimore and Ohio railroad depot to Alexandria. The question is, how we shall make up that want of connection. A proposition came before this body asking us to sanction the laying of a road across the Long Bridge to connect with the Baltimore depot. The city of Georgetown interposed, and said that it would lead to the permanent location of the Long Bridge, and thereby damage the navigation of the river, and increase sickness in the city of Georgetown, and be a gross detriment to it. Then, without any application or investigation, we granted the right to a railroad upon the opposite bank, on the Virginia side, to above the heights of Georgetown, and around the heights to the railroad depot for Baltimore. Now, sir, look at that route, and I beg any southern man to look at it, and say whether we are going to submit ourselves to such an inconvenience? When you get here to start down South, directly in an opposite direction you turn North, and go around the heights of Georgetown for four miles to go to Alexandria. That was done by way of an amendment to the bill, which passed to carry us directly over the Long Bridge.

When the bill was before us on a former occasion, Mr. President, I told you that the southern railroad and the northern railroad companies were all exceedingly anxious to close up this disconnection. After this arrangement is made to carry a road around Georgetown and across the river above the Falls, the Baltimore and Ohio railroad claim that they can carry their road directly down to the southern branch of the Potomac, and then across to the city of Alexandria, which would be in a direct line, and four miles shorter, than around Georgetown. Now, are we not entitled to it? Where is the objection to it? The Senator from Connecticut says that it will deprive the company that is already established of a vested right. Sir, it has no vested right whatever.

Mr. TOUCEY. I did not say so.

Mr. DAWSON. What kind of a road did you say?

Mr. TOUCEY. I stated that a company was already organized in Virginia. They propose to connect, by the shortest road in point of time, by way of Georgetown. It is acceptable to the people of Georgetown and to the people of Washington, as I understand; and it will close up this gap without needing a ferry, in winter as well as in summer, to cross the river.

Mr. DAWSON. In the first place, there is no company incorporated in Virginia to carry the road up by Georgetown; none at all. They cannot cut a foot of land there until the Virginia Legislature meets and grants the charter. It is all a mistake about their having a charter for that. It has yet to be obtained from the State of Virginia.

Mr. TOUCEY. It has to be modified.

Mr. BRIGHT. The Senator from Georgia is mistaken. I have a certified copy of the charter in my hand.

Mr. DAWSON. To where does it give the company the right to run the road?

Mr. PRATT. To the Long Bridge.

Mr. BRIGHT. Not at all. I will read from the charter, of which I have a certified copy.

"Then from the city of Alexandria, in the State of Virginia, to the city of Washington, in the District of Columbia, crossing the Potomac at some eligible point between the two cities."

Mr. DAWSON. Yes, sir, that was intended to be up to the Long Bridge. Well, now, Mr. President, what do we propose to do here? We propose to make two roads, one almost four miles nearer than the other, down to Alexandria in a direct southern line. You propose to make one four miles further by a circuitous route. You say you want no bridge across the Potomac. We do not want a bridge across that river. We do not propose to make any obstruction. We propose to have a ferry boat there similar to the one on the Susquehanna, which passes on the great route to New York. Where is the harm in that? I cannot see that there is a single ground for opposition to it, especially when it is desired by all the companies north and south. The railroad company of Maryland has the right to run directly opposite to Alexandria, and the only thing to be done is to connect with Alexandria. That will then give a direct route to the south, and a direct route to the north. I hope, Mr. President, that for the convenience of the country, the whole country, we shall have the opportunity of making a road on a direct line by a practicable route, and not be driven to the necessity of going around the hills of Georgetown. It is important to the South, and important to the traveling interest.

Mr. RUSK. I desire to ask the Senator a question. He says the distance is four miles greater by way of Georgetown. How far could he travel on a railroad during the time it would take him to change from the cars to the ferry boat and cross the river?

Mr. DAWSON. I cannot state anything in relation to that. I do not know even the practicability of the route. I do not know whether a bridge will be built. All I know is this: that a railroad succeeds best when made in a line to go direct from point to point; and any temporary obstruction or passing a water course is no justification for turning around and going a longer distance.

Mr. BAYARD. There is one objection to this amendment, which will render it impossible that I should vote for it. The Senate passed a bill authorizing the Washington and Alexandria Railroad Company to construct a railroad between the Baltimore and Ohio railroad depot, stationed in this city, and that of the Virginia Railroad Company, stationed in Alexandria. That bill having passed the Senate, was sent to the House, and it comes back with an amendment from the House, which authorizes the construction of a road for a similar purpose—a rival road by a different route between the same points. Now, sir, I have no evidence that the convenience of the traveling public requires the construction of two roads, and I do not believe it would be practicing good faith or sound legislation to give to these two companies the privilege of cutting each other's throats for the purpose of benefiting the traveling community. I do not think it is proper to give two or three companies the same rights for similar purposes, when one line is sufficient.

It is very evident, if you pass this amendment, you destroy the original act, and destroy it beyond the possibility of a doubt of its ever being within the bounds of a sound speculation. It is impossible to suppose, if you give the privilege to this great company, who have a connection North and West, with a large capital, of making a connection with the South also, that the other small company can ever attempt to compete with them. The mere fact of the Baltimore and Ohio railroad having control of the connection with their own depot will throw greater advantages in favor of their own branch line, and will render it impossible for the other road to gain any of the advantages of such a connection. Therefore it would be folly for them even to construct their road, and they would be obliged to abandon it. All that is authorized in the original bill would be abandoned. You give the city the controlling power; and when you take into consideration the relative positions of the two railroad companies, you will find that we literally destroy the grant made by the bill which passed the Senate in the first instance. At least that is the effect of it, in my judgment, and, therefore, I shall vote against it.

Mr. PEARCE. If it is so, if that is the fact, then it seems to be perfectly clear that the road proposed to be authorized to the point opposite Alexandria must furnish greater facilities than the road proposed to be made to Alexandria, around by Georgetown. The road to which the Senator objects, that it would destroy the construction of the other road, would offer greater facilities.

Now, sir, this bill was asked for at first, to allow the Virginia railroad to cross at the Long Bridge. I voted for that, because I believed they would never be able to execute the road which we have allowed them to make by the original bill. That road would run a course of about ten miles, to cross the Potomac river. They are not to cross lower down than the aqueduct. They never can cross at that aqueduct, I am satisfied. There is no room for them; and they will never have the capital to make a separate bridge for themselves beyond that. I believe if the bill remains as it is, we shall never have any road constructed at all. But we passed the bill, and the House, with great liberality, has authorized the construction of a branch road from the Baltimore and Washington railroad to a point opposite Alexandria. It does seem to me that that is liable to no objection. It is not injurious to the city of Washington. And if the authorities of Georgetown and Washington are opposed to it, they are so without any justifying reasons. It will furnish the traveling community all the advantages which they desire, and it will not diminish the advantages which the city of Washington would derive from the other company. They have a depot here, and it will remain here. There is not a solitary reason, that I can perceive, why the two cities should be opposed to it. In point of time, I believe there is scarcely any difference between the two roads. It will be at least four or five miles longer in going by the Georgetown road than by the Baltimore and Ohio road. It will occupy about twelve minutes to go that distance, and it will take but little more time to cross the Potomac in a steamboat, constructed as the steamboats are on the Susquehanna.

As to a bridge over the river at Alexandria, the argument drawn from that is entirely fallacious. We have the control of the matter in our hands. Maryland and Virginia must unite with it. They cross the Susquehanna, I think, in about fifteen minutes when there is no obstruction; and all the ice in that river furnishes very little obstruction, except at periods when there is a rise in the river and the ice is forced upon the flats. Then, indeed, there is a difficulty, and it is that difficulty which has induced Maryland to authorize the construction of a bridge there. Here there will be no need for it. I do not know the exact point to which this road is to come, but the Baltimore and Washington railroad company already have the right, under their charter, to carry the road to the Potomac river. What they want is authority to make it outside of the State limits. Surely this is no great boon to a company which is the pioneer of these railroads, and which has expended enormous sums of money in furnishing facilities, which every body must admit to be very desirable and all important. No objection can be raised as to its being a monopoly. This proposes competition. You want to give a monopoly to the other company. I think the plan which allows two roads to be made is vastly more liberal.

Mr. STUART. This bill has already occupied an hour. I do not see that we are any nearer coming to a conclusion on it than when we began. As it is very important that we should proceed with the consideration of the river and harbor bill, I make the motion to postpone the further consideration of this subject until Monday.

Mr. BRIGHT. I hope the Senator will withdraw that motion, and give us an opportunity to dispose of the bill.

Mr. BROWN. Let us have the vote now.

Mr. HUNTER. If we could get a vote on it it would be very desirable.

Mr. BRIGHT. I should like to make a short speech in reply to the Senator from Maryland.

Several SENATORS. Oh, no.

Mr. BRIGHT. But I will forego that if we can have a vote.

Mr. STUART. If the Senate will vote, I withdraw the motion.

Mr. PRATT called for the yeas and nays on concurring in the House amendment, and they were ordered; and being taken, were—yeas 7, nays 41; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Benjamin, Dawson, Geyer, Jones of Tennessee, Morton, Pearce, and Pratt—7.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Allen, Atchison, Badger, Bayard, Bell, Bright, Brown, Butler, Cass, Chase, Cooper, Dodge of Wisconsin, Dodge of Iowa, Evans, Fessenden, Fish, Fitzpatrick, Foot, Gillette, Gwin, Houston, Hunter, James, Mallory, Mason, Norris, Pettit, Rockwell, Rusk, Sebastian, Seward, Shields, Shidell, Stuart, Sumner, Thompson of Kentucky, Toucey, Wade, Walker, and Weller—41.

So the amendment was not concurred in.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. STUART. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the river and harbor bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. BADGER in the chair.) The Chair will ask permission of the Senate to dispose of various bills which have come from the House.

Various House bills were then read twice, and referred to committees, as stated in a previous part of this report, for the convenience of classification.

PHINEAS M. NIGHTINGALE.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate bill for the relief of Phineas M. Nightingale, administrator of General Nathaniel Greene, deceased, has been returned from the House with an amendment.

Mr. BROWN. The amendment proposes to reduce the principal sum to be paid $1,000, it being ascertained that the estimate of the Senate was too large. It is entirely satisfactory, and I hope it will be concurred in.

The amendment was concurred in.

GEORGE MORRELL AND OTHERS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Senate bill to provide compensation for the services of George Morrell, in adjusting titles to land in Michigan, has also been returned from the House, with amendments.

The amendments of the House were to add the names William Woodbridge and Henry Chipman, and to correct the phraseology of the bill by substituting plural pronouns for singular, so as to make it apply to the three parties.

Mr. STUART. I hope the amendments will be concurred in.

They were concurred in.

JOHN CHARLES FREMONT.

The bill from the House, authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to pay John Charles Fremont for beef furnished to the California Indians, was read twice by its title.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. I hope the Senate will consider the bill now.

Mr. RUSK. It has been investigated by the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. GWIN. I hope it will be acted upon now. It has been thoroughly investigated by the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. CASS. It is a very hard case, and the payment is justly due.

Mr. RUSK. The Committee on Indian Affairs have investigated the subject on information communicated by the Department of the Interior, and had determined to move an amendment exactly similar to the Army appropriation bill.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill as in Committee of the Whole.

It proposes to direct the Secretary of the Treasury to pay $183,825 with interest from the 1st of June, 1851, at the rate of ten per cent. per annum, to John Charles Fremont in full of his account for beef delivered to Commissioner Barbour, for the use of the Indians in California in 1851-'52.

Mr. HOUSTON. Has any motion been made to refer this bill? Ought it not to be referred?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No motion has been made to refer it.

Mr. EVANS. Why is interest allowed at the rate of ten per cent.? That is the only objection I have to the bill. If there is any reason for that, I shall vote for it; otherwise, I cannot.

Mr. RUSK. The reason is this: The money raised by Colonel Fremont for the purpose of purchasing these supplies, was had at a very exorbitant interest, much greater than is proposed to be paid in the bill. It was three per cent. a month, I believe. I do not know what it was exactly, but it was a very exorbitant rate of interest.

Mr. WELLER. Ten per cent. is the legal rate of interest in California.

Mr. EVANS. I am satisfied.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

BUCKNER AND CROSBY.

House bill "for the settlement of the claims of W. P. Buckner and Pearce Crosby, passed midshipmen in the United States Navy," was read twice by its title.

Mr. MALLORY. That bill is to authorize the payment of a share of prize money. It is to authorize the Treasury Department to pay two junior officers, midshipmen, for a capture during the Mexican war. There is no objection to it. I am authorized by the committee to ask for its consideration now. It is simply to authorize the payment of a small sum which is remaining in the Treasury for distribution.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill as in Committee of the Whole.

No amendment being proposed, it was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

FRANCIS M. GWIN.

The joint resolution from the House, giving one hundred and sixty acres of land to Francis M. Gwin, of Indiana, was read a first and second time by its title.

Mr. PETTIT. I hope that this joint resolution will be put upon its passage now. It is a plain case, and one of very great merit. It is for the benefit of a young man who went into the Mexican war, was too young to be enlisted, but fought through all the battles. The object is to give him one hundred and sixty acres of land.

The Senate proceeded to the consideration of the resolution as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BRIGHT. The facts in the case are as stated by my colleague. I hope there will be no objection to it.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

JOHN A. BRYAN.

The joint resolution from the House of Representatives for the relief of John A. Bryan, was read a first and second time by its title.

Mr. WELLER. I ask that that may be disposed of now. The claim, I believe, has passed both Houses of Congress three or four times, but it has never passed both Houses at the same Congress.

Mr. WALKER. I hope it will be acted on.

The bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It proposes to direct the Secretary of War to receive proof of the number of days that John A. Bryan was engaged in the discharge of duties as commissioner to make and carry into effect a treaty with the Wyandotte Indians, for which purpose he was appointed by the Secretary of War on the 19th of April, 1836, and to pay him eight dollars per day, deducting any amount which he may have heretofore received.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

WILLIAM G. SMITH.

House bill for the relief of William G. Smith was read twice by its title.

Mr. JAMES. I ask for the passage of that bill now.

The Senate accordingly proceeded to consider the bill as in Committee of the Whole.

It proposes to require the Secretary of the Treasury to pay $500 to William G. Smith for recapturing a vessel in the war of 1812, together with a midshipman and four seamen in the British navy; which persons were delivered to Commodore Perry at Newport, Rhode Island.

No amendment being made, the bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

LOUISIANA LAND CLAIMS.

The bill from the House of Representatives to revive an act, approved March 3, 1823, and an act approved May 26, 1824, supplemental thereto, in reference to the Rio Hondo claims to land in Louisiana, was read twice by its title.

Mr. SLIDELL. I hope the Senate will proceed to the consideration of that bill now. It simply extends the time for the investigation of the claims.

The bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It proposes to revive for the space of two years, from its promulgation, the acts severally approved March 3, 1823, for the examination of titles to land in that part of the State of Michigan situated between the Rio Hondo and Sabine rivers, and May 26, 1824, and to direct that the register and receiver at Nacogdoches shall severally receive as full compensation for the duties required of them by the acts revived, the sum of fifty dollars, whenever they shall have finished the business required of them, and forwarded their report to the Secretary of the Treasury.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message was received from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McKean, Chief Clerk, announcing that the Speaker had signed the following enrolled bills:

An act for the relief of Lewis E. Simonds; and
An act authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to pay John Charles Frémont for beef furnished to the California Indians.

Which were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

Mr. HUNTER. I ask by general consent that a private bill reported from the Committee on Claims, for the relief of Daniel Steenrod, may be taken up. If it gives rise to debate, I will be willing to let it go over.

Mr. SLIDELL. There are a great number of bills in precisely a similar situation which have come from the House, and been reported from the Committee on Private Land Claims.

Mr. PETTIT. We had better take up the whole Private Calendar.

Mr. HUNTER. The Senators have just disposed of one of their own bills.

Mr. STUART. I hope the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the river and harbor bill. I believe my motion is pending.

Mr. MASON. I feel it to be my duty again to ask the Senate to go into Executive session in preference to taking up the river and harbor bill. I need not assign the reasons to show that there is a pressing necessity for the discharge of Executive business. The Senate are aware of them. I apprehend we cannot take a vote on this river and harbor bill. I think there is business of more importance in Executive session, and I hope, therefore, the Senate will not take up the bill, but will go into Executive session.

Mr. BRIGHT. I am satisfied that time will be saved by permitting me to take up Senate bill No. 434 (providing for taking charge of the Louisville and Portland canal, and to prevent the same from falling into bad repair,) before we proceed with the consideration of the river and harbor bill. It is merely to give to the President power to take charge of this work until Congress shall legislate on the subject.

Mr. WALKER. It is in the river and harbor bill.

Mr. BRIGHT. I know it is; but I wish to strike it out of the river and harbor bill, and have it acted upon independently. The bill contains one section, and I apprehend there will be no objection to it.

Mr. MASON. I certainly should object to giving the President charge of any internal improvement in the world.

Mr. STUART. I wish to press my motion to take up the river and harbor bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has no control over the Senate. The motion is a debatable one.

Mr. STUART. I am aware of that. I hope the question will be taken.

Mr. STUART's motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill making appropriations for the repair, preservation, and completion of certain public works heretofore commenced under the authority of law.

Several hours were consumed in the consideration of this bill, and without disposing of it, the Senate adjourned.

[The debate on the bill will be found in the Appendix.]

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

SATURDAY, July 29, 1854.

The House met at 11 o'clock, a. m. Prayer by Rev. HENRY SLICER.

READING OF THE JOURNAL.

Mr. STRATTON. I hope that, by unanimous consent of the House, the reading of the Journal of yesterday will be dispensed with.

Mr. PECK. I object.

Mr. MILLSON. There never was an occasion when it was more necessary that the Journal should be read. The House yesterday passed a batch of bills without ever having the titles of them read.

The Clerk then proceeded to read the Journal.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The business first in order is the proposition to discharge the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads from the further consideration of certain memorials which were submitted the other day by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. JONES,] and to refer them to the Committee on Public Lands.

CORRECTION OF THE JOURNAL.

Mr. MILLSON. I rise to a question of privilege, as to the correction of the Journal. From my hearing of the Journal as it has been just read, I observe that the bill "for the relief of the legal representatives of Major Caleb Swan, deceased, is reported as having passed the House yesterday. That bill could not have passed the House; and it is necessary that I should explain to this body why it is that it could not have passed.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. If the gentleman will permit me, I will explain the matter.

Mr. MILLSON. With pleasure.

Mr. JONES. When we first took up the Private Calendar yesterday in Committee of the Whole House, the gentleman from Maine [Mr. FULLER] proposed to withdraw the objection which he had made on the preceding Friday to the bill of the Senate, No. 33—the Swan case. I then objected to going back, or rather I stated that we could not go back on the Calendar; and it was held by the chairman of the committee that, without unanimous consent, we could not, and the bill was accordingly not taken up. We went through the remainder of the Calendar, commencing where we left off last week; and, if I recollect aright, after we had gone through the bills, the gentleman from Maine again rose and asked to withdraw his objection. To that request there was no objection, I believe.

Mr. MILLSON. That is what I was about to state to the House; but the gentleman from Maine, near the close of the session, came forward and proposed to withdraw his objection to the bill for the relief of the heirs of Caleb Swan, deceased, I rose in my place and distinctly said, "I object to the withdrawal of it." I spoke so loudly, and so earnestly, perhaps, that several of my colleagues rushed to me, and insisted that I should not object, and that I should withdraw the objection, which I declined to do. My objection was insisted upon, and I would have objected originally, if the gentleman from Maine had not done so.

Afterwards, the chairman of a Committee of the Whole House made a report to the House without indicating any particular bills, which the Committee of the Whole had ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that they do pass. After the report of the chairman of the committee was made, the gentleman from Tennessee made a motion, which I then regarded as somewhat extraordinary, that the House should concur in the whole report of the committee, and the bills were then acted upon, without having the title of any one of them read. But the consent of the House to the passage of the bills, reported from the committee, only applied, of course, to such bills as the committee had agreed to recommend. The committee could not have recommended the passage of a bill to which I objected.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would say, that he is informed by the Clerk, that his recollection is very clear that the gentleman from Maine made two efforts to withdraw his objection, and on the second occasion, he was allowed to do so by the unanimous consent of the committee, and so the Clerk has recorded it.

Mr. MILLSON. It was just before the adjournment of the House, for I was here until the adjournment, and among the last to quit the Hall. I was near the Clerk's desk, and the gentleman from Maine came down and desired to withdraw his objection to a certain bill. I asked for the title of the bill. It was given, and I then said I objected. My colleague here, [Mr. FAULKNER,] and my colleague behind me, [Mr. SMITH,] came up, and urged me to withdraw the objection.

Mr. FAULKNER. I was standing near my colleague, and heard him object to that bill.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia is upon the floor upon a question of order.

Mr. HENDRICKS. It is in reference to the same question that I desire to say a word. I was going to say that the House can know nothing in reference to the action of a Committee of the Whole House, except what is reported by the chairman, and what appears upon the Journal; and I do not think it competent for the House to correct the Journal in reference to what took place in committee.

The SPEAKER. The Chair takes it for granted, however, that the House must, in some way or other, have the power to correct the irregularities and errors of the Committee of the Whole. But, in what precise form the case may be reached, the Chair cannot, at this moment, state.

Mr. FAULKNER. I will say to the House that I was standing near my colleague when he objected to the bill for the relief of Caleb Swan's heirs. I was, at the time, near my colleague. I heard him make the objection, though not, as I think, in a very loud voice. I thought, at the time, that the objection came rather late. In this I may be mistaken. I immediately commenced conversation with my colleague, for the purpose of satisfying him that he was in error in making the objection. That colloquy between us lasted for some five or ten minutes.

Mr. MILLSON. I will state that I made the objection immediately when the gentleman from Maine proposed to withdraw it. My colleague from the Fauquier district [Mr. SMITH] was near me at the time.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia, took the floor.

Mr. ORR. Is the question debatable?

The SPEAKER. Explanations are in order.

Mr. SMITH. I was going to state that this particular bill has attracted a good deal of attention in the House, not on account of the amount involved for it seems that is small, but because of the peculiar hardship of the case. I confess that having become acquainted with the circumstances of the case, I participated very strongly in that feeling, not from the fact of having any personal or representative interest in it, for I had neither, but simply as an act of justice.

THE CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE.

THE OFFICIAL PROCEEDINGS OF CONGRESS, PUBLISHED BY JOHN C. RIVES, WASHINGTON, D. C.

33D CONGRESS, 1ST SESSION.

MONDAY, JULY 31, 1854.

NEW SERIES.....No. 126.

At the time when my colleague from the Norfolk district [Mr. MILLSON] made the objection, I was standing near him, having approached him for the same purpose that my colleague from the eighth district [Mr. FAULKNER] has stated, both of us, I am sure, with the kindest intentions, to induce him to withdraw his objection. While thus engaged, the gentleman from Maine proposed to withdraw his objection. My colleague [Mr. MILLSON] objected, but the objection was not heard by the chairman, and the bill was laid aside, reported to the House, and passed. That is the history of the whole transaction. The whole question comes to this: The chairman did not hear the objection, and the bill was therefore laid aside. He did not hear it, and, therefore, it was the same, it seems to me, as if no objection had been made. The case is similar to a case yesterday, when I objected, and the objection was not recognized, with the exception that there were much more offensive and obnoxious circumstances in my case than in this.

Mr. ENGLISH. As chairman of a Committee of the Whole House yesterday, I desire to say, that I have no recollection whatever of the action upon this particular bill. The memorandum which I kept during the progress of business in committee I handed to a reporter for the Congressional Globe. I have no exact recollection of what occurred in the committee yesterday, and have, unfortunately, no other paper now to which I can refer.

Mr. MILLSON. My statement to the House was, that when the gentleman from Maine withdrew his objection, I inquired what bill it was? The name was given, and I then said in an audible tone "I object." This is my statement to the House; and although I referred to my two colleagues, yet while I have no desire to intimate that their concurrent statement would not fortify any statement I might make, I take occasion to say that I did not refer to them because I deemed that it was necessary to fortify my statement by their attestation. I referred to them simply to show that, as they came to me, I spoke audibly. It was with no other view I referred to my colleagues.

Mr. SMITH. I will say that my colleague was standing here, where the gentleman from Maine [Mr. FULLER] is now sitting. My colleague from the eighth district [Mr. FAULKNER] was about three steps from him. I, myself, was within two or three steps. We might have heard the objection, as we did; but the Chair might not have heard it, as he did not. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. MILLSON. I have simply risen, Mr. Speaker, to a correction of the Journal. I have stated that I objected to the bill. I did not require the indorsement of either of my colleagues to my statement. If I required any, there are a number of gentlemen here who also heard me make objection. My reference to my colleagues was merely to show, that as they came to urge me to withdraw my objection, they could have hardly supposed that the objection was too late. If they had supposed that it was too late, they could have hardly imagined a necessity for its withdrawal. And to show, also, that, as they heard me, I spoke loud enough—as loud as it was my duty to speak under the circumstances.

Now, if the bill had been reported to the House, if it had been read in the House, if the question had been taken on its passage by its title, then we could reach it by a motion to reconsider. That is now too late. The order of the House only applied to those bills which were laid aside in committee to be reported to the House; and as this bill was not laid aside in committee, I presume that it was not, or the chairman did not report these bills, naming the title of any of them; and as the House only agreed to pass those bills which were reported, I thought that the only way to reach my object was to make a motion to correct the Journal. I have nothing further to say on the subject.

The SPEAKER. It is stated by the gentleman from Virginia, in his place, that the Journal of yesterday is improperly made up in this: That the bill for the relief of the legal representatives of Caleb Swan, deceased, was not, as stated by the Journal, reported to the House.

Mr. SMITH. I wish to say a word in connection with the correction of the Journal.

[Cries of "Order!"]
The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman.

Mr. SMITH. Gentlemen cry order. I am unwilling to violate the rules of order at any time. I wish to ask—and I am in order—whether, if an objection made be withdrawn, and then renewed, and not heard by the Chair, that is an objection at all to be regarded by this House? The gentleman does not say that the Chair heard the objection.

The SPEAKER. The subject is not debatable. The facts connected with it may be explained. A motion is made to amend the Journal. The statement is, that the Journal does not represent the facts correctly in connection with the bill which has been indicated; that the bill could not have been reported to the House, having been objected to by the gentleman from Virginia. The memorandum of the Clerk is, that the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House. It will be in the recollection of all, that the bills were passed en masse, without the reading of the title of any of them. Under the circumstances, the Chair entertains the motion to correct the Journal, and thinks, if the correction be made, the effect will be to send the bill back to a Committee of the Whole House.

The question now being upon Mr. MILLSON's motion,

Mr. COBB called for tellers on the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. COBB and CLINGMAN were appointed.

The question was taken; and the tellers reported—yeas 34, noes not counted.

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. ORR. May I be indulged in a remark or two upon the merits of this matter?

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order. A statement of facts connected with the case would be in order.

Mr. ORR. I desire to state what I understand to be the fact.

Mr. PECK. I call the gentleman to order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman may state what he knows to be facts. [Laughter.]

Mr. ORR. I do not like to violate any rule of order. The gentleman from New York [Mr. PECK] called me to order. If I get out of order, I suppose the Speaker can set me right.

The SPEAKER. That is doubtful. [A laugh.]

Mr. ORR. Is it true in point of fact that an error has been committed in making up the Journal?

The SPEAKER. That is the question which we are trying.

Mr. ORR. Was not the report of the chairman of a Committee of the Whole House, that this bill was laid aside, with a recommendation that it do pass?

[Cries of "Order!" "Order!"]

The SPEAKER. That is a question of fact which is also being tried. And the Chair must here remark, that the gentleman from South Carolina is making an argument according to the most approved style, [laughter;] and to that extent is out of order.

Mr. ORR. Well, I ask the unanimous consent of the House to indulge me for two minutes.

[Cries of "Hear him!"]

The SPEAKER. Is it the pleasure of the House that the gentleman from South Carolina be indulged?

Assent was expressed.

Mr. ORR. My reason for asking this courtesy from the House is this: I think the precedent which we are about to establish, is an important one—that of changing the Journal when there has been no error committed. Now, I have no doubt that the statement made by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MILLSON] is entirely correct. I have no doubt that he intended to object, and did object, to the bill in question. But an objection is not one, if it does not reach the ear of the Presiding Officer. Do we not, almost every day, see instances of gentlemen asking the unanimous consent of the House to introduce a particular measure? Some gentleman says "I object," the Speaker does not hear the objection, and entertains the motion. Now, would it be competent for the House, after having passed a bill to a second or third reading, to go back, and say that an error had been committed, inasmuch as a member had objected to it, but which objection was not heard by the Chairman of the committee? That is the very gist of the matter. The Chair did not hear the objection of the gentleman from Virginia; and it is, to all intents and purposes, just as if objection had not been made.

The SPEAKER. The Chairman of the committee states that he does not recollect anything about the matter.

Mr. HUNT. With the indulgence of the House, I would make one remark in relation to this matter.

Assent was expressed.

Mr. HUNT. This, Mr. Speaker, regards the integrity of our proceedings. There was some confusion here yesterday arising from the conversations which gentlemen held in the House at the time the committee was in session. A man of honor, a member knowing his privilege, objected to a certain bill. The objection was heard by friends around, and it is entitled to its due weight, as coming from a Representative on this floor. There is no reproach cast upon the gentleman who occupied the chair, or upon the Clerk. But the fact being known, it is now a part of the truth of the proceedings of the body, and it becomes this House to give a true record to the country.

Mr. ENGLISH. I desire to remark, that I have not stated to the House that I did not hear the objection of the gentleman from Virginia. What I stated was, that I had no recollection of the case, one way or the other; and the memorandum which I had kept of the proceedings of yesterday I handed to the reporter of the Globe; therefore I have no paper to which I can refer to remind me of the facts.

The SPEAKER. The Chair so understood the gentleman from Indiana; and the Chair supposed he had so represented him to the House.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I rise for the purpose of calling the attention of members of the House to the fact that the Chair was heard by one of the members from California [Mr. McDONGALL] distinctly, and with a loud voice, to announce that the bill would be laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it pass.

Mr. PECKHAM. I wish to state to the House that I sat in my place here, and distinctly heard the gentleman from Virginia make the objection; and heard appeals made to him to withdraw it.

Mr. SMITH. Still, that does not touch the fact.

Mr. RITCHIE, of Pennsylvania. I wish to state to the House, that I made a written memorandum in my diary of those bills that were laid aside to be reported to the House; and I find here the observation in writing, opposite to the bill in question, that it was so laid aside. The observation I set down in those cases where that result was announced from the Chair. I could not have heard the objection of the gentleman from Virginia; for if I had, I should have marked the objection.

Mr. HUGHES. I rise to a question of order. I desire to ask a question from the Speaker for information. I ask if, under the rules and practice of the House, we have a right to go behind our own record upon the statement of any gentleman on this floor?

Mr. LETCHER. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. HUGHES] is addressing the Chair on a question of order. It is, to be sure, in the nature of an argument. However, the Chair thinks that it is perfectly competent for the House to correct the Journal. The Chair thinks that the House may correct any mistake, such as that alleged by the gentleman from Virginia, to have been committed in this case. And if not in the shape of correcting the Journal, then it can be done in the shape of a question of privilege, and the subject matter can be set correct. The Chair has no doubt about the power of the House.

[Cries of "Question!" "Question!"]

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I rise to a question of privilege. The proposition here is to correct the Journal. Now, if the Journal is right, according to the understanding of the Presiding Officer, it cannot be corrected.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would inform the gentleman that debate is out of order.

[Cries of "Call the roll!"]

The question was then taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 63, nays 84; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. James C. Allen, Barksdale, Belcher, Bennett, Boyce, Chastain, Chrisman, Clark, Clingman, Colquitt, Craig, Cullom, Dowdell, Edmundson, Ellison, Faulkner, Flagler, Goode, Goodrich, Greenwood, Grey, Grow, Wiley P. Harris, Haven, Houston, Hunt, Daniel T. Jones, George W. Jones, Roland Jones, Knox, Lamb, Letcher, McCulloch, McMullin, McQueen, Mattheson, Maurice, Milson, Morgan, Morrison, Murray, Parker, Peck, Peckham, Pennington, Phillips, Pratt, Reese, Robbins, Rowe, Ruffin, Sage, Shaw, Skelton, Stratton, Andrew Stuart, John J. Taylor, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Upham, Vansant, Daniel B. Wright, and Zollcoffer—63.

NAYS—Messrs. Aiken, Willis Allen, Appleton, Banks, Benson, Benton, Bridges, Carpenter, Caruthers, Chandler, Churchwell, Cobb, Cook, Corwin, Cox, Crocker, Curtis, John G. Davis, Dawson, Dick, Drum, Dunham, Eastman, Eddy, Edgerton, Edmunds, Thomas D. Eliot, John M. Elliott, Everhart, Farley, Fuller, Giddings, Aaron Harlan, Harrison, Hendricks, Henni, Hibbard, Hiester, Hill, Howe, Johnson, Kerr, Kurtz, Lane, Lindsey, McDougall, McNair, Macy, Maxwell, Mayall, John G. Miller, Nichols, Noble, Norton, Mordcaid Oliver, Orr, Pringle, Puryear, Ready, David Ritchie, Rogers, Russell, Sabin, Sapp, Seward, Shower, Gerrit Smith, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Hester L. Stevens, John L. Taylor, Thurston, Trunt, Tweed, Vail, Wade, Walbridge, Wayler, William B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, Wells, John Wentworth, Wheeler, and Hendrick B. Wright—84.

So the motion of Mr. MILLSON was not agreed to.

Mr. HENN, when his name was called on the above vote, said: I vote "no," because I do not think the House has any right to correct the action of the committee in this way.

ENROLLED BILL.

Mr. GREEN, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported as correctly enrolled the following bill, which thereupon received the signature of the Speaker:

An act making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1855, and for other purposes.

PERSONAL EXPLANATIONS.

Mr. HOUSTON here obtained the floor.

Mr. FENTON. Will the gentleman give way for a moment, that I may make a personal explanation? It will take but a moment.

Mr. HOUSTON. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. FENTON. I had no knowledge yesterday of the intention of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ELIOT] to offer a resolution to repeal the fugitive slave law. At the time the resolution was made by him to suspend the rules for that purpose, I was absent from my seat attending to necessary business at one of the Executive departments. If I had been here, I should have voted in favor of suspending the rules.

Mr. CULLOM. I desire also to say, that I was confined to my room yesterday, and for several preceding days, by indisposition. Had I been here, I should have unhesitatingly voted against the proposition of the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. ELIOT.]

Mr. READY. I desire to say that I was detained from the House yesterday by indisposition when the motion was made to suspend the rules for the purpose of introducing a bill to repeal the fugitive slave law. Had I been here, I should have voted in the negative.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. With the permission of the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. HOUSTON] I would also say that, at the time the motion was made to suspend the rules yesterday, by the gentleman from Massachusetts, I happened to be out upon official business; and as my position is uncertain and not well understood, [laughter.] I think it important to say that, had I been here, I should have voted in the negative.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message was received from the Senate, by ASBURY DICKINS, Esq., their Secretary, informing the House that the Senate had agreed to an amendment of the House to a bill of the Senate entitled "An act to provide for the accommodation of the courts of the United States in the district of Massachusetts," with an amendment, in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House.

OCEAN MAIL STEAMER BILL.

Mr. FULLER. I ask the gentleman from Alabama, who has the floor, to yield to me to make a motion to take up the bill in relation to the safety of lives on board of steamboats, &c. I desire to take up Senate bill (No. 408) from the Speaker's table, which contains a provision to extend the provisions of that act to the Pacific coast. It is a very important bill, and I desire simply to offer an amendment to it, that it may be acted upon, and be sent to the Senate to receive their action.

Mr. HOUSTON. I would state to the gentleman that the Committee of Ways and Means have adjourned to meet again at one o'clock, for the purpose of considering the civil and diplomatic bill. This appropriation bill, in reference to mail steamer service, remains upon the Calendar of the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and I propose to occupy the time from now until one o'clock in the consideration and passage of that bill; and for that purpose I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. FULLER. I am admonished that the close of this session is near at hand, and I fear the bill may go over, and not be passed. Its passage now will probably save the lives of hundreds of passengers.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Is this question debatable?

The SPEAKER. It is not.

The question was then taken upon Mr. HOUSTON's motion; and it was agreed to.

So the rules were suspended, and the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. ENGLISH in the chair,) and proceeded to consider the first bill upon the Calendar, being House bill "making appropriations for the transportation of the United States mail by ocean steamers and otherwise, during the fiscal year ending the 30th of June, 1855."

Mr. HOUSTON. I move to dispense with the first reading of the bill, and that the clerk proceed to read it by paragraphs for amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOUSTON. I now move that the committee rise, for the purpose of going into the House and closing the general debate upon this bill.

The motion was agreed to.

So the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the Chairman [Mr. ENGLISH] reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had, according to order, the Union generally under consideration, and particularly the bill of the House No. 96, and had come to no conclusion thereon.

Mr. HOUSTON. I move the usual resolution to close debate upon the mail steamer appropriation bill. I do not know whether any one wishes to speak upon it or not.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I think five minutes will be long enough to allow for debate.

Mr. HOUSTON. Very well, I move the usual resolution to close the general debate upon House bill No. 96, in five minutes after the committee shall again resume its consideration.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. HOUSTON moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted, and also moved that the motion to reconsider do lie upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOUSTON. I now move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to.

So the rules were suspended, and the House

resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and resumed the consideration of the bill "making appropriations for the transportation of the United States mail, by ocean steamers and otherwise, during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1855."

The Clerk then proceeded to read the bill by paragraphs for amendment.

Mr. OLDS. I move to amend the second paragraph of the bill, by striking out from the word "dollars," in the eighth line, to the end of the paragraph, as follows:

"And that the Secretary of the Navy is hereby directed forthwith to give the notice provided in the first section of the act entitled 'An act to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the fiscal year ending the 30th of June, 1853,' approved the 21st day of July, 1852, to terminate the arrangement for the additional allowance for the transportation of the United States mail between New York and Liverpool, in the Collins line of steamers, as therein provided."

Mr. Chairman, I do not make this motion because I am in favor of this increased compensation to Collins's line, for I am opposed to it, but my construction of the statute is that Congress cannot give notice, until after the 31st day of December, 1854. Now, the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, reported at an early day of the session, a bill not only giving this notice, but putting an end to all these steam mail contracts. It now stands on the Calendar, but cannot be reached at this session of Congress. My proposition is to strike out this clause of the bill now under consideration, for the reason that I think the statute does not permit notice to be given until after the 31st day of December, 1854. At the next session the bill reported from the Post Office Committee will come up for consideration.

Mr. ROBBINS. Is there a notice of the kind referred to in this bill? If so, where is it?

Mr. OLDS. There is, and it is that part of the bill from the eighth to the eighteenth line, inclusive.

The statute to which reference has been made, reads as follows:

"Provided, That it shall be in the power of Congress, at any time after the 31st day of December, 1854, to terminate the arrangement for the additional allowance herein provided for, on giving six months notice."

It seems to me that that proviso will not admit of any doubtful construction. Notice may be given after the 31st day of December, 1854, for the termination of these contracts. That being so you do not lose anything by permitting these words to be stricken out, and letting the matter go over until the next session of Congress, when the bill reported from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads will come up for consideration. You must make the compensation for this year; and if you wait and take up that bill at the next session of Congress, give notice and terminate all these contracts, Congress and the people will have lost nothing, and you will have got rid, to say the least of it, of a doubtful construction of this statute giving extra compensation.

Mr. SKELTON. I hope that this amendment may not prevail. The gentleman says that he is opposed to this extra compensation, but that he is not in favor of giving the notice now, simply for the fact that the act requires that the notice shall be given after the 31st day of December, 1854. We do not propose to give notice immediately, but to give instruction that notice shall be given after that time.

Mr. OLDS. The bill provides that notice shall be given forthwith.

Mr. SKELTON. Suppose it does; that does not prevent what is proposed. We can amend the section, and give notice according to the law.

I am in favor of terminating these contracts, and for this reason: The great expense of our post office system is in consequence of the extraordinary compensation paid for the transportation of ocean mails by steamers. The moment that these contracts are terminated, we shall be able to save millions of dollars annually to the Government. By abolishing these contracts we shall secure the cheap ocean postage, and instead of the present high rates we shall be able to have letters carried for two cents each.

Now, I hold that it is proper and expedient, that the interest of the country demand an abolition of these ocean contracts. I hope this committee will not strike out this clause, but will pass it in a modified form; and that notice shall be given to the proprietors for this service according to the bill and according to the law.

Mr. MORRISON. I move an amendment to the amendment to strike out in the ninth and tenth lines the word "forthwith." I believe that amendment to the amendment will meet the objection of the gentleman from Ohio and others.

Mr. WALBRIDGE. I desire to move an amendment to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. It is not in order to amend at this time, there being an amendment to the amendment already pending.

Mr. WALBRIDGE. I favor, then, the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio; and my reasons for doing so I will briefly give. The British Government, through the line commonly recognized as the Cunard line, had the uninterrupted carrying of the mails from 1837 to 1849, a period of twelve years, and paid into the exchequer of that country, within that period of time, £6,000,000 sterling, and received for their own services £2,000,000. Great Britain refused to enter into any postal arrangement with us until the Collins line was established, and the keel of the Atlantic was laid. Then a postal arrangement was made between the United States and Great Britain upon the following basis:

1. That either nation has the power to abrogate the treaty, upon giving six months' notice.
2. That the withdrawal of either line annuls the treaty.
3. That the United States shall receive five twenty-fourths of the postage on letters brought by Cunarders.
4. That Great Britain should receive from the Collins steamers eight twenty-fourths of the postage.

In this ratio of increase during the present year there will be received from postages derived from this line sufficient to liquidate all these expenses. The postages in the Cunard line increased to twenty-nine per cent. If this contract is annulled and this notice is given, all the advantages now accruing to the Collins line must pass to the Cunard line. I agree with the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. OLDS,] that there is no power at this session to terminate that contract. The act of July, 1852, under which it was made, expressly declares as follows: "Provided, That it shall be in the power of Congress, at any time after the 31st day of December, 1854, to rescind this extra compensation upon giving six months' notice."

Another consideration connected with this subject is, that in compliance with such instructions, the Postmaster General did advertise and receive bids on all the lines or routes, but none for the carrying of the mails between New York and Liverpool. While bids were put in for other lines, there was no application made for carrying the mails between New York and Liverpool. I wish to remark here, that, by the increasing compensation, the Collins' line have averaged, each way, two days increased speed; and in order to make this speed; the expenses have increased in the same ratio. A great and important consideration which is involved in this question, is the contest for the supremacy of the seas between this country and Great Britain. I am aware that upon the ocean our gallant Navy has fully vindicated its reputation to cope with that of Great Britain. The struggle now going on between Great Britain and America, is for the supremacy of the ocean, and the maritime ascendancy of the globe.

The original investment for the performance of this service was $3,000,000. The annual interest on that sum, at the rate of six per cent. per annum, is $180,000. The insurance upon the ships is certainly not less than six per cent., and that item amounts also to $180,000. The annual depreciation of the property may be estimated at seven per cent. which amounts to $210,000, making an average of $570,000, to be accounted for before the receipts commence to pay the running expenses of the ships. But yet, since the appropriation was passed in 1852, wages have increased thirty-three per cent.; coal has increased three dollars per ton; and the difference in these two items of labor and fuel make an additional expense of $5,000 per trip. But all these considerations are subordinate to that higher question at this time, involved in this discussion, will the Government break its plighted faith, and disregard the provisions of the act, in the form of a contract, as the deficiency bill of 1852 will demonstrate.

The contest between the Collins and Cunard lines is for the maritime supremacy of the seas.

It involves the commercial pride and honor of the respective Governments to which they belong. I know, sir, that England has achieved her proudest triumphs on the ocean. One of her favorite bards has said:

"Her march is o'er the mountain wave,
Her home is on the deep."

And I know, too, sir, that our gallant Navy has ever been able to cope with Great Britain during the last war; but "peace hath its victories not less renowned than those of war." This peaceful struggle is still progressing. Thus far we have been victorious, and the greatest maritime triumphs on record have been achieved by the genius of Fulton, backed by the indomitable energy of Collins. Sir, this contest is not individual, it is national—and I believe the American people will continue to uphold an enterprise that has reflected upon the country so much credit. It is not for the city of New York that I solicit your favorable action, but for the honor and glory of the whole Republic.

The question was taken on the amendment to the amendment; and it was not agreed to.

Mr. MACE. I desire to ask a question for information.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana propose to amend the amendment?

Mr. MACE. I desire first to ask a question from the Chair. Is the debate on this bill under the five-minute rule?

The CHAIRMAN. It is.

Mr. MACE. I propose to amend the amendment by striking out of the eighth line of the bill "$858,000." I was not in the House, Mr. Chairman, when the order was made restricting debate on this bill to five minutes. I regard the bill as an exceedingly important one. It will be recollected by the House that at an early day of this session, a committee was appointed—of which I had the honor of being chairman—for the purpose of investigating all frauds which had been committed in relation to the disbursement of the money appropriated for the mail steamer service. This being a question of great importance, not only to the House, but to the country at large, it strikes me as exceedingly strange that a proposition should be made on a question of this kind to close the debate in five minutes. When the great interests involved are considered, when the amount of money paid yearly by this Government for this transportation of the mails from New York to Liverpool, and for the transportation of the mails on the Pacific coast, are taken into consideration, it strikes me as exceedingly strange indeed that any one would make a proposition in this House, and that this House should accede to it, to close debate in five minutes. When you take into consideration the amount of money expended for the purpose of transporting the mails, &c., how is it possible, I ask, that an individual can discuss this great question in the space of five minutes?

Now, sir, I desire to offer to this committee my views in full in relation to this measure. And in addition to that, I wish to state that almost every man upon the committee to which I belong desires that the information which is before him, in regard to the various questions involved in this bill, should be heard by the House.

This bill, as I understand it, is an appropriation bill to carry out the preceding acts of Congress in reference to these lines. I am told—I have not examined into it—that the chairman of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads has a bill pending in this House, in connection with which this whole question can come up. It ought to be investigated; but when you tie me down, and tie down the members of this House to a five-minute discussion, it is impossible, utterly impossible, as every man of this committee will bear me out in saying, to give to the House our views in regard to this matter fully, and as they ought to be given. I trust that, inasmuch as the five-minute rule has been adopted by the House, when the bill reported by the chairman of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads comes up, the whole question in reference to terminating the contracts with Collins, with Sloo, and with Aspinwall, may be fully and thoroughly discussed. I cannot discuss it now. It would take, perhaps, two hours to do it, at least one, and I trust when that bill comes up, not only the questions in reference to these contracts, but the question in relation to what we shall do hereafter about our mail steamer service, may be fully and thoroughly discussed.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CLINGMAN. I am opposed to the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. MACE.] I think it wrong in itself. I have an amendment which I desire to offer to the committee, and one which I hope will meet the views of a majority of the House. I was one of the individuals who voted for this subsidy of $858,000 during the last Congress. I thought I did right then; and I am satisfied with the vote now, and am opposed to striking it out. At that time, I moved an amendment which I intend to repeat upon this occasion. It is to request the President of the United States to take such steps as he thinks necessary to put a stop to this system. The objection to the system is two-fold. First, it pays a large amount of money from the Treasury of the United States for the use of ships which cannot be used in time of war, except for transports. But the second and principal objection is this, that you pay large amounts of money to the owners of ships engaged in the business of transporting passengers and goods, which enables them to underwork every body else. Such a system as that ought to be abandoned. Great Britain began it by paying large sums to the Cunarders. Under that arrangement large sums of money were paid to them, by which they were enabled to defy competition, and to underwork our own people; and for that reason they asked us to give them similar advantages, and we have been called upon in this way to give, until both Governments pay large sums of money. I find, by looking at a report recently made in the House of Commons, by one of its committees, that they seem disposed to abandon the system in England. I am not willing to abandon it here, as long as the English system is kept up.

If the proposition under consideration be voted down, I intend to offer an amendment, and it will be to this effect: to authorize the President of the United States to leave the system as it now stands, until he can make an arrangement with Great Britain to withdraw this aid to the Cunarders; and then authorizing the Postmaster General to abolish the contract with the Collins line, and others. There is no excuse on the face of the earth for paying the extravagant sum we do pay, to Sloo and others, for running from one of our ports to another. I think we ought to let out the carrying of the mail by ocean steamers to the lowest bidder. Something of that sort is absolutely necessary, or we shall go on in these profuse expenditures for the benefit of particular individuals, at the expense of the General Government. I therefore hope the committee will be willing to adopt such a proviso to this section as I have indicated, or something else that will accomplish that purpose. I do not care whether my amendment is adopted or not. But I hope some proposition will be adopted by which the President shall be authorized to make some arrangement with the British Government by which both Governments shall abolish this system.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The amendment to the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I move the following as a proviso to the section which the gentleman from Ohio proposes to strike out:

Provided, That this notice shall not be carried into effect until the President shall have been able by treaty or otherwise, to induce the British Government to reduce the subsidy paid to the Cunard line, or to abolish the system altogether; in which event the Postmaster General is instructed to take the necessary steps to get rid of the existing contracts with ocean steamers for the transportation of the mail.

Mr. PHILLIPS. I would suggest to the gentleman from North Carolina, that he may accomplish his purpose better by offering his amendment as a substitute for the clause which it is proposed to strike out, and not as a proviso to it. I think he will find that the proviso will be found to be inconsistent with the section itself.

Mr. CLINGMAN. Not at all. If the gentleman will listen to it, he will find that it will answer the purpose perfectly. It provides that, before this notice shall be given, the President shall, if he is able, make an arrangement with the British Government by which the whole system of granting subsidies to these lines of steamers shall be abolished. It then authorizes the Secretary of the Navy, in that event, to take such steps as are necessary to terminate our contracts with these parties.

There is no time for the discussion of this subject fully. But I have come to the conclusion, from an examination of the reports recently made in the British Parliament, that that Government are becoming satisfied that the experiment they are making will not end in anything good. I believe the British Government will be glad to enter into an arrangement by which they shall abandon the system altogether. And if that can be done, we can discontinue our contract in reference to the Collins line with a better conscience. We can then authorize the Postmaster General to contract with the lowest bidder for carrying the mails by ocean steamers, as we do in regard to our other mails. Or, we can adopt the two penny system, which was referred to by my friend from New Jersey, [Mr. SKELTON.]

I am perfectly satisfied that we had better get rid of this system. These ships are not what we need in time of war. I believe they will not carry heavy batteries. It may be they might be made useful for transportation, but we can get other ships that will answer just as well for that purpose. I would prefer, however, not to abolish the system so far as the Collins line are concerned, while the British system is kept up. I agree with my friend and the eloquent gentleman from New York, [Mr. WALBRIDGE,] that it would be wrong to abandon this field to Great Britain. We accepted England's challenge and beat her successfully. I do not come now to take down our flag while hers is floating in the breeze; but let us by common consent, change the system. I hope that my amendment, or one looking to the same purpose may be adopted.

Mr. JAMES C. ALLEN. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the amendment of the gentleman from North Carolina, and to any other amendment which looks to the continuation of these contracts a day beyond the time at which this Government has the power to terminate them. And it seems to me that gentlemen who will look to the facts and figures as they are on the records before them, and who have regard for the postal interests of the country, will hold the same opinion in this respect, that I do. If you look to the contracts themselves you find that the company has not complied with many of their most important provisions. They contracted to furnish five steamships, and have only furnished four; and up to this time we have no evidence that the other one is being constructed.

But aside from this, for I have no time to discuss this part of the subject, if you will look to the amount paid the Collins line, and then to the trifling amount received by the Government from the mails carried, it is enough to startle any man who originally supported this appropriation. We pay to that company $33,000 for each trip. Now, what is the revenue derived, by way of postage, from that line? For the fiscal year ending in 1853 we had $192,000 of receipts. Then, sir, this shows that the Government loses on every trip of the Collins line the immense sum of $27,658 16. Can the Post Office Department stand up under such a ruinous arrangement? For every trip of these steamers across the Atlantic we lose $27,658 16. I refer, for the truth of the statement, to the report of the Postmaster General.

Now, I would ask, whether the mere fact that we have steamers which beat those of England in point of speed, is sufficient to induce us to incur this large expenditure of money from the Treasury? Shall we, for the sake of having it said that we are sustaining a line which can make faster time than the Cunard line, continue this great bonus to this company? It seems to me that we ought not to do so. So long as we keep up this extravagant system of ocean mail carriage, our country must suffer. We shall hear of enormous deficits in the revenues of the Post Office Department.

I say again that I am opposed to the gentleman's amendment. I am in favor of such action as will terminate these contracts. I think that Congress has the power to do so. I am of opinion that the Collins line has violated its contract, not only in the build of its vessels, but also in the number which it was to furnish. In view of these violations, then, I contend that we have the right to put an end to the contract at any moment. I believe that it is our duty to terminate it now.

When we can only keep up this system by giving $27,658 on each trip, it is our bounden duty to put an end to this contract at the earliest possible moment.

Now, I am not in favor of giving to the Postmaster General the power given by the amendment of the gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. CLINGMAN,] or rather, I am not in favor of such legislation as might lead to a continuation of these contracts.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I move to strike out the words "instructed," and insert the word "authorized."

If the amendment I have offered is adopted, it will not make it imperative upon the Postmaster General to suspend the Collins line. I hope this committee will not, at the present time, take any measures that will lead to a suspension of that line. This question was very fully discussed in the last Congress, and the majority were then satisfied of the importance of establishing that line, and of the necessity of keeping it up after it was established. At that time it was proved conclusively here that the stock was selling in the markets of New York, and in the markets of the world, at not over fifty per cent., and it was considered to be the very best test that could possibly be applied as to the value of the stock. At present I believe the stock is considerably under par; and it is very evident that this great national enterprise, which has done so much to sustain the honor of the American name abroad, and which has so much aided to give the dominion of the seas, cannot be sustained without the aid of the National Government, especially as the Cunard line has been established, and is now sustained by the exchequer of Great Britain. If we reduce the amount paid to the Collins line for carrying the mail, the result will be, that these steamers will be taken off the route. I submit that they have not had a sufficient length of time to test the experiment; and I do believe that, in the course of time, the amount received from postages will be sufficient to make this a self-sustaining line. I do not believe that it is prudent, proper, and wise, nor do I believe that it is true economy at this period in the history of this great enterprise, that we should withdraw our protection from this line.

Mr. PENNINGTON. Will the gentleman from Maine yield me the floor for a moment?

Mr. WASHBURN. Certainly.

Mr. PENNINGTON. I have had occasion, Mr. Chairman, as a member of the committee appointed to investigate the frauds alleged to have been committed in the disbursement of the appropriations for the Collins steamers, to look into the question in relation to the Collins line, to see how far it is now a self-sustaining institution of the Government. I found that the cost of that line is $858,000 per annum. That is the amount reported by the committee as the appropriation for the fiscal year ending June, 1855. Now, the question is, how much is received by the Government for postages between Great Britain and the United States? We received last year $791,230 52 for postages between Great Britain and the United States; and every dollar of that is received without any other cost to the Government of the United States than this sum of $858,000 per annum.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. McQUEEN. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. WASHBURN,] as I am opposed to all protection by this Government. I have been opposed to this whole system from the beginning. I have looked upon it from the first as one of the worst species of protection ever adopted by the Government, because it secures to a chartered company a monopoly that is unjust, and from which they are realizing an immense profit at the expense of the people, and by the fostering legislation of the Government. As has been said by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. ALLEN,] a few moments ago, this company came to Congress originally asking them to grant a charter by which they were to build five ships; and after they had obtained the charter, at an enormous expense to the Government, they went into operation, and have never, to this day, built but four. Again, they obligated to construct those ships in such a manner as would make them suitable for naval purposes in time of war; and yet almost every experienced officer who has examined these ships, and whose reports were published by order of this House a year or two ago, declared that there is not one of them suited for purposes of war, nor can they be made so, if at all, without great expense. At first they were allowed $19,000 a trip from New York to Liverpool, but afterwards they came here, and, by some sort of influence, they managed to get a bill through Congress, by which their compensation was increased from $19,000 to $33,000, although they never had complied with the first obligation imposed upon them by the charter.

At that time, I will say to my friend from North Carolina, [Mr. CLINGMAN,] who has submitted a proposition changing the provision contained in this bill, that I well remember the friends of the measure came here with clamorous appeals to the patriotism of the country, on the ground that they had to contend with the Cunard line, supported largely by the money of the British Government, and were in danger of being run off the seas; when the fact was, the Cunard line were then getting but little, if any, over $13,000 a trip, and this company, at the very time, $19,000, and, by some influences unknown to me, they succeeded in getting $33,000. Now, I ask my friend from North Carolina to unite with us in some measure, and to take such course as will bring the affairs of this company to the speediest close. When I go to the Post Office Department and ask for additional mail facilities in my part of the country, I am met with the answer that the post offices yield too small an income to justify the expense, and yet here we have a measure drawing out of the Treasury annually upwards of $850,000 for the transportation of the mails between New York and Liverpool, whilst we all know well, sir, we have to pay heavily our portion of the expenses.

Suppose these $850,000 were disseminated in the improvement of our postal arrangements throughout the country annually, and among the people who support the Treasury, would not the benefits to them be incalculably great? I have constituents who have to send twenty or thirty miles to the nearest post office; and when I go to the Department and complain, I am met, and truly, too, sir, with the argument, that by the system of legislation pursued for the last several years by Congress, the post office has become an immense burden on the National Treasury, and it is not in the power of the head of the Department to render such facilities as are often demanded, and my own judgment tells me the answer is often too true to allow me to blame when I am refused. I ask again of members of this House, if this annual outlay of $850,000 given to this company by a special species of protection—a protection heretofore unknown, even to this Government—were distributed throughout the country, how much would it benefit our constituents? And shall we pursue a system longer by which the millionaire shall be enabled to wallow in the lap of luxury and affluence, and thereby deprive our own constituents of the benefits which the sum so paid would afford them? I saw one of these ships, sir, the Baltic, a splendid vessel. It came here in open day; and its owners invited, with many others, the members of this, and the other body of the legislative department of the Government, to see the ship, and to partake of sumptuous fare upon it; and I have made the remark in private, and will repeat it here, that if I could be induced to vote for any measure, for the accomplishment of which such means were used, I would vote for this, because these things were done in open day, and aboveboard, and there was something manly about it; but I never have voted for it, and maintain most earnestly that we should adopt the shortest possible mode to get clear of these contracts, and extricate ourselves from this whole system, which seems to me to be wrong from the beginning, and wholly unjust towards those who confide in us; and I trust this committee will pursue that course.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WASHBURN, by unanimous consent, withdrew his amendment.

Mr. WHEELER. I renew the amendment of the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. WASHBURN.] I rise merely for the purpose of replying to the remarks of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. JAMES C. ALLEN,] and of the gentleman from South Carolina, [Mr. McQUEEN.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the gentleman cannot occupy five minutes upon the amendment of the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. WHEELER. Then I move to increase the appropriation five dollars.

Mr. PECKHAM. I rise to a question of order. The gentleman can renew the amendment of the gentleman from Maine, if that amendment has been withdrawn, and he can argue it also.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will entertain the amendment.

Mr. WHEELER. Well, then, I renew the amendment of the gentleman from Maine. I have been somewhat astonished, Mr. Chairman, at the attacks made upon this line, coming from the quarter that they do, particularly as the company have been charged with not fulfilling their part of the contract. Now, sir, this fifth ship has been spoken about. It was expressly declared in that contract that the fifth ship was not to be built until called for by the Navy Department; and, sir, it has not yet been called for.

Mr. McQUEEN. I wish to ask the gentleman if the ships which have already been built, have not been pronounced by the officers of the Government unfit for war purposes?

Mr. WHEELER. Every one of those ships have been accepted by the Navy Department. When they were built, inspectors were appointed by that Department, and they made their reports, and every one of these ships were accepted by the Government. Not only so, but the four steamers have made the whole number of trips contracted to be made by the five.

Mr. WALLBRIDGE, (interrupting.) I have in my hands a letter addressed by Mr. Collins to the Postmaster General, which I desire to have read.

Mr. WHEELER. Not now. After I get through. The charge has also been made that these vessels are not fit for war purposes. Now, if that is the case, it is very singular that they were accepted by the Navy Department.

Mr. McQUEEN. The only way in which I can explain that is, that they have been accepted because they are better than none.

Mr. WHEELER. I am not surprised, Mr. Chairman, to find gentlemen who are opposed to these contracts, and who have made these attacks, so very anxious to explain the position they have taken. These ships are equal to every emergency. They are as strong as any side-wheel steamer can be. They are as strong as they can be built, and will answer every war purpose that side-wheel steamers can be put to.

The gentleman from Illinois has charged that a great loss has devolved upon this Government in keeping up this line. Sir, why did not the gentleman give us all the facts in the case? Why did he not state that an arrangement had been entered into between the Collins and Cunard lines by which they were to alternate in their trips, and by which this Government has received during the past year in the shape of postage, $791,230 32, and by which the real cost, over and above the aggregate postages received to the Government, would be only $66,769 48? Why did not the gentleman make this statement? Why did he not state the facts of the case fully? He did state the facts correctly so far as he went. Sir, I am surprised to hear these attacks made upon this line.

Mr. BARRY. The gentleman in his statement gives the Collins line the whole benefit of the amount of postage received from both lines.

Mr. WHEELER. I said an arrangement, as I understood, had been entered into between the Collins and Cunard line to alternate their trips, and that the cost to the Government over and above the aggregate postages received by both lines would be only $66,769 48.

Sir, the honor of the country is involved in the maintenance of this line of steamers. In my opinion, no set of men on this continent have honored this nation more than the men who projected this line of steamers. They have established and maintained our supremacy on the ocean. Sir, within the last month this line has made the quickest trip upon record, and has reduced the time from New York to Liverpool from fifteen to nine days.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. JAMES C. ALLEN. I desire to oppose the amendment of the gentleman from New York. I am charged with having made a partial statement in reference to the connection of this Government with these lines of steamers. I have been charged with not stating all the facts of the case. And, sir, before I take my seat, I desire to notice that charge.

Mr. WHEELER. I will say to the gentleman, that I charged him with nothing in any offensive sense.

Mr. ALLEN. Not at all. I did not so understand the gentleman. Sir, I do not intend to do injustice to the Collins line; but I said, and I say now, that the ships of that line have not been constructed according to contract. If the gentleman will look at the contract, he will see that they were to be so constructed as to make them easily convertible by the Government into steamers for war purposes; and if the gentleman will look into the reports which have been made by the officers appointed to examine the ships, he will find that, with one exception, they have refused to assert that the ships are capable of being easily converted into war steamers. The general tenor of their reports is, that they are admirably constructed for the purpose for which they were intended. This is the tenor of the reports of all, with the exception of Commodore Perry, who follows the language of the act, and says that they may be easily converted into steamers for war purposes.

Again, sir, if the gentleman will look at the reports of the Secretary of War during the last Administration, in his recommendations to Congress upon the subject, he will find that he speaks of them as not adapted for war purposes. The present Secretary of the Navy, in his report which has been transmitted to Congress, states in substance the same thing. It is true that the Secretary of the Navy, and the officers who have been selected for the purpose of inspecting these vessels, may be mistaken, and the gentleman from New York may be right. I choose, however, to rely more on their statements than upon his; and it is on their testimony that I say, so far as the adaptation of the steamers to war purposes is considered the Collins company have not complied with their contract. The Government, it is true, has accepted them, and, it may be, is bound by that acceptance; but, I again repeat, that all the testimony goes to show that they are not adapted for war purposes.

The question of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. BARRY] was well put to the gentleman from New York. I cannot conceive why the gentleman took the amount of postage derived from the Cunard line, and passed it to the benefit of the Collins line. The statement I made before was that for the mail matter brought to and carried from the United States, the Collins line netted to the Government $192,000 last fiscal year, and that we paid $27,658 each trip more than we received. And I ask the gentleman again how it is that he contends the Government ought to keep up a line of this kind at such an enormous expense?

Mr. WHEELER. As the gentleman has referred to Commodore Perry, I would like to have read just here what he has written on the subject.

Mr. ALLEN. I cannot give way now. The gentleman will get the floor in a moment, and he himself can have it read. Commodore Perry is the only inspecting officer who has reported favorably on these steamers. They are only one or two exceptions in regard to my statement, and I am not certain whether they are not in regard to the Sloop, and not the Collins line.

The question was well put by the gentleman from Mississippi. Great Britain would have the same right to say that the postages received by the Collins and Cunard lines ought to be alone set down to her, as we have to say that the postages received by the Cunard line ought to be set down to the credit of the Collins line.

Mr. BANKS. I move to strike out the words "to be able," and in lieu thereof to insert "endeavor."

Mr. Chairman, I do not move the amendment for the purpose of adding strength to the proposition of the gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. CLINGMAN,] because I intend to vote against it. I am not opposed to the principle involved; and if it were an original question I would vote for his proposition, believing that it will turn out ultimately to be the right one. I am not now in favor of it. I prefer the amendment moved by the gentleman from Ohio, inasmuch as it now gives us a decided advantage. His proposition provides for notice hereafter, and in the mean time the Government of the United States shall be relieved from the obligation to take the steamers at appraisement, or whatever rule of valuation may be agreed on.

I desire to say, in reference to this matter, that while I do not agree with the gentleman from Ohio, that we had not the right, and, therefore, agree with the gentleman from New Jersey, [Mr. SKELTON,] so far as he states that we have the power under the statute of 1852, still, I believe that it is not acting in good faith upon the part of the Congress of the United States to take this step at this time. I concede, upon reading the proviso just read by the gentleman from Ohio, that there is no propriety, no good faith, in the action by the Congress of the United States upon this subject at this time, and for this reason: The contractors with the Government have built four steamers, at a cost of not less than $750,000 each. They have expended an amount, therefore, something like $3,000,000. There are other expenses attendant upon the running of those steamers to and fro between this country and European ports, which is not much less than $75,000 for each of the twenty-six trips annually made. Upon the investment of this large capital in this business, they had a right to ask that the Congress of the United States should not intervene in the provisions of that contract until the time fixed by the statute had actually arrived. They had the right to put a construction upon that statute, which was the most favorable to them. A reasonable construction upon their part would be, that it should not be a mooted question in Congress, before the 31st of December, 1854, and having invested so much capital, the proprietors would seem to have a right to insist upon this construction of the proviso, that Congress could not in good faith terminate or make a proposition to terminate this arrangement until after the expiration of the term fixed by the statute.

I think that we ought not to act upon this question at this time; and, inasmuch as there are other propositions before Congress, coming from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, from the special committee, as indicated by the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. MACS,] I think that we should have a full opportunity to debate the matter. I hope, therefore, the proposition to sever the connection of the Government with the line of steamers will not be pressed at this time. It has been said that they have not complied with the terms of the contract, which required the building of five steamers. Suppose the statement may be correct in point of fact. The object the Government of the United States had in view, in aiding the Collins line was, doubtless, to obtain a certain number of trips between Great Britain and the Atlantic ports, and to transport the mails at certain regular periods. When this enterprise was undertaken, we were in the dark as to what could be done. Then the time of passage between the United States and Great Britain was twelve and fourteen days. It has been greatly reduced, until it now requires but a few hours more than nine days. Four ships may, therefore, do the work originally contemplated by the contractors for five. And, in point of fact, I understand that the contract provides for the number of ships designated, if the Government shall demand them. This has not been done, and of course, upon this statement, there has been no failure on the part of the contractors. It was an object, in order to secure regularity, that there should be one steamer constantly in port and ready for immediate service. During the time when long passages were made, it might naturally have been supposed that the larger number of vessels would be required. As speed acquired, and the time diminished, there was less need of the largest number to accomplish the full number of trips, and Government made no call for the fifth steamer. The full service has been performed, and this shows no failure on the part of the contractors.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BANKS then withdrew his amendment.

Mr. WALBRIDGE. I renew Mr. BANKS's amendment.

[The committee here rose informally, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, a message was received from the Senate, by ASBURY DICKINS, Esq., its Secretary, notifying the House that the Senate had passed, without amendment, bills and a joint resolution of the House, of the following titles:

An act for the relief of William G. Smith;
An act for the settlement of the claims of W. P. Buckner and Pierce Crosby, passed midshipmen in the United States Navy;

An act authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to pay John Charles Frémont for beef furnished the California Indians; and Joint resolution giving one hundred and sixty acres of land to Francis M. George, of Indiana.]

Mr. WALBRIDGE. I do not design to trespass on the indulgence of the House, having addressed the committee to-day before. I will only state that I sent to the Chair a correspondence between the Postmaster General and Mr. Collins. I have read it myself, and I believe it will throw some light on the subject.

The correspondence was read by the Clerk, as follows:

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT, January 24, 1854.

SIR: Please state whether you employ more than four ships, viz: the Atlantic, Pacific, Arctic, and Baltic, for the service on your line between New York and Liverpool.

I am requested by the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means of the House of Representatives to inform him of the number employed.

I am, respectfully, your obedient servant,
JAMES CAMPBELL.

E. K. COLLINS, Esq.

NEW YORK, January 28, 1854.

SIR: With much pleasure do I reply to your letter of 24th, in answer to the inquiry as to the number of ships employed by us to carry the United States mails between this and Liverpool. As this information is especially desired for the honorable Committee of Ways and Means of the House of Representatives, I beg you will pardon me for communicating some facts in relation to the mail steamers.

After the law passed authorizing the Postmaster General to make contracts for transatlantic mail steamers, he advertised, for several months, for proposals for carrying the mails for five years, to which we made no offer, knowing, as we did, that we could not get capitalists to incur the great outlay for that term of service, which would be necessary to build suitable steamers for the twofold object of war and mail steamers, (the clause requiring that all mail steamers should be built suitable for war purposes, so that they might, at almost a moment's warning, be converted into war steamers, was inserted at my instance, after the bill had passed a second reading in the Senate.)

The Postmaster General reported to Congress that he had accepted the offer of Mr. Mills, and there we supposed was the finale of that service. Some time after, having business in Washington with the Treasury Department, I called to pay my respects to Mr. Hobbie, then the First Assistant Postmaster General, who had long known the importance I had considered the establishment of mail steamers. He expressed his astonishment at not having received from me a proposition to carry the mails. I gave him my reasons, as herein before stated; he replied that the Postmaster General would like to see me. I arranged with Mr. H. to call on him, which arrangement was complied with. After a somewhat lengthy interview, he desired me (as you will see on reference to my letters in the Department) to make a proposal to carry the mails between New York and Liverpool, and at some time to state, in writing, why Liverpool should be adopted as the terminus in Europe; (which letter is also in the Department.) Some time after my proposals were made, I called on the Postmaster General to know what the Government had concluded to do; his reply was "that, as he could not recommend any further special mail service, the Administration would have the naval war steamer bill (then before Congress for ten war steamers) reduced to half its number; and that our steamers would be considered as substituted for those taken from the bill." As soon as this was communicated to the chairman of the Naval Committee as the wish of the Administration, they readily assented to it; and, with some modifications, a bill was passed to build four war steamers, and to which there was an amendment authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to contract with us in conformity to our proposals to the Postmaster General.

When we proposed to carry the mails, we intended, in good faith, to perform that service, and whether we have or not, your Department must judge. When my proposition was first made, the average time of the steamers from Liverpool to Boston was fifteen days and six hours, equal to at least sixteen days to New York, and at that time I did not suppose that the service could be performed with less than five steamers, to insure the regular transmission of the mails, which is so essential to commerce and for revenue to the Government, nor could the service of twenty trips, as called for in the original contract, have been performed with less than five ships of two thousand tons each; but by our increased size and speed, we have not only been enabled to make our passages in the average time of a little over eleven days, (the cost of which over that of the time taken, as herein stated by the English steamers, is more than doubled,) but we are also enabled to make twenty-six instead of twenty voyages per annum, as at first contemplated.

As soon as it was known that our Government had contracted with us, no pains were spared in England to deride the idea that America could build ocean steamers, and never was British influence more exerted to defeat the interest of her great maritime rival, than in their endeavors to vanquish our line. Knowing that the English clamor, and to have the star spangled banner float untarnished, we must do more than England had done, and we believe that the world acknowledges the triumph of the seas to be still ours! After unceasing efforts of several months, (owing to the discredit which had been thrown on ocean steamers by those that had been built in this country,) it was with great difficulty that we got subscribed a little over a million of dollars; and although we advertised in almost every large city in our country for additional subscribers, before and after we got the increased pay for the service, not a single share was taken, notwithstanding every exertion to get new subscribers, in order to lessen the indebtedness of the company, which yet remains nearly one million and a half of dollars; but, fortunately, the original subscribers to the stock were men who had full as much regard for the pride of the nation as for their own interest; they left me untrammelled, with but one edict, which was, that "You must not make a failure, if you risk every dollar." Does history produce as much devotion to country's honor by any other men? I think not. As before remarked, it was necessary to do more than England had done; and, in so doing, we built four ships of much greater tonnage and power than our competitors, by which means we are enabled to perform the service with three ships, and have always a spare ship in port; but the cost of keeping that spare ship is nearly $150,000 per annum. The ships of our line are the Atlantic, Pacific, Arctic, and Baltic. We have at command the most essential part of the frame for the fifth ship, which the honorable, the late Secretary of the Navy, Graham, did not deem necessary to be built at present, remarking that we had better wait to see what improvements our rivals would make.

As many attempts have been made recently to throw discredit on ocean mail steamers for war purposes, I beg leave to state that the cost of ours was greatly enhanced to build them suitably for that purpose; and that all our plans were submitted to, and approved by, the Navy Department, and I am not aware that a similar course has been pursued by any other contractors or their assignees. I am at any time prepared to prove that, up to this time, the equal of our four steamers has not been built, for war or peace purposes, either in or out of the Navy; and it would afford me much pleasure to appear before the honorable the Committee of Ways and Means to convince them of what I have herein stated. Yours, respectfully,

EDWARD K. COLLINS.

TO HON. JAMES CAMPBELL,
Postmaster General, Washington, D. C.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I rise to oppose the amendment, which I believe is to strike out the words "have been able," and to insert the word "endeavor." I prefer the original phraseology, because it requires the withdrawal of the British steamers before the American steamers shall be withdrawn. As connected with that act, and pertinent to it, I desire to say a single word in reference to that subject. The remark has been made by a number of gentlemen, that these vessels are unfit for war purposes. I believe it is universally admitted, that these steamers are the safest steamers in the world, and that they are not only the safest, but that they are stronger and better built than any war vessels afloat. I have it from the lips of a distinguished officer of the Navy—one who has served his country in both a civil and military capacity—that these vessels are better fitted than any vessels afloat for the purposes of war. Commodore Perry told me that if he had his choice of vessels for war steamers, he would take one of these in preference to any other.

Now, sir, the objection made to the construction of the British steamers, and mentioned in a report of the admiralty upon that subject, rendering them, as the admiralty thought, unfit as vessels of war, was to the mode of construction of their bows and sterns; and those defects are entirely overcome, in the construction of the vessels of the Collins steamers. As a proof of the fact, that these vessels are the safest and strongest steamers afloat, and therefore susceptible, at a small expense, of being converted into war steamers, I will state a fact which I heard in New York, but from no authoritative source, and I mention it only to call to the attention of those who would be likely to know about it; and that was, that it was currently reported there that the Emperor of Russia, as also the Emperor of France, had both made application to the owners of the Collins line for the purchase of one or more of those vessels for war purposes, and that Mr. Collins declined upon the ground that they were vessels belonging to the United States; or, at least, that they were at the command of the United States for war purposes at any time they might be demanded; and that, therefore, it was not in his power to dispose of them. Now, sir, I do not know whether these statements are true or not; I mention them for the purpose of asking gentlemen who know whether they are so or not.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I suppose I cannot debate the amendment. But I rise for the purpose of modifying my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the amendment cannot be modified unless the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York to the amendment is disposed of.

Mr. CLINGMAN. But I may desire to modify my amendment by accepting the amendment of the gentleman from New York. At least I think I have the right to modify my amendment. Mr. WALBRIDGE, by unanimous consent, withdrew his amendment.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I now modify my amendment so that it will read:

Provided, further, That the President shall endeavor by treaty or otherwise, to induce the British Government to abandon in a similar manner the subsidy paid to the Cunard line, in which event the Postmaster General is instructed to take the necessary steps to get rid of the existing contracts with ocean mail steamers for the transportation of the mails.

I only desire to say that I desire that the President shall be instructed to induce the British Government, if possible, to abandon their contract with the Cunarders, and then we can, with a better conscience, abandon our system.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. This is a very interesting debate; but, like all good things, it must have a termination. I move that the committee rise, that I may move to suspend the rules for the purpose of terminating the five minute debate.

The question was taken; and the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio. I move to strike out of the proviso the words "in a similar manner."

It is a very difficult thing in a speech of five minutes to discuss as it should be discussed, so important a question as this. Gentlemen who were here a few years ago, when this appropriation was made for an increase of compensation to the Collins line, will recollect very well, no doubt, the exciting and interesting debate that then ensued. Well informed gentlemen from all parts of the country looked upon the competition between the British steamers of the Cunard line and the American steamers of what is called the Collins line, as a great national question. I recollect distinctly that a distinguished Senator from Texas stated, in a report to the Senate, that the people of the United States had paid the British Government, for postages charged by the Cunard line, $5,000,000. We had no competition or share of the postages between Europe and the United States prior to the establishment of this line. A postal arrangement was made by the United States and Great Britain, after which the Collins line was established, and now we receive about $790,000 per annum for transporting mails under this postal arrangement.

And here let me say to gentlemen of this committee, that the four ships of the Collins line, in point of tonnage, exceed seven of the Cunard line of steamers. The British Government sustained their line. The Collins line was established by the capital, not of Mr. Collins alone, but of men of capital and enterprise in the country, and they were to make about twenty trips a year. About $3,000,000 were expended by those gentlemen in this great enterprise. They found, in competition with the Cunard line, aided by the British Government, that it was a losing business, their stock at that time being worth only about fifty cents for the one dollar paid by them, and they appealed to Congress, as it was a national measure, for an increase of compensation, if they would increase their trips to twenty-six instead of twenty per annum, and Congress gave it to them. I think it would be a violation of good faith towards this company now to give them notice that their contract will terminate on the 31st of December next, as will be perceived from the reading of the proviso:

"Provided, that it shall be in the power of Congress at any time after the 31st day of December, 1854, to terminate the arrangement for the additional allowance herein provided for on giving six months' notice."

I think the motion of my colleague, the chairman of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, [Mr. OLDS,] to strike out all of the section from the eighth to the tenth line, is a proper one. Let us not legislate to-day, and next year reverse that legislation and violate our own contracts. You must adhere to your own propositions, or the enterprising men of the country will pay no attention to them. I say that these ships of the Collins line are among the very best in the world. Nay, I believe they are the very best in the world. I would take Commodore Perry's judgment about them in preference to that of half a dozen old fog officers who have not gone to sea for perhaps twenty years. Commodore Perry is a host in himself. When Washington was appointed commander-in-chief of the Army the second time, during the Presidency of John Adams, he was urged to accept that appointment by the President, because his very name, as Mr. A. said, was worth several armies. Commodore Perry's opinion about the strength and utility of these Collins steamers is worth a dozen of such men as are sent from their quarters at home to investigate the utility, strength, quality, and power of these steamships. And Perry says that these Collins steamers are suited for war purposes, and among the very best ships built. I have sailed across the ocean in one of them myself, and I have seen nothing abroad equal to them. I have heard hundreds of men in Europe expressing their admiration of them as the best ships on the face of the globe. And I believe that they are fit for many purposes of war.

I have not time to enlarge on this subject; but I will say, that the faith of the Government is pledged here. The faith of the Government is pledged to this company until after the 31st of December, 1854, when you may give the notice to discontinue the contract. My colleague on my right [Mr. OLDS] made a proper and honorable motion to strike out all the first section of the bill except that making the appropriation, and I hope it will be adopted by the committee.

I have referred to Commodore Perry's opinion in relation to these steamers, and I will send it to the Clerk's desk that it may be read.

The following extracts from a letter written by Commodore Perry to the Secretary of the Navy, were accordingly read:

"According to my calculations, the cost of the conversion of either the beforementioned vessels, exclusive of armaments, repair of machinery, &c., would not, or certainly ought not, to cost for each steamer over $20,000; and it could readily be done for this at any of our navy-yards. With respect to the description and weight of their respective armaments, I am clearly of the opinion that the first class steamers already named could easily carry four ten-inch Paixhan guns on pivots—two forward and two aft—of the weight of those in the Mississippi, and ten eight inch Paixhan guns on the sides; and this armament would not incommode the vessels, and the weight less than the ice, which is usually forty tons, and stowed away in one mass."

"In the general operations of a maritime war they could render good service, and especially would they be useful from their great speed as dispatch vessels, and for the transportation of troops, always capable of attack and defense, and of overhauling or escaping from an enemy."

"The Atlantic, Baltic, and Arctic, have all been built, inspected, and received by the Navy Department."

Mr. GIDDINGS. I shall not enter into any particulars in relation to the amount of this appropriation. I wish to say a word or two in answer to my colleague, [Mr. TAYLOR.] Mr. Chairman, the impolicy of attempting to follow foreign Governments in their extravagances of legislation, must be apparent to us all.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. Let me suggest to the gentleman from Ohio that we are making foreign Governments and foreign people follow us.

Mr. GIDDINGS. I understand the gentleman from Maine to say that we are making foreign Governments follow us. The whole argument in favor of this subsidy to the Collins line, urged at the commencement of this system, was, that the British Government had established and subsidized the Cunard line; and that, therefore, we, the American Congress, were bound to do the same thing. That it was necessary, in order to maintain our national glory, to keep up our reputation as the greatest people upon earth. And now what a spectacle are we presenting to the country and to the world! A proposition has been made here to-day not merely to legislate on the subject ourselves, to transact our own business, to control our own affairs, but to direct or request the President of the United States to interpose with the English Government, for the purpose of affecting the legislation of the British Parliament. Now, I am very willing to go to almost any length in legislation; I would not limit our power by any ordinary rules of jurisdiction; I would be willing to insist that we are really the greatest people upon earth. Indeed, I will even say, at this time, that I would object to the annexation of Great Britain. Then we might legislate for her without difficulty; but I doubt the propriety of attempting it now. I am not willing to direct the President to interfere with the legislation of any foreign Government.

gance; to ask a foreign Power to desist from its unwise legislation—saying if they will cease to be unwise and extravagant, we will then cease to follow out a system which is palpably wrong. We are sent here to legislate for ourselves, for our own country, not to correct the abuses of the British Parliament, nor to adopt the errors of foreign Governments; not to follow the example of foreign nations in their extravagance. Who did not see this state of facts at the time this subject was first hurried upon the consideration of Congress? The avenues to this House were soon crowded, and our Halls almost surrendered to the possession of lobby members, who were endeavoring to get us to establish lines of steamers to almost every port in the civilized world. If I recollect aright, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WENTWORTH] introduced a resolution to exclude them from the Hall, in order to allow members to get to and from their seats. Gentlemen who have served in Congress for a few years past must recollect these things. They succeeded. We yielded to their demands in part. We established several lines. We have tried the experiment; it has failed. I cannot say that I have been disappointed, but all must admit the principle to be wrong.

Let me say that, in my opinion, the only proper course is to let the carrying of these foreign mails be open to competition, so that all may have an equal chance for the service, and let the company whose bid is most advantageous to the Government have the contract. I do not look at the expense. It is not our province, nor is it consistent with the principles of the Government, to speculate in this matter, by bestowing favors upon certain individuals, nor by entering into partnerships with companies to build ships, and give them a monopoly, thereby discouraging other commercial men who cannot compete with the Government. I object to such a course. Though having generally very little sympathy with gentlemen over the way, yet, on this occasion, I thank them for discarding the idea of granting monopolies to individuals. It is opposed to the whole spirit of our republican institutions. Monopolies cannot exist in a pure Government. No Government can maintain its character for justice, if it grants monopolies of this description. The very favoritism shown to one is of itself a wrong to others. It is unjust to all others. If justice be virtue, let it be dealt out with an even hand to every man. Let each enjoy the same privilege, and none will complain.

I do not object to the character of those steamers; nor do I care whether they were suitable for war vessels or not. I would not have given one cent more to this company if they had furnished the best ships for war in the universe. We merely wanted the mails carried. The speed with which they were transported was a matter of consideration, but whether there were two or five Paixhan guns, or none at all, on board the ships, was a matter of perfect indifference with us. When the proposition to bestow this monopoly on the company was first brought forward, I regarded the plan for making the ships suitable for war steamers a sheer humbug, invented for the purpose of giving the prestige of war to the matter, to cover up the favoritism, and render it more acceptable to the people. I looked upon it, and supposed other gentlemen to regard it, an argument ad hominem, in order to induce us to vote for the main proposition. I do not believe there was a man who supposed we were to have war during the existence of this contract. No man expected it. No one had any more idea of such an event then than we have now. The whole truth is, this extravagant expenditure has been made for the purchase of national glory. To follow the example of England in her career of glory. Well, sir, the glory has departed—the money is gone—and the gentleman from North Carolina desires to pass a law directing the President to exert his best endeavors, with Her Britannic Majesty and her Parliament, not to lead us after any more such phantoms of glory. Now, sir, I would act as becomes an American Congress—as becomes American statesmen. I would act independent of British examples; independent of all monarchies. We profess to be a Democracy, a republican government, and to deal in plain matters of fact, and not in matters of show; in stern realities, and not in vain glory.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio, by unanimous consent then withdrew his amendment.

Mr. GOODE. I move to strike out the first line of the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio. Now, sir, I believe it to be competent for the House to give this notice. The language is express and emphatic that it shall be competent for Congress, after the 31st day of December next, to terminate this contract, and to put the parties in possession of the fact that we intend to do so. We are required to give them six months' notice. The terms of the proviso refer to the termination of the contract, and not to the notice. The object is to give the parties notice of the termination of the arrangement. The contract gives us the right to terminate it after the 31st of December, and the plain reason and intention of the proviso enables us to give the notice before that time.

But it is said that this contract ought not to be terminated because our faith is pledged. How? These men contract with us for twenty trips, at $19,250 a trip, and all that was pledged on the part of the Government was pledged then in that contract. What we have given them since on account of the twenty trips, is all a mere gratuity, and without one particle of consideration accruing to the Government. We put the contract at a certain sum, and they came forward here and induced us to increase the amount from $10,250 to $33,000 a trip, and that increase was made without consideration or equivalent, making in all $858,000 per year for these vessels, and for what? I call upon this House to say for what? Do we pay this $858,000 to this line because the service we receive from these vessels is sufficient to compensate us? Sir, the statement which has been made here in reference to the earnings of this line also include the earnings of the Cunard line. Our Postmaster General has given us the returns of the revenue received by these different lines of steamers, from which it appears that the net earnings of the Collins line of steamers are set down at $192,000 and a fraction.

And again, it has been stated that this Government has paid less to the Collins line than the British Government has paid the Cunard line. Now, sir, the British Government pay to the Cunarders £175,000 per annum, being less than $900,000, and require them to make fifty trips a year. Now, let us see which Government pay the most for the service rendered. The British Government pay less than $900,000 for fifty trips a year. The United States Government pay $858,000 for twenty-six trips, being about an equal sum for about half the service.

But, sir, I was astonished at the position and argument of my friend from North Carolina, [Mr. CLINGMAN.] He justifies the support of the Collins line, on the ground that before it was established the Cunard line, supported by the bounty of the British Government, were affecting injuriously American commerce and navigation. The private merchantmen of our country and the Collins line is brought forward and supported; to defend and protect the American merchantmen against this injurious action of the Cunarders. The gentleman finds American shipping interest assailed, in jeopardy, about to be driven from the seas, by the unequal and unfair competition of one line of ocean mail steamers, supported by the bounty of the British Government, and he proposes to relieve our shipping interest; to keep our flag flying on the seas, by incorporating another line of ocean mail steamers, to be supported by the bounty of the American Government! The Collins line, receiving from us a bounty of $858,000, brought forward to act in concert—actually to alternate—with the Cunard line, receiving a bounty of near $900,000 from England, and done for the safety and protection of the private merchantmen of our own country. American commerce unable to support the unequal competition of one line of ocean steamers, supported by the bounty of Government, subjected to the more unequal competition of two lines of ocean mail steamers, supported by the bounty of Government! and this, too, as a measure of relief!

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I rise to oppose the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia. I am opposed to it because I am opposed to anything which will have a tendency to terminate this contract at present. Formerly, as it has been said, the mails and passengers between this country and Europe were transported by means of sailing vessels, occupying thirty or forty days upon the voyage. At length it was demonstrated that the Atlantic could be crossed by steam; that our steam shuttles could ply between the United States and the other hemisphere. The Cunard line of steamers was established under the bounty of the British Government, to ply between Liverpool and Boston. The mails which had heretofore been carried by sailing vessels were transferred to these steamers, and the whole business of carrying the mails between the two continents was carried on by the Cunard—a British line of steamers—and the United States, the greatest maritime Power in the world, the greatest ship-building and ship-owning country in the world, had nothing to do with it. We submitted for a time, and allowed them to monopolize the whole business. It was not deemed to comport with our honor nor our dignity, to our position, nor the advantage of the country that it should be so; and in time a steamship company of our own was established. The steamers were constructed, and what was accomplished? The time now occupied in crossing the Atlantic from the points in Europe and America, instead of being, as it was before the Collins line commenced running, from fourteen to fifteen days, is only from nine to ten days. Time is money; and we have saved so much in hastening the transit of freight, the mails, and passengers from one continent to another. We have done this for the advantage of commerce. Everybody knows how advantageous it is that correspondence should be carried on in the shortest possible time, with the greatest celerity and certainty between important commercial points.

By the construction of these steamers we gained an important advantage. The people and the commerce of the country have gained by it. We have gained a thousand fold more than we have expended on it. The postage was then four times what it is now. That British monopoly would have continued to this day, and may be indefinitely, had there been no rivalry. In consequence of the competition the postage has been reduced by treaty to one half or one third what it was before, and the advantage has been felt by the whole country. By increasing the correspondence between Europe and America, and particularly the poorer classes who have emigrated to this land, and their friends at home, we have done great service to the country. We have, in cheapening postage to the million, saved more than we have expended. We have accomplished all these great results, and we find now, although we pay $800,000 and more each year, yet that we receive directly and indirectly, but really and truly, over $700,000 and lose only some $70,000 annually, and even this loss we may hope to overcome in a year or two.

Mr. GOODE, by unanimous consent, withdrew his amendment.

Mr. JAMES C. ALLEN. I move to strike out the first and second lines of the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I would inquire of the friends of the Collins line, if these ships be all that they are claimed to be, if they are superior to those of the Cunard line—and I do not pretend to deny it—how it happens that, while the two lines are alternating in the carrying of the mails between Europe and America, the proceeds of the Collins line amounted only to $150,000 for the last year, while those of the Cunard line amounted to $439,687?

Mr. WALBRIDGE. The reason of the difference is obvious: the Cunard line made double the number of trips.

Mr. ALLEN. But it turns out that their receipts from postage amount to three times those of the Collins line. I ask gentlemen why this is? I can explain it only on one principle, and that is that the Collins line instead of turning its attention to the mail interests of the country, has been looking to the carrying of passengers and freight between the two countries. I can explain it on no other principle. Look at the amount of mail matter sent from this country, and the amount received from Great Britain, and compare them. While one performs fifty trips, and the other twenty trips during the year, the former takes three times the mail matter that the latter does. So much for the advantage in point of vessels.

I call upon gentlemen again, I say, to explain why it is that the preference in the transmission of mail matter is given to the Collins line. I know it is said that Great Britain prefers to transport all her mail matter upon her own line. But that does not answer the other objection, that the amount of matter transported from this country to Great Britain by the Cunard line is more than double the amount transmitted by the Collins line.

I desire to make another remark in addition to what was said by the gentleman from Virginia, and it is this: That the proviso in the law giving us the power to terminate this contract with the Collins line after the 31st of December, relates to the termination of the contract, and not to giving notice. Since, then, we pay an exorbitant amount to the Collins line, and as we receive comparatively nothing, so far as the revenues of the Post Office Department are concerned, let us bring them back to the original contract, and let us hold them to it, until we can get rid of the whole concern.

Mr. HOUSTON. I do not propose to enter into a debate upon this proposition. My object is to see if I cannot induce the committee to come to a vote upon it. We have but very little time to act upon this matter. However much we may discuss this question here, the vote we take is hardly a test. Although I am in favor of the proviso being retained in the bill, with a view of getting a test vote upon it in the House by the yeas and nays, I would rather that it be stricken out. Let us go into the House and have a test vote upon this thing.

[Cries of "Agreed!" "Agreed!"]

The question was taken upon Mr. ALLEN's amendment; and it was rejected.

The question recurred upon Mr. CLINGMAN's amendment.

Mr. MACE. I offer the following amendment to strike out, from the seventh to the eighteenth lines inclusive, and insert:

That the Postmaster General be, and he is hereby, instructed to declare at an end all the ocean mail steamer service now in use, so soon as, in his opinion, the public interest will justify it; and he shall anticipate the ending of said contracts by advertising for the like ocean mail steamer service to the lowest and best bidder, so as not to obstruct the mail steamer service now employed.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the gentleman from Indiana seems to be an amendment to the original section, and not an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from North Carolina. [Mr. CLINGMAN.]

Mr. MACE. I offer it then as an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from North Carolina. I do hope that, as I have paid much attention to this matter of ocean mail steamers, the committee will hear me patiently; and all the regret that I have on this occasion is, that I have not a full hour, that I might lay before the committee, in full, the views that I entertain in reference to the ocean mail steamer service, not only between New York and Liverpool, but also in relation to the Sloo and Garay contracts, and the Aspinwall contract in the Pacific, from Panama to California and Oregon.

Sir, let the truth be told at once, that the Congress of the United States, from 1847 down to the present time, have been guilty of the most egregious blunders in relation to this whole business. In 1847, when the first contract was made for this mail steamer service, the general idea throughout the country in relation to it was, that it would have a tendency to build up the Navy of the United States. And when the bill was introduced authorizing the construction of four steam vessels, the question was taken, and—strange to say—not one single speech was made upon it except by a gentleman from Ohio. That was the cause of all the subsequent legislation of the same kind that we have had from that time to the present. Not only have we appropriated subsidies for the Collins line of steamers, but we have done the like for all the other ocean mail service of the country. The whole system is wrong. The Aspinwall line and the Sloo line show out the system in bold relief. More money has been appropriated for these lines in proportion to the amount received from postage than has been appropriated even to the Collins line. The whole system is wrong from beginning to end; and it is well for Congress to consider it now.

The point is this: these contracts have all had ten years to run from the period at which they were entered into. Five years of that time has expired, and we have appropriated more than five millions to the service without an adequate return. All these lines are on the same footing, and now the proposition which I offer is the only one which, I think, Congress ought to consider in relation to the matter—that is, to strike from the service every single one of these mail steamers, including the Collins line, including the Sloo line, including the Aspinwall line—and let all these contracts come back to Congress for readjustment.

Mr. OLDS. I am opposed to all these amendments except the motion made by myself; and my reason is this, that I cannot see you can accomplish anything by any of these other motions. The bill proposed by the Committee of Ways and Means makes the compensation to this line continue up to the 30th of June, 1856; and my motion is, that after the 31st of December, you give them the notice. There is no loss to the Government by delaying this matter, and you thereby obviate every difficulty. Before the 31st of December, take up the bill reported by the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, and then strike out all of these lines. Take them up together, and treat them all together. The terms of the proviso give six months beyond that time. I am, therefore, in favor of putting off the whole matter until the 31st of December, and then take up the bill on the Calendar, and strike down all the lines together.

The question was then taken upon Mr. MACE's amendment to the amendment; and it was not agreed to.

Mr. GOODE moved a pro forma amendment, and said:

I offer an amendment to enable me to reply to the gentleman from Ohio, in answer to his proposition to postpone this notice until the next session of Congress. Now, sir, his argument is, that we cannot give the notice until the 31st day of December next. On the 31st day of June one year of this contract terminates; and if we put off the matter until the next session, and until after the 31st of December, I fear we shall not be able to give the six months' notice to take effect on the 31st of June, as it is just six months from the 31st of December to the 31st of June, so that another year may commence to run under the contract, and we shall be in for another annual appropriation by adopting the suggestions of the gentleman from Ohio.

I am opposed to the amendment of the gentleman from North Carolina, for this reason: that he proposes to make this matter a subject of arrangement between the two Governments. Such a thing may be pending for ten years, and nobody can tell for how long a time. If you adopt his proposition, when we come here at the next session and undertake to provide for giving notice then, it will be an argument with the gentlemen who advocate this line, that it has become a matter of diplomatic arrangement, and that consequently it would be indecorous to the Executive and to the Court of St. James for Congress to undertake to give the notice. The support of this line causes a loss of $665,000 a year to the Treasury of the United States. I affirm that such is the amount of loss to the Government annually. We pay to this line $858,000 a year; and receive in return only $192,000, making a difference of $665,000, throwing off fractions—a dead loss to the Government every year. In reference to the whole system of ocean mail steamer service, the Government, in supporting it, sustains a dead loss of over a million and a half of dollars, and it can be demonstrated by the report of the Postmaster General himself. Is Congress prepared to carry on this system of bounties to companies and individuals, distributing annually among a favored few—perhaps a dozen men—$1,500,000?

Sir, I hate demagogism, and I hate demagogues; but I love truth; and it is the truth that we are taxing the people of this country at the rate of $1,500,000 a year in supporting these splendid mail steamers. The gentleman over the way from Ohio [Mr. TAYLOR] brings up the affirmation of Commodore Perry as an authority that these steamers are fit for war purposes. I affirm that I can bring more than a dozen authorities to support the proposition that they are unfit for, and cannot be adapted to, the purposes of war. Not one of the Collins line of steamers can possibly be appropriated to that purpose. They are good for nothing, in that respect, in comparison with the amount of money that has been expended upon them. This whole system is wrong and rotten. Throw open the trade and the business to the competition of all, advertise for contracts to carry your mails, as you advertise all other contracts. Let the mails be carried upon the ocean upon the same principle that they are carried on land, and give the contract to the lowest responsible bidder, and in so doing Congress will discharge its duty to the country.

Mr. DISNEY. When I voted to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union upon this bill this morning, I did it with the expectation that the debate or discussion would occupy but a very short time. Sir, there is not an old member upon this floor who has not heard this question of carrying the mail by ocean steamers discussed over and over again. There has not been an idea advanced upon this subject to-day that has not been reiterated—I was going to say a thousand times; but it has been said over and over again, and no new light can possibly be shed upon the subject. I have no doubt that the members upon this floor have generally, if not universally, made up their minds upon the questions before the committee, and I appeal to the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means to stop this debate, and bring the House to a vote upon this bill.

The amendment to the amendment was not agreed to.

The question was then taken upon Mr. CLINGMAN's amendment; and it was not agreed to.

The question then recurred upon the original amendment, offered by Mr. OLDS.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio, demanded tellers upon the amendment.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. PARKER and RIDDLE were appointed.

The question was taken; and the tellers reported—ayes 70, noes 72.

So the amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. HAVEN. I move to amend by striking out the word "forthwith," and inserting in lieu of it the words "immediately after the 31st day of December, 1854;" so that notice, instead of being given forthwith, should not be given until after the above mentioned time. I shall not argue the amendment.

Mr. GOODE. I rise to a question of order. That question has been expressly decided by the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that the proposition of the gentleman from New York is to strike out the word "forthwith," and it is, therefore, a different question from the one just disposed of.

Mr. HOUSTON. I rise to a question of order. The committee having refused to strike out these lines, it is not in order now to move to strike them out and insert anything else, or to strike out any portion of them. The matter which the committee has refused to strike out is not now amendable.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that a proposition to strike out does not preclude a proposition to strike out and substitute something else.

Mr. HAVEN. I desire to make this remark. I listened to the remarks of the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. GOODE,] and I doubt not that he honestly entertains the opinions he put forth; but, in my judgment, strictly, technically, accurately, and legally speaking, as a question of law, this notice cannot be properly given until the 31st day of December has expired. The language of the proviso is—

"That it shall be in the power of Congress at any time after the 31st day of December, 1854, to terminate the arrangement for the additional allowance herein provided for on giving six months' notice."

Suppose you transpose it, and say that upon giving six months after the 31st of December, 1854, you may terminate the agreement. The notice must be given, and must commence at that time, for the purpose of terminating it. I do not desire to argue the point, but I desire to submit it to the committee, as my opinion, that you might as well give notice in reference to any other transaction, and by that means hasten the performance of an agreement which is provided for at a different time, and under different circumstances.

Mr. HOUSTON. I differ with the gentleman from New York as to the effect of that proviso in the law of 1852. The time mentioned is for the termination of this extra allowance. There is nothing in the law that says we shall postpone the time of giving notice. We may give notice whenever we see fit to do so. We might have given notice the very day after this bill was signed, that we would terminate this contract at the expiration of six months after the 31st of December, 1854. The time mentioned in the law has reference directly to the time the contract expires? If, however, the Executive Department of the Government should construe the law as the gentleman from New York does, there would then be no harm done, for they would give the notice for the 31st of December.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio, demanded tellers upon Mr. HAVEN's amendment.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. CAMPBELL and McMULLIN were appointed.

The question was then taken; and the tellers reported—ayes 82, noes 61.

So Mr. HAVEN's amendment was adopted.

[The committee here informally rose, and the House received a message from the President of the United States, by SIDNEY WEBSTER, his Private Secretary, informing the House that he had signed sundry bills of the House.]

The committee then resumed its session.

Mr. HOUSTON. I am instructed by the Committee of Ways and Means to offer the following amendment, to come in at the twenty-fourth line. It is to carry out existing contracts:

For carrying out the contract entered into by the Post Office Department under an "Act to provide for a tri-monthly mail from New Orleans to Vera Cruz, by way of Tampico and back by steam vessels," approved August 30, 1854, $54,700.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. OLDS. I offer an amendment, to come in immediately after the amendment, just adopted.

The Clerk commenced to read the amendment; but was interrupted by Mr. HOUSTON, who said: That is a proposition to enter into a new contract. It proposes an appropriation for an object not authorized by law.

Mr. OLDS. It does not make any appropriation at all.

Mr. HOUSTON. Whether it does or not, it proposes to authorize the Department to enter into a new contract, and such an amendment is not in order upon this bill.

Mr. ORR. If it does not make an appropriation, it certainly ought not to be in the bill.

Mr. LETCHER. If the Chair decides the amendment in order, I take an appeal.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will first hear the entire amendment read.

The amendment was reported, as follows:

Provided, That the Postmaster General be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to contract with the Tehuantepec company for the transportation of the United States mails, in weekly trips from Mobile or New Orleans to San Francisco, via Tehuantepec, for the term of four years, at a compensation of $750,000 per annum, the service to commence upon the completion of the plank road now being constructed across the isthmus of Tehuantepec, said service to be performed within fourteen days each way.

Mr. HOUSTON. Now, sir, my point of order, in the first place, is, that there is no law authorizing the appropriation, if the amendment makes an appropriation; and whether it does or not, it certainly proposes legislation which cannot legitimately be made in an appropriation bill. I think the amendment is clearly out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will inquire of the gentleman from Ohio whether the amendment is in pursuance of existing law?

Mr. OLDS. My opposition to the point of order raised by the gentleman from Alabama is, that the amendment makes no appropriation, and contains no provision except one which may legitimately come into an appropriation bill. The bill contains the annual appropriation for a semi-monthly mail between the Atlantic and Pacific coasts. My amendment proposes to direct the Postmaster General to contract for a weekly mail.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the amendment is not in order, unless in pursuance of preexisting law. The Chair decides it to be out of order.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I have an amendment to offer, which I think will be in order. I move the following proviso:

Provided, That the Postmaster General be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to contract with the lowest responsible bidder, for a weekly transportation of the California mails, by such route as in his judgment shall best combine the advantages of celerity, certainty, and economy—the compensation for such service in no event to exceed that now paid for the transportation of a semi-monthly mail.

Mr. HOUSTON. I raise the same point of order with reference to this amendment as to that just offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. STANTON. I simply desire to say, that this bill provides for the transportation of a semi-monthly mail between the Atlantic and Pacific coasts, for which it makes an appropriation of over seven hundred and twenty thousand dollars. Now, my amendment proposes that the Postmaster General shall contract with the lowest bidder for a semi-weekly service, by which we shall get a weekly instead of a semi-monthly service for the same amount.

Mr. PECKHAM. It is not the same service. Mr. HOUSTON. This bill is confined strictly in its provisions to existing contracts made in pursuance of law. There is no appropriation made in the bill that is not to carry out such contracts. The gentleman's amendment stands on an entirely different footing. There is no law authorizing the provisions of the gentleman's amendment, but it proposes to enact a new one.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is informed that the gentleman's amendment is based upon an existing law, but that it proposes to change existing laws. He therefore rules it to be out of order.

Mr. HOUSTON. I am instructed by the Committee of Ways and Means to move to strike out "$85,314," and in lieu thereof to insert "$120,000," so that the paragraph will read:

For the transportation of the mails across the isthmus of Panama, $120,000.

The amendment is necessary, because on that route the transportation of mail matter is paid for by the pound, and the increasing size of the mail requires this increase of appropriation.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PENNINGTON. I move to add, as an additional section, the following:

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That the arrangements now subsisting for the transportation of the mails from New York to New Orleans, Charleston, Savannah, Havana, and Chagres, and back; and from Panama to California and Oregon, and back; and from Charleston and Havana, and back; be terminated as soon as, in the opinion of the Postmaster General, it may be done consistently with the public interest; and that the Postmaster General shall give notice of such termination accordingly: Provided, That, in the opinion of the Postmaster General, with the concurrence of the Secretary of the Navy and the Attorney General of the United States, the same may be done without violation of any contract now lawfully binding on the United States.

Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to debate the amendment at much length. The committee are impatient to dispose of the bill, and I shall content myself with a statement of a few facts bearing upon the questions involved in the proposition which I submit.

Mr. HOUSTON. I did not perfectly hear the reading of the amendment, but I do not think that it is in order. I think that it is a change of existing law in reference to those lines. The bill proposes to effectuate the contracts, to carry them out, and thus proposing to terminate these contracts, and being a change of the law, is therefore out of order.

Mr. ORR. In reply to the gentleman from Alabama, I would suggest that the existing law in reference to some of these lines provides for this very notice being given.

Mr. HOUSTON. The existing law in relation to the Collins line provides for notice being given; but I believe that is the only case.

Mr. ORR. But the law allows the Government to take the vessels of the other lines, whenever it sees fit, and before the termination of the contract.

Mr. HOUSTON. The Government has a right to do that without any legislation. The amendment proposes to rescind contracts.

Mr. WALSH. Is the question debatable?

The CHAIRMAN. It is not.

Mr. WALSH. Then I ask the Chair to enforce the rules equally on all.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair doubts whether the amendment is in order; but, under the circumstances, he entertains it.

Mr. PENNINGTON. Mr. Chairman, it will be seen by the committee that the amendment contemplates the possibility of terminating the arrangements now subsisting for the transportation of the mails on the connecting lines between the Atlantic and Pacific coasts, and on the isolated line between Charleston and Havana; for all which appropriations are made by the bill. The mail service on these connecting lines is now performed under two distinct arrangements; one for the line between New York and Chagres, or Aspinwall, at the rate of $290,000 per annum, and the other for the line between Panama and California and Oregon, at the rate of $348,250 per annum, the transportation across the Isthmus of Panama being paid for by weight at twenty-two cents per pound, for which an appropriation of $120,000 is proposed by the bill as already amended; and all constituting together one continued and connecting chain from New York to California and Oregon. The sum total of these three appropriations, making up the cost of these lines for what may be called the Pacific mail service, is $758,250. These figures are shown by the bill.

Now, sir, what is the service performed by these lines for this great outlay; and what does the Government realize from it for its reimbursement? The service, as all know, affords us only a semi-monthly mail between the Atlantic and Pacific; and the accounts of the Post Office Department show that the net revenue from it, including inland, sea, and foreign postages, is only $271,242 63. Upon this, the most favorable basis of calculation for these lines, it appears incontestably that we are maintaining this service at the cost of $487,007 35 over and above all that is in any way realized from it. Nor is this all. This calculation credits the lines, as I have already said, with the inland, sea, and foreign postages, and makes no deduction for the commissions of postmasters and other incidental expenses. If the proper deductions are made on these accounts, we shall have a result showing the disbursement of an amount largely exceeding half a million of dollars beyond the net revenue derived from the service. And besides this, it is equally certain that no inconsiderable part of the postages received from these lines is diverted from other existing post routes, equally, if not more, expeditious, between New York, New Orleans, Charleston, Savannah, and elsewhere, on the Atlantic side. We have no means of ascertaining accurately what sum ought to be deducted on this account, but it cannot fail to strike the committee that the Government is maintaining these lines at an enormous expense beyond the revenue it derives from them.

As I have already said, the arrangements now subsisting secure only a semi-monthly mail; and we all know that a proposition has frequently been made, and importunately urged upon us by the representatives from California, to provide a weekly instead of a semi-monthly service, at an additional cost of $250,000; and thus to increase the expense to an amount exceeding $750,000 over and above the income derived from the arrangements. Now, sir, while I cheerfully concede that it is highly important to afford such a facility of intercommunication between the two oceans, and while I am not disposed to insist that it shall be wholly self-sustaining, but am willing to afford it at any reasonable, and even with a liberal, expenditure of the public money beyond what may be realized from it, I am not prepared to make so extravagant a draft on the national Treasury to sustain it. And yet I cannot conceal from myself the imminent probability that even this immense burden will be cast upon the Government, if no practicable and rightful means can be devised to extricate it from the existing entanglements, and to secure the facility at a less cost.

The other line referred to in the amendment is that between Charleston and Havana. For this line the bill proposes, in accordance with the present arrangement, an appropriation of $50,000. The accounts of the Post Office Department show that the entire revenue from this line is only $7,945 63, including inland postage; showing an expense to the Government in maintaining this line of $42,044 37 over and above its receipts from the same source. If from this we make a fair deduction for inland postages, postmasters' commissions, and other incidental expenses, we shall find the expense to the Government greatly increased. But this is not all. This line is wholly superfluous, so far as I am able to discover. The New York and Chagres line is required to touch at Charleston, (if practicable,) and at all events at Savannah, New Orleans, and Havana; and if there be any necessity for the separate line between Charleston and Havana, the committee ought to know it.

If it be alleged that it is impracticable for the New York and Chagres line to touch at Charleston, and this be conceded, it cannot be said as to Savannah, New Orleans, or Havana. The Charleston mails may, therefore, readily be taken to Savannah or New Orleans, and thence to Havana, just as the mails of other parts of the southern States are distributed from the same points, and just as the mails from Boston, Newark, and other northern cities, are taken from New York. It is manifest, then, as it seems to me, that the appropriation for this line is wholly indefensible, and is a charge upon the public Treasury for the aid of those interests of the commerce of Charleston which are almost, if not exclusively, aside from the postal interests of the General Government connected with that city.

I do not wish to be understood as objecting to the making of postal arrangements with reference to the facilities which they may incidentally afford to the great interests of commerce, foreign and domestic, of the whole, or of any portion, of our common country; and I trust I am, and ever shall be, incapable of any narrow or merely sectional view of any great national question. On the contrary, I would gladly afford such incidental facilities by liberal appropriations, with direct reference to that object; for this would be in accordance with that generous and beneficent policy which, in my judgment, ought to characterize the legislation of this great and growing Republic. But, sir, while I would do this, I would make no postal arrangement as a mere cover for aid to a local commerce in which no great national or general public interest is involved.

Entertaining these views, Mr. Chairman, I have felt it to be my duty, especially as a member of the select committee on the steamship mail service, to propose the amendment now before the committee. I offer it with no design that any facility demanded by the public interests, and proper to be afforded by the Government, shall be withheld. I desire rather that greater facilities shall be afforded; and I would make a way to accomplish this end, as I believe may be done in regard to the lines embraced by the amendments, with greatly diminished demands upon the public Treasury. This has been an object of desire with Congress, not less than with the Post Office Department, for several years. By an act of the last Congress the Postmaster General was directed to inquire and report to this Congress for what sums these services could be procured, in case new contracts should be made. This inquiry was made, and the Postmaster General, in his annual report, states that he has an offer for a semi-monthly mail service between the Atlantic and the Pacific for $300,000 per annum, including the Isthmus transportation, which now costs $120,000, nearly half of the whole sum! This would save the Government $458,250 annually.

The Postmaster General further states that the same service can be increased to a weekly mail for a pro rata allowance; in other words, for an annual allowance of $600,000. This would furnish a weekly mail for an aggregate compensation less by $158,250 per annum than is now paid for a semi-monthly mail, and less by $408,250 per annum than it would cost under the existing arrangements with the increased service compensated for at the rate of $250,000 per annum, as proposed by the bill introduced and pressed upon us here so earnestly by the California members. The advantages of such an arrangement over that now existing are too patent to need a further exposition. The postal facility, increased from a semi-monthly to a weekly service, at an expense for the latter of scarcely more than one half of that now paid for the former, with the incidental and not less important facility of more frequent intercommunication for passengers and freight, are considerations which press heavily for a change in the present order of things, if such change may rightfully be effected.

The only question that remains to be considered is, whether this change may rightfully be effected by the sole act of the Government? My own impression is that it may. I have not time now to enter into an examination of the facts upon which that impression is founded. Nor is it necessary to do so for the purposes of this amendment. They will be found, for the most part, embodied in the report of the select committee on the steamship mail service, recently made, in the several acts of Congress, from March 3, 1845, to this time, relating to this service, and in Executive Document No. 91, Thirty-Second Congress, first session, referred to in the report of the select committee.

If the amendment proposed that Congress should itself now declare absolutely that these arrangements shall be terminated, a full development of facts sufficient to justify such action should be clearly in the possession of Congress; and if I were now suggesting such a proceeding, I should feel it to be incumbent on me to be prepared, and to take the time necessary to present to the committee the most unequivocal grounds for such a measure, and the most ample materials for forming a judgment upon the proposition; for no gentleman on this floor can entertain more scrupulous or conservative views than myself in regard to the obligation and inviolability of contracts. But such is not the tenor of my amendment. It proposes no hasty nor harsh proceeding; but contemplating these arrangements as subsisting, and presupposing a willingness on the part of those with whom they exist to go on with them, (as doubtless is the fact from the very great profit which is understood to attend them,) it is designed to authorize the Postmaster General to put an end to them whenever he shall be able to make more satisfactory and advantageous arrangements for the same service.

It speaks of subsisting arrangements. It does not recognize them as contracts, nor does it declare that they are not such. The question as to whether the contracts originally made for these lines are still binding is left open and untouched, and to the end that the Government shall not be involved by the act of the Postmaster General, whether wilfully or inadvertently, (if such a supposition may be entertained,) in the violation of a contract to which it may have pledged its faith, and which has been fulfilled in good faith towards the Government, and that the Government shall not, through the Postmaster General, repudiate any obligation lawfully binding upon it however onerous, it expressly inhibits him from intervening in the matter, unless he, in concurrence with the Secretary of the Navy, with whose Department the contracts out of which these arrangements have grown were originally made, and the Attorney General of the United States, as the chief law officer, shall be of opinion that the arrangements may be terminated in good faith, and in that case to do so, if the public interests shall so require.

Now, sir, I am unable to see any reasonable objection to this course of action. I presume that if the arrangements contemplated by the amendment can be superseded by others greatly more advantageous to the Government, without a violation of its pledged faith, no gentleman of the committee will think it consistent with that public economy, which should ever be regarded as among the cardinal principles of the Government, to withhold his support from the amendment.

I have sought by the amendment to provide the most ample protection to those with whom these arrangements now exist against injustice, and I have been the more particular in that respect, because of the conviction which my short experience here has forced upon me, that a large proportion of the class of private claimants who are forced to prosecute their demands before Congress, subjected to the law's delay, and to that hope deferred which maketh the heart sick, have the profoundest provocation, if not good cause, to curse the Government of their allegiance.

If, indeed, I could suppose that those to whom the amendment proposes to intrust the duty and responsibility contemplated by it, would abuse a trust at once so delicate and important, involving not only the honor of the Government and their own, but the interests of all the parties concerned in the arrangements, I should withhold the proposition, preferring that the Government should suffer rather than that private individuals should be made the victims of the injustice of a powerful Government, against which they can have no legal redress, and only the chance of tardy justice from Congress.

I think it wiser to repose this trust where the amendment proposes to place it, than that Congress should act definitively upon the subject. I have bestowed some care upon it, and have a very decided impression upon my mind in regard to it; but I frankly confess that I should be reluctant to declare these arrangements absolutely terminated, or to say by my vote here that they may be terminated lawfully and rightfully by the sole act of the Government, however much I desire it as a measure of retrenchment. Under all the circumstances, therefore, I prefer the course indicated by the amendment. Something ought to be done to reduce this enormous expenditure, if possible, consistently with the rights of the parties and the duties of the Government. I hope the amendment may be adopted, and that it may prove to be the incipient means of the desired reform.

Mr. WALBRIDGE. Mr. Chairman, I respond, with alacrity, to any measure that shall have for its object the multiplication of our mail facilities with California; but that question is not now immediately involved in this discussion. The action of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PENNINGTON] would, it seems to me, strike at existing contracts, where the faith of the Government has been already pledged, and where private individuals have thus been induced to invest a vast amount of capital in the public service. On the 3d of March, 1847, Congress directed the Secretary of the Navy to contract, on the part of the Government, for the transportation of the mail from Panama to such port as he may select in the Territory of Oregon. The United States were then engaged in war with Mexico. The service was remote and difficult, and the inducements limited, except as they might be presented by the Government. The Secretary of the Navy, in obedience to the authority of Congress, pursued the course usually adopted by the Postmaster General in making contracts for carrying the ordinary inland mails, and issued proposals, by publication, and invited the fullest competition. These proposals were published, for months, in the large cities, where capital would most probably be induced to make the investment, and engage in the service. A contract was finally awarded to Major Harris, an influential resident of this city, and by him assigned to the Messrs. Aspinwall, wealthy and influential merchants of the city of New York. By the terms of the contract, the Secretary of the Navy reserved to Congress the right to abrogate and annul, or to ratify and confirm his action, as will be seen by the following extract from his annual report of that year:

"The great distance at which the service is to be performed, the heavy expenses which must be incurred by the contractors on the Pacific coast, the necessary shops and materials for repair, the indispensable fuel and depot for coal, induce me to adopt the term of ten years as the duration of this contract, which has been adopted by the Post Office Department for its foreign mail contracts. But to guard myself against the reproach of exceeding the authority which it was the intention of Congress to confer, a clause is inserted in the contract, reserving to Congress the right to annul the contract, at its approaching session, if it shall be deemed proper or expedient to do so."

Such was the condition of this contract when Congress assembled in the session of 1847 and 1848. The authority had been reserved by the cautious Secretary to give Congress complete control over what he had done, if they should exercise the power then. Congress affirmed and sanctioned his contract. Yes, sir, they did more. They realized the magnitude of the investment necessary to carry out, in all its provisions, this contract, and they generously stepped forward and advanced the necessary funds from the Treasury, without interest, to enable the contractors to finish the steamships designed for the service, provided the contractor should deliver and take the mails at certain other ports on the Pacific. Congress then not only approved, but they amended and ratified the terms of the contract. That this action of Congress was final, and the contractors became vested with certain rights, and among them the duration of the term of the contract, is clearly deducible from the subsequent action of the Government. California had become an integral portion of the United States. Her golden lands had attracted thither the enterprising and ambitious from every section of the Union. It was palpable that a mighty empire was to arise upon the Pacific, augmenting our trade, increasing the demand for our manufactures, multiplying our commerce, and adding to the strength and greatness of the Republic. It was desirable to increase the mail facilities between her and the older States, the increase of population in California had rendered this indispensable. Congress undertook to provide for this necessity, and during the session of 1850-'51 it was enacted:

"That the Secretary of the Navy, and the Postmaster General, be authorized, by and with the consent of the contracting parties respectively, to rearrange the running of the United States mail steamships, so as to afford more direct dispatch between the ports of the United States and the Isthmus of Panama." And the Postmaster General was also directed to make the service from Panama to California and Oregon conform with the service required by the existing contract on the Atlantic side of the Isthmus, by increasing the trips of the Pacific line to semi-monthly."

The Administration under which the original contract was formed had gone out of power, another had come in, yet no change was sought to be effected that should abrogate the contract; for in the supplemental contract, providing for an increase in the number of trips, it provided for payment "beginning on the commencement of said service, and ending on the last day of September, 1858, being the termination of said contract."

Sir, the faith of the Government was thus solemnly pledged for the period of ten years. In the mean time, circumstances have materially changed the condition of our affairs. Our interests on the Pacific have multiplied and augmented in a ratio unprecedented in any previous period of our history. California has augmented the value of every species of property throughout the Union. Yes, sir, she has raised the price of labor throughout all civilized States. It is due to her and to ourselves that we multiply and increase the facilities between her and us. I shall be ever ready, by my action here, to do so whenever it can be effected; but where the faith of the Government has been pledged, where individuals have acted upon that faith, where they have invested large means, while we are seeking to promote the public good, let it not be accomplished by an utter disregard of the rights of others. Fidelity to contracts is the loftiest obligation recognized in nations or individuals. If this service is no longer desired, let us first comply with our contract; and if it is to be abrogated, let us liquidate the damages, and leave no imputation that we have acted in punic faith with those who have entered into covenants with us.

Mr. BARRY. I move to amend the amendment as follows:

Insert in it "the Collins line from New York to Liverpool, and the line from New York, via Southampton, to Bremen."

In proposing to discontinue other lines, Mr. Chairman, I do not see why all the mail lines existing between this country and Europe should not be included. I do not see why the Collins line to Liverpool, and the Bremen and Southampton line, should be left out of the arrangement. The amendment before the committee, which I propose to amend, leaves out the Collins line and the Bremen and Southampton line; and it seems to me that if we are to indulge in extravagant appropriations for ocean mail service, they ought to be for service between different points of our own country; for the benefit of the country at large. They should be to secure full, free, and speedy communication between different parts of the Union, instead of being squandered on a few lines connecting one or two commercial points with other portions of the world. The Bremen and Southampton line makes just as many trips as the Collins line. The two lines run semi-monthly. They make two trips a month each way; and yet you only give the Bremen and Southampton line something over $350,000, while to the Collins line, making the same number of trips, you give $875,000, or thereabouts. While we propose to discontinue this enormous monopoly to the Collins line, I am in favor of no discrimination for other lines. The pay of the line between New York and California, as shown by previous discussion, is enormous, and it ought to be cut down. And so with all the lines, if shown that their profits are enormous, they ought to be reduced. Put them all upon the same footing. Give the power and authority to examine into them all, and if the mails can be carried cheaper, give the Government the benefit of it. I trust the gentleman will accept my amendment; and if he does not, that the committee will vote it in.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I am opposed to the gentleman's amendment, but I do not propose to discuss it.

The question being on Mr. BARRY's amendment,

Mr. WHEELER called for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. SOLLERS and AIREN were appointed.

The question was taken; and the tellers reported—ayes 85, noes 47.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I move to amend the amendment, by adding at the end the following words:

And that the transportation of the mails upon this line be let to the lowest bidder.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The question then recurred upon Mr. PENNINGTON's amendment as amended.

Mr. HUNT. I move to insert the words "after public advertisement" before the words "to the lowest bidder," in the amendment, as now amended.

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. MACE. I move to add the words:

That all our mail steamship contracts be at once terminated.

Mr. HOUSTON. I rise to a question of order on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair decides that the amendment is not in order.

Mr. BARRY. I move to amend by inserting the following:

Collins line from New York to Liverpool, and from New York, via Southampton, to Bremen.

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. MACE. I move to strike out the word "Chagres."

Mr. HOUSTON. That word has just been inserted, and the amendment is not in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The word having just been inserted in the bill, the Chair decides that the amendment is not in order.

Mr. MACE. I move to add the words, "so soon as it comports with the public interest."

The CHAIRMAN. These words are already in the amendment.

Mr. MACE. I move to insert "1856." Mr. Chairman, I observe a great deal of anxiety on the part of the committee to pass over this matter in rather a hurried manner. It will be recollected that, at an early day of this session, a committee was raised for the purpose of inquiring into everything connected with appropriations for the mail steamship service. It was raised for the purpose of inquiring into the legality of the payments which have been made in regard to this service. For seven Mondays in succession I endeavored to enlarge the powers of this committee, but at every point I was met with objection under the rules of this House.

Mr. BRIDGES. I ask the Chair whether the gentleman from Indiana is in order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair cannot decide the point of order raised by the gentleman from Pennsylvania until the gentleman from Indiana shall have proceeded far enough in his remarks to determine whether he is out of order.

Mr. MACE. After I had failed in the most humiliating manner to accomplish my object, I did succeed in getting a clerk for twenty days for the purpose of aiding the committee in making a report within the purview of the resolution which had been adopted by the House. I appeal to every gentleman upon the committee, and there were eight besides myself, if I have not been prompt in my attendance upon the meetings of that committee, if I have not advised with them, and if I have not at all times been anxious to apply a remedy to the great evil which has existed in this Government for the last five years in reference to our ocean mail steamers? Under these circumstances, then, I will not submit to be told by members of this House—I know from what quarter the statement comes—that the committee have made a white-washing report in reference to this case; and I pronounce here, that any man who charges that I have been guilty of any dereliction of duty in reference to this whole matter, is a liar and a scoundrel.

[Loud cries of "Order!" "Order!"]

Mr. SEWARD. I have stated that the gentleman from Indiana, in his first remarks made here upon this subject, said that this contract was fraudulent, and that he was able to show it. I have said since, without seeing the report, that I had understood that the effect of it was to relieve these companies of all the charges made against them, and that it was a white-washing report; and I wish the gentleman to understand that I am responsible for what I say out of doors.

Mr. MACE. I will state to the gentleman from Georgia—

[Cries of "Order!" "Order!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana must confine his remarks to the amendment he has offered.

Mr. MACE. I say to the gentleman from Georgia, and I appeal to every man here who knows anything about it, whether, in the investigation of this matter, we have not traveled over the whole ground?

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. SEWARD. I did not mean to impeach the motives of the gentleman from Indiana. I merely stated that he had made charges against this company, and that I had understood from the report made since he had relieved that company from the charges he had made against them.

Mr. HAVEN. I oppose the amendment under consideration, for the purpose of keeping the floor for a few moments; but what I desire to say is in reference to the general amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey, [Mr. PENNINGTON.]

I hardly know, Mr. Chairman, what would be wise on the part of this committee in reference to that general amendment now. Here are the various lines of steamers, named in that amendment, engaged in the transportation of our mails, under a kind of system, so to speak, that we have been maturing, year after year, for half a dozen years past. Contracts have been awarded to and made with the lowest bidders; and it seems to be understood by all the gentlemen here they have yet four, and, in some cases, five years to run.

The question now submitted by this general amendment is, shall we place these contracts, and the contractors for these various lines, in the hands and under the absolute and arbitrary control of the Postmaster General and the Attorney General? Shall these contractors, who have several millions of dollars invested in ships and steamers, on the faith of this Government, and under its valid and binding contracts, be placed in the absolute power of the officers named in the amendment, without the right of trial by a jury, or by the courts of the country, and without any right of appeal whatever?

As I understand the amendment—but I am not quite sure I heard it aright—we are to place it in the power of these officers to lay violent, if not profane hands upon these contracts, and to declare they shall be ended and broken on our part, right or wrong, and that we will be no longer bound by them. Sir, we have the power to do this; we may make such an enactment that cannot, I suppose, be denied; but can any man justify the expediency, the propriety, the good faith, or rather the utter destitution of all faith of such a proceeding on our part, and that, too, in the very face of the report of the committee, of which my friend from Indiana [Mr. MACE] was chairman, fully exculpating these companies, and the men who compose them, from all wrong, fraud, or violation of these contracts on their part? Can it be possible that gentlemen of this committee, who profess to respect the rights of property, as well as of the persons of our citizens, can so openly authorize them to be violated, and without giving the parties in interest the benefit of a trial before the ordinary tribunals of the country, and without making the least provision for payment of damages, for our unlawful termination of our solemn contracts and plighted faith? These contracts were made after advertisement, and with the most advantageous bidder after full competition.

Sir, would it not better comport with the honor, nay more, with the honesty of this Government, that it should keep these contracts on its part, and live up to them so long as they are faithfully observed and kept by the contractors? In my opinion, no Government but a republican one could long survive such shameless disregard and violation of plighted faith and private rights. It is true, the compensation, as things are turning out in these cases, may be large; the contracts were made some time ago, and things have changed; but, nevertheless, they are our engagements, and we would not let the contractors off with so little ceremony, if things had turned out differently. If these contracts are to be violated on our part, and violently terminated without cause, let us say so here and now; but if they are only to be avoided by us on the ground the contractors have violated them, let us give the contractors the benefit of a trial before the ordinary legal tribunals of the country. The Constitution secures the right of trial by jury in all suits at common law where the value in controversy shall exceed twenty dollars; and that would be a prudent and safe guide in cases like this. How incongruous to intrust this matter with political executive officers. These officers will not thank us, I am sure, for letting all these contending and immense steam interests loose upon them at once. I doubt whether they will regard it as an acceptable service.

Mr. WALSH. I rise to a question of order. I insist that the gentleman is not speaking to the amendment before the House.

Mr. HAVEN. I did not hear distinctly what the amendment was.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment is that submitted by the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. MACE,] which is to prevent the operation of the section from taking effect till 1856.

Mr. HAVEN. Very well; then I submit that the remarks I have made apply properly to the time between this and 1856, and also to the time between 1856 and the expiration of these contracts, and that makes them in order, I believe. [Laughter.] Of course, sir, I would not go on out of order. It seems to me what I have been saying is pertinent to this whole case, in whatever aspect it may be viewed. I hardly know what I ought to say more. These gentlemen—men of great enterprise—have millions of money invested in these operations; and your special committee, armed with power to send for persons and papers, and administer oaths, report to us in substance they can find nothing on which they can put their hand giving color to any suspicion, neglect, or disregard of public interest on the part of these contractors.

It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, in fact, it is my very decided opinion, that after this kind of legislation, capitalists, business men, will be very cautious how they undertake to deal with a Government of so questionable a faith, and that will lay violent hands in this way on its own solemn promises.

I do not intend to, and will not urge or solicit this committee to act in one way or the other. I only desire that they reflect, before acting finally. My own judgment tells me that, in good faith and fair dealing, if we made a bargain in 1848 or 1850, which was then a good bargain, we had better live by it as long as the other parties to it keep it honorably. I would not enter into these bargains now, if it were an open question. But they are bargains binding upon all, except, perhaps, those who, by their votes here, can exercise a kind of irresponsible power in the premises.

Mr. ORR. Will the gentleman from New York permit me to make a remark?

Mr. HAVEN. Certainly.

Mr. ORR. I do not understand the section as proposing to abrogate this contract, if such abrogation would be in violation of existing law. It proposes to refer the matter for decision to the Secretary of the Navy, the Attorney General, and Postmaster General.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Will the gentleman from New York permit me—

Mr. HAVEN. Not now. One at a time. Let me first answer the suggestion of the gentleman from South Carolina, [Mr. ORR.]

If we now propose to abrogate this contract, the question as to whether or not the contractors have faithfully kept and performed them, is a question of fact for a jury of the country to determine, or for the adjudication of the courts. It belongs to them by the Constitution of the country, and it ought not to be taken from the common tribunals of the country and transferred to those officers who hold their appointment for other purposes entirely.

I will now hear the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. PHILLIPS.]

Mr. PHILLIPS. I will state this to the gentleman from New York, that this House, by a unanimous vote, could not pass a law authorizing the contract to be violated.

Mr. HAVEN. Very well, sir.

Mr. PHILLIPS. And this provision, which is inserted here, is to authorize the officers mentioned in it—the Attorney General, the Postmaster General, and the Secretary of the Navy—to exercise the right which has been secured by law; which is, by notification, to put an end to the contract; but the period at which that contract is to be ended is a question of law depending on the terms of the contract; and the unanimous vote of every member of the House could not pass a law authorizing this contract to be violated.

Mr. HAVEN. Mr. Chairman, my friend from Alabama [Mr. PHILLIPS] seems to me, to concur very nearly in my views. True, we cannot rightfully, lawfully, or in good morals, violate our contracts, and disregard our plighted faith; but suppose wrongfully, and in bad morals, we pass a law for that purpose, I ask my friend what, and where, is the remedy of the party aggrieved. He cannot sue the Government; its sovereignty is not liable to answer to a citizen's suit in court. His only remedy is by petition for redress to us—to the very power that has wantonly damaged him. What relief could he expect from so faithless a tribunal? But further: I ask my friend the difference between our passing a law to violate these contracts directly, and on our own responsibility, and passing one depriving the contractors of their right of trial by the legal institutions of the country, and placing them at the mercy of irresponsible political Executive officers? For whilst these contractors cannot sue the Government, the Government can sue them, and so try the questions between them by a court and jury.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The question was then taken on Mr. MACE's amendment; and it was not agreed to.

Mr. PHILLIPS. I move to amend the amendment by adding "the Secretary of War." In the first place, the matter of putting an end to the contracts is a mere question of policy with the Government, not predicated on any charge of mismanagement, fraud, or corruption on the part of the employees of the Government. It is a question whether it is policy for us to put an end to the contracts, without regard to the question whether they are well or ill managed. Now, as to the power on the part of this House to put an end to the contracts, that is a question which is in the contracts themselves; and if we cannot in a given time put an end to the contracts, because they stipulate for another time, I repeat that the whole power of this House is incompetent to change it, and to take away from the humblest citizen in this country the right vested in him by the contract made with any department of the Government.

But the gentleman from New York [Mr. HAVEN] says again that you would deprive the party of the benefit of the tribunal of the courts of the country. My answer to that is, that you can no more deprive him of a right to resort to the legal tribunals of the country, if he has such a right now, than you can of his rights under the contract. And if the Secretary of the Navy, the Attorney General, the President, and all the Cabinet, were to decide that under this contract they had the right to put it to an end on a given day, it would not impair the rights of the party under the contract, or deprive him of the right, if he thinks it incorrectly decided, of appealing to the supreme tribunal of the land, the courts of the country. It is perfectly clear to my mind that we have not the power to do it; and it is not proposed to do it by the amendment which has been offered. So far from proposing to violate the contract, and taking the matter out of the tribunals, it proposes to leave the matter in the hands of the parties to the contract. The Government decides for itself that it has the right to put an end to the contract in a certain time. The other party are satisfied that this Government have not the right to put an end to the contract. None of their rights are forfeited by the action of the Government. They have the right to appeal to the tribunals, which have been organized by the Constitution of the United States for their protection.

Mr. CHANDLER. Not having thus far participated in this debate, I rise to make a very few remarks in opposition to the amendment of the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. PHILLIPS. I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. CHANDLER. I have no amendment to offer, but I object to the amendment being withdrawn until I have said what I have to say in reference to the subject to which it relates. I wish simply to say, that at times this House has acted with a total disregard of contracts. I thought the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. PHILLIPS] seemed to be willing to vote upon this as a proposition that was in violation of the plighted faith of the nation. But now he tells us that whatever amendments this House or Congress may adopt, the owners of these lines of steamers have their remedies in the courts; that the tribunals established by the Constitution will protect them in their rights. Why, sir, does not the gentleman from Alabama know—does not every gentleman upon this floor know, that the best plea any man could make against the law would be nolo contendere. No men would undertake to enter into a contest before the tribunals of the country with the Government of the United States which has nothing which it fears to lose.

Mr. PECKHAM. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania will allow me to interrupt him, I would like to ask the gentleman from Alabama who is going to give these prosecutors the right to prosecute in the courts? Who are to be the defendants? Does the gentleman suppose that any persons can sue against the Government of the United States? Is not the disposal by the Government of the United States, of any contract, perfect and absolute? Talk about suing this Government! You can do no such thing.

Mr. CHANDLER. That is all very evident, and it is the point to which my remarks are tending. Sir, pass this amendment, and all that you would do would be to divest certain persons of the power of demanding what the Government had contracted to pay. Should they present themselves before the Department for redress, the Government would be armed with an act of Congress which forbids them to pay it. When they come here and ask for the money we have contracted to pay them, Congress may set them at defiance, and wear them out with delay, pleading against them for pay that their claim is too large, and then entering the plea that the claim is too old. This Government is continually putting itself upon its sovereignty towards the people, seldom manifesting its justice, which is the attribute of real sovereignty; and it is continually putting the people upon their faces as petitioners for their rights, instead of coming here to assert them. The best step that could be taken—and the motion which I would make, if I were in a position to do it—would be to move to strike out the enacting clause of the bill, let it be reported to the House, and sent back to the committee which reported it, with instructions to make it a bill of appropriations, as it ought to be.

[Voices: "That's right; make the motion."]

The chairman of this committee has ruled every amendment which has been offered here today, for the purpose of making new appropriations—and with great justice and propriety, I have no doubt—as out of order. But, although not one word has been said against it, I am sure he will concur with me that those which have been adopted, and some of the provisions of this bill, should have been ruled out of order as not germane to a bill simply to provide ways and means to pay for certain contracts. That should be the effect of the bill, instead of attempting to enlarge contracts, make new contracts, and violate existing contracts, as we have been trying to do from beginning to end.

Mr. PHILLIPS, by unanimous consent, withdrew his amendment.

The question recurred on Mr. PENNINGTON's amendment, as amended.

Mr. PENNINGTON. I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. SOLLERS and CAMPBELL were appointed.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to, the tellers having reported—ayes 82, noes 42.

Mr. BRIDGES. I move that the committee do now rise, and report the bill to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

So the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the chairman (Mr. ENGLISH) reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had the Union generally under consideration, and particularly a bill "making appropriations for the transportation of the United States mail, by ocean steamers and otherwise, during the fiscal year ending the 30th of June, 1855," and had directed him to report the same back with sundry amendments.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I move the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered to be put.

The amendments reported from the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union were then taken up and acted on.

First amendment:

In ninth and tenth lines strike out the word "forthwith," and insert the following: "immediately after the 31st of December, 1854."

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I wish to inquire of the Chair if it is in order to have a separate vote? I ask for a division of the question upon the first section.

The SPEAKER. It would not be in order.

Mr. WASHBURN. I understand by the 53d rule that it is in order to ask for a division of the question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine cannot make the division as proposed by him.

Mr. WASHBURN. I ask for the reading of the 53d rule.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman from Maine designs to take an appeal from the decision of the Chair, the Clerk will read the 53d rule, so that the House may act understandingly upon the matter.

Mr. WASHBURN. I do take an appeal most respectfully from the decision of the Chair.

The 53d rule was then read, as follows:

"Any member may call for the division of a question which shall be divided, if it comprehend propositions in substance so distinct, that one being taken away a substantive proposition shall remain for the decision of the House. A motion to strike out and insert shall be deemed indivisible, but a motion to strike out being lost, shall preclude neither amendment nor a motion to strike out and insert."

Mr. WASHBURN. I ask that the proposition may be read, that it may appear where the substantive proposition was left.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman desire a separate vote upon parts of the amendment that has been read?

Mr. WASHBURN. Upon parts of the bill. Upon so much of the bill as is contained from the ninth line to the eighteenth, inclusive.

The SPEAKER. Does not the gentleman from Maine remember that the previous question is operating, which cuts off all amendments?

Mr. WASHBURN. I do not offer an amendment. I ask simply a separate vote.

The SPEAKER. The Chair decides that no such separate vote can be had under the rules.

Mr. ORR. The original matter is not now before the House, but the question is upon an amendment.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. The proposition of the gentleman from Maine is simply equivalent to a motion to amend the bill. It is clearly out of order.

The question was then taken on the appeal, and the decision of the Chair was sustained.

The question was then taken upon the amendment, and it was agreed to.

Second amendment:

For carrying out the contract entered into by the Post Office Department, under an "Act to provide for a tri-monthly mail from New Orleans to Vera Cruz, by way of Tampico and back by steam vessels," approved August 30th, 1854, §54,700.

The amendment was agreed to.

Third amendment:

On page three, after the word "Panama," in the nineteenth line, strike out "$85,314," and insert in lieu thereof "$120,000."

The clause, as amended, will read:

For transportation of the mails across the Isthmus of Panama, $120,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Fourth amendment:

Add the following additional section to the bill:

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That the arrangements now subsisting for the transportation of the mails from New York to Liverpool, from New York, via Southampton, to Bremen; from New York, via Cowes, to Havre, and back; from New York to New Orleans, to Charleston, Savannah and back; from Panama to California and Oregon, and back; and from Charleston to Havana, and back, be terminated as soon as, in the opinion of the Postmaster General, it may be done consistently with the public interests; and that the Postmaster General shall give notice of such termination accordingly: Provided, That, in the opinion of the Postmaster General, with the concurrence of the Secretary of the Navy, and the Attorney General of the United States, the same may be done without the violation of any contract now lawfully binding on the United States; and that the transportation of the mails on these lines be let to the lowest responsible bidder, after previous advertisement.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

The bill was then passed.

Mr. ORR moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table; which latter motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS.

Mr. GREEN, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported as correctly enrolled the following bills; which thereupon received the signature of the Speaker:

House bill (No. 474) "authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to pay John Charles Fremont for beef furnished the California Indians; and

An act for the relief of Captain Lewis E. Simonds.

TEXAS CREDITORS.

Mr. ORR. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to take up from the Speaker's table Senate bill No. 96, being a bill adjusting the debts of the Texas creditors.

Mr. WALSH. I object.

Mr. ORR. Then I move that the rules be suspended, for the purpose of taking up the bill indicated by me.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. CAMPBELL. I rise to a privileged question. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The Chair saw the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] addressing the Chair simultaneously with the gentleman from South Carolina, [Mr. ORR.]

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. With due deference to the Speaker, I assert that I rose to my feet and addressed the Chair before the gentleman from South Carolina.

[Loud cries of "Order!" "Order!"]

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I wish to remark—

The SPEAKER, (interrupting.) The gentleman from Indiana brings distinctly before the body a charge of partiality on the part of the Speaker.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I did not pretend to charge the Speaker with partiality.

The SPEAKER. Then why address the Chair on that point?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I wished to call the attention of the Chair and of the House to the motive which I had in rising to address the Chair when I first did. It was this: My object was to call for the yeas and nays on the passage of the mail steamer bill. It was for that purpose I rose to my feet.

The SPEAKER. The Chair can only say to the gentleman from Indiana, that he did not know he had risen and addressed the Chair at all in that connection.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I made the effort to have the yeas and nays with all my might.

The SPEAKER. The Chair reiterates that he did not hear the gentleman from Indiana at all.

The question was taken on Mr. CAMPBELL's motion to adjourn; and it was agreed to.

The House thereupon, (at ten minutes before four o'clock, p. m.) adjourned till Monday at eleven o'clock, a. m.

IN SENATE.

Monday, July 31, 1854.

Prayer by Rev. HENRY SLICER.

On motion by Mr. COOPER, the reading of the Journal was dispensed with.

EXECUTIVE BUSINESS.

Mr. MASON. I move to postpone all prior orders, with a view to go into Executive session; and on that motion I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. COOPER. Will my friend from Virginia allow me to have a resolution passed for the printing of the report of Professor Espy. It will give rise to no debate. If it does, I will withdraw it.

Mr. MASON. If my motion can be considered as before the Senate, I will, of course, give way to any of the ordinary morning business; not otherwise.

PROFESSOR ESPY'S REPORT.

The PRESIDENT. Then the resolution of the Senator from Pennsylvania will be received.

It was read, as follows:

Resolved, That there be printed for the use of the Senate three thousand copies of the fourth meteorological report of Professor Espy; and that the printing and binding be executed in the same manner as the printing and binding of the third report.

Mr. COOPER. This is the same number that was printed heretofore.

Mr. ADAMS. I think the rules require that such resolutions shall go to the Committee on Printing.

The PRESIDENT. The resolution must go to that committee.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Mr. SUMNER presented the petition of Elijah D. Brigham, praying permission to change the name of the brig Glamorgan to that of Wizard; and that a new register may be issued for her under that name; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. WELLER presented the memorial of John C. McFarren and Samuel D. Sturgis, officers of the Army, praying compensation for services rendered by them respectively in grades higher than that to which they belong; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

REPORTS FROM STANDING COMMITTEES.

Mr. ADAMS, from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, to whom was referred the memorial of James Thompson, and the administrator of C. M. Strader, reported a joint resolution for the settlement of the claim of the late firm of C. M. Strader & Co., mail contractors; which was read, and passed to a second reading.

Mr. SHIELDS, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom were referred the following bills and joint resolutions from the House of Representatives, reported them back without amendment:

A bill for the relief David C. Cash and Giles U. Ellis;

A bill for the relief of William Hankins;

A bill for the relief of Lieutenant George H. Paige, of the United States Navy;

A bill authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to settle the accounts of Thomas Jordan, assistant quartermaster in the United States Army;

A joint resolution for the relief of Brevet Captain J. H. Lendrum, United States Army; and

A joint resolution for the settlement of the claim of Don Juan Jesus Vigil, of New Mexico.

Mr. ALLEN, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill for the relief of John S. King, of Virginia, reported it back without amendment.

COMMITTEE ON ENROLLED BILLS.

On motion by Mr. JONES, of Iowa, that an additional member be appointed on the Committee on Enrolled Bills, and that the appointment be made by the President pro tempore; in accordance therewith Mr. Thomson, of New Jersey, was appointed.

BOMBARDMENT OF SAN JUAN.

A message was received from the President of the United States, by Mr. WEBSTER, his Secretary, transmitting, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate of the 23d instant, reports from the Secretaries of State, and of the Navy, in relation to the bombardment and burning of San Juan de Nicaragua, together with sundry documents respecting the same; which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message was received from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McKEAN, Chief Clerk, announcing that the Speaker had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolutions:

An act for the relief of the legal representatives of Major Caleb Swan, deceased;

An act to authorize the payment of invalid pensions to the heirs of Lieutenant Robert White and others;

An act for the relief of the heirs and representatives of Colonel Alexander G. Morgan;

An act for the purchase of the copyright of a work published by Thomas H. Sumner, wherein he describes his new method of ascertaining a ship's position at sea;

An act to provide compensation for the services of George Morell in adjusting titles to land in Michigan;

An act for the relief of Sylvester Pettibone;

An act for the relief of Levi Pierce, and Andrew Hodge, jr;

An act for the relief of Henry La Reintrie;

An act for the relief of Dr. S. R. Addison, passed assistant surgeon in the United States Navy;

An act for the relief of Jean Baptiste Beaubien;

An act for the relief of William Darby;

An act for the relief of Urban Stoll;

An act for the relief of Asa Andrews;

An act for the relief of Jonas P. Levy and José Maria Jarrero;

An act for the relief of Captain Charles G. Merchant;

An act for the relief of William Brown;

An act for the relief of Gaston T. Raoul;

An act for the relief Phineas M. Nightingale, administrator of the estate of General Nathaniel Greene, deceased;

An act for the relief of A. G. Penn;

An act for the settlement of the claims of W. P. Buckner and Pierce Crosby, passed midshipmen in the United States Navy;

An act for the relief of William G. Smith;

An act to revive the act approved March 3, 1823, and the act approved May 26, 1824, supplemental thereto, in reference to the Rio Hondo claims to land in Louisiana;

Joint resolution giving one hundred and sixty acres of land to Francis M. Gwin, of Indiana; and Joint resolution for the relief of John A. Bryan. The above named bills were subsequently signed by the President pro tempore.

CHARLES GORDON.

Mr. FOOT. I am directed by the Committee on Public Lands to report the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be directed to pay to Charles Gordon, out of the contingent fund of the Senate, the sum of $1,500, it being for his services as draughtsman for the Senate from March 3, 1839, to January 1, 1840.

Mr. President, I think a simple statement of facts will suffice to satisfy the Senate that this resolution should be passed. Mr. Gordon had been employed, under resolutions of the Senate, as draughtsman to the Committee on Public Lands for several years. On the last day of a session, the 3d March, 1839, those resolutions were repealed at the last hour of that session, and without consideration. The result would be, that the work upon which his labor had for years been bestowed, would be left in an incomplete condition. There were nine maps of States, containing the public lands, which were then in an incomplete state. The Committee on Public Lands, to remedy this, directed Mr. Gordon to proceed with the work, and complete these maps. Mr. Walker, of Mississippi, being then chairman of that committee, gave him assurance that Congress would make him compensation. Under this assurance and direction, Mr. Gordon proceeded with the work and completed those maps, and delivered them to the Senate, to the satisfaction of the Committee on Public Lands. He was engaged in that work from the 3d of March, 1839, to the 1st of January, 1840. Mr. Walker has himself certified the fact of his employment, and the correctness of Mr. Gordon's statements in his memorial, and that this amount ought to be paid. Fifteen hundred dollars is at the rate of compensation which had been paid him for such services for seven years preceding, during which he had been engaged in this work; that is, at the rate of $1,800 per annum. I report this resolution, for payment of those services, by direction of the Committee on Public Lands, and I ask that it be considered now.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I desire to inquire of the Senator from Vermont whether this gentleman's case is not pending before one of the standing committees of this body.

Mr. FOOT. This case has been pending before the Committee on Public Lands, and that committee have directed me to make this report.

Mr. ADAMS. I have no doubt it is all right; but still, I think such propositions should be considered as others, and therefore I object to the present consideration of this resolution.

The PRESIDENT. Then it must lie over for one day, under the rules.

COMMITTEE CLERKS.

Mr. EVANS. I move to take up the resolution which I submitted some days ago in reference to the payment of clerks to committees. I suppose it will lead to no debate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate accordingly proceeded to consider the following resolution:

Resolved, That the clerks of the committees of the Senate be paid from the day of their appointment, except those who were on duty from the beginning of the session.

Mr. PETTIT. The amendment, which was made in reference to the payment of committee clerks, to the resolutions relative to the compensation of the officers and employees of the Senate, was made on my motion. That amendment was that the committee clerks should be paid from the commencement of the session. I offered it knowingly and designedly. I did not know, however, that there were some of the clerks who had been appointed recently. I supposed they had all been appointed within a month or two, at any rate, of the commencement of the session. The reason I had in desiring that they should be paid from the commencement was this: A number of committees hesitated at first about asking for the employment of a clerk, and in those cases the business of the committee had accumulated, and had not been done; and when the clerk came in a month or two months later than the commencement of the session, he found all the business of the committee to do. He found it piled up on his hands, for Senators could not find time to attend to it.

For this reason, I thought it was right that such clerks should be paid from the commencement of the session; but seeing that some have been appointed very recently, I do not think that provision will operate entirely fair. I think, however, that those clerks who were not employed later than two months after the commencement of the session, ought to be paid from the first day of the session, for the reason I have stated, that they were compelled to do all the business of the session as much as if they had been at work all the time. I therefore move to amend the resolution so as to provide that those who were appointed before the 1st of February, shall draw their pay from the beginning of the session.

Mr. EVANS. On the 19th of January, at the instance of some one, I suppose the Senator from Indiana, the Senate agreed to this resolution:

Resolved, That such of the clerks of the standing committees of the Senate as have been on duty from the first day of this session be paid therefrom.

The resolution that I submit does not conflict with this. Mine is, that those in actual employment from the first of the session shall be paid from that time. The resolution giving the committees the right to employ clerks was proposed on the 15th of December; but there were many clerks, those who had been the clerks to former committees, who were here and attended under the expectation and promise that they should be reappointed from the beginning of the session, and those ought to be paid from that time. This resolution provides for them. It allows those who served from the commencement of the session to be paid from that time.

Now, the correct principle is, that a man should be paid for his labor. Those who were not here at first, and did not come for two months after the commencement of the session, ought not to be paid from the beginning; for, at most, it is true that but very few of them have much to do. The committees meet, on an average, once a week; and the clerk has the remainder of the time to arrange the papers. So far as I know anything about the committees, it does not take very long to arrange the papers and make out such statements as I have seen. I think, therefore, the true principle is, that each man should be paid for the labor he performs, and for nothing else. This resolution is intended to cover that principle. If the gentleman's clerk was on duty from the first of the session, he will be entitled to be paid, and, in fact, I believe he has been paid from the beginning of the session. Such is my information.

Mr. MASON. I submit to the Senators that they allow the vote to be taken at once; otherwise I shall be obliged to interpose and ask for the vote on my motion.

Mr. EVANS. I have nothing more to say.

Mr. PETTIT. I will allow the vote to be taken in a few minutes. So far as some of the committees are concerned, I do not know how much labor the clerks may have, but I think every member of the Committee on Private Land Claims will bear me witness that we have had for our clerk a most onerous and burdensome service, and that he has performed his labors efficiently and ably. I know that every member of that committee will bear witness to this. It is true he did not commence with us at the beginning of the session; he commenced some time in January; but it is equally true that he found the major part of the business untouched, and that he was compelled to go into the investigation of cases which had been referred to us at the beginning of the session. I do not wish to make invidious comparisons, but I will say that that committee required there should be a lawyer of capacity to investigate legal questions. Such a clerk I found; and I do him no more than justice when I say he ought to be paid from the commencement of the session. If the other committee clerks have labored as he has labored, and with the intelligence and capacity he has, they ought to be paid for that extra time. I know some have been employed only a month or two, and ought not to be paid from the commencement of the session. Our files will show the number of cases which have been examined and reported upon by the Committee on Private Land Claims; and I presume they are no more than from any other committee, but they show the faithfulness of our clerk.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I will not detain the Senate for a minute, but I desire to call their attention to the fact that, at the close of the last session, it was distinctly understood that no extra compensation would be given to the employees of the Senate. These clerks were employed at four dollars a day. The Senate, by a resolution since that time, have agreed to give them five dollars a day, and twenty per cent. upon that, which amounts to six dollars a day. Not content with that, they desire to go back and receive compensation before their services commenced. I think it is time to put a stop to it. When you make a contract with clerks, why not require them to abide by it, as we abide by our contract to take eight dollars a day? I saw no propriety in giving the increased pay which we have already agreed to give; and I can see still less propriety in paying for services never rendered. If we pay them six dollars a day from the time they commenced their services, I think it is enough, and I can see no propriety in paying them for the time when they were at home or here seeking employment. I hope the amendment of the Senator from Indiana will not be adopted, and that the resolution, as offered by the Senator from South Carolina may be agreed to.

The amendment was rejected; and the resolution was adopted.

POST ROUTES.

Mr. RUSK. The Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads have directed me to report a bill "to establish certain additional post roads." It is to provide for three or four post routes, which are not in the general bill, and I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to consider it at this time.

There being no objection, the bill was read twice by its title, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Secretary was about to read the bill through. Mr. RUSK, (interposing.) There is no use in reading the bill through. It is simply to provide for three or four post routes which were omitted in the general bill, as I have already said.

There being no objection, the reading of the bill was dispensed with.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. With the consent of the Senator from Texas, I move to amend the bill by adding the following post route in Iowa:

From Fort Madison, by West Point and Big Mound, to Keosauqua, in Iowa.

The amendment was agreed to; and the bill was reported to the Senate, as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read a third time, and passed.

RATES OF POSTAGE.

Mr. RUSK. The Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, to whom was referred the bill from the House of Representatives, further to amend the act entitled "An act to reduce and modify the rates of postage in the United States, and for other purposes, passed March 3, 1851," have instructed me to report it back with amendments.

It is an important bill, and must go to the House to-day or to-morrow, or it may fail altogether. It is designed to operate upon the revenues of the Department, and I hope it will be considered at once.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded, as in Committee of the Whole, to consider the bill.

The first amendment of the committee was a verbal one, to strike out "on" and insert "in."

The next amendment was to insert after the provision requiring all letters to be prepaid, the following:

Except upon letters and packages addressed to officers of the Government on official business, which shall be so marked upon the envelope.

The next amendment was to strike out "such prepayment shall be by stamps," and insert "the Postmaster General may require postmasters to place post office stamps upon all prepaid letters upon which such stamps may not have been placed by the writers."

The next amendment was in the second section to strike out of the provision making it a penal offense for any person to seal stamps or stamped envelopes for more than their value, the words:

"For any larger sum than that indicated upon the face of such stamp or stamped envelope," and insert in lieu thereof, "for any larger sum than that charged therefor by the Post Office Department."

The amendments of the committee were agreed to.

Mr. BRIGHT called for the reading of the bill as amended, and it was accordingly read.

It proposes to fix the following scale of postages:

For every single letter in manuscript, or paper of any kind in which information shall be asked for or communicated in writing, or by marks or signs, conveyed in the mail for any distance between places in the United States not exceeding three thousand miles, three cents; and for any distance exceeding three thousand miles, ten cents.

For every such letter or paper when conveyed wholly or in part by sea, and to or from a foreign country, for any distance not exceeding three thousand miles, the ocean postage shall be five cents; and for any distance exceeding three thousand miles, such ocean postage shall be ten cents, (excepting, however, all cases where such postages have been, or shall be, adjusted at different rates by postal treaty or convention already concluded or hereafter to be made.)

For a double letter there shall be charged double the rates specified; and for a treble letter, treble those rates; and for a quadruple letter, quadruple those rates; and every letter or parcel not exceeding half an ounce in weight shall be deemed a single letter; and every additional weight of half an ounce, or additional weight of less than half an ounce, shall be charged with an additional single postage; and upon all letters passing through or in the mail of the United States, excepting such as are from a foreign country, the postages as above specified shall be prepaid, except upon letters and packages addressed to officers of the Government on official business, which shall be so marked on the envelope. And from and after the 1st day of January, 1855, the Postmaster General may require postmasters to place post office stamps upon all prepaid letters upon which such stamps may not have been placed by the writer.

And all drop-letters, or letters placed in any post office not for transmission through the mail, but for delivery only, shall be charged with postage at the rate of one cent each; and all letters which shall hereafter be advertised as remaining over, or uncalled for, in any post office, shall be charged with one cent each, in addition to the regular postage; both to be accounted for as other postages now are.

It also provides that it shall not be lawful for any postmaster or other person to sell any postage stamps or stamped envelopes for any larger sum than that charged therefor by the Post Office Department; and any person who shall violate this provision shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction, shall be fined in any sum not less than ten, nor more than five hundred dollars. The act is to take effect and be in force from and after the commencement of the next fiscal quarter after its passage.

Mr. BRIGHT. I dislike very much to object to anything proposed by the honorable Senator from Texas, and particularly in a matter about which he seems to feel so much interest as about this; but I am not at all satisfied as to the provisions of this bill.

Mr. RUSK. Then I move to postpone its further consideration until to-morrow morning.

The motion was agreed to.

WILLIAM WOODBURY.

Mr. SUMNER. I am directed by the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the joint resolution from the House of Representatives "directing the accounting officers of the Treasury to adjust the accounts of William Woodbury, late pension agent at Portland, in Maine," to report it back without amendment, and to ask that it be put at once upon its passage. I will say that it is recommended by the Commissioner of Pensions; and the Senator from Maine, [Mr. HAMLIN,] who is now out of his seat, has it particularly at heart that it should be passed at this session. I ask, therefore, that it be acted on at once. It will occupy no time.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded, as in Committee of the Whole, to consider the joint resolution.

It is designed to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to adjust the accounts of William Woodbury, late pension agent, and credit him with the entire amount paid to the heirs of Keziah Hartshorne, deceased.

Mr. Woodbury, as pension agent at Portland, pursuant to the directions of the Commissioner of Pensions, dated January 20, 1849, placed the name of Keziah Hartshorne, deceased, upon the pension roll for revolutionary services; and, subsequently, upon the presentation of the pension certificate, paid the amount therein specified to be due, to the heir of Keziah Hartshorne, deceased. On the settlement of his accounts at the Treasury, for the first quarter of 1849, the amount of two years of the pension included in that certificate, from the 4th of March, 1841, to the 4th of March, 1843, was disallowed by the accounting officers of the Treasury, on the ground that there was no law allowing a pension for those two years.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. MASON. I now ask the Senate to take the vote on my motion to proceed to the consideration of Executive business.

Several Senators. Let us make reports.

Mr. MASON. I have a drawer full of reports myself, but my public duty requires me to insist on my motion to proceed to the consideration of Executive business.

Mr. HOUSTON. With the leave of the Senator from Virginia, I wish to make a single remark. I am reluctant at any time to interfere with the ordinary course of business, but I rise to request the Senate, before they adjourn to-day, to pass an order to meet at half past ten o'clock to-morrow morning, for the purpose of affording me half an hour to make some explanations. This will not retard the business at all. If Senators do not all choose to leave their committee rooms, and come to the Senate Chamber at that time, it will not be material; the reporters will be here, and I do not care about an audience. It is a matter of importance to me, and I trust the Senate will concede that courtesy.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Texas, that when the Senate adjourns to-day, it adjourn to meet at half-past ten o'clock to-morrow morning, for the purpose of enabling him to make a personal explanation.

The motion was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

The PRESIDENT. The question now is on the motion of the Senator from Virginia, that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Executive business.

Mr. STUART. On that question I shall ask for the yeas and nays, with a view, if the Senate refuse to go into Executive session, of asking them to proceed to the consideration of the river and harbor bill.

Mr. MASON. I asked for the yeas and nays myself, when I first made the motion, and I have no objection to having them.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 19, nays 31; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allen, Atchison, Brodhead, Butler, Clay, Douglas, Evans, Fessenden, Fitzpatrick, Gwin, Houston, Hunter, Mallory, Mason, Morton, Rockwell, Rusk, Toombs, and Toucey—19.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Bayard, Bell, Benjamin, Bright, Brown, Chase, Clayton, Cooper, Dawson, Dodge of Wisconsin, Dodge of Iowa, Fish, Foot, Geyer, Gillette, Johnson, Jones of Iowa, Jones of Tennessee, Pettit, Pratt, Sebastian, Seward, Slidell, Stuart, Sumner, Thompson of Kentucky, Thomson of New Jersey, Wade, Walker, and Weller—31.

So the motion was not agreed to.

BETSEY NASH—MRS. BATCHELDER.

Mr. SEWARD. I am instructed by the Committee on Pensions to report back the bill from the House of Representatives, for the relief of Betsey Nash, with an amendment. She is a poor and very aged woman. The bill appropriates a small amount which she has been seeking here for sixteen years, and I am requested to report the bill back, with a slight amendment reducing the amount. As there is no probability that she will live until the next session, I ask for the consideration of the bill now.

Mr. CLAY. I wish to ask the Senator from New York what is the character of the pension? Mr. SEWARD. Half pay for the services of her husband, who was in the war of 1812.

Mr. CLAY. Did he die in the war?

Mr. SEWARD. He died of wounds received in the war.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded, as in Committee of the Whole, to consider the bill.

It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Betsey Nash, of Stockbridge, in the county of Madison, State of New York, upon the list of half pay pensioners, as the widow of Doctor Sylvester Nash, at the rate of twenty-two dollars per month, to commence from January 1, 1831, and to continue for ten years.

The amendment of the committee, which was to strike out "ten years," and insert "five years," was agreed to.

Mr. ADAMS. I move to amend the bill by adding, as additional sections, the bill for the relief of Mrs. Batchelder.

Mr. STUART. Is that in order?

The PRESIDENT. The Chair is of opinion that it is. This is a pension bill, and the Chair understands the amendment to be, to give a pension to Mrs. Batchelder.

Mr. STUART. I have understood that on a private bill of this character, it was not in order to move another private bill as an amendment.

The PRESIDENT. It is often done. The Chair is of opinion that it is in order.

Several SENATORS. Read the amendment.

The Secretary read it, as follows:

Sec. —. And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to pay to the widow of James C. Batchelder, who was killed at Boston on the 26th of May, 1854, while assisting the United States marshal for the District of Massachusetts in executing a law of Congress, the sum of $3,000, out of any money in the Treasury unappropriated.

Sec. —. And be it further enacted, That the said sum shall be held by her in trust, and shall inure solely to the benefit of said widow and her child, or children; and no sale, transfer or mortgage of the same, in prejudice of said trust, prior or subsequent to the passage of this act, shall be valid.

Mr. STUART. We have had notice from several Senators that they intend to discuss this question at length. It opens the whole slavery agitation from beginning to end; and if we raise that question, we cannot pass any appropriation bills at this session. I move to postpone the further consideration of the bill and amendment until to-morrow.

Mr. ADAMS. On that motion I ask for the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were ordered, and taken with the following result:

YEAS—Messrs. Allen, Atchison, Bayard, Bell, Bright, Cass, Chase, Clayton, Dodge of Iowa, Geyer, Gillette, Rockwell, Stuart, Sumner, Wade, and Walker—16.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Benjamin, Brodhead, Brown, Butler, Clay, Cooper, Dawson, Dodge of Wisconsin, Douglas, Evans, Fessenden, Fish, Fitzpatrick, Foot, Gwin, Houston, Hunter, Johnson, Jones of Iowa, Jones of Tennessee, Mallory, Mason, Morton, Pearce, Pettit, Pratt, Rusk, Sebastian, Seward, Slidell, Thompson, of Kentucky, Thomson, of New Jersey, Toombs, Toucey, and Weller—36.

So the motion to postpone was not agreed to.

Mr. SEWARD. I now ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. FOOT. I ask for the reading of the report in the case of the original bill.

The report was read, from which it appears that, in the summer of 1814, a draught of militia was called for the defense of the northern frontier, and that Sylvester Nash volunteered as a private soldier, under the command of Major Eliphalet Hodgkiss, and marched to Sackett's Harbor. While at that place it was very sickly; and being a physician, he was requested by the officers to attend the sick, (there being no surgeon among the volunteers,) which service he performed, and for which he received no compensation, except as a private soldier. After his return home, he received a warrant as surgeon to Colonel Erastus Cleveland's regiment of detached militia, and repaired again to Sackett's Harbor, and discharged the duties of physician until about the 20th of October, when he was attacked with dysentery, which continued upon him the remainder of the time he was in the service, and for about six months after; and he was unable to attend to his profession or perform any labor for a year, when he was attacked with chronic rheumatism, which continued in a severe manner about six months; and, from that period to the present, he has been affected with a weakness in the small of his back and kidneys, disabling the lower extremities so as to unfit him almost entirely for pursuing any kind of business. He applied to the War Department for a pension, but his claim was objected to, on the ground that he was mustered and returned as a well man; which he explains, by saying that the orders of the muster-master required every man who could walk to appear on parade for mustering; and that, though very feeble, he was then able to walk, and appeared accordingly, and was mustered; but the department thought the case not coming within the rules prescribed, and finally rejected it, with a recommendation that he apply to Congress. There was ample evidence as to the service and disability, leaving no doubt on the minds of the committee as to the propriety of the allowance to his widow.

Mr. SUMNER. Now, I call for the reading of the views of the committee in the case provided for by the amendment.

The Secretary accordingly read the following papers:

Views of Mr. JONES, of Iowa, Mr. CLAY, and Mr. WILLIAMS, of the Committee on Pensions, on a resolution of the Senate instructing them to inquire into the expediency of granting a pension to the widow of James Batchelder, of Massachusetts, who was killed while assisting the United States marshal to execute a law of Congress.

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred a resolution of the Senate instructing them to inquire into the expediency of granting a pension to the widow of James Batchelder of Massachusetts, recently killed while assisting the United States marshal to execute a law of Congress, beg leave to report:

The facts of this case, so far as they have come to the knowledge of your committee, are these:

On the 26th of May last, 1854, a negro named Anthony Burns was arrested in the city of Boston, by the United States marshal for the district of Massachusetts, upon a warrant issued by the United States commissioner for the said city, under the provisions of laws of Congress approved September 12, 1793, under the administration of General Washington, and September 18, 1850, for the recapture of fugitives from labor. He was claimed as a slave by a citizen of the State of Virginia, and was arrested and held with a view to an examination before the said commissioner, according to law. While in the custody of the United States marshal, and confined and guarded by said marshal and a small force of deputies, in a room of the court-house in the city aforesaid, a violent attack, with a view to his rescue, was made upon the court-house by a fanatic and lawless mob. After several attempts, the attacking party succeeded in battering down one of the principal doors of the court-house, and effected an entrance, armed with clubs, axes, pistols, &c. They were resisted by the marshal and his force, and, after a desperate struggle, driven from the building. In this struggle James Batchelder, one of the small but resolute force under the marshal, became a sacrifice to his devotion to his duty, under the laws of his country. The verdict of the coroner's jury was as follows: "That on the 26th of May, about forty-five minutes past nine o'clock, p. m., while James C. Batchelder was employed, with others, by Watson Freeman, Esq., United States marshal, as an assistant in defending one of the west entrances of the court-house in the city of Boston, from the assaults of a mob, he received a wound in the left groin, severing the femoral artery, which caused his death, and that said wound was inflicted by a long, narrow, and sharp instrument in the hands of some one of the persons engaged in the assault, to the jurors unknown, &c., &c."

By this act of violence the widow of Batchelder is deprived of a husband and protector. The question is as to the propriety of granting her a pension, in view of the circumstances attending the death of her husband. The Senate need not be told that the case does not come within the provisions of any general law of Congress. But it cannot be denied that the practice of the Government has seemed to recognize an analogy in cases of this character to those provided for in the general statutes, and that it has been deemed "expedient" to acknowledge and reward distinguished and patriotic services, though rendered in the discharge of duties not of a military character, but involving hardship and hazard. In numerous instances has Congress rewarded such services to the individuals rendering them, or by acts of gratuity to the widows and orphans of those whose lives were sacrificed therein. As early in our history as 1794, the sum of $2,000 was voted to the widow of Robert Forsyth, marshal of Georgia, who was killed in the discharge of his duty. In 1820, the sum of $500 was granted to the widow of John Heap, of Baltimore, "who was beset by ruffians and murdered" while carrying the United States mail. And in 1844, a pension was granted, for life, to an Indian woman of the Creek nation, for her interference to save the lives of prisoners condemned to death by her people. Instances are not rare upon our statute books in which pensions, sums of money, lands, or other manifestations of the public gratitude have been bestowed for services rendered by public officers and private citizens not connected with the military establishment of the country; but enough have been cited to show the scope of congressional action in the reward of meritorious services, and to show further that the expediency and propriety of expressing the obligations of the public, in some appropriate manner, has been recognized and practiced upon by the Government in cases where the services and sacrifice have not been more remarkable than in the instance now under consideration.

But the analogy of this case to that of the soldier who is provided for under the general statutes, may be made more apparent by noting two facts: First, that under the general laws the revenue police of the country, "when acting in cooperation with the Navy or Army," have been granted pensions, "in the same manner, and to the same extent;" second, that had any of the United States troops, employed in conjunction with the marshal's force, (of which Batchelder was one,) at Boston, to aid the execution of the law and preserve the peace, been disabled, his case would have found ample provision in the general pension laws. It would be difficult to define the distinctions of position or obligation which would in equity demand a pension in the case of the soldier, and refuse it in the case of a marshal, both being employed under contract with the Government, and under oath to support the Constitution and the laws, and engaged in the same service, and exposed to the same dangers.

But, again, if there is merit in the soldier's sacrifices and heroisms in defense of the honor and security of his country against a foreign enemy, there is none the less of merit in the patriotism and courage of the public officer who offers up his life in defense of the majesty of the law, against the violent assaults of a domestic foe.

But there are further and peculiar considerations which weigh with your committee in favor of a recognition of the merits and patriotism of the services of Batchelder, in rendering which he lost his life. He was engaged at the time in assisting to execute a law of Congress—a law which but makes provisions for carrying out and sacredly maintaining one of the express obligations of the Constitution. It is well known that, under the peculiar municipal regulations of at least one half of the States of this Union, (a state of things which existed, was recognized, and guaranteed, in the organization of the Government,) obedience to the law, and a faithful observance of the requirement of the Constitution respecting the rendition of fugitives from labor, is an absolute necessity to the harmony, peace, and perpetuity of the Confederacy.

Under these circumstances, it has become necessary as a security to property, and to allay agitation and quiet sectional misgivings; to assure the whole country of the determination of the General Government to faithfully adhere to the compromises of the Constitution, and of its ability to protect and secure the rights of all as guaranteed by that instrument. And it becomes the duty of Congress, in some emphatic way, to express its approval of the public officer, who, true to his oath and his duty, fearlessly executes the law of the land. One most appropriate means of doing this, and, at the same time, discharging a public obligation, will be to reward the services of Batchelder to his bereaved widow. While the committee deplore the existence of a spirit of riot and insubordination, and of a disregard of all the duties of citizenship, and especially the valuable life that has been sacrificed to it, they cannot but congratulate the Union upon the fact that the people of Massachusetts, her citizen soldiery, and her public officers are, as ever, ready to rally to sustain the supremacy of law, and vindicate the honor and the devotion to the Constitution and the Union of that glorious old Commonwealth. The conduct of the United States marshal and his deputies, the mayor and police of Boston, and the citizen and regular soldiery upon this occasion, was worthy of all praise; and the committee regard it both a pleasure and a duty to commend their promptness to obey the call of duty, their firmness, moderation, and prudence, by which alone consequences the most deplorable were averted, and the law executed with so little sacrifice of life and property.

After due deliberation, the committee have preferred, in this case, to acknowledge the obligations of the country to the widow of the deceased Batchelder, not in the form of an annual pension, but by granting to her a sum adequate to a provision for her future support, if invested and husbanded with proper prudence and economy. They herewith report a bill for which they ask the favorable consideration of the Senate.

GEO. W. JONES, of Iowa,
C. C. CLAY, JR.,
JARED W. WILLIAMS.

Views of Mr. SUMNER and Mr. SEWARD.

The undersigned, a minority of the Committee on Pensions, cannot concur with the majority of the committee in reporting a bill for the relief of the widow of the late James Batchelder. They also dissent from the report accompanying the bill, which, however, is understood not to proceed from a majority of the committee.

In granting pensions, or bounties of a kindred nature, it has been the habit of the committee to require evidence of all essential facts and circumstances; not, indeed, according to the rigorous forms of a court of law, but with substantial fullness and authenticity. Applications for pensions are constantly rejected for defect of testimony. But this reasonable practice, which is a necessary safeguard against abuses, has been disregarded in the present case. No evidence of any kind—not a shred or particle—was produced. The majority of the committee undertook to act at once, on loose and general report, gathered at a moment of excitement from the public press. In this respect they have obviously proceeded with more haste than discretion. Such a course cannot be in conformity with approved precedents. In itself it will be a bad precedent for the future.

But this proceeding seems more obnoxious to comment, when it is known that it appeared, from the very sources on which the committee relied, that the facts in question are all at this moment the subject of judicial inquiry, still pending, in the courts at Boston. Several citizens have been indicted for participation in the transaction to which reference is made, and in which Batchelder is said to have been killed. Their trials have not yet taken place, but are near at hand. Under these peculiar circumstances, the indiscreet haste of the committee, thus acting in advance of authentic evidence and lite pendente, is enhanced by the possible detriment to the grave interests of justice, which all will admit should not be exposed to any partisan influence from abroad. The report accompanying the bill, without any aid from human testimony, undertakes to pronounce dogmatically on facts which will be in issue on these trials. Anticipating the court, and literally without a hearing, it gives judgment on absent persons, as well as on distant events.

On grounds irrespective of the merits of the case, the undersigned object to any action upon it on the present evidence, and in the existing state of things. They object for two reasons: first, that such action would become a bad precedent, opening the way to a disregard of evidence in the distribution of pensions and bounties; and secondly, that it would be an interference—offensive though indirect—with the administration of justice, in matters still pending, and involving the fortunes of several citizens. These reasons are ample.

But on other grounds, of a different character, and vital to the merits of the case, the undersigned must dissent from the majority of the committee.

Regarding the act of Congress, usually known as the fugitive slave bill, as unconstitutional, while it is justly condemned by the moral sense of the communities where it is sought to be enforced, the undersigned are not disposed to recognize any services rendered in its enforcement as meritorious in their character. Especially are they unwilling to depart beyond the clear line of precedents, in voting bounties on account of such services. This, of itself, is a sufficient reason for opposition to the proposed bill.

But admitting for the moment the asserted constitutionality of the fugitive slave act, and its conformity with just principles of duty; and admitting further, that efforts for its enforcement are to be placed in the same scale with efforts to enforce other acts of Congress, of acknowledged constitutionality and clear conformity with just principles of duty, then the undersigned beg leave to submit that, according to the practice of our country, such efforts have not been considered as entitled to the ordinary reward of pensions or kindred bounties.

The pensions and kindred bounties of our country have been founded exclusively on military and naval services. In England, civil services, whether on the bench, in diplomacy, or in the departments of State, are subjects of pension; but it is otherwise here. With us there are no general laws to this end; nor are there special laws of such clear meaning and character as to become precedents, sanctioning pensions or bounties for civil services. A report of this committee, made by its chairman at this very session of Congress, states the rule and practice of Congress. Here is the whole report. (Rep. Com., No. 199.)

In Senate of the United States, April 11, 1854.—Mr. Jones, of Iowa, made the following report:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of Rebecca Bright, beg leave to report:

"That the petitioner is the widow of Jacob Bright, an armorer, who was killed at the navy-yard in this city by the bursting of a shell. He being an employee of the Government, and in no sense to be regarded as in its 'military or naval service,' the committee can find no reason, founded in law or justice, for pensioning his widow. Her case is precisely that of the widow of a laborer, or mechanic, employed by the day or month upon any public work. They therefore recommend that the prayer of the petitioner be rejected."

And yet, in the very teeth of this recommendation, made by themselves at this very session, the committee now propose to bestow a bounty upon such services. If the committee were right in their former report, they cannot be right now.

The report accompanying the bill shows that three of the committee have felt that their recommendation needed the support of precedents, and they have ransacked the records for them. Two only are produced.

The first is an act of Congress, bearing date June 7, 1794, which provides "that the sum of $2,000 be allowed the widow of Robert Forsyth, late marshal of the district of Georgia, for the use of herself and the children of the said Forsyth." On search in the office of the Secretary of the Senate, where this bill originated, and also at the Treasury, where the money was paid, no papers have been found showing the occasion of this grant; nor has anybody undertaken to state any. This precedent, then, can be of little value in establishing an important rule in the dispensation of national bounties.

The only remaining precedent adduced by the committee is an act bearing date May 8, 1820, and providing "that the Postmaster General be directed to pay to the widow of John Heap, late of the city of Baltimore—who, while employed as a carrier of the mail of the United States, having the said mail in his custody, was beset by ruffians and murdered—out of the money belonging to the United States, arising from the postage of letters and packets, $500 in ten equal semi-annual payments." On this precedent Congress will surely hesitate to establish a rule which will open a new drain upon the bounty of the country.

The general laws do not award pensions or bounties for services in enforcing the revenue laws of the country, and it is not known that any special acts have ever been passed rewarding such services, though they have often been rendered at imminent danger to life, as well from shipwreck as from the violence of smugglers. The proposed bill will be an apt precedent for bounty in this large class of cases; and it may properly be opposed by all who are not ready for a new batch of claimants.

The undersigned venture to make a single comment further on the report accompanying the bill. This report, not content with assigning reasons for its proposed bounty, proceeds to take cognizance of the conduct of the people of Massachusetts; the citizens, soldiers, the marshal and his deputies, the mayor and police of Boston, in the recent transaction, and assumes to hold the scales of judgment. In this respect it evinces an indiscreet haste similar to that already displayed in acting on the present proposition, without authentic evidence, and during the pendency of judicial investigations. It appears from the public journals, out of which all our information on this matter is derived, that the conduct of several public functionaries on this occasion in Massachusetts has been seriously drawn in question. The marshal of the district is openly charged with making the arrest of the alleged fugitive, under the fraudulent pretense that he was a criminal—a scandalous device which no honest man can regard without reprobation. The mayor of Boston is also openly charged with a violation of the primal principles of free institutions and of the law of the land, in surrendering the city for the time being into the possession of a military force, and thus establishing there that supremacy of arms under which all law is silent. But on these things the undersigned express no opinion. They desire only to withhold all assent from the blindfold ratification which the report accompanying the bill volunteers, without reason or occasion, to the conduct of public functionaries as well as of others, who, according to some evidence, may have acted very badly.

CHARLES SUMNER.
WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

Mr. SEWARD. Mr. President, this is the first of the last four days of the session. I wish distinctly to state the attitude of this question before the Senate, in order that the Senate and the country may see, if any embarrassment should result to the business of the Senate, upon whom the responsibility will lie. The House of Representatives has sent to us this morning a bill for the relief of Betsy Nash, a very aged widow of an officer.

Mr. ADAMS. If the Senator from New York will allow me a moment, I desire to say that the friends of the bill are perfectly willing to take a vote, upon the reading of the report of the majority, and of the views of the minority of the committee, without any argument beyond the simple statement of the papers which have been read. If they desire to discuss it, of course we desire to discuss the other side.

Mr. SEWARD. I was proceeding to say that the House of Representatives had sent to us a bill for the relief of Betsy Nash, the very aged widow of an officer of the army of 1812, who suffered from disease contracted in the public service at Sackett's Harbor, in consequence of which he was disabled, and languished, and died. His case was presented for sixteen years. It was presented in the first place to the pension department, and the pension department finding it not to come technically within the letter of the law, was obliged to reject it, but recommended it to the favorable consideration of Congress. A bill for her relief passed one House and then went to the other alternately each session for several years, but never passed the two Houses at the same session. So the passage of the bill was delayed without the fault of the officer while living, or his widow after his death, for sixteen years. At a very late day of the present session the House of Representatives entertained the subject, upon the unanimous report of the Committee on Pensions in that House, which recommended the passage of a bill allowing half pay for a period of ten years. That bill came before the Committee on Pensions of the Senate this morning, and, on examination, they concluded that half pay for ten years was not within the line of precedents adopted by their committee, and therefore reduced it to five years, reducing the sum proposed to be paid by the House to a small pittance; and the committee, upon the suggestion that the widow was old and infirm, and probably could not survive until the next session of Congress, recommended its passage immediately.

Now, sir, that is the case of an old widow. It had been long delayed, and yet now when her bill is before us an amendment to it is proposed, which brings up, at this stage of the session, all the questions involved in the proceedings of the execution of the fugitive slave law in Boston. I need not say that it is a subject-matter entirely different and foreign to it. It tends to bring up a disputed question. So far from the committee being unanimously in favor of the amendment, there was not a majority which united in its recommendation. It involves questions of great magnitude, and entirely irrelevant to the subject-matter of the original bill. What is recommended in the original bill is a pension, which is to be granted in accordance with the uniform practice of Congress from the Revolution down to this day. What is proposed by the amendment is to give a bounty to the widow of a person who was not a soldier engaged in the military service of the country, but a civil officer assisting in the execution of a process. What is proposed in the original bill is a pension. What is proposed in the other case is a bounty, a bounty which is a matter of discretion, and, therefore, unless great care is taken, may be acted upon from motives and considerations which might be capricious.

Now, then, it will be seen at once that whatever may be the circumstances of this matter, as to its effect upon public business, this bill, if amended as proposed, cannot pass Congress at the present session. Only four days remain until the expiration of the session, and as to an amendment of this character, if it shall pass here—and it cannot be expected to pass without debate—the House of Representatives, who are engaged in very important business, cannot be likely to take up a question which is so much litigated, and so much litigated in the House of Representatives, as to the payment of a bounty to the widow of a person for his assistance in the execution of the fugitive slave act. It is but a few days since a proposition to repeal that law received forty-nine votes in the other House. And when they were prepared to vote for the repeal of the fugitive slave law, they cannot be expected to vote for a bounty of this character, for services in its execution, at least without discussion or debate upon this subject.

Thus, then, not only the original measure, so right, just, and humane in itself, but this new measure, which, although so questionable, many have so much at heart, may fail. We shall, then, without attaining the object of giving a bounty to the person named in the amendment defeat the main purpose of the House of Representatives, which they have expressed in the bill which they sent here. I regret the presentation of the subject at this time, because it will, without doubt, tend to injure a meritorious claim. It is not my purpose unnecessarily to debate the question. Honorable Senators who favor the amendment have said that they are ready to take the question upon the reports without argument. The effect of such a proposition as that, would be the surrendering of the right of debate, and we should come here to the consideration of the questions, which in future may come up, without the benefit of that argument which is always presumed to be necessary for the enlightenment of the country, as well as the enlightenment of the Senate itself.

I need not say one word in behalf of the original bill. I am sure that the consideration which induced the House of Representatives to pass it unanimously, and which induced the Senate unanimously to take it up, would also induce the Senate to pass it. I appeal to them to carry out this intention by letting that bill pass which is in itself unobjectionable, and let the other come in as a distinct proposition for a bounty upon its own merits. That is the true mode of proceeding. But, sir, if that shall not be the pleasure of the Senate, I have to suggest to them that, according to the showing of the report which has been made by the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. SUMNER,] in which I concurred, the proposition contained in the amendment, is in entire conflict with the habitual practice of the Government from its commencement until the present day.

A case at the very present session has been submitted to the Senate which is contained in this report, in which the Committee on Pensions, following up the rule which had prevailed, refused to grant compensation to a person who was injured in the civil service of the country. The distinction between the case of the allowance of a pension for military services and extraordinary compensation for public civil services, is just as broad as the line which separates the military and naval service from the civil service of the country. The military service is one which requires exclusive devotion, and which withdraws the man who enters it from the pursuits of civil life. It requires the soldier or officer to devote himself, in the prime of life, and the officer especially with the expensive acquirements perhaps of military education and study, to a hazardous course of life. When the officer or soldier returns from the battle field, it is only poetry to say that he can convert the sword into the plowshare. The whole pension system, or at least a large portion of our legislation from the beginning to this day, in this country, as in every other country that ever supported an army or navy, is that a pension should be granted to those who entered into the navy or army upon considerations of duty or patriotism, and became incapacitated for the support of themselves and families.

On the other hand, the civil service is one which brings its reward and its fame without running any peculiar hazard, and even with profit and without any unnecessary sacrifice. It is voluntary on the part of our citizens to assume the office of President of the United States, as it is to assume the office of marshal or deputy marshal. It is voluntary on the part of the citizen to assume the office of representative in the Senate, or in the House of Representatives, or any other civil office which is attended with no peril of life or limb. We are all of us paid for the discharge of our duties in the civil department, and this compensation is regarded as adequate. We are all of us, as Senators in Congress, agents in the civil service of the country, but at the same time that we are performing our duty in that capacity, and receiving compensation for it, we also have our farms, our mercantile and professional employments, and our various other vocations which constantly follow us, and to which we can at last return with ease from those labors, and by assiduity in pursuing them, make provision for the support of our families.

This distinction is a just and necessary distinction; for if we require of a soldier extraordinary duties, which incapacitate him from supporting himself and educating his family, it is right to provide a hospital for him when disabled, to provide bounty land for him, upon which he can retire when he has completed the term for which he was employed in his country's service, and even pensions to his widow and family when he falls. This distinction must be adhered to. If we hold out equal inducements to hope for pensions and rewards in the civil service, equal to those offered in the military service, the tendency will be at once to discourage enlistments in the Army and in the Navy of the United States, and to encourage still greater competition in the service of the civil departments of the Government, when we know that the competition for places in the civil service has become so extensive as a resort for a livelihood, as to induce all manner of intrigue and corruption for the acquisition of places.

I have said that this was a broad distinction. I have said that it has been adhered to, and I will give to the Senate, in addition to the cases presented in the report, another case, which occurred some two or three years ago, of a civil officer who was recognized and provided for by law as entitled to make certain charges for services rendered. He was a New York pilot, required to go on board a public armed ship of the United States, in the port of New York, to conduct her into the harbor, and, after arriving on board, and while he was performing that duty, the cable slipped accidentally, through the carelessness of an officer or seaman in the public vessel, and the pilot lost a limb, and was disabled for life. I brought the case before the Senate some two or three years ago. I presented it to the Senate as a meritorious one. After due consideration, and admitting its entire hardship, and stating that they could scarcely see the difference between the military and the civil service in such a case, the Senate threw it out because the pilot was in the civil service; and the result was, that no relief was granted to him.

So far, then, as the present question is concerned, without going into any dispute in regard to the case in the original bill, claiming that it is entitled to the favorable consideration of the Senate, inasmuch as it provides a pension for the benefit of the widow of a worthy soldier, I think that we ought not to embarrass it, or render it doubtful, for the purpose of providing a bounty in another case. I cannot vote for this Boston case, which contains so many objectionable features. Especially does it present before Congress a necessity for considering the validity of the fugitive slave law. The constitutionality of that law is disputed and denied. The resistance itself was a consequence of that dispute, and of a repugnance of sentiment of a portion of the country to the law. The law, for these reasons, fails to be executed without extraordinary expenditure and extraordinary efforts on the part of the Executive. That law is now under consideration in many of the courts. The supreme court of the State of Massachusetts has affirmed its constitutionality, or is understood so to have done. The supreme court in another State (Wisconsin) has denied its constitutionality. For myself, it is enough for me to say that I agree with the supreme court of Wisconsin on that subject. But while this question is open, and while it will ultimately be referred to, and decided by, the highest tribunal, the tendency of this measure is to induce persons, by largesses, to assist in the execution of what I, with them, deem an unconstitutional law. With-out going into the merits of the constitutional question at the present time, it is enough for me to say that there is a division in this House, and in the other House, and that this division is continually widening. The number of those who believe that the law is constitutional is becoming less and less. The number to-day is far less than the number yesterday; and, according to the indications, they are less now than they will be a year hence; and they will grow less and less every year hereafter.

Then, at the present time, under such circumstances, believing that this law is entirely unconstitutional, I submit it is neither right nor wise to give it a factitious support in this mode, unless it shall be shown that there is an extreme case requiring such action. There is no extreme case before us in the original bill. This widow, Betsy Nash, and her husband, have been before us for sixteen years, imploring the attention of Congress. The Batchelder case is two months old, no more. Now, if the widow of the soldier who fought the battles of his country in the war of 1812, whose services are admitted, and whose claim is supported by precedents in the history of the country without number, could wait here for sixteen years, this Batchelder case, asking from us a bounty to be paid immediately, can wait until another session, especially if, by allowing it, we risk the original bill? It would give me no pleasure, no satisfaction, no triumph personally to defeat this amendment; for it shall be the pleasure of Congress that services of this kind, in the execution of the fugitive slave law, besides being paid for in the lavish way that we have seen, shall also be put on the level of having served in the Army and in the Navy, and so receive an extraordinary bounty, I shall yield. We shall see whether proceedings so extraordinary will operate to overcome the repugnance of freemen and the free States to the fugitive slave law. I can wait.

But again, sir, the facts in this case are assumed. There is no evidence that I know of. (My associate on the Committee on Pensions can inform me whether I am correct or not.) I do not know that a petition has been presented asking for it. The honorable Senator who moved the amendment can answer whether a petition has been presented by the person to whom it is proposed to allow the bounty. Receiving no answer, I presume that Mrs. Batchelder has not applied for a pension, that her name is put up here to oppose and defeat the granting of a pension to an unfortunate woman, without her knowledge, consent, or interference. There has been no petition presented. No petitions, recommendations, or representation of facts, are presented by anybody in her behalf. There is no information, no legislative information, no information such as the Senate requires, upon which this bill is to proceed. All we know of it is, that certain transactions occurred in the city of Boston in regard to the fugitive slave law; that Mr. Batchelder was killed, and that we are now acting upon the newspaper accounts of the day, while a judicial investigation of the matter is being prosecuted with care. When this investigation shall have been completed, and the decision of the court shall be known, it will then be time to act. We shall then know whether James Batchelder perished in supporting the execution of this law, or whether he did not; whether he perished in resisting a number of persons who were opposing the execution of the law, or whether he perished by the designs of private malice, which took this occasion to revenge itself.

Now, sir, I present these views with calmness, and after due deliberation, and with purposed moderation, because it was not my purpose to elicit a discussion of this subject, which could in any way embarrass measures of great public interest which are yet to be considered within the four days that remain to us of this session. In doing so, I have simply performed my duty in assigning the reasons, if the amendment shall pass, which will determine me to vote against this bill.

Mr. WELLER. I am exceedingly anxious that this discussion should be got rid of. It seems to me at this late day of the session we are spending our time very unprofitably in the discussion of this question. I could get rid of the debate by a motion that the subject lie on the table, but I have no desire to defeat the original bill, which, as far as I understand it from the reading of the report, is a very meritorious one. It is an act of justice which ought to have been done before; but it is impossible to discuss now the various questions which are involved in the amendment. I do not know that the time will ever come when it will be profitable to discuss the question of the repeal of the fugitive slave law; but this amendment involves a more important question—the propriety of placing a name upon the pension roll for civil services. Generally I am opposed to that. There may be particular circumstances in this case which will justify Congress in granting a pension to the surviving widow. At all events, that question ought to be fully discussed, because it will be cited hereafter as a precedent, and we shall be called upon to make appropriations from the Treasury, wherever an individual has lost his life in the performance of civil duty.

Now, Mr. President, I appeal to the Senator from Mississippi to withdraw his amendment. I should not ask him to do that, if I were not satisfied that the original bill ought to pass, and that it will be impossible to obtain a vote on it to-day, if this discussion goes on. Here we are with several important questions, which must be disposed of at this session of Congress. We are in the middle of the dog-days; none of us are disposed to labor more than eight or ten hours a day. We shall be compelled to labor that much to dispose of the necessary business which is before us. I ask, therefore, that this question, so far as the amendment is concerned, may go over to the next session. Then we shall have an opportunity to discuss all the questions at length; and if the Abolitionists on this floor desire to revive the slavery agitation by a discussion of the repeal of the fugitive slave law, it can be done then in mid-winter, when there can be no danger of anybody being hurt. I ask my friend from Mississippi, therefore, as he sees the intention of the Abolitionists on this floor to discuss the amendment, to withdraw it. They oppose it, as they say, upon principle. They have no principle about them. It is a part of their profession and desire to agitate this thing.

Mr. ADAMS. I have no desire to embarrass the regular business of the session, or to do an act in conflict with the judgment of any friend. I have offered the amendment in good faith. I introduced the original resolution which occasioned the report of the committee on the subject. It was not my purpose or desire to increase the fanaticism of the North, or to excite the indignation of the South, at the shedding of the blood of a faithful officer in the discharge of his duty in maintaining the laws of the country, and the rights of the South. I had no such desire. The Senator from New York, however, has spoken on the impropriety of bringing up this question at so late a day. Why is it so? The committee would have reported promptly on the resolution which was passed unanimously by this body, but for the opposition of that Senator and his colleague [Mr. SUMNER] on that side of the question. They have occasioned the delay. I have attempted, (believing, as I did, that it was important, that there was not a question before the body that has occupied its consideration of more importance than are the principles involved in this measure,) time and again, to call it up. When it was in order, I have offered it as an amendment to a meritorious bill. I felt it to be my duty to offer it. I proposed to the Senators upon the other side, presuming that every Senator had made up his mind on the subject, to take a vote on the amendment and bill without discussion. The Senator from New York has thought proper to go on and give us his views in relation to it. I am willing still, upon the reports of the committee which have been read, to throw in the speech of the Senator from New York upon that side of the scale, and take a vote without saying another word on the merits of the amendment. I hope that the Senate, if there should be further discussion, will permit it to come from the other side of the House.

Mr. STUART. I desire to unite with the Senator from California in asking the Senator from Mississippi to withdraw his amendment. It seems obvious that discussion will grow out of it, and that at very great length, at a stage of the session when there is no time for it. I doubt not there are many Senators who, like the Senator from California, are not prepared to act this day upon setting the precedent of giving pensions for civil services. I confess to be among that number. I think there is more importance in it than has been supposed, perhaps, by some Senators. I could not, therefore, vote upon this question without giving, at length, the views which I entertain upon the general subject. I take it for granted that other Senators feel similarly. I do not wish to embarrass the proposition at all at the proper time; but I hope the Senator will, in view of all the circumstances, withdraw the amendment, and let the original bill pass. If he does not, I shall feel it to be my duty, under the circumstances, to move to postpone the whole subject until the next session of Congress—the original bill as well as the amendment. I think, sir, we have now a disposition on the part of the majority of the Senate to dispose of the river and harbor bill to-day. The other appropriation bills are crowded upon the Senate. The chairman of the Committee on Finance [Mr. HUNTER] has appealed to me to-day to allow him to pass one or two of the smallest appropriation bills. The whole business of the session is blocked, and will stand blocked here, if the slavery question be discussed. I hope the Senator from Mississippi will withdraw the amendment, or else agree that the subject may be postponed until the next session of Congress; for I certainly, having in charge, under the instruction of the Committee on Commerce, the river and harbor bill, shall deem it to be my duty to make the motion to postpone.

Mr. CLAY. I do not propose to enter into the discussion of this question at this time. I am indisposed to trespass upon the attention of the Senate, when I see that they are impatient and anxious to act. Yet, sir, I cannot permit the occasion to pass without saying, in justification of that portion of the committee which made the report in favor of the bill for the relief of Mrs. Batchelder, that I stand prepared, on a proper occasion, to vindicate that report throughout, and to show that the bill is sustained by precedents—by many precedents—by some which have been reported during this session, one at least by one of the members of the committee who oppose the bill. I allude to the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. SUMNER.] I will convict him out of his own mouth, either of an ignorant or willful misrepresentation of the action of the Senate upon this subject—

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. COOPER in the chair.) The Senator is not in order.

Mr. SUMNER. Mr. President—

Mr. CLAY. I do not yield the floor, Mr. President.

Mr. SUMNER. I rise to a question of order. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama is certainly out of order.

Mr. CLAY. I shall forbear; but there are things asserted in the views of the minority which are a gross and unwarrantable reflection upon that portion of the committee who signed the report in favor of the bill, and hence I cannot sit patiently by and hear, from that quarter especially, anything derogatory to the character of gentlemen on this floor. I am prepared to show, and will show, I say, by the action of the Senate, by the action of the Committee on Pensions, and by the action of the Senator from Massachusetts himself, that this bill is not without precedent, and that it is a stronger case, appealing on stronger grounds to the support of the Senate, than the one which he has reported from the Committee on Pensions, and recommended to the favorable consideration of the Senate.

It is charged again, that this report is unsustained by any evidence. I want to meet that, and to show that that charge, likewise, is wholly unfounded in fact, and that it is sustained by more and better evidence than many cases which have come before the Senate during this session, and received the unanimous support of the Senate. I further propose to show that it is not only sustained by precedent, and by testimony, but that it is sustained by principle; that the very principle which lies at the foundation of your whole pension system will support it, and that there is no pension which has been allowed by Congress during this session that is better sustained by principle than this case. But, sir, as I remarked in the outset, I am enfeebled by recent sickness, and feel myself physically unable to do justice to myself or the occasion; hence I do not desire to debate it; but if the Senate should think proper to discuss it, I wish to meet the opponents of this measure on all the questions which they present.

Mr. STUART. I move to postpone the further consideration of the question until the second Monday in December next.

Mr. PETTIT. I ask for the yeas and nays upon that motion.

Mr. STUART. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. ADAMS] prefers that I should move that it lie upon the table.

Mr. ADAMS. I prefer that motion, so that if we should have leisure at any time during the present session, it can be called up.

Mr. STUART. I have no objection to that. I therefore make the motion that the subject lie on the table.

Mr. CASS. I hope my colleague will withdraw that motion for one moment.

Mr. STUART. Certainly.

Mr. CASS. Mr. President, I cannot vote for taking up any question which would interfere with the river and harbor bill. That is now under consideration; and unless immediately disposed of, it will be lost at this late stage of the session. I am in favor of this measure of compensating the family of Batchelder, who was killed, not long since, at Boston. Your laws grant pensions to the near connections of all persons who lose their lives upon the field of battle, while defending their country against a foreign enemy. This man fell in the holiest of causes—in defending the Constitution of his country when violently and ruthlessly attacked; and I know of no case which commands itself more strongly to the sympathy of the American people, or to the favorable action of the American Congress. I shall vote for the sum reported, as a feeble compensation to a bereaved and afflicted family, and also as an encouragement to all persons called out by competent authority to assert the majesty of the laws, to execute that duty fearlessly and faithfully—knowing that a grateful country will take charge of those dearest to them, should their lives be the sacrifice of their patriotic exertions.

Mr. WADE. I do not rise for the purpose of detaining the Senate upon this subject. I am in hopes that the amendment will be withdrawn. I disagree entirely with the Senator from Michigan, [Mr. CASS.] I think, sir, it involves principles of great consequence to this nation. I think it is a case of first impression arising out of an unconstitutional law, which is odious to the people of the North; which many of us regard as entirely unconstitutional. If, sir, it should be decided to be unconstitutional, how improper it would be to pension those who volunteer to stand forward in its vindication. There are many questions involved in the measure. Prominent is the question of pensioning the widow of one who dies in the civil service. It is a matter of great consequence, and as an advocate of the river and harbor bill, in which the State that I represent in part has as great an interest as any other, I hope that this exciting question will not be thrust upon the Senate at this time. I hope the Senator from Mississippi will withdraw the amendment, and let us go to work with the great measure of the improvement of rivers and harbors. It is because I am so anxious to bring that measure to a vote, that, notwithstanding the people of my State are so much interested in it, I have not opened my mouth to speak upon it. I wish to do nothing but vote upon it. I think a majority of the Senate are in favor of sustaining this great measure of public policy, which is so much asked for by the State of Ohio, and other States. I am very anxious that a vote should be taken upon it.

I am the last man who would shrink from an investigation of the question involved in the amendment, which has been submitted by the Senator from Mississippi. Let it come up at the proper time in the session, when its merits can be properly debated, and I shall not shrink from its investigation. This session began with an agitation of the slavery question, to the detriment of other great public measures. I hope it will not now be renewed on this bill. I implore the Senator from Mississippi to withdraw the amendment, and not have the whole subject ordered to lie on the table, because the original bill seems to be a proposition which everybody wishes to see passed; and by its defeat we should be doing great injury to a meritorious claimant. I hope, therefore, the Senator will withdraw the amendment, and postpone it until a future time, when it can be brought up under proper circumstances, and be properly debated. There are different opinions prevailing upon it—honestly prevailing. All I wish is, that it may be presented to us at a time when it can be properly discussed.

Mr. RUSK. I think, sir, this matter is in as proper a condition to be voted upon as any that I have ever seen before the Senate. The facts are short. There is no dispute about them at all, and half a moment's reflection will satisfy every gentleman upon the propriety of the principle upon which he should act, either in voting for, or against the amendment. The opponents of the measure choose to say that they are not going to permit it to pass; but they will consume time, and, perhaps, endanger the river and harbor bill, and some of the appropriation bills. Well, then, the object of the discussion is not to elicit anything on which the Senate may act. The object is, at this stage of the proceedings, if it is not postponed on this threat, to make the Senate Chamber a sort of platform on which to address the angry passions out of doors. Under such circumstances, although I should not have offered the proposition, if I had it in charge, as an amendment to the bill, yet as it is up, and as this threat has been thrown out, I shall vote against ordering the bill to lie on the table, and against its postponement.

Mr. WADE. I do not know that the Senator from Texas alludes to me as making a threat.

Mr. RUSK. No, sir; I did not.

Mr. WADE. I made none; and I do not understand that any threats have been made.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. COOPER in the chair.) The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. STUART. If it is the design of the Senate to take the question on this amendment now, I must ask their attention for five minutes, while I state the reasons which influence my mind in voting against it.

I have no hesitation in declaring that the Constitution, in my judgment, provides clearly and definitively for the return of fugitive slaves. I have just as little hesitation in declaring that, in my opinion, the laws which have been enacted for carrying out that provision, are within the constitutional power of Congress; and if they were insufficient for the purpose of carrying out the constitutional provision, I am free to add the declaration, that I would, at any time while a member of Congress, vote for additional legislation to effect that object. In all this, I subscribe to what I deem to be the plain provisions of the Constitution of the United States, and pronounce no opinion whatever upon the question of slavery in the abstract.

But, sir, the proposition that is now before the Senate, regard it as you will, is plainly a proposition to pension the widow of a man who falls in the civil service of the country. It is true that the case alluded to of the marshal in Georgia, Mr. Forsyth, is a case in point; but that was as long ago as 1794, and has not been acted upon to any great extent certainly, if to any extent, at all since that time. This question then, I say, involves the principle whether Congress will pension the widows and children of individuals who fall in the civil service of the United States, for I apprehend there is no Senator who will say that he would confine it to cases where individuals fell in aiding the execution of the fugitive slave law. That would be a distinction so invidious and so obnoxious to a large portion of the country, that nobody would think of proposing a law like that. Therefore, I do not regard this question at all in respect to the execution of that law, and I am not disposed to give my views upon it in that light. I think that the report which was made by the Senator from Iowa, as chairman of the Committee on Pensions, respecting the case which occurred in the navy-yard in this city, was a case in point against this proposition. The committee therefore decided, and the Senate sanctioned the report, that, inasmuch as that man was not connected with the naval or military service of the country, his widow was not entitled to a pension, and they refused it.

Now, sir, if Congress is about to change the law on this subject, it certainly ought not to be done in the morning, and within five days of the heel of the session, when there is no opportunity to examine it or discuss it. Sir, I have never thought that it was a clear proposition originally, that Congress possessed the power, under the Constitution, to grant pensions in military or naval cases. There certainly is no constitutional authority in express terms, and it can only be inferred from the fact, which you must assume, that without it there would be difficulty in furnishing the naval and military service of the country with men; because, unless there is a necessity of that character inferable from the power to raise and support armies and navies, there is no constitutional power to grant pensions in those cases. It might be, that if a condition of things had arisen in the country where a civil law could not be executed, there would be some analogy. If the President of the United States should inform Congress, through the medium of a message, that a law of Congress could not be executed without holding out some provision of this kind, the contingency might perhaps arise which would assimilate it to what is assumed in the case of the Army and Navy.

But, Mr. President, it will be recollected that there is this difference: it is the business of Congress to raise and support armies and navies under the Constitution; it is the business of the President of the United States, under the Constitution, to see that the laws are faithfully executed. Congress, therefore, if the power is conferred by the Constitution, has the right to infer or to assume that the naval and military service of the country demands the passage of laws pensioning the survivors of those who fall in the service, without any indication from the President, whatever; because, I repeat, to raise and support armies is the duty of Congress under the specific provisions of the Constitution. It is not the duty of Congress to execute the laws, and therefore Congress has no right to assume, without an indication or intimation from the President of the United States, that a law which it has passed will not be executed unless there is held out to those whose duty it is to execute it some provisions of this character. Hence I infer that there is a plain difference, a clear distinction, between the powers in these two cases—as plain a distinction as there is between the duties of Congress and the duties of the President of the United States. The one is to enact the laws, the other to execute them.

Now, sir, until the President of the United States shall, in the mode pointed out by the Constitution, report to Congress that the laws generally, or a particular law, cannot be executed without some provision of this kind, I cannot consent to vote for a bill which pensions the widow of an individual who has fallen in the civil service of the country.

I shall not detain the Senate by any lengthy discussion; but I have deemed it my duty to say this much, for two reasons: First, because I shall find myself obviously compelled to vote against my distinguished colleague, whose views are different from mine on this question; secondly, to correct the impression which might possibly be inferred from my vote, that I was opposed to the execution of the fugitive slave law. I think I have done enough, personally, to save myself from any imputation of that sort. I conclude by repeating, that upon any proper occasion, and upon all proper occasions, while I am honored with a seat in Congress, when it shall be found necessary, in order to execute this, or any other law, in the opinion of the President of the United States, whose duty it is to execute the laws, to have further legislation by Congress, I shall vote for any further legislation to execute this, as well as all other laws which are sanctioned, in my judgment, by the plain provisions of the Constitution.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I will not detain the Senate by going into a discussion of the merits of this claim. I beg leave only to call the attention of the Senator from Michigan, who has just closed his remarks, to another case in point. He admits the case of Major Forsyth, in 1794, to be in point. That was one of the first sessions of Congress under this Government. Then I would ask him if he did not, this session, vote for granting a pension to the widow and children of Captain Gunnison. He was under the direction of the Secretary of War, to be sure, but he was engaged in civil engineering, an enterprise not so hazardous to life as the execution of this law in the city of Boston. You have precedents all through the legislation of the Government down to the present time.

Mr. STUART. I certainly did vote for that case, and I find no difficulty in distinguishing it from this. Congress passed a law by which certain explorations were to be made under the direction of the War Department, and Captain Gunnison, who fell in that service, was an officer in the Army, and if he had hesitated to obey the order of the War Department, he would have been cashiered, and expelled from the service, as he would have been if he had disobeyed an order while in the actual military service of the country. Sir, I see a distinction between the present case, and one where Congress sees fit to pass laws calling upon the War Department to do certain acts, and the War Department, in virtue of the power conferred upon it, puts its officers in the service, and sends them not upon the borders among the Indians, where there is as much, and more hazard—I repeat with emphasis to the Senator, where there is more hazard in a small party of this character, than there would be if there was an army of one thousand men fighting the same Indians under a declaration of war. If a man is killed under those circumstances, I will vote as cheerfully to grant a pension to his widow, as I would if he had fallen under the walls of Mexico. There is a plain and palpable difference between that case and the case of the man who is executing civil process.

Mr. ADAMS. The Senator has shown very good reasons why he voted as I supposed he had voted; and I do not object to that; but he has failed to show a distinction between Congress passing a law and requiring the Secretary of War to execute it, and passing a law and requiring the President, who is the commander-in-chief of the Army and Navy, to execute. The Constitution requires of him to see that that law be faithfully executed. We passed a law in conformity to the requirements of the Constitution. The execution of that law, owing to a peculiar state of circumstances where it was to be executed, I repeat, was as hazardous to life (and experience has shown it in this case) as was the enterprise in which the gentleman was engaged, for whose widow the Senator voted to grant a pension. I see no distinction in the two cases. By our legislation we declare to our citizens that if they will go and fight our battles, we will pay them a certain sum of money as a regular compensation for their services, if they should live and return to their families, but that, if they should lose their lives in the service of their country, their families should be cared for and provided for by the Government by pensions. I understand your policy to be, further, that whenever you require public service of a character hazardous to life, it is the province of Congress, it is the duty of Congress, as a matter of policy as well as of justice, if an individual, in attempting faithfully to execute that law, loses his life, to provide for his family. Whether he loses his life in such a case, in the civil or military service, can make no possible difference. The only distinction which can be drawn, is that, if a man is engaged in civil service, when the ordinary discharge of that duty is not more hazardous than other civil occupations, if he loses his life, the Government will not provide for his family; but if that service be extra hazardous to life, Congress, as a matter of policy and justice, has heretofore provided, and should continue to provide, for such a case.

The present case is familiar to every one. The execution of this law, every one knows, was, under the circumstances, a hazardous task. Almost any man in that community, if he had the choice left to him to have gone into the Mexican war and meet the enemy, with the sympathies of the whole country on his side, would prefer meeting the enemy under such circumstances, rather than to execute the fugitive slave law in the city of Boston. I say nothing against the city of Boston or its citizens. I give them great credit for executing the law as they did, under the state of public feeling which I know existed there at that time. But there was hazard of life in executing the law. The widow of James C. Batchelder has lost her husband; she has lost her protector; she has lost him on whom she had been in the habit of leaning for support and protection; she lost him while he was engaged in executing a law which this Congress required him to execute. The only consolation she has now is, that he died at his post in defense of the Constitution and the laws of his country. I was going to say, that if there was a man on this floor, or elsewhere, unwilling to vote for this proposition, I desired to see him; but I do not. But I want the country to know the fact.

You cannot pay for the shedding of innocent blood. You cannot atone for the first pang of anguish and grief, when this lady was expecting her husband to return from his daily labor, and she was informed he was dead. You cannot make her compensation. But the amount proposed is reasonable. That cannot be denied; but the only argument offered by the Senator from New York against my proposition is, that the bill to which this is an amendment is a most meritorious one, that Congress has neglected for many years to perform its duty in that case. If Congress has neglected to perform its duty in reference to another, is that any argument that it should fail now to do its duty in this case?

I will not, however, be betrayed into a discussion of the merits of this question. I have desired from the commencement only to get a vote on it. I take it for granted the whole country, North and South, will approve of the proposition. I happened to be at Boston on the next day after the delivery of the fugitive slave about whom the excitement was raised. I heard the subject spoken of very freely amongst the people there. I had the honor of offering the original resolution directing the committee to make an inquiry into the expediency of granting a pension in this case, and I heard it spoken of; but I heard no man whether opposed to the fugitive slave law or not, intimate an opinion that Congress ought not to provide for the widow. Congress required him to execute the law, and I take it for granted there is no man North or South who will not approve such a just proposition as this.

I desire to say, before I conclude my remarks, that I am not urging the passage of this amendment particularly on account of the necessities of this poor lady, who has to labor for her living, and who was dependent upon the daily labor of her husband while he was alive. The South would provide for her wants if they were fifty times as great as they are; but public charity is fickle and uncertain; and we might provide in this instance, and in others we might not. For the very cogent reasons offered by the honorable Senator from Michigan, [Mr. Cass,] I think it is the duty of Congress at once and promptly, to the neglect of all other business, to throw its protecting arms around those who faithfully discharge their duty in executing the laws passed by Congress. I have so looked upon it and so acted. I regret exceedingly that the consideration of the subject has come up at this time. It was not my fault, for I have tried on all occasions, from the very moment I received the information, to have the consideration of Congress upon this subject. If it conflicts with other business now, I regret it, but I have no discretion under the circumstances.

Mr. SEWARD. Before the yeas and nays are taken on this question, I wish to say that, in order to give evidence of my desire to conduct the public business, and proceed first with that which is most important, I shall vote to postpone the very bill which I myself reported.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment. There is no motion at present pending to postpone.

Mr. BRIGHT. As I shall vote against the amendment, I wish to state my reasons for doing so. This is the first instance I have known since I have had a seat in this body, where a member moved to take a private bill from the files and add it as an amendment to a bill reported from a committee. It is clearly out of order to my mind. I approve of much that was said by the honorable Senator from Michigan, [Mr. Cass,] and if this were brought forward as an independent proposition, I should vote for it; but I will not establish a precedent here that permits a Senator, when a report is made from a standing committee, to move to take a private bill from the files and add it to that report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. SEWARD. There is a prior question to that. This amendment is not now in order. There is an amendment reported by the committee to the original bill.

Mr. BENJAMIN. It is too late to raise the question of order now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. I think it is too late. The amendment was received by the Senate; and it is too late, at this time, to object to it.

The question being taken by yeas and nays upon Mr. ADAMS's amendment, resulted—yeas 34, nays 14; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Atchison, Bayard, Bell, Benjamin, Brodhead, Brown, Butler, Cass, Clay, Dawson, Dodge of Wisconsin, Dodge of Iowa, Evans, Fitzpatrick, Geyer, Gwin, Houston, Hunter, Jones of Iowa, Jones of Tennessee, Mason, Morton, Norris, Pearce, Pettit, Pratt, Rusk, Sebastian, Slidell, Thomson of New Jersey, Toombs, Toucey, and Weller—34.

NAYS—Messrs. Bright, Chase, Cooper, Fessenden, Fish, Foot, Gillette, Rockwell, Seward, Stuart, Sumner, Thompson of Kentucky, Wade, and Walker—14.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SUMNER. I beg leave now to offer the following amendment to the section which has just been added:

Provided, That the act of Congress, approved September 18, 1850, for the surrender of fugitives from service or labor, be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I rise to a question of order. Is that amendment in order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. COOPER.) The Chair believes it is not.

Mr. SUMNER. It is clearly in order, particularly after what the Senate has done to-day in connecting these two bills together.

Several SENATORS. The question is not debatable.

Mr. MALLORY. I will ask the Senator to indulge me for a moment.

Mr. SUMNER. Certainly.

Mr. MALLORY. I was not present when the question was taken on the amendment of the honorable Senator from Mississippi. I was accidentally absent, and I ask the consent of the Senate to have my vote recorded in the affirmative.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator asks unanimous consent to record his vote in favor of the amendment on which the question has just been taken. Is there objection? [None.] The motion will be received.

Mr. SUMNER. Do I understand the Chair as ruling that my amendment is out of order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He does. The amendment is not in order in the opinion of the Chair.

Mr. WALKER. Why?

Mr. TOOMBS. Is there not yet an amendment proposed by the committee to the original bill? Was that passed on?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The proposition of the Senator from Massachusetts is an amendment to the amendment proposing to repeal the fugitive slave law. The Chair has ruled it out of order.

Mr. TOOMBS. There was an amendment proposed to the original bill, by the Senator from New York, from the committee, and then the amendment with reference to the Boston case came up. Now, I want to know if the first amendment has been acted upon?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes, sir; it was adopted. Do I understand the Senator from Massachusetts that he desired to take an appeal?

Mr. SUMNER. I do not presume to take an appeal from the decision of the Chair, though I do respectfully submit to the Chair that, according to the practice of the Senate, an amendment like that now proposed, to a new section of a pending bill is not out of order, and I submit further, that the proposition which I now make for the repeal of the fugitive act, is entirely germane to that on which the Senate has just voted. In coupling the Batchelder bill with the other, the Senate itself has prepared the way for my proposition.

Mr. SEWARD. The Senator from Massachusetts, I think, does not understand the ground on which the decision is put. The Chair decides that it is out of order, because it is an amendment to an amendment—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No, sir; not because it is an amendment to an amendment, but generally. As far as that is concerned it would be in order; but it is on the ground that the Senator from Massachusetts—

Mr. SUMNER. Do I understand that the Chair decides that the proposition I have submitted is out of order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes, sir.

Mr. SUMNER. Inasmuch as it relates to a matter of public legislation, and not to a private claim, I do not understand the ground of the decision of the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion is to amend the bill which is now pending, by a proposition to repeal the fugitive slave law. The Chair does not consider that a proposition within the rules, nor a proposition to amend under the parliamentary law. It is not a proposition, germane as it seems to me, to the bill that is now under consideration. It is not admissible.

Mr. SUMNER. The Senate has already decided that a proposition to grant bounty—

Mr. SLIDELL. I rise to a question of order. The Senator from Massachusetts cannot address the Chair in relation to the point of order. It has been decided.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has appealed as I understand.

Several SENATORS. He has not.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Then nothing is before the Senate on that point.

Mr. BRIGHT. Now, I desire to inquire whether the committee who reported the original bill did not report an amendment with it? There has been no vote upon any other amendment than the one upon which the yeas and nays were taken; but we are quite as much in order in that as we were in permitting the Senator from Florida to vote. I call the attention of the Senate to that subject, for the purpose of showing how closely we adhere to rules here.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator was allowed to vote by unanimous consent.

Mr. BRIGHT. The Senate, by unanimous consent, cannot break down a rule. The 17th rule provides expressly, that "When the yeas and nays shall be taken on any question, in pursuance of the above rule, no member shall be permitted, under any circumstances whatever, to vote after the decision is announced from the Chair."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is not in order in discussing that matter. If the question had been made at the time, it would probably have been so decided; but there have been frequent decisions during the present session which are precisely in point, and one two or three days ago.

Mr. BRIGHT. With due deference to the opinion of the Chair, I will state that the Chair is mistaken. This is the first instance I have ever known where, after the yeas and nays were taken and the result announced, a Senator was permitted to record his vote. I asked that privilege myself, some time ago, when I had not the pleasure of voting upon territorial bills.

Mr. MALLORY. I withdraw the vote.

Mr. BRIGHT. I do not object to it as coming from the Senator from Florida, but I refer to it for the purpose of showing how closely we adhere to rule.

Several SENATORS. "Order!" "Order!"

Mr. BRIGHT. I am not out of order in stating that no question has been taken on the amendment recommended by the committee. I wish to know what that amendment is.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It was in substituting five years for ten, in the original bill, as the length of time during which the pension should continue. I understand the question was taken on that.

Mr. BRIGHT. There has been no vote taken upon any amendment recommended by the committee.

Mr. SLIDELL. The Secretary can settle that matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary says that the question was put upon that amendment, and it was agreed to. At that time I was not in the chair.

Mr. BRIGHT. I should like to hear what the amendment was which was recommended by the committee.

The Secretary read it, as follows:

In the original bill strike out "ten" and insert "five," so as to make it read "to continue for five years."

Mr. BRIGHT. Does the Chair state that there was a vote upon that proposition?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. So I understand from the Secretary.

Mr. ATCHISON. I was in the chair at the time, and my impression is that that amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is upon ordering the amendment to be engrossed; and the bill, as amended, to be read a third time.

Mr. SUMNER called for the yeas and nays; and they were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 37, nays 12; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Atchison, Bayard, Bell, Benjamin, Brodhead, Brown, Butler, Cass, Clay, Cooper, Dawson, Dodge of Iowa, Evans, Fitzpatrick, Geyer, Gwin, Houston, Hunter, Johnson, Jones of Iowa, Jones of Tennessee, Mallory, Mason, Morton, Norris, Pearce, Pettit, Pratt, Rusk, Sebastian, Slidell, Thompson of Kentucky, Thomson of New Jersey, Toombs, Toucey, and Weller—37.

NAYS—Messrs. Bright, Chase, Fessenden, Fish, Foot, Gillette, Rockwell, Seward, Stuart, Sumner, Wade, and Walker—12.

Mr. SUMNER. In pursuance of notice, I now ask leave to introduce a bill.

Mr. STUART. I object to it, and move to take up the river and harbor bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The other bill is not disposed of. The third reading of a bill for the relief of Betsey Nash.

The bill was read a third time, and passed.

Mr. ADAMS. I move to amend the title by adding "and the widow of J. C. Batchelder."

The amendment was agreed to, and the title, as amended, agreed to.

FUGITIVE SLAVE LAW.

Mr. SUMNER. In pursuance of notice, I ask leave to introduce a bill, which I now send to the table.

Mr. STUART. Is that in order?

Mr. SUMNER. Why not?

Mr. BENJAMIN. There is a pending motion of the Senator from Michigan to take up the river and harbor bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That motion was not entertained, because the Senator from Massachusetts had and has the floor.

Mr. STUART. I make the motion now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks it is in order to give the notice.

Mr. SUMNER. Notice has been given, and I now, in pursuance of notice, introduce the bill. The question is on its first reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The first reading of a bill.

Mr. NORRIS. I rise to a question of order.

Mr. SUMNER. I believe I have the floor.

Mr. NORRIS. But I rise to a question of order. I submit that that is not the question. The Senator from Massachusetts has given notice that he would ask leave to introduce a bill. He now asks that leave. If there be objection, the question must be decided by the Senate whether he shall have leave or not. Objection is made, and the bill cannot be read.

Mr. SUMNER. Very well; the first question, then, is on granting leave, and the title of the bill will be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (to the Secretary.) Read the title.

The Secretary read it as follows: "A bill to repeal the act of Congress approved September 18, 1850, for the surrender of fugitives from service or labor."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on granting leave to introduce the bill.

Mr. SUMNER. And I have the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts is entitled to the floor.

Mr. SUMNER. I shall not occupy much time; nor shall I debate the bill. Some time ago, Mr. President, after the presentation of the memorial from Boston, signed by twenty-nine hundred citizens without distinction of party, I gave notice that I should, at some day thereafter, ask leave to introduce a bill for the repeal of the fugitive slave act. Desirous, however, not to proceed in that matter prematurely, I awaited the action of the Committee on the Judiciary, to which the memorial, and others of a similar character, were referred. At length an adverse report was made, and accepted by the Senate. From the time of that report down to this moment, I have sought an opportunity to introduce this bill. Now, at last, I have it. At a former session, sir, in introducing a similar proposition, I considered it at length, in an argument which I fearlessly assert—

Mr. GWIN. I rise to a point of order. Has the Senator a right to debate the question, or say anything on it until leave be granted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. My impression is that the question is not debatable.

Mr. SUMNER. I propose simply to explain my bill; to make a statement, not an argument.

Mr. GWIN. I make the point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. I am not aware precisely of what the rule of order on the subject is; but I have the impression that the Senate cannot debate—

Mr. SUMNER. The distinction is this—

Mr. GWIN. I insist upon the application of the decision of the Chair.

Mr. MASON. Mr. President, there is one rule of order that is undoubted; that when the Chair is stating a question of order, he must not be interrupted by a Senator. There is no question about that rule of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator did not interrupt the Chair.

Mr. SUMNER. The Chair does me justice in response to the injustice of the Senator from Virginia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Order, order!

Mr. MASON. The Senator is doing that very thing at this moment. I am endeavoring to sustain the authority of the Chair, which certainly has been violated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is the opinion of the Chair that the debate is out of order. I am not precisely informed of what the rule is; but such is my clear impression.

Mr. WALKER. If the Senator from Massachusetts will allow me, I will say a word here.

Mr. SUMNER. Certainly.

Mr. WALKER. It is usual, upon notice being given of intention, to ask leave to introduce a bill. The bill is sent to the Chair, and it is taken as a matter of course that the Senator asking it has leave. But in this instance, differing from the usual practice, objection has been made to leave being granted. The necessity is imposed, then, of taking the sense of the Senate on granting leave to the Senator to introduce his bill. That, then, becomes the question. The question for the Chair to put is, Shall the Senator have leave?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That was the question proposed.

Mr. WALKER. Now, sir, it does seem to me that it is proper, and that it is in order, for the Senator to address himself to the Senate, with the view of showing the propriety of granting the leave asked for. He has a right to show that there would be propriety on the part of the Senate in granting the leave. I think, therefore, as this may become a precedent in future in regard to other matters, that it should be settled with some degree of deliberation.

Mr. GWIN. Let the Chair decide the question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has decided that debate was not in order, in his opinion.

Mr. SUMNER. From that decision of the Chair I most respectfully take an appeal.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. From that ruling of the Chair an appeal is taken by the Senator from Massachusetts. The question is on the appeal.

Mr. BENJAMIN. In order to put a stop to the whole debate, I move to lay the appeal on the table. That is a motion which is not debatable.

Mr. SUMNER. Is that motion in order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Certainly it is in order.

Mr. WELLER. I desire to make one remark in regard to the rule.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is not in order now. The question must be taken without debate.

Mr. SUMNER. Allow me to state the case as it seems to me. I was on the floor, and yielded it to the Senator from Wisconsin strictly for the purpose of an explanation. When he finished I was in possession of the floor; and then it was that the Senator from Louisiana, on my right—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Massachusetts give leave to the Chair to explain?

Mr. SUMNER. Certainly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A point of order was made by the Senator from California, [Mr. GWIN,] that debate was not in order upon the question of granting leave; and the Chair so decided. The Senator from Massachusetts then lost the floor, as I apprehend, and he certainly did by following it up by an appeal. After that he could go no further. He lost the floor then again for a second time, and then it was that the Senator from Louisiana intervened with another motion, which is certainly in order, to lay the appeal on the table. That is not debatable. This, it seems to me, is the state of the case.

Mr. CHASE. Will the Chair allow me to make a single statement?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Certainly.

Mr. CHASE. The Senator from Massachusetts rose and held the floor during the suggestion made to the Chair by the Senator from Wisconsin. The Chair then, after the Senator from Wisconsin had finished his suggestion, declared his opinion to be, notwithstanding the suggestion, that debate was not in order. The Senator from Massachusetts then took an appeal, and retained the floor for the purpose of addressing the Senate on that appeal. While he occupied the floor, the Senator from Louisiana rose and moved to lay the appeal upon the table. That will be borne out by the gentlemen present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is so; but the Chair does not understand that debate was in order on the appeal. The appeal was to be decided without debate, and therefore the Senator from Massachusetts necessarily lost the floor after he took the appeal.

Mr. BELL. I would inquire whether there is not a bill already pending for the repeal of the fugitive slave law?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. I have not inquired of the Secretary; but it is my belief there is a similar bill pending; but it was not on that ground the Chair made this ruling.

Mr. BELL. I would inquire whether there is not such a bill pending? Did not the honorable Senator from Ohio some time ago bring in such a bill?

Mr. WELLER. I think he did.

Mr. CHASE. No, sir.

Mr. BELL. Then I am mistaken.

Mr. CHASE. My bill is not on that subject.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Louisiana, to lay on the table the appeal taken by the Senator from Massachusetts from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. CHASE. I ask if the motion of the Senator from Louisiana is in order when the Senator from Massachusetts retained the floor for the purpose of debating the appeal?

Mr. BENJAMIN. The Senator is not in order in renewing that question, which has already been decided by the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Chair acted under an erroneous impression in supposing that debate on the appeal was not in order, when it actually is, it was the fault of the Chair, and it would not have been in order for the Senator from Louisiana to make the motion which he did make, while the Senator from Massachusetts was on the floor. But the Chair recognized the Senator from Louisiana, supposing that the Senator from Massachusetts had yielded the floor. The Senator had taken an appeal; he followed it up by no address to the Chair, indicating an intention that he intended to debate the appeal, or the Chair certainly should so far have recognized him. But the Chair would reconsider his ruling in that respect, with the consent of the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. BRIGHT. The Chair will permit me to suggest that I think the motion proper to be entertained now is the one proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire, [Mr. NORRIS.] The Senator from Massachusetts presented his bill; the Senator from New Hampshire raised the question as to whether the Senate would grant leave to introduce it; and I think the proper question to be put now is, will the Senate grant leave to introduce a bill repealing the fugitive slave law? The effect of the motion of the Senator from Louisiana would be to lay the subject on the table, from which it might be taken at any time for action. For one, I desire to give a decisive vote now, declaring that I am unwilling to legislate upon the subject, that I am satisfied with the law as it reads, and that I will not aid the Senator from Massachusetts, or any Senator, in—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Indiana is certainly not in order.

Mr. BRIGHT. I certainly am in order in calling the attention of the Chair to the fact that the Senator from New Hampshire—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Indiana is not in order.

Mr. BRIGHT. Then I will sit down and ask the Chair to state wherein I am out of order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In discussing a question which is not before the Senate.

Mr. BRIGHT. I claim that the motion is before the Senate. The Senator from New Hampshire raised the question immediately that—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair decides otherwise.

Mr. BRIGHT. Then I appeal from the decision of the Chair, and I state this as my point of order: that before the bill was presented in legal parlance, the Senator from New Hampshire raised the question as to whether the Senate would grant leave, and that is the point now before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state the question which he supposes to be pending. The Senator from California made a point of order that debate on the bill proposed to be introduced by the Senator from Massachusetts, was not in order. The Chair so ruled. From that ruling the Senator from Massachusetts took an appeal. The Chair supposed that the Senator from Massachusetts had yielded the floor, and he gave the floor to the Senator from Louisiana, who moved to lay that appeal on the table. That is the question which is now pending. The Chair before suggested that if the Senator from Massachusetts had not yielded the floor, he had made a mistake in giving the floor to the Senator from Louisiana, but he did not suppose that the Senator from Massachusetts, after taking the appeal, without some indication of his intention to debate it, could continue to hold the floor, and he therefore recognized the Senator from Louisiana. The Chair is sorry if he did the Senator from Massachusetts injustice in that respect, but he did not hear him, and recognized the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. BRIGHT. I would respectfully ask the Chair what has become of the motion submitted by the Senator from New Hampshire?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair did not understand him to submit a motion, but the Senator from California took his point of order.

Mr. BRIGHT. I wish to inquire of the Senator from New Hampshire whether he has withdrawn his motion?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It was not entertained. It is not in his power to say whether it was withdrawn or not, for it was not entertained.

Mr. NORRIS. I think I can inform my friend from Indiana how the matter stands. The Senator from Massachusetts proposed to introduce a bill on notice given. I raised the question that it could not be introduced without leave of the Senate, if there was objection.

Mr. SUMNER. Do I understand the Senator to say without notice given? I asked leave to introduce the bill in pursuance of notice.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator from Massachusetts, I have already stated, offered his bill agreeably to previous notice.

Mr. SUMNER. Precisely.

Mr. NORRIS. The question was then raised, whether it could be received if there was objection. The question arose whether leave should be granted to the Senator from Massachusetts to introduce the bill?

Mr. SUMNER. That is the first question.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator from Massachusetts, upon the question of granting leave, undertook to address the Senate. He was then called to order by my friend from California, for discussing that question. The Chair sustained the objection of the Senator from California. From the decision of the Chair the Senator from Massachusetts took an appeal, and that is where the question now stands, unless the Senator from Louisiana had a right to make the motion which he did make, which was to lay the appeal on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, unless the Senator from Louisiana will disembarass the Chair by withdrawing it, on the motion of the Senator from Louisiana, to lay the appeal on the table.

Mr. SUMNER. On that motion I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. FOOT. On what motion have the yeas and nays been ordered?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On the motion of the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. WALKER. I wish to know, before voting, what will be the effect of a vote given in the affirmative on this motion? Will it carry the bill and the whole subject on the table?

Mr. FOOT. An affirmative vote carries the whole measure on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes, sir; if the motion to lay on the table be agreed to, it carries the bill with it.

Several SENATORS. No, no.

Mr. BENJAMIN. The question is whether, on the motion for leave to introduce the bill, there shall be debate? The Chair has decided that there shall be no debate. Those who vote "yea" on my motion to lay the appeal of the Senator from Massachusetts on the table, will vote that there is to be no debate upon the permission to offer the bill, and then the question will be taken upon granting leave.

Mr. WALKER. The Chair decides differently. The Chair decides, if I understand, that it will carry the bill on the table. Then, how can we ever reach the question of leave when objection is made?

Mr. WELLER. I object to this discussion. The Chair will decide that question when it arises. It does not arise now. I insist that the Secretary shall go on and call the roll.

Mr. WALKER. Suppose some of us object to it?

Mr. WELLER. Then I object to your discussing it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair, on reflection, thinks that the motion, if agreed to, would not have a further effect than to bring up the question of granting leave.

Mr. BRIGHT. I desire to understand the Chair. I do not wish to insist on anything that is not right, or that is not within the rules. That, I insist upon having. The honorable Senator from Louisiana is right in his conclusions as to his motion, provided he had a right to make the motion; but I doubt whether he had a right to make that motion while the motion of the honorable Senator from New Hampshire was pending. I do not wish, however, to consume the time of the Senate.

If the effect of the decision of the Chair is to bring us back to the question as to whether we shall receive the bill or not, I will yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is it.

Mr. BRIGHT. Very well.

Mr. SUMNER. Before the vote is taken, allow me to read a few words from the rules and orders, and from Jefferson's Manual.

"One day's notice, at least, shall be given of an intended motion for leave to bring in a bill."

That is the 25th rule of the Senate, and then to that rule, in the publication which I now hold in my hand, is appended from Jefferson's Manual, the following decisive language:

"When a member desires to bring in a bill on any subject, he states to the House, in general terms, the causes for doing it, and concludes for leave to bring in a bill entitled, &c. Leave being given, on the question, a committee is appointed to prepare and bring in the bill."

Now, I would simply observe, that my purpose was merely to make a statement—

Mr. BENJAMIN. I call to order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator had presented his bill, and was debating it afterwards. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Louisiana, to lay the appeal on the table; and on that the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 35, nays 10; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Atchison, Bell, Benjamin, Brodhead, Brown, Butler, Cass, Clay, Cooper, Dawson, Dodge of Iowa, Evans, Fitzpatrick, Geyer, Gwin, Johnson, Jones of Iowa, Jones of Tennessee, Mallory, Mason, Morton, Norris, Pearce, Pettit, Pratt, Rusk, Sebastian, Sidel, Stuart, Thompson of Kentucky, Thomson of New Jersey, Toombs, Toucey, and Weller—35.

NAYS—Messrs. Chase, Fessenden, Fish, Foot, Gillette, Rockwell, Seward, Sumner, Wade, and Walker—10.

So the appeal was ordered to lie on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on granting leave to introduce the bill.

Mr. SUMNER. On that question I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. STUART. I rise to a question of order; and I think if the Chair will consider it for the moment, he will, or, at least, I hope he will, agree with me. The parliamentary law is the law under which the Senate act. Whenever there is a motion made to lay on the table a subject connected with the main subject, and it prevails, it carries the whole question with it. It is different entirely from the rules in the House of Representatives. The rules in the House vary the parliamentary law, and you may there move to lay a matter on the table, because that is the final vote, and is equivalent to rejecting it, and a motion to take it up from the table is not in order. But now the Presiding Officer will see that if this course be pursued, the Senate may grant leave to introduce this bill, they may go on and pass it, and yet next week it will be in order for the Senator from Massachusetts to move to take up the appeal which the Senate has just laid on the table; whereas the whole subject on which his appeal rested might have been passed and sent to the other House. That surely cannot be so. The ruling of the Chair in this respect, therefore, I suggest is wrong, and the motion to lay on the table carries the whole subject with it. It is important to have the matter settled for the future practice of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. At the first meeting of the proposition, the Chair was of that opinion; but he is perfectly satisfied now that it did not carry the whole question with it. The question was on the motion to lay the appeal on the table, and that motion was exhausted when it did lay the appeal on the table. It did not reach back to affect the question of granting leave. That is now the question before the Senate. On that the yeas and nays have been asked for by the Senator from Massachusetts.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. STUART. I will not take an appeal from the decision of the Chair; but I only wish to say that as I am satisfied I am right, I do not wish, by acquiescing in the decision of the Chair, to embarrass us when such occasions may arise again.

The question being taken by yeas and nays upon granting leave to introduce the bill, resulted—yeas 10, nays 35; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Chase, Dodge of Wisconsin, Fessenden, Foot, Gillette, Rockwell, Seward, Sumner, Wade, and Walker—10.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Atchison, Bell, Benjamin, Bright, Brodhead, Brown, Butler, Cass, Clay, Cooper, Dawson, Evans, Fitzpatrick, Geyer, Gwin, Johnson, Jones of Iowa, Jones of Tennessee, Mallory, Mason, Morton, Norris, Pearce, Pettit, Pratt, Rusk, Sebastian, Sidel, Stuart, Thompson of Kentucky, Thomson of New Jersey, Toombs, Toucey, and Weller—35.

So the Senate refused to grant leave to introduce the bill.

Mr. DOUGLAS subsequently said: I was called out of the Senate Chamber to one of the Departments on some business, for a short time, to-day. If I had been here when the vote was taken on the Batchelder case, I should have voted for it. I desire, also, to state that I should have voted against any permission to allow the introduction of a bill to repeal the fugitive slave law, believing that the Constitution must be enforced under all circumstances.

CIVIL AND DIPLOMATIC BILL.

Mr. BRODHEAD. In engrossing the amendments which we made to the civil and diplomatic appropriation bill an error was committed by the clerks. A portion of the bill, as it came from us to the House, relating to the management of the public buildings and the powers of the Commissioner of Public Buildings, was stricken out; but in engrossing the amendments that one was accidentally omitted. Our amendments, I understand, are now under consideration in the House, and I wish to send a message to them on the subject. I therefore offer the following resolution which has been prepared according to the usual form:

Resolved, That the Secretary inform the House of Representatives that the following amendment, made by the Senate to the bill entitled "An act making appropriations for the civil and diplomatic expenses of Government for the year ending the 30th of June, 1855," were accidentally omitted in engrossing the amendments made by the Senate to the said bill; and that the House be requested to receive the said amendment as a portion of those made by the Senate, viz:

Amend the second section by striking out after the words "two Houses of Congress," the following words: "and further that all appropriations which are herein made, or may be hereafter made, for repairs or improvements of the public buildings, grounds, and streets, within the District of Columbia, and now under the charge of the Commissioner of Public Buildings and Grounds, shall be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior; and that all laws or parts of laws inconsistent with this section, shall be, and the same are hereby, repealed."

Mr. SLIDELL. A similar error was made in omitting a portion of the amendment which was adopted by the Senate as the thirty-first section of the bill, by which the clerks of the branch Mint at New Orleans were put on the same footing with the clerks in the Mint at Philadelphia. The Secretary has in his possession a letter which I addressed to the chairman of the Committee on Finance on the subject, which will confirm the statement I am about to make. When that section was offered as an amendment by the Senator from California, I suggested an amendment which was accepted by him, to place the clerks in the branch Mint at New Orleans on the same footing as to salary with those in the Mint at Philadelphia. The chairman of the Committee on Finance assented to it, and I took it for granted that it had been incorporated in the amendment; but this morning, on reading the bill, as printed with our amendments, to my great surprise I discovered that it was not there; and inasmuch as another error is to be corrected, I move to amend the resolution by adding to it that the Secretary inform the House that we amended our one hundred and eighty-third amendment by inserting after the words "United States," the words "and branch Mint at New Orleans." The connection is this: It is the provision allowing $1,800 as the annual salary of clerks in the Mint of the United States and branch Mint at New Orleans.

Mr. STUART. Do I understand the Senator to say that the amendment which he now suggests was actually made by the Senate when the bill was pending?

Mr. SLIDELL. I suggested the amendment, and it was immediately accepted by the Senator from California as part of his amendment, which was adopted. There is a letter in the possession of the Secretary which I have written to the chairman of the Committee on Finance on the subject, which can be read if desired.

Mr. STUART. I only wished to ascertain whether that fact existed; because, if so, it is just such a condition of things as that where the rule authorizes a correction.

The amendment, was agreed to; and the resolution, as amended, was adopted.

OCEAN STEAMER BILL.

A message was received from the House of Representatives, by Mr. FORNEY, their Clerk, announcing that they had passed a bill making appropriations for the transportation of the United States mails by ocean steamers and otherwise, during the year ending June 30, 1855, in which they asked the concurrence of the Senate.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole resumed the consideration of the House bill, "making appropriations for the repair, preservation, and completion of certain public works heretofore commenced under the authority of law."

Various amendments were offered and debated at length. The discussion was continued until eleven o'clock, p. m., when, without disposing of the subject,

The Senate adjourned.

[See Appendix for the proceedings on the River and Harbor bill.]

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, July 31, 1854.

The House met at eleven o'clock, a. m. Prayer by Rev. HENRY SLICER.

The Journal of Saturday was read and approved.

THE TEXAS DEBT.

The SPEAKER. The business first in order is the motion made on Saturday last by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. ORR] to suspend the rules for the purpose of taking up the following Senate bill:

An act to provide for the payment of such creditors of the late Republic of Texas as are comprehended in the act of Congress of September 9, 1850.

Mr. HOUSTON. If the gentleman from South Carolina, who moved to suspend the rules for the purpose of taking up that bill, will allow me to do so, I should like to take up the civil and diplomatic appropriation bill, and to pass on the Senate's amendments. [Cries of "Agreed!"] It is important that this should be done early, as, unless it is done early, the bill will inevitably be lost. I appeal to the gentleman from South Carolina to withdraw his motion.

Mr. ORR declined to withdraw his motion.

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules for the purpose of taking up the Texas creditors' bill.

Mr. PHELPS. On that motion I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I desire to inquire of the gentleman from South Carolina whether, if the rules be suspended, it is his intention to move the previous question?

Mr. ORR. It is not, as far as I am concerned. I desire that an amendment may be submitted to the bill in question, reducing the amount to $6,500,000, so that both sides of the House may have an opportunity of voting on it as they desire.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I will inquire, also, whether the gentleman will allow the introduction of an amendment providing that the act shall not take effect until the State of Texas shall, by an act, release the United States Government from all claims she may have.

Mr. ORR. I suppose that provision is now in the bill.

Mr. HOUSTON. If the House will allow me, I ask permission to report back the civil and diplomatic bill, and have it referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. WHEELER. I object.

The question was then taken; and there were—yeas 71, nays 67; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abercrombie, Appleton, Bell, Benton, Boyce, Breckinridge, Bridges, Bugg, Caruthers, Chandler, Chrisman, Churchwell, Clark, Cox, Crocker, Culm, John G. Davis, Dawson, Dick, Disney, Dunbar, Edmundson, John M. Elliott, English, Greenwood, Grey, Grow, Andrew J. Harlan, Harrison, Hendricks, Hill, Hunt, George W. Jones, Keitt, Kerr, Kurtz, Lindsley, McDougall, McNair, Maxwell, Mayall, John G. Miller, Olds, Mordecai Oliver, Orr, Peckham, Phillips, Pratt, Preston, Puryear, Ready, Reese, Riddle, Robbins, Seward, Shannon, Gerrit Smith, George W. Smyth, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Alexander H. Stephens, Hester L. Stevens, Stratton, Straub, Andrew Stuart, David Stuart, John J. Taylor, John L. Taylor, Wheeler, Yates, and Zollcoffer—71.

NAYS—Messrs. James C. Allen, Barksdale, Barry, Belcher, Bennett, Campbell, Carpenter, Caskie, Chastain, Corwin, Craig, Thomas Davis, Dickinson, Eastman, Edgerton, Ellison, Farley, Flager, Fuller, Giddings, Goode, Aaron Harlan, Sampson W. Harris, Henn, Houston, Howe, Hughes, Daniel T. Jones, Kidwell, Kittredge, Knox, Lamb, Lane, McCulloch, Macdonald, McQueen, Macy, Mateson, Morgan, Morrison, Murray, Nichols, Norton, Andrew Oliver, Parker, John Perkins, Phelps, Powell, David Ritchie, Ruffin, Russell, Sabin, Sage, Sapp, Shaw, Simmons, Singleton, Skelton, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Trout, Vail, Vansant, Wade, Ellihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, Tappan Wentworth, and Daniel B. Wright—67.

So the rules were not suspended, two thirds not voting in favor thereof.

CIVIL AND DIPLOMATIC BILL.

Mr. HOUSTON, by unanimous consent, then reported back from the Committee of Ways and Means, the bill of the House (No. 48) "making appropriations for the civil and diplomatic expenses of the Government, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1855."

Mr. H. I now move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I rise to a privileged question. I move to reconsider the vote by which the civil and diplomatic bill was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and also to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

TRADE BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND PERU.

Mr. RIDDLE. I ask the gentleman from Alabama to withdraw his motion for a moment, to allow me to present a bill and report from a special committee, in order that they may be referred and printed.

Mr. HOUSTON. I have no objection to yielding a moment for that purpose.

Mr. RIDDLE accordingly reported the following bill; which was read a first and second time by its title, and the bill and report referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed:

A bill regulating in part the trade between the United States and the Republic of Peru.

PROPERTY DESTROYED AT GREYTOWN.

Mr. WHEELER. I ask the gentleman from Alabama to allow me to present to the House the memorial of several merchants of the city of New York, asking for redress for the destruction of their property at Greytown by the United States ship-of-war Cyane.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I object to it.

Mr. ORR. Let it be presented and referred under the rule.

The memorial was so disposed of.

HOMESTEAD BILL.

Mr. DISNEY. I ask the gentleman from Alabama to suspend his motion until I can have an opportunity to move to take up the amendments of the Senate to the homestead bill.

[Cries of "Agreed!" and "No!" "No!"]

Mr. HOUSTON. I cannot do it.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a communication from the Post Office Department, transmitting, in compliance with an act of July 2, 1836:

1. A copy of the abstract of the offers for carrying the mails made within the year preceding the 1st of July, 1853.

2. A report of all contracts made for the transportation of the mail within the year aforesaid.

3. A statement of all such land and water mails as have been established or ordered within said year.

4. A report of additional allowances made to mail contractors within said year.

5. A report of curtailments of mail service and pay ordered within said year.

The communication was laid upon the table, and ordered to be printed.

CORRECTION OF THE RECORDS.

Mr. STRAUB. I rise to what I suppose to be a question of privilege. At the time the death of Mr. Muhlenberg, one of my colleagues from Pennsylvania, was announced in this House, there were several historical mistakes made. I ask the consent of the House that they may be corrected upon the public records.

The proposition was assented to.

THE ARMORY QUESTION.

Mr. DICKINSON. During the discussion in reference to the superintendence of the armories, some facts came to my knowledge which I feel it my duty to bring to the notice of the House. I ask the consent of the House to offer the following resolution; asking information from the Department:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, requested to communicate any information he may have in relation to the application by either of the commissioners who visited the Springfield armory under the act of 3d March, 1853, for the office of superintendent of either of the national armories, or any recommendation by either of said commissioners for the appointment of any other person to that office; and in relation to any application by, or in behalf of, any of the commissioners from Harper's Ferry, or Springfield, who testified before the select committee of the House, to which was referred the question of the expediency of employing military officers in the supervision of civil works, for any office in either of said armories, or any recommendation of either of said witnesses of other persons for any such office; and in relation to any application by either of the members of said select committee in their own behalf, or in behalf of any other person or persons for appointment to any office connected with the prosecution of any of the various public works which are the subject of inquiry by such committee.

Mr. CHURCHWELL. I object.

Mr. DICKINSON. It is simply a resolution calling for information. I hope the gentleman from Tennessee will withdraw his objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER] also to object.

Mr. FAULKNER. No, sir; I said I hoped the objection would be withdrawn.

Mr. CHURCHWELL. I will withdraw my objection.

The resolution was then considered and adopted.

TELEGRAPH TO THE PACIFIC.

Mr. FARLEY. I ask the gentleman from Alabama to withdraw his motion for a moment, to allow me to request the House to take up a bill from the Speaker's table, (Senate bill No. 60,) "authorizing the construction of a subterranean line of telegraph from the Mississippi or Missouri river to the Pacific ocean." I ask that it may be taken up and referred to the Committee on Territories. It will give rise to no discussion. I do not propose to put it upon its passage.

There being no objection, the bill was taken up, read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Territories.

Mr. DAWSON obtained the floor.

Mr. PHELPS. I rise to a question of order. Is not the motion of the gentleman from Alabama still before the House?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. PHELPS. Then I call for the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER. The motion of the gentleman from Alabama is before the House, and is the only motion now in order; but the House have, by unanimous consent, indulged several gentlemen in several motions. Gentlemen have risen to ask unanimous consent, and the Chair has indulged them; and, in his opinion, properly indulged them.

THE HOMESTEAD BILL—AGAIN.

Mr. DAWSON. Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a request of the gentleman from Alabama. I desire that he will withdraw his motion that the rules be suspended, and the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the civil and diplomatic appropriation bill, so that I may be afforded an opportunity to ask the unanimous consent of the House, and, in the event of an objection, that I may ask a suspension of rules, to take up the homestead bill as amended by the Senate, as I am anxious to offer further amendments, so as to secure more fully the rights of actual settlers, in which I have full confidence the House will sustain me, and then to press the bill to final action.

Mr. SOLLERS. I object to granting the gentleman unanimous consent.

The question was then taken on Mr. Houston's motion; and it was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. ORR in the chair.)

CIVIL AND DIPLOMATIC BILL.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee take up for consideration the amendments of the Senate to the civil and diplomatic appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOUSTON. I hope that the committee may, by unanimous consent, agree to close debate on these Senate amendments. If there be objection, I shall move to go into the House for the purpose of closing debate.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio. We had better go into the House to secure the purpose indicated.

Mr. HOUSTON. Well, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

So the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the Chairman reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had the state of the Union generally under consideration, and particularly the amendments of the Senate to the civil and diplomatic appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. HOUSTON. I submit the usual resolution closing debate on the amendments of the Senate to the civil and diplomatic bill in five minutes after the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union shall resume the consideration of the same.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. HOUSTON moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted, and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table; which latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOUSTON. I now move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. ORR in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the amendments of the Senate to the civil and diplomatic bill:

Second amendment:

Strike out the words "for compensation of the officers and clerks of both Houses of Congress, $56,730," and insert in lieu thereof the following:

For compensation of the officers, clerks, messengers, and others receiving an annual salary, in the service of the Senate, $57,010.

For compensation of the officers and clerks of the House of Representatives, $34,460.

Mr. HOUSTON. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a non-concurrence in that amendment.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Third amendment:

Strike the word "two" out of the clause "for books, $2,000," and insert in lieu thereof the word "ten," so as to make it read, "for books, $10,000."

Mr. HOUSTON. The committee recommend a concurrence in the amendment.

The amendment was concurred in.

Fourth amendment:

Strike out the word "eight" in the clause "for stationery, $8,000," and insert in lieu thereof the word "fifteen," so as to make it read, "for stationery, $15,000."

Mr. HOUSTON. The committee recommend a concurrence in that amendment.

The amendment was concurred in.

Fifth amendment:

Add the words "six hundred dollars" at the end of the clause, "for newspapers, $2,000," so as to make it read, "for newspapers, $2,600."

Mr. HOUSTON. The committee recommend a concurrence in the amendment.

The amendment was concurred in.

Sixth amendment:

Strike the word "three" out of the clause "for Congressional Globe and binding the same, $3,000," and insert in lieu thereof the words "sixty-five," so as to make it read:

For Congressional Globe and binding the same, $65,000.

Mr. HOUSTON. This amendment is rendered necessary by the fact that the Senate have passed a resolution taking a large additional number of copies of the Congressional Globe, as they had a right to do.

The amendment was concurred in.

Seventh amendment:

Strike out the words "twenty-five" in the clause "for reporting proceedings, $25,000," and insert in lieu thereof the word "thirteen," so as to make it read:

For reporting proceedings, $13,000.

Mr. HOUSTON. The committee recommend a concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

Eighth amendment:

Strike out the clause: "For clerks to committees and President pro tempore, draughtsman, messengers, pages, laborers, police, horses and carry-alls, $43,000," and insert in lieu thereof the following:

For clerks to committees, pages, police, horses and carry-alls, $30,000.

Mr. HOUSTON. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a non-concurrence. That amendment is intimately connected with amendment No. 2; and if we non-concur in the second amendment, that action makes it necessary we should non-concur in the eighth. A good many of the officers provided for in the clause stricken out in No. 8 are transferred to the clause No. 2; and if we concur in this, we thereby deprive the Senate of the appropriation necessary to carry on their business.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Ninth amendment:

Page three, after the word "dollars," insert as follows: Provided, That whenever, in the opinion of the Joint Committee on Printing, the character of any document ordered to be printed may render such change necessary and proper, the size of the page may be changed from octavo to quarto form; but in no cases shall the prices to be paid for composition and press-work exceed, pro rata, those established by the printing act of August the 26th, 1852, for the printing of congressional documents;

The clause, as amended, will read:

For paper and printing of the Senate, $85,000, provided, &c.

Mr. HOUSTON. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a concurrence in that amendment.

The amendment was concurred in.

Tenth amendment:

Page three, after the word "thousand," strike out the words "seven hundred and forty-five," and insert in lieu thereof the words "and fifteen."

The clause, as amended, reads:

For horses and carriages, $4,015.

Mr. HOUSTON. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a concurrence in that amendment.

The amendment was concurred in.

Eleventh amendment:

Page four, line sixty-five, after the word "hundred," add the words "and sixty."

The clause, as amended, reads:

For Capitol police, $3,560.

Mr. HOUSTON. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a concurrence in the amendment.

The amendment was concurred in.

Twelfth amendment:

Strike out the words, "For compensation of Librarian, two assistant librarians, and messenger, $4,500," and insert in lieu thereof as follows:

For compensation of Librarian, three assistant librarians, and messenger, $8,000.

For compensation of Librarian, assistant librarians, and messenger, for the year ending the 30th of June, 1854, $2,700.

Mr. HAVEN. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a non-concurrence in that amendment.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Thirteenth amendment:

To the clause "for purchase of law books for said library, $2,000," add the following words:

For the completion and the publication of the works of Thomas Jefferson, and pay of the editor of said work, $7,200.

To enable the Joint Committee on the Library of Congress to replace the seven volumes and atlas of the Exploring Expedition, destroyed by the burning of the library, and the plates and other property destroyed by the fire in Philadelphia, including binding, $9,970 75.

Mr. HAVEN. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a concurrence in the amendment.

The amendment was concurred in.

Fourteenth amendment:

To the clause "for the compensation of the Secretary of State and Assistant Secretary of State," add the following words:

Chiefs of foreign desks, examiner."

Mr. HAVEN. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a non-concurrence in the amendment.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Fifteenth amendment:

In the same clause strike out the words "thirty-eight thousand seven hundred" and insert in lieu thereof the words "forty-eight thousand two hundred and fifty,"

The clause, as amended, reads:

For compensation of the Secretary of State and Assistant Secretary of State, chiefs of foreign desks, examiner, clerks, messenger, and assistant messenger, in his office, $48,250.

Mr. HAVEN. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a non-concurrence in that amendment.

Mr. PERKINS, of Louisiana. I would like to ask the gentlemen of the Committee of Ways and Means for an explanation in regard to this amendment.

Mr. HOUSTON. The explanation is this: These amendments are made to defend a section of the bill which the committee will reach after a while, and which proposes to change the names of some of the clerks in the State Department, and increases their compensation, and also gives an additional number of clerks to that Department. The Committee of Ways and Means non-concur both in this amendment and the one which we shall after a while reach. It falls back, therefore, upon the existing law in relation to the compensation and the number of clerks in that Department.

Mr. PERKINS. I would ask the gentleman from Alabama if the effect of non-concurring will be to reduce the salaries of the head of the consular bureau?

Mr. HOUSTON. It will not reduce any salaries at all.

The amendment was then non-concurred in.

Sixteenth amendment:

Insert among the items "for the incidental and contingent expenses of the Department of State," the following:

For additional compensation for disbursing clerk and superintendent of the northeast Executive Building, $200.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a non-concurrence. The amendment was non-concurred in.

Seventeenth amendment:

Add, after the appropriation "for publishing the laws in pamphlet form, and in the newspapers of the States and Territories, and in the city of Washington, $18,525," the words:

And such sum shall be paid for publishing the laws in California, Oregon, and Washington, as the Secretary of State may deem reasonable.

Mr. HAVEN. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend an agreement.

The amendment was concurred in.

Eighteenth amendment:

Strike out, under the head of "incidental and contingent expenses of the State Department," after the words "for extra clerk hire and copying, $2,000," the following:

"Said clerks to be employed only during the session of Congress, or when indispensably necessary to enable the Department to answer some call made by either House of Congress at one session to be answered at another."

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a non-concurrence. The amendment was non-concurred in.

Nineteenth amendment:

Page six, after line one hundred and thirty-seven, insert the following:

For services of William Hunter, commissioned as acting Secretary of State during the absence of Secretary Webster, for services as such acting Secretary in 1851, 1852, and 1853, $1,500.

For paying to Asbury Dickens the difference between the compensation of head of a Department and chief clerk of a Department, for the time he acted as Secretary of State, or Secretary of the Treasury, by an appointment of General Jackson, to be ascertained by the proper accounting officers, a sum not exceeding $2,500.

Mr. HAVEN. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a non-concurrence.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Twentieth amendment:

Page seven, line one hundred and forty-nine, strike out the following:

For printing and paper for the Department of State, $200.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a concurrence. The amendment was concurred in.

Twenty-first amendment:

Insert at the end of the appropriations for the State Department:

For the purchase of fifty sets of Howard's Reports of the Decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, $3,500.

For the purchase of copies of the reports of the Supreme Court and Opinions of the Attorneys General of the United States for the Executive offices of the Territories of Kansas and Nebraska, $450.

Mr. HAVEN. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a concurrence.

Mr. PECKHAM. I would inquire of the gentleman from New York what is to be done with these different sets of Howard's Reports?

Mr. HAVEN. This amendment was inserted by the Senate, and it was concurred in by the Committee of Ways and Means, and upon the ground that the officers of the country and the official wants of the country require it. There are some additional district courts, not only in the Territories, but in the State of California, and the Secretary of State and some of the Departments are destitute of them.

The amendment was then concurred in.

Twenty-second amendment:

Insert at the end of the appropriations for the State Department, the following:

That the act approved the 23d April, 1854, entitled "An act to amend the third section of 'An act making appropriations for the civil and diplomatic expenses of Government for the year ending the 30th of June, 1854,' and for other purposes," shall be so construed as, in regard to increased compensation for the fiscal year ending the 30th of June last, to include within its provisions the clerks of the Department of State and the clerks in the Office of the Coast Survey; and that the chief clerk in the State Department shall receive the same compensation as the chief clerks in the other Departments of the Government for the last fiscal year; and that the money necessary to carry these provisions into effect is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. HAVEN. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a non-concurrence.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Twenty-third amendment:

Strike out the clause of the bill: "For compensation of the superintendent and four watchmen of the northeast Executive Building, $2,250," and insert in lieu thereof:

For compensation of four watchmen of the northeast Executive Building, $2,400.

Mr. HAVEN. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a non-concurrence in that amendment.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Twenty-fourth amendment.

Strike out the following from the original bill: "For compensation of the Secretary of the Treasury and Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, clerks, messenger, and assistant messenger in his office $32,000;

"For compensation of the First Comptroller, and the clerks and messenger in his office, $34,500;

"For compensation of the Second Comptroller, and the clerks and messenger in his office, $25,300;

"For compensation of the First Auditor, and the clerks, messenger, and assistant messenger in his office, $30,900;

"For compensation of the Second Auditor, and the clerks, messenger, and assistant messenger in his office, $31,700;

"For compensation of the Third Auditor, and the clerks, messengers, and assistant messenger in his office, $66,950;

"For compensation of temporary clerks, employed in the office of the Third Auditor on bounty-land service, and arrears of pay, $29,608: Provided, That no clerk shall receive more than at the rate of $1,000 per annum under this act, except one, whose salary shall be $1,500 per annum, and four whose compensation shall be four dollars per day;

"For compensation of the Fourth Auditor, and the clerks, messenger, and assistant messenger in his office, $25,200;

"For compensation of the Fifth Auditor, and the clerks and messenger in his office, $12,300;

"For compensation of the Auditor of the Post Office Department, and the clerks, messenger, and assistant messenger in his office, $130,600;

"For compensation of the Treasurer of the United States, and the clerks, messenger, and assistant messenger in his office, $21,500—the office of assistant messenger being hereby created, at an annual salary of $500;

"For compensation of the Register of the Treasury, and the clerks, messenger, and assistant messengers in his office, $36,950;

"For compensation of the Solicitor of the Treasury, and the clerks and messenger in his office, $12,500;

"For compensation of the Auditor of the Post Office Department, and the clerks, messenger, and assistant messenger in his office, $130,600;

"For compensation of the Treasurer of the United States, and the clerks, messenger, and assistant messenger in his office, $21,500—the office of assistant messenger being hereby created, at an annual salary of $500;

"For compensation of the Register of the Treasury, and the clerks, messenger, and assistant messengers in his office, $36,950;

"For compensation of the Solicitor of the Treasury, and the clerks and messenger in his office, $12,500;

"For compensation of the Commissioner of Customs, and the clerks and messenger in his office, $17,700;

"For compensation of the clerks and messenger of the Light-House Board, $7,600;"

—and insert in lieu thereof, as follows:

For compensation of the Secretary of the Treasury and Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, clerks, messenger, and assistant messenger in his office, $46,650;

For compensation of the First Comptroller, and the clerks and messenger in his office, $30,050;

For compensation of the Second Comptroller, and the clerks and messenger in his office, $26,150;

For compensation of the First Auditor, and the clerks and messengers in his office, $37,900;

For compensation of the Second Auditor, and the clerks and messengers in his office, $36,100;

For compensation of the Third Auditor, and the clerks and messengers in his office, $121,850;

For compensation of the Fourth Auditor, and the clerks and messenger in his office, $29,300;

For compensation of the Fifth Auditor, and the clerks and messenger in his office, $15,550;

For compensation of the Auditor of the Post Office Department, and the clerks, messenger, and assistant messenger in his office, $163,300;

For compensation of the Treasurer of the United States, and the clerks and two messengers in his office, one additional messenger being hereby created therefor, $26,900;

For compensation of the Register of the Treasury, and the clerks and messenger in his office, $51,700;

For compensation of the Solicitor of the Treasury, and the clerks and messenger in his office, $16,850;

For compensation of the Commissioner of Customs, and the clerks and messenger in his office, $19,750;

For compensation of the clerks and messenger of the Light-House Board, $8,550.

Mr. HOUSTON. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a non-concurrence in that amendment. The amendment is to make the appropriation conform to the increased compensation of the clerks in the Departments. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a non-concurrence, for the purpose of placing the compensation of the clerks under the existing laws. We have another amendment which provides for the increase.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I would call the attention of the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means to an amendment which that committee have recommended to be made to the matter the Senate have proposed to strike out. We propose to strike out in the two hundred and thirty-second line the words "$36,950," and to insert "$41,750."

Mr. HOUSTON. The gentleman from Tennessee is correct. That is to provide for three additional clerks authorized by the deficiency bill.

The clause, if amended, would read:

For compensation of the Register of the Treasury, and the clerks, messenger, and assistant messengers in his office, $41,750.

Mr. HOUSTON. The recommendation, then, is to disagree to the whole amendment with an amendment.

Mr. JONES. I think the proper course would be first to amend the clause proposed to be stricken out.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks it would not be in order to go back to the original text of the bill.

Mr. JONES. The clause proposed to be stricken out has not gone out of the control of the House. The Senate has refused to concur in it, and it is therefore brought again before the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks it would not be in order.

Mr. JONES. Then let it go. Let the vote be taken upon concurring in the whole amendment.

The question was taken; and the amendment was non-concurred in.

Mr. ROBBINS. Now, I suppose, it will be in order to strike out and insert, so as to provide a compensation for these three clerks?

The CHAIRMAN. It is the opinion of the Chair that the committee cannot go back to amend the original text of the bill.

Mr. HOUSTON. My motion was to disagree to the Senate amendment with an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that motion would have been in order.

Mr. HOUSTON. That was the motion I originally made.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the Chair will entertain the motion to strike out "$36,950," and to insert in lieu thereof "$41,750."

Mr. LETCHER. Is it in order to go back and to move to strike out?

The CHAIRMAN. It is not in order to go back to the original text. The gentleman from Alabama moved that the committee non-concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment. The Chair should have put both motions at the same time. He did not then understand the gentleman from Alabama, and now puts the motion which ought to have been put before.

Mr. OLDS. Is it parliamentary to non-concur with amendments? I think not; but it is in order to move to strike out and insert.

The CHAIRMAN. If the question of order is raised and insisted upon, the Chair must decide the motion cannot be made; for you cannot touch the original text.

Mr. HOUSTON. If the gentleman from Ohio is so fond of questions of order, I must submit. The amendment is only to increase the appropriation in order to pay the legal salaries of clerks created by ourselves.

Mr. OLDS. Gentlemen can move to strike out and insert. I only desire that we may proceed according to the rules which we have adopted to regulate our proceedings.

Mr. HAVEN. What becomes of the amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment has been ruled out of order, and the Senate amendment non-concurred in.

Twenty-fifth amendment:

For additional compensation for disbursing clerks and superintendents of Executive buildings, provided in the third section of the act of 3d March, 1853, entitled "An act making appropriations for the civil and diplomatic expenses of Government for the year ending the 30th of June, 1854," for the Treasury Department, $600.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a non-concurrence in the amendment.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Twenty-sixth amendment:

For revision of the revenue laws already made, and a report showing the changes and alterations therein, $5,000.

Mr. HAVEN. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a non-concurrence in the amendment.

Mr. FULLER. I hope that the committee will concur in the twenty-sixth amendment of the Senate. The Secretary of the Treasury has prepared a codification of the revenue laws, which will make a volume of about three hundred pages. It changes, in many respects, all the existing laws on the subject. That communication has been sent to the Senate, and will be printed during the vacation. Congress will be called upon to act on the subject at the next session. Any gentleman familiar with the codification of statutes knows that it is necessary, where you change the law, to have it numbered and accompanied by explanatory notes. I believe this amendment of the Senate important and necessary because the Committees on Commerce of the Senate and this House have had this subject under their consideration during the whole of the present session. Both committees believe that this appropriation for the purpose of preparing this report in the vacation will be an economical expenditure of the public money, and will greatly add to the proper understanding of the bill when the House will be called to act on the subject at the next session.

For these reasons in brief—and I would like to go more into detail, but will not take up the time of the committee—I hope that the committee will concur in the amendment of the Senate.

Mr. HAVEN. I desire to say, Mr. Chairman, by way of justification of the Committee of Ways and Means, and in answer to the gentleman from Maine, that for this revision of the revenue laws this House, at the present session, passed a bill appropriating $5,000. Ten thousand dollars was asked for; but it slipped up after discussion, and it was referred to the Committee of Ways and Means. The committee reported back in favor of allowing $5,000 for the codification of these laws. This gentleman was appointed some time last year. My friend suggests that it is an onerous business to compile and codify these laws. It was the opinion of the Committee of Ways and Means then—and it was their opinion now—when acting upon this bill, and it was the opinion of the House and Senate this session, that the $5,000 provided for in that bill was a full and sufficient compensation; and I hope the House will not concur in the amendment of the Senate.

Mr. FULLER. I move to increase the amount one dollar, in order that I may make a brief explanation.

It will be remembered that the appropriation of $10,000 for this purpose was inserted in the civil and diplomatic bill of last year; but by a mistake or omission of the engrossing clerk, the amendment was not incorporated in the act. The Secretary of the Treasury employed persons to codify the laws; and it was not until the work had partially progressed, that the omission was discovered. The appropriation was originally for $10,000, as it should have been. It is true, that $5,000 have been appropriated. That amount of money has been expended, and the commissioner when he got it quit the work. Since that time, the Secretary has summoned to his aid two of the clerks in his Department, who have worked at nights in order to complete this revision. It is still an imperfect work, and incomplete in its character for the want of this report to accompany it; and it is for that purpose I ask an appropriation of $5,000.

Mr. HAVEN. This, I am free to say, is turning out a little different from what I supposed. It would seem, from the explanation given by my friend from Maine, that the commissioner to whom we paid $5,000 has cheated us. We paid him $5,000 for doing the entire work, and nobody else had anything to do with it. We employed nobody else to do it. He speaks of commissioners. There was but one man employed, and I believe we paid him $5,000. If there be any truth in the fact, as suggested by him, that he has abandoned the contract, and failed to finish the report, that is an additional reason why we should not pay the advance now asked to anybody else. But I understand the facts differently from my friend from Maine. I understand that it is trying to ring in again the additional $5,000 that both Houses refused to give the commissioner when the subject was under consideration before. I should think that $5,000 was pretty good pay for a gentleman coming from the interior of the State of Pennsylvania. It is more than justices of the Supreme Court get. I have nothing further to say.

Mr. LETCHER. Who is to get this money?

Mr. HAVEN. The Committee of Ways and Means understood it was to be appropriated here for the benefit of the commissioner. I have understood it was for him. I understand the gentleman from Maine now to say, that the commissioner has backed out and left his work, and that he wants this sum of $5,000 for the Secretary of the Treasury to pay the clerks who were engaged at nights upon this work. If this is true, it is dishonorable on the part of the commissioner to abandon the work; and, for one, I am not disposed to vote money to pay any one else in advance for work until it is done.

Mr. FULLER. I desire to correct the statement of the gentleman from New York. If the committee had investigated this subject as I have, I think they would concur in this amendment of the Senate. In the first place, I do not know that Judge Barrett was employed for any particular time. He worked so long as he was employed by the Secretary of the Treasury, for the compensation agreed to be paid him. The act originally contemplated three commissioners. I can say to gentlemen of the committee, that this work of codifying the laws is a work of great labor. I will say further, in order to have a proper understanding of the matter, that I care not who does the work, or how much compensation you give for the service; but it is important that we should have a report showing the difference between the old revenue laws and the present law.

Mr. FULLER, by unanimous consent, then withdrew his amendment to the amendment.

Mr. GROW. I move to amend the amendment by increasing the appropriation five dollars. I propose this amendment for the purpose of being able to say a word or two in explanation of the conduct of this commissioner, in reply to the remarks of one of the members of the Committee of Ways and Means, [Mr. HAVEN.] The commissioner came here to codify the revenue laws. His salary was fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury. Congress appropriated $10,000 for the purpose, instructing the Secretary of the Treasury to devote that sum to the payment of the service of the three commissioners to whom the work was to be assigned. They were unwilling, however, to undertake the work for the consideration of $10,000. Two of them, therefore, refused to serve, leaving the other commissioner to commence the work. He did so; and Congress made an appropriation of $5,000 last session to pay the expenses of that compilation, including not only the salary of the codifier, but the salaries of clerks, the expenses of office, &c.

Your codifier refused to serve any longer at that pay. Had he not a right to do so? He came here for no express time. Is he bound to stay here four or five years without sufficient remuneration from the Government? He was at liberty to leave whenever he pleased; and if his pay were insufficient, that was a good reason for him to leave; and he exercised that right. What reason can be found by the Committee of Ways and Means, or by this House, to refuse to appropriate this commissioner a sufficient amount of compensation? Congress authorized the Secretary of the Treasury to employ whom he chose for that work; and the person employed had, of course, a right to leave when he thought proper. This right the commissioner exercised.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The committee will recollect that early in the present session this whole subject was fully debated here. The law and resolution of a late session authorized the employment of three commissioners for the purpose of revising the revenue laws. The Secretary of the Treasury, for reasons that are known to this committee, did not employ three commissioners, but he employed one. That gentleman expected, as he served, to get $10,000, which sum, it was believed, would be appropriated for the work. This House and the Senate, on discussion, and on investigation of the subject, determined at this session to appropriate but $5,000 for the purpose, believing that that would be ample compensation for one commissioner. And now it is proposed in this bill to pay the additional $5,000 for him. I hope that will not be done.

The question was taken on Mr. GROW's amendment to the amendment; and it was not agreed to.

Mr. FULLER. I move to amend the amendment by increasing the appropriation ten dollars.

I am unwilling, Mr. Chairman, that a question of so much importance as I know this to be should go out sideways on an attack upon the commissioner appointed by the Secretary of the Treasury, or on the point of the difference between $5,000 to $10,000. Gentlemen will understand that this project to codify the revenue laws of the United States involved an examination of all the statutes passed since the establishment of the Government, of all your Treasury circulars, of all the decisions of the Supreme Court, and of the thousand and one different and modified tariff laws which have been passed.

This whole subject has been taken up, and has been codified, and the report will be presented to the House, for its action, at the commencement of the next session of Congress. Now, sir, when that question shall come up, the members of this House will want to act understandingly upon it, and I say it is necessary that we should have, with that law, the accompanying report, numbering each amendment, one, two, three, &c., and referring to the old act, so that we can understand what it is. I say the $5,000 recommended by the Secretary of the Treasury is necessary, and the work will be, for this House, a most useful and beneficial one. But I do not want, as I said before, to have this question shoved off in a sideways manner.

Mr. LETCHER. I want to know who is to get the money, if Judge Barrett has resigned?

Mr. FULLER. I am willing to leave that to the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury, as he has his reputation at stake upon it.

Mr. LETCHER. This money is wanted, as the gentleman says, for two persons who have been working at nights upon this matter. I want to know who these two persons are who are to receive it; for it looks to me very much like a demand for extra compensation in a roundabout way.

Mr. FULLER. I say the work would be incomplete without the report.

Mr. LETCHER. The gentleman told us in his opening remarks that three of those men had worked at night, and that this money was wanted to cover the expense of that sort of work. Now, I want to know who the persons are, whether they are salaried officers or not; and if they are, who they are. The gentleman certainly knows; can he inform the House?

Mr. HAVEN. If there is a moment of the gentleman's time left, I desire to say that the gentleman from Maine is still mistaken, and that he is not more enlightened than the rest of us. He says that this money is not wanted to pay for any work which has already been done. But the very language of this amendment is, "for revision of the revenue laws already made."

I desire now to say one word in reply to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. GROW.] I have not attacked Judge Barrett. I say that, upon the hypothesis which the gentleman from Pennsylvania himself has presented, he has behaved dishonorably; but I do not think he has; and I hope the truth will turn out differently from what they allege. The law, which was passed some time ago, was so stringent that it required the Secretary of the Treasury to report to us, the first week of the next session of Congress, the items of money which he has paid out of that $5,000.

The question was then taken upon Mr. FULLER's amendment; and it was not agreed to.

The question recurring upon agreeing with the Senate amendment, it was put; and decided in the negative.

So the amendment was non-concurred in.

Twenty-seventh amendment:

Strike out, under the head "Light-House Board," the following:

"For paper and printing of the Treasury Department, including paper, printing, and binding the annual 'Statement of Commerce and Navigation,' and for paper and printing the annual 'Estimates of Appropriation,' $17,200."

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

Twenty-eighth amendment:

Page seventeen, line three hundred and ninety-five, insert the words "eight hundred," so that the clause shall read:

For compensation of eight watchmen of the southeast Executive Building, $4,800.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

Twenty-ninth amendment:

Strike out the clause: "For compensation of the Secretary of the Interior, and the clerks, messengers, and laborers, in his office, $29,800," and insert in lieu thereof:

For compensation of the Secretary of the Interior, and the clerks and messengers in his office, $28,400.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a disagreement to that amendment.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Thirtieth amendment:

Insert under the head of "Department of the Interior" the following:

For paying of laborers, $1,095.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a disagreement to that amendment.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Thirty-first amendment:

In line four hundred and twenty-eight strike out "$139,500," and insert "$165,050," so that the clause will read:

For compensation of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and the recorder, draughtsman, assistant draughtsman, clerks, messengers, assistant messengers, and packers in his office, $165,050.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a disagreement to that amendment.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Thirty-second amendment:

In line four hundred and thirty-one strike out "$3,000," and insert "$2,190," so that the item will read:

For compensation of six laborers, $2,190.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a disagreement to that amendment.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Thirty-third amendment:

In line four hundred and fifty strike out "$27,800," and insert "$29,900," so that the item will read:

For compensation of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and the clerks, messenger and assistant messenger in his office, $29,900.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a disagreement to that amendment.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Thirty-fourth amendment:

Strike out "For compensation of the Commissioner of Pensions, and the clerks and messengers in his office, $66,800."

For compensation to thirty temporary clerks employed in the office of the Commissioner of Pensions, $31,300: Provided, That no clerk shall receive more than at the rate of $3.33 per day," and insert in lieu thereof:

For rent of building on Seventh street, for the office of Indian Affairs, commencing the 12th of June, 1854, at $1,200 per annum, $1,263.33;

For compensation of four watchmen for building occupied by the office of Indian Affairs, commencing the 15th of June, 1854, $2,500;

For fuel and lights, and necessary fixtures for warming and lighting the rooms occupied by the office of Indian Affairs, $16;

For compensation of the Commissioner of Pensions, and the clerks and four messengers in his office, $108,300.

Mr. HOUSTON. I propose that the question shall first be taken upon striking out. I then propose to move to insert what the Senate substitute under the head of Indian Affairs where it properly belongs.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the course proposed by the gentleman from Alabama would not be in order.

Mr. HOUSTON. Well, sir, then I will say, that the Committee of Ways and Means recommend a concurrence in that amendment with an amendment. I move to amend the Senate amendment, in the four hundred and seventy-eighth line, by striking out "$108,200," and inserting "$97,800," so that the item would read:

For compensation of the Commissioner of Pensions, and the clerks and four messengers in his office, $97,800.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment of the Senate, as amended, was then concurred in.

Thirty-fifth amendment:

Strike out the following:

"For engraving bounty land warrants, $5,000;

"For stationery, $2,500;

"For binding books, $1,000;

"For furniture, $500;

"For miscellaneous items, $1,000;" and in lieu thereof insert the following:

For engraving and printing bounty land certificates, $5,000;

For stationery, $3,000;

For binding books, $2,000;

For furniture, $500;

For miscellaneous items, $5,000;

For compensation of laborers, $1,500.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a concurrence in the amendment.

The amendment was concurred in.

Thirty-sixth amendment:

Strike out the words: "For paper and printing for the Department of the Interior, $8,000."

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a concurrence in the amendment.

The amendment was concurred in.

Thirty-seventh amendment:

For additional compensation for disbursing clerks and superintendents of Executive Buildings, provided in the third section of the act of 2d March, 1853, entitled "An act making appropriations for the civil and diplomatic expenses of the Government for the year ending the 30th of June, 1854," for the Department of the Interior, $600.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a non-concurrence in the amendment.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Thirty-eighth amendment:

In the following paragraph, after the word "thousand," insert "four hundred."

For compensation of four watchmen for the eastern wing of the Patent Office, occupied by the Secretary of the Interior, $2,000.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a concurrence in the amendment.

The amendment was concurred in.

Thirty-ninth amendment:

For the annual compensation of a librarian, to be appointed by the Commissioner of Patents, the sum of $1,600, the amount now allowed by law to clerks of the third class, to be paid out of the patent fund.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a non-concurrence in the amendment.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Fortieth amendment:

For the purchase of books for the library of the Patent Office, and for supplying a deficiency in former appropriations, the sum of $5,000, to be paid out of the patent fund.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a concurrence in the amendment.

The amendment was concurred in.

Forty-first amendment:

To reimburse the patent fund for expenses already incurred and paid for furnishing the new wing of the Patent Office building, the sum of $16,000 of the appropriation made by the act approved 31st of May, 1854, for furnishing said wing, be, and the same is hereby authorized to be transferred by the proper accounting officers of the Treasury to the credit of the patent fund.

Mr. JONES. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a concurrence in the amendment.

The amendment was concurred in.

Forty-second amendment:

For the preservation of the collections of the Exploring Expedition;

For compensation of keepers, watchmen, and laborers, $2,980;

For contingent expenses, $100.

Mr. JONES. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a non-concurrence in the amendment.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Forty-third amendment:

For compensation of the Surveyor General of Washington Territory, and the clerks in his office, $7,500.

Mr. JONES. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a concurrence in the amendment.

The amendment was concurred in.

Forty-fourth amendment:

Strike out the words:

"For compensation of the Superintendent of the Public Printing, and the clerks and messenger in his office, $6,595," and in lieu thereof insert the following:

For compensation of the Superintendent of the Public Printing, and the clerks and messenger in his office, $9,595: Provided, That the joint resolution, approved the 20th of July, 1854, shall be so construed as to embrace the Superintendent of Public Printing, and the clerks and messenger in his office.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The Committee of Ways and Means propose that the proviso in the Senate amendment be stricken out, and that then we concur in the amendment as amended.

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky. I hope the proviso will not be stricken out. The messengers and clerks in the office of the Superintendent of Public Printing, as well as the Superintendent himself, are employed for the purpose of executing the work of the two Houses of Congress. They are clearly legislative employees, and, as such, are as much entitled to this extra compensation as any of the other officers employed about this building. I understand that a construction is put upon the resolution passed July 20, by which they are deprived of the extra compensation allowed by that resolution. It seems to me right and proper, while the rest of the employees at both ends of the Capitol shall receive extra compensation under that resolution, that these gentlemen also should receive it. I hope the House will not strike out that proviso.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The Superintendent receives himself $2,000, and his clerks, I believe, $1,500 each. I think that this compensation is amply sufficient for the Superintendent and his clerks.

Mr. STANTON. Almost every clerk in that department has more duties to perform, and is more constantly at work, than the clerks employed by the two Houses of Congress.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Towers conducted his business with two clerks; but now there are four employed in this department. The clerks in the State Department are excluded from the benefit of any increased compensation, as well as the clerks in the office of the Superintendent of Public Printing. There are a great many clerks who do not enjoy the benefit of this extra compensation. Our object in recommending striking out a portion of this amendment was to let this question of increased compensation rest at present, so that at the next session we may take up this subject and mature some proper system, which shall embrace all these clerks.

Mr. STANTON. I have only to say, in reply to the gentleman, that the increase of business in the office made it necessary to employ additional clerks.

Mr. JAMES C. ALLEN. I desire to make an inquiry of the gentleman from Kentucky. I understand that the law increasing the salaries of the clerks of both Houses of Congress has been so construed as not to include the Superintendent of the Public Printing, and the clerks employed in his office. Now, I understand that the proviso has been added here in the Senate amendment, for the purpose of enabling them to receive additional compensation as the other clerks receive it. The duties of the Superintendent have increased in proportion to the amount of increase in the public printing.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate upon the amendment has been exhausted already, and no further debate is in order.

Mr. JAMES C. ALLEN. I move, then, to increase the amount of the appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. There is no appropriation provided for in the proviso.

Mr. JAMES C. ALLEN. I move, then, to strike out the words "clerks and messengers," for the purpose of making a few remarks. I understand that the construction given to that law cuts off the Superintendent of Public Printing and his clerks employed in his office, from any additional compensation. If it be right to increase the compensation of the other clerks in the Capitol—

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. I rise to a question of order. I understand that the gentleman from Illinois proposes to amend the amendment submitted by the Committee of Ways and Means.

The CHAIRMAN. That is the proposition.

Mr. STEPHENS. Then it is an amendment in the third degree, and is out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is inclined to concur in the view of the question of order taken by the gentleman from Georgia. Under the practice of the House, we have been in the habit of treating the Senate's amendment as an amendment, and it is only amendable in the second degree. The Chair, therefore, thinks that the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois is not in order.

Mr. PECKHAM. What does the Chair mean by the "second degree?"

The CHAIRMAN. An amendment to an amendment is in the second degree.

Mr. PECKHAM. And was not the proposition of the gentleman from Illinois to amend the amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; and that amendment which the gentleman from Illinois proposes to amend is itself an amendment to a pending amendment. That makes it in the third degree, and is not in order.

Mr. PECKHAM. Then no amendment can be in order here at all?

Mr. HENN. Has not the gentleman from Illinois a right to perfect the original amendment? The amendment of the Committee of Ways and Means is a motion to strike out; and the proposition of the gentleman from Illinois is in order, as it proposes to perfect the Senate's amendment.

Mr. STEPHENS. There is no doubt about the question of order. The original question before the House is on agreeing to the Senate's amendment. That is the question pending. The Committee of Ways and Means proposes to amend it. That is an amendment in the second degree. The proposition of the gentleman from Illinois now is to amend that proposed amendment to the Senate's amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; but the gentleman from Georgia is aware that it is in order to perfect the portion proposed to be stricken out before a vote can be taken on the amendment to strike out, the amendment to strike out being considered as held in abeyance until the proposition to perfect is disposed of.

Mr. STEPHENS. The amendment of the gentleman from Illinois is nevertheless an amendment in the third degree.

The CHAIRMAN. In the opinion of the Chair, derived from the suggestion of the gentleman from Iowa, the amendment of the Committee of Ways and Means to strike out cannot be entertained until the part proposed to be stricken out is perfected; and it is this which the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois proposes to do.

Mr. STEPHENS. That is the case when the vote is on the original proposition; but when it involves an amendment in the third degree, it cannot be entertained. And hence, when there is an amendment in the second degree proposing to strike out, the question is first to be taken on it. Otherwise we might multiply amendments to the tenth or hundredth degree.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks it is in order to amend any section proposed to be stricken out before the vote is taken on striking out; and upon that ground the Chair will hold the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois in order.

Mr. JAMES C. ALLEN. I was remarking, when interrupted by the question of order, that, as I understand, the construction given to the resolution raising the salary of the clerks of this House, cuts off the Superintendent of Printing from the benefits of that law. I presume that no member will dispute the fact that the business of that officer has increased in quite as great a ratio as that of other clerks about this establishment; and I cannot, for the life of me, see why it is that you ought to cut him off from the benefits of the resolution increasing the salary of employees of the House of Representatives.

It does seem to me that this bill should be so amended, that the Superintendent of the Public

Printing shall be permitted to take the increased salary, which I have no doubt was intended to be given to him, at the time of the passage of that act; and from the receipt of which he has been excluded, by the fact that he holds his appointment from the President of the United States, and is not an employee or appointee of this House.

It seems to me that the amendment of the committee ought not to prevail. If there has been an increase of salary to other officers, and to the Clerk of the House of Representatives, the same reason which induced that increase, it seems to me, ought to apply to the Superintendent; for it is known, as I before remarked, that his business has increased in quite as great a proportion as that of the clerks about the Departments and of this House.

Mr. MURRAY. I am opposed to striking out this proviso, and I wish to say only a word upon it. All the clerks about the Capitol have had their pay increased, with the exception of the Superintendent of the Public Printing, and the clerks in his office. I do not know of any reason why other clerks should be allowed an extra compensation, and the Superintendent and his clerks excluded. They should all be placed upon the same footing, and I am therefore in favor of the amendment passed by the Senate.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I desire to ask the gentleman from New York a question, and that is, if he does not think that the Superintendent and his clerks now receive a sufficient compensation?

Mr. MURRAY. I was opposed to the increase of the compensation of any of the employees about the Capitol; but as the House has seen fit to increase the compensation of others, I see no reason why these should not be included, and their compensation increased also.

Mr. JONES. But does not the gentleman think that they now get enough under the law as it is?

Mr. MURRAY. I will be perfectly frank with the gentleman. I think they all get enough. I voted against the increase of compensation; but as the House saw fit to do it, I think these gentlemen have equal claims to it.

The question was taken upon Mr. ALLEN's amendment; and it was not agreed to.

The question then recurring on agreeing to the proposition to strike out the proviso of the forty-fourth amendment,

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio, called for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. CUMMING and CHAMBERLAIN were appointed.

The question was taken; and the tellers reported—ayes 73, noes 62.

So the proviso was stricken out.

The question then recurring upon the amendment of the Senate, as amended; and being taken, was decided in the affirmative.

So the amendment was concurred in.

Forty-fifth amendment:

In the five hundred and eighty-third line strike out "$20,750," and insert "$22,650," so that the item, as amended, would read:

For compensation of the Secretary of War, and the clerks, messenger, and assistant messenger in his office, $22,650.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a disagreement to that amendment.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Forty-sixth amendment:

In the five hundred and ninety-third line strike out "$11,600," and insert "$14,750," so that the item, as amended, would read:

For compensation of the clerks and messenger in the office of the Adjutant General, $14,750.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a disagreement to that amendment.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Forty-seventh amendment:

In line six hundred and one strike out "$14,000," and insert "$16,350," so that the amendment, as amended, would read:

For compensation of the clerks and messenger in the office of the Quartermaster General, $16,350.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a disagreement to that amendment.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Forty-eighth amendment:

In line six hundred and fourteen strike out "$10,900," and insert "$12,350," so that the clause, as amended, would read:

For compensation of clerks and messenger in the office of the Paymaster General, $12,350.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a disagreement to that amendment.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Forty-ninth amendment:

In line six hundred and seventeen strike out "$8,000," and insert "$9,350," so that the clause, as amended, would read:

For compensation of the clerks and messengers in the office of the Commissary General of Subsistence, $9,350.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a disagreement to that amendment.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Fiftieth amendment:

In the following paragraph strike out "$7,400," and insert in lieu thereof "$8,150:"

For compensation of the clerks and messenger in the office of the Chief Engineer, $7,400.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a non-concurrence in the amendment.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Fifty-first amendment:

From the following paragraph strike out "$4,400," and in lieu thereof insert "$5,750:"

For compensation of the clerks and messenger in the office of the Surgeon General, $4,400.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a non-concurrence in the amendment.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Fifty-second amendment:

From the following paragraph strike out "$5,600," and in lieu thereof insert "$9,950:"

For compensation of the clerks and messenger in the office of the Colonel of Topographical Engineers, $5,600.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a non-concurrence in the amendment.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Fifty-third amendment:

From the following paragraph strike out "$10,400," and insert in lieu thereof "$12,150:"

For compensation of the clerks and messenger in the office of the Colonel of Ordnance $10,400.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a non-concurrence in the amendment.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Fifty-fourth amendment:

Strike out the following paragraph:

For printing and paper for the War Department, $2,400.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a concurrence in the amendment.

The amendment was concurred in.

Fifty-fifth amendment:

For additional compensation for disbursing clerk and superintendent of Executive Building, provided in the third section of the act of the 3d of March, 1853, entitled "An act making appropriations for the civil and diplomatic expenses of Government, for the year ending the 30th of June, 1854," for the War Department, $200.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a non-concurrence. The amendment was non-concurred in.

Fifty-sixth amendment:

In the following paragraph, after the word "thousand," insert the words "four hundred:"

For compensation of four watchmen of the northwest Executive Building, $2,000.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a concurrence in the amendment.

The amendment was concurred in.

Fifty-seventh amendment:

From the following clause strike out "$21,875:"

For compensation of superintendent and four watchmen of the building corner of F and Seventeenth streets, $23,500.

For rent of house on northwest corner of F and Seventeenth streets, or such other building as the Secretary of War may select, and warming all the rooms in it, $21,875;

For compensation of superintendent and four watchmen of the building corner of F and Seventeenth streets, $23,500, and in lieu thereof insert the words:

Thirty-two thousand three hundred and seventy five dollars; and the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to lease said building, or some other, for a term not exceeding five years, at the rent herein authorized, if, in his judgment, the same shall be for the public interest.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a non-concurrence in the amendment.

Mr. HOUSTON. That amendment is disagreed to by the Committee of Ways and Means; and I desire to call the attention of the committee to it, for a purpose which I will now state. It proposes to increase the rent of the Winder building to $30,000 per annum. Mr. Winder has given the Secretary of War notice to abandon the building, or agree to pay $30,000 rent per annum for five years. I wish to suggest whether it would not be better for us to amend the Senate's amendment by offering to purchase the building at $200,000, which was the proposition at the last session of Congress.

[Cries of "Yes!" and "No!"]

Mr. HOUSTON. I have no feeling about the matter; but it is evident that the Department will have to abandon the building, or take a five years' lease at $30,000 per annum.

Mr. CHANDLER. I would ask the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means whether he understands the proprietor of the building will take $200,000 for it?

Mr. HOUSTON. I do not know. He offered to take that amount at the last Congress.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio. I move to add the following words:

And that the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized, if, in his opinion, the interest of the United States would be promoted by the purchase of the building owned by William H. Winder, and now rented by the Government, situated at the corner of Seventeenth and F streets, in the city of Washington, to purchase the same at a valuation to be made by disinterested parties, mutually chosen by the Secretary of War and the proprietor, the amount of the valuation, so to be ascertained, to be paid by him out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. HOUSTON. I desire to say to the gentleman from Ohio that he had better propose his amendment as a substitute for that of the Senate. Let it come in immediately after the appropriation in the original text of the bill, because if the Senate amendment should be voted down, then the amendment of the gentleman will go with it.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio. I would inquire whether, if my amendment be rejected, I could offer it then by proposing to strike out the Senate amendment, and insert mine in lieu of it?

The CHAIRMAN. It will be in order to move to strike out and insert.

Mr. TAYLOR. I offer it as an additional section. In the early part of this session, the subject of purchasing or renting Winder's building was discussed in the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, of which I am a member, and the matter underwent a thorough examination by them. This building has been in the occupancy of the Government for many years, at a rent of $21,800. Reports of committees of the House in former Congresses were examined, and particularly that made by my friend from Kentucky, [Mr. STANTON] in the last Congress, which I now hold in my hands. It was recommended by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds that this building should be purchased at the sum of $250,000. Mr. Winder asked $300,000, and a committee of this House two years ago proposed to give him $250,000 rather than rent it at $21,000 and upwards a year. It will be recollected by gentlemen who were members of the last Congress that the Committee of Ways and Means proposed—I think my friend from Tennessee [Mr. JONES] suggested it—that we should buy it at $200,000, if Mr. Winder would agree to that price, and that we came within a few votes of assenting to the proposition. Mr. Winder stated to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds that he would agree to take that sum under protest as being less than the building cost him; but he was willing to take it in order to save other property being sacrificed.

I think, without pretending to be a judge of the value of this property, although I have examined this subject carefully, that the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds have made a proposition to the House which is a fair and just one to all parties. What is it? It is the amendment I send to the Chair, that the Secretary of War be authorized, if, in his opinion, it is necessary for the public interests, to buy this building at a valuation to be made by parties mutually chosen. I do not know what the building is worth. Mr. Winder says it cost him $250,000, but is willing, as an honest and fair man, to abide by such a valuation. The building is absolutely necessary for the public convenience, and I think we ought to agree to this valuation. If I wished to sell a farm, I should be perfectly willing to have a valuation made under such circumstances as is proposed here. In my opinion, it is the best mode of procuring the building. If you say, as the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Houston] proposes, that you will buy the building for $200,000, will Mr. Winder take it? Will you say that you will retain the building and not pay the rent? It is out of our power, because Mr. Winder gave legal notice last December that he must have $30,000 instead of $21,000, in order to pay his taxes, insurance, and have a reasonable return for his outlay of capital. The building was put up at the request of the Government. They have occupied it for a long series of years. But they have not paid $20,000 a year for it during the whole time. For a part of the time, when the building was unfinished, the proprietor received only from $9,000 to $10,000 for it. In my humble judgment, and in the judgment of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, the best policy for this House to pursue, is to authorize the purchase of the building in question, rather than to pay $30,000 a year rent for it. And, for one, I am perfectly willing that the Secretary of War be authorized to purchase it.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. I am opposed to the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. Taylor.] I am opposed to the purchase of the building on the plans suggested. At the last Congress, I thought it would be much better for the Government to buy this building for $200,000. But that has not been done. Congress refused to buy it. I have no doubt myself that the building cost more than $200,000. I have no doubt of the correctness of the statement made by Mr. Winder, at the last Congress. He was willing then to take $200,000; but I know not whether he is willing to take it now. My opinion is that it is worth more than $200,000. He has since given notice to the Government that the rent will be increased. I ask the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, if he has had a communication from the Secretary of War on the subject?

Mr. HOUSTON. Yes; I have had a communication recommending the purchase of the building.

Mr. STEPHENS. I wish to have that communication read. I wish the committee to be informed of the state of the case, as laid down in the letter of the Secretary of War.

Mr. HOUSTON. The communication in question is down in the committee room, but I will send for it. The Secretary of War states the facts to be—

Mr. STEPHENS, (interrupting.) I know what the facts are, but I wish the communication to be read to the committee.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio. I have a letter from the Secretary of War on the subject, if the gentleman from Georgia desires to have it read. It is to the effect that it is better for the Government to buy the building at $250,000 than to pay $30,000 per year rent for it.

Mr. STEPHENS. That is a fact which we all know. What I want to have read is a communication from the Secretary of War to the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, stating that he thinks that this rent is a moderate rent; but that his opinion is, that Government had better buy the building than pay this rent for it. That is the opinion of the Secretary of War. The Government has got no other place for the transaction of the business to which this building is applied.

Now, sir, I know no better thing for the House to do than to concur in the Senate's amendment; and at the next session of Congress, if we can adopt some plan by which the building can be purchased, why let us adopt it. But for the time being we must pay the rent. I thought that the action of the House last session was wrong, and I think so yet.

Mr. McNAIR. I desire to ask the gentleman from Georgia at what time does the lease close?

Mr. STEPHENS. The lease was for five years.

Mr. McNAIR. But how long is it from this time?

Mr. STEPHENS. The present lease has closed on the 1st of July. Before the expiration of the lease—six months ago—a notice was served on the Government, as you will see from the letter of the Secretary of War, that the rent would be increased. So that the Government now has got to pay the increased rent, or leave. There is no existing lease at all. And, as I remarked a moment ago, it is better for us to concur in the Senate's amendment; and next winter, if we can make any terms with Mr. Winder for the purchase of the building, let us do it. I hope, therefore, that the committee will concur in the amendment of the Senate.

Mr. GOODE. The gentleman from Georgia proposes that we make a temporary arrangement, and then arrange the matter next session, while the landlord at this very time is insisting upon a general arrangement for five years. I am willing to consent to the purchase now, if gentlemen who have examined the matter are willing that it should be done.

Mr. STEPHENS. According to my suggestion, between this and the next session of Congress, the Secretary of War and Mr. Winder can make any arrangement they can agree upon, and communicate that agreement to the House. In the mean time, by a temporary arrangement, we can go on and use the building as we now are doing.

Mr. SAGE. Would it be in order to make a suggestion to the gentleman from Ohio. I desire that he should add to his amendment the words "at a sum not exceeding $225,000."

Mr. TAYLOR. I cannot modify my amendment.

Mr. WALSH. I move to amend the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio, by adding after the word valuation the words "two hundred thousand dollars."

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment is not in order now.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. I ask that the letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, which I requested from the gentleman from Alabama, may be now read.

The CHAIRMAN. No further amendment is in order until the pending amendment is disposed of. If there is no objection, the letter will be read.

Mr. ROWE. I object.

The question was then taken upon Mr. TAYLOR's amendment; and it was not agreed to.

Mr. CRAIGE. I now move to amend the amendment by inserting the following words:

Provided, That the Secretary of War may purchase the said building for a sum not exceeding $200,000.

I offer the amendment in consequence of a conversation I had with Mr. Winder at, or near the commencement of the session. In the capacity of chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, I had a conversation with him, and at that time he was willing to accept $200,000 for the building; and the committee to which I have the honor to belong, were unanimously of the opinion then, that the building ought to be purchased, although we have a bill which we have been anxious to report for some time, providing for the completion of the Treasury Buildings and for the erection of a building for the War and Interior Departments. The committee were of opinion that this building would be necessary for the use of the Government until those other buildings should be completed; and, at the same time, they thought they ought not to exceed that sum. The committee, however, finally agreed that the gentleman from Ohio should report a bill to purchase the building at $250,000. But the effect of the present measure of the Senate, which will give $10,000 a year more for rent than we pay now, will be to enhance the value of the property to such an extent, that the property cannot be purchased for anything like that money. If this pending amendment is adopted, the result will be, that the Government will purchase the building at that price, and I hope it will be adopted; for I think the building ought to be purchased.

Mr. JONES, of New York. I think that Mr. Winder has taken precisely the right course, in accordance with the usual practice of the House, to have this building purchased. If I recollect right, this very property was offered to us during the last session of Congress for a less sum than $200,000. If I am not mistaken, he offered us the same property then for about $180,000. But, now, I suppose he thinks that by raising the rent about $10,000, and threatening that he will turn us out, he can accomplish his object. And I think he is upon the high road to accomplish it.

But, sir, I doubt whether there is any sincerity in this attempt. I would not vote for the proposition at all. I can see no reason why we should at this time be dragged into the purchase of a building which will be of no earthly use to us whatever. The only possible advantage that can be derived from the purchase of the building is, that if it should be set on fire it would burn every thing in it. Sir, when a similar proposition was under discussion, upon a former occasion, it was stated that the building was so rickety that whenever a storm came up the clerks were compelled to flee out of it, for fear it would tumble down over their heads. A part of the roof has been blown off since I have been here, and the whole roof leaks like a riddle. I doubt very much whether, if the Government were out of the way, the building could be rented for $10,000.

Mr. CRAIGE. I desire to ask the gentleman if the roofs of other Government buildings have not been blown off under similar circumstances; and further, whether the building is not in the actual occupancy of the Government, and one hundred and forty clerks employed in it?

Mr. McNAIR. That panic among the clerks took place at the time of the earthquake.

Mr. JONES. I say I doubt whether, by any manner of means, that building could be made to bring more than $5,000 if the Government were to abandon it. The building is not needed by the Government even now. The Surgeon General's Office is there, the Pension Office is there, and other offices are there; but if they were distributed among the different departments of the Government, room enough could be found for them, where the papers connected with them would be much safer than where they are.

I am opposed to the amendment, and hope no provision will be made for the purchase of this building.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I would suggest to the gentleman from North Carolina that he substitute his amendment for that of the Senate. The two propositions would come very awkwardly in the same amendment.

Mr. CRAIGE. I accept the gentleman's suggestion, and offer the amendment as a substitute.

Mr. CRAIGE's amendment was again read.

Mr. TAYLOR. If the amendment be adopted, how would the paragraph then read? It seems to me that it does not provide for the rent at all.

The CHAIRMAN. It provides the original sum passed on when the bill was pending before the House.

Mr. TAYLOR. It is offered then as a substitute for the Senate amendment?

Mr. CRAIGE. I propose to purchase the building and not to rent it at all.

Mr. TAYLOR. Does not the gentleman propose to rent it at all?

Mr. CRAIGE. No, sir.

Mr. HOUSTON. If the gentleman will look at what immediately precedes the Senate's amendment, he will find that, if we vote down that amendment, we fall back on the original text of the bill, which proposes to rent the building for $19,500 per annum. Then would come in the proviso, authorizing the purchase of the building for $200,000.

Mr. TAYLOR. I understand that the Senate's amendment is to strike out the provision for rent altogether.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood the amendment of the gentleman from North Carolina, to be a substitute for the amendment of the Senate.

Mr. CRAIGE. Yes, sir, and to leave the original text of the bill.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The gentleman's amendment provides for non-concurring in that portion of the Senate's amendment which strikes out, and substituting what has been read at the Clerk's desk for what the Senate proposes to insert.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman's amendment be adopted it will make no provision for paying rent.

Mr. CRAIGE. Oh! yes.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman offers his amendment as a substitute, that will be its effect.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. The gentleman's amendment is out of order. It proposes to amend the original text.

Mr. CRAIGE. The gentleman from Georgia misapprehends my amendment. It does not propose to amend the original text. It leaves that as it is, but proposes to substitute other words for those of the Senate amendment.

Mr. STEPHENS. The amendment of the Senate was to strike out certain words, and to insert in lieu thereof other words.

Mr. CRAIGE. I propose to let the original text stand, so far as the rent is concerned.

Mr. STEPHENS. The gentleman wants the original text to stand as it was, and to substitute for the Senate's amendment what he has offered?

Mr. CRAIGE. Yes sir.

Mr. STEPHENS. That cannot be done.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I understand the gentleman to substitute his amendment for what the Senate proposed to add.

Mr. STEPHENS. The gentleman proposes to disagree to the Senate's amendment, and to add something to the original text.

Mr. WASHBURN. May he not amend the Senate amendment, or any part of it, by striking it out, and substituting anything else? He proposed to strike out a part of what the Senate has adopted, and insert something else.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair then understands the amendment of the gentleman from North Carolina to be to agree to the Senate amendment, with an amendment.

Mr. CRAIGE. If the Chairman will look at the beginning of the clause, commencing at the six hundred and seventy-first line, he will find that it reads thus:

"For rent of house on northwest corner of F and Seventeenth streets, or such other building as the Secretary of War may select, and warming all the rooms in it, $21,875."

I am willing that that should be left in, and after the six hundred and seventy-seventh line, instead of "$32,375," insert:

Provided that the Secretary of War may, if he sees proper, purchase the building at a sum not exceeding $200,000.

I am perfectly satisfied that Mr. Winder will take $200,000.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I desire to ask the Chair a question for information. Does not the fact that the committee disagree to the amendment of the Senate leave the bill as it passed the House?

The CHAIRMAN. If they disagree to the amendment of the Senate.

Mr. HOUSTON. If the gentleman from North Carolina will modify his amendment, I think it will be in order—so as to make this clause precede what he has already sent to the Chair:

For rent of house on northwest corner of F and Seventeenth streets, or such other building as the Secretary of War may select, and warming all the rooms in it.

Then it will be in order as a substitute for the original text and the Senate amendment.

Mr. CRAIGE agreed to the modification.

The amendment, as modified, was read as follows:

For rent of house on northwest corner of F and Seventeenth streets, or such other building as the Secretary of War may select, and warming all the rooms in it, $21,875: Provided, That the Secretary of War be authorized to purchase said building at a sum not exceeding $200,000.

Mr. TAYLOR. I understand that as going back to the original text of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks not.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. These words are still in the text.

Mr. TAYLOR. Certainly they are.

Mr. JONES. If the gentleman from North Carolina will commence his amendment with the words proposed to be stricken out by the Senate, ($21,875; for compensation of superintendent and four watchmen of the building corner of F and Seventeenth streets, $2,250,) then he could more correctly insert his proposition for the purchase of the building.

Mr. WALSH. That is precisely what the gentleman from North Carolina proposes to do.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will again report the modified amendment.

The amendment as modified, was again reported.

Mr. JONES. The first part of that amendment is here in the original House bill, and the Senate has not stricken it out.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina will modify his amendment so as to commence in line six hundred and seventy-seven.

Mr. STEPHENS. Let him strike out the Senate's amendment and insert the proposition in his own words, beginning with the words $21,875.

Mr. CUMMING. I want to say one word. Add to the amendment the words, "or such other building." It appropriates $200,000 for any building, so far as I can see.

Mr. CHAIRMAN. Debate is not in order.

Mr. PENNINGTON. I wish to ask a question for information. I desire to know whether it is competent for this committee to adopt a substitute for the Senate's amendment? If so, there is not the slightest difficulty in obviating all the difficulties in which the committee is involved. Now, what is the Senate's amendment?

[Cries of "Order!" and "Question!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The modified amendment of the gentleman from North Carolina will perhaps meet the views of the gentlemen of the committee. The gentleman from North Carolina proposes to strike out that which the Senate strikes out, and insert the following in lieu of that which the Senate has inserted. After the word "it," in the six hundred and seventy-third line, insert the following words:

Twenty-one thousand eight hundred and seventy-five dollars: Provided, That the Secretary of the Treasury be authorized to purchase the said building at a sum not exceeding $200,000.

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky. I suppose it is in order to move to amend this proposition by striking out. We certainly have a right to perfect it before the question is taken.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that further amendment at this time is not in order.

Mr. STANTON. I propose to make the Senate amendment, as it now stands, more acceptable to the House by my amendment; and perhaps, if my amendment should make it more acceptable, it would defeat the amendment of the gentleman from North Carolina.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the amendment is not in order.

Mr. WALSH. I wish to ask my friend from North Carolina one question, and that is, whether he desires, by his amendment, to leave it optional with the Secretary of War to rent this or any other building; but that if he purchase any building, he must purchase this alone?

Mr. CRAIGE. My amendment does not make it imperative that he shall purchase any building.

The question now being on Mr. CRAIGE's amendment,

Mr. OLDS called for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. CHAMBERLAIN and KITTREDGE were appointed.

The question was then taken; and the tellers reported—ayes 87, noes 36.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I now propose—

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I wish to amend the amendment which has just been voted upon.

Mr. JONES. You cannot do that. The amendment has been adopted, and it is not competent for the committee to amend it now.

Mr. SMITH. What I propose is, to offer a proviso to come in at the end of the amendment which has been adopted; I have the right to do that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee was first recognized, and is entitled to the floor.

Mr. SMITH. I rise to a question of order. I desire to amend the amendment which has just been voted upon. The gentleman from Tennessee, as I understand it, wishes to amend the bill further on. If the gentleman is allowed to make his motion, it will cut me off from making mine. I desire to offer a proviso to the amendment which has been adopted, and I hold that that amendment must take precedence of a motion to amend the bill further on.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the question of order.

Mr. SMITH. But let me say a word in explanation. This building is not paid for.

Mr. JONES. I understand all that.

Mr. SMITH. Well, I appeal to the gentleman to allow my amendment to be read.

Mr. JONES. I have no objection to the gentleman's amendment being read; but I submit, as a question of order, that the amendment having been adopted, no amendment to it can be entertained.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the amendment cannot be amended in the present stage of proceeding.

Mr. SMITH. I appeal to the committee to allow my amendment to be read.

Mr. JONES. I have no objection to that.

Mr. SMITH. The amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina, which has been adopted by the committee, as a substitute for the amendment of the Senate, is liable to bring us into trouble in the form in which it has been adopted. This building has not been paid for, and I propose to add a proviso that, in the event of the purchase of the building, a portion of the money to be paid shall be applied to pay for the materials and labor expended in the erection of the building which are still due Winder's building, as it is called, but the title is not even in Winder.

Mr. HIBBARD. I rise to a question of order. I refer the Chair to Jefferson's Manual to show that, when an amendment has been adopted as a substitute, it is impossible to amend it.

Mr. SMITH. It has not been adopted. There is no reason why the Chair should not entertain the amendment. The amendment of the gentleman from North Carolina has been adopted as a substitute for the Senate's amendment, but the question has not been taken upon the adoption of the amendment of the Senate as amended; and, therefore, amendments are still in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will say to the gentleman from Virginia, that, even if the amendment which had been adopted could be amended, he would not hold the amendment which the gentleman proposes to offer to be in order, for the reason that it proposes to control the disposition of money which is appropriated for the purchase of this building.

Mr. SMITH. The Chair does not understand my amendment. I presume he has not read it. It has been read to the committee. [Cries of "Order!"] It is no use for gentlemen to cry "Order." I am in order; and I ask that my amendment may be read.

[Renewed cries of "Order!"]

Mr. SMITH. I am not out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is out of order.

Mr. CULLOM. The Chair has recognized my colleague, [Mr. JONES,] and the gentleman from Virginia is not in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The proposition will be read, if there be no objection, for the information of the committee.

There being no objection, Mr. SMITH's amendment was read by the Clerk, as follows:

Provided, That in the purchase or leasing of said building it shall be agreed that the rents, as they fall due, or the purchase money, as the case may be, shall be applied by the Secretary of War to pay all arrears which may be due for labor and materials expended in the construction of said building.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair rules the amendment out of order.

Mr. SMITH. I appeal from that decision of the Chair.

I would like to call the Chair's attention to this point.

[Cries of "Order!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman must remember that debate is not in order.

Mr. SMITH. I do not wish to debate the question.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman desires to state the ground on which he appeals from the decision of the Chair, it will be in order for him to do so. Debate, however, is not in order.

Mr. SMITH. I do not desire to debate the question. The ground of my appeal from the decision of the Chair is this: The amendment of the gentleman from North Carolina provides for the making of a contract, and my amendment merely provides one of the terms of that contract, and is, therefore, in my opinion, strictly in order.

The question was taken on the appeal; and the decision of the Chair was sustained.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. As the amendment of the gentleman from North Carolina has been adopted, I now propose that we disagree in so much of the Senate's amendment as proposes to strike out the words, "for compensation of superintendent and four watchmen of the building corner of F and seventeenth streets, $2,250," and with so much as proposes to insert the words "$32,375; and the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to lease said building, or some other, for a term not exceeding five years, at the rent herein authorized, if, in his judgment, the same shall be for the public interest." If the amendment which I propose be adopted, then the bill will be left with an appropriation for the renting of the building at the present price, and authority to purchase it at $200,000. That is what I think ought to be done, and what I suppose this committee desires to be done, judging from the vote just taken.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio. I desired very much, before the question was taken on the amendment of my friend from North Carolina, [Mr. CRAIG], to have offered an amendment, and made some statements in reply to what fell from the gentleman from New York, [Mr. JONES], as to this being an entirely worthless building. I will now merely state that the gentleman from New York is antagonistic in his opinion to the Committee on the Public Buildings and Grounds of the last Congress; and one of its members was himself an experienced practical builder. They said that the building had been constructed with great care, of good material, and is perfectly fire-proof. Now, I am aware that the committee has adopted an amendment to purchase the building; but I am not at all certain as to the propriety of the amount stipulated to be paid. It is said to have cost more than $200,000. Property has advanced in value in this city; and ground has also advanced with equal rapidity.

Mr. LANE, of Oregon. Time is of great value now, and I would ask, Mr. Chairman, whether the gentleman from Ohio is in order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that the gentleman from Ohio is in order.

Mr. TAYLOR. I shall not detain the committee long. Mr. Robert Mills, who was in the public employment some years ago as an architect, stated that this property was worth $260,000; and the committee at the last Congress recommended that it should be purchased for $250,000. It was stated in a report of the committee at the last session that the proprietor would take $300,000 for it. Now, this committee has voted that he shall sell it for $200,000, and be forced to take $21,000 per annum rent, when he asks $30,000. We are now occupying the building of a private citizen without his consent, and giving him a price for its use far below what he has asked. Now, I am aware that the gentleman from North Carolina had a private conversation with Mr. Winder, in which the latter agreed to take $200,000 for his building. I understood him to say that he would not take that amount for it, and hence the amendment that it should be purchased at a valuation.

Mr. CRAIG. There is no difficulty on that subject.

Mr. TAYLOR. Are you aware that Mr. Winder will take $200,000 for the property?

Mr. CRAIG. I am not.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio. Inasmuch as I understand the proposition—

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I submit that there is no proposition before the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of the opinion that the object which the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. JONES] had in view was accomplished by the amendment of the gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. CRAIG].

Mr. WASHBURN. Exactly, and there is no question before the committee.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I hope to be indulged by the House for a moment in making a remark, as I am really desirous of information in regard to this matter. If we authorize this property to be rented or purchased, can we not attach to it a condition that the rent shall be applied to this purpose of paying for the material?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair decided that such an amendment would not be in order.

The question recurring on the amendment, as amended,

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine, demanded tellers; which were not ordered.

The question was taken; and a division being had, there were—ayes 80, noes not counted.

So the amendment, as amended, was concurred in.

Fifty-eighth amendment:

For compensation of superintendent and four watchmen of the building on the corner of F and Seventeenth streets, $2,600.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The committee recommend a concurrence in that amendment.

The amendment was concurred in.

Fifty-ninth amendment:

Strike out in line six hundred and ninety-one "seven thousand one," and insert in lieu thereof "eight thousand seven," so as to make the clause read as follows:

For compensation of the Secretary of the Navy, and the clerks, messenger, and assistant messenger in his office, $8,700.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The committee recommend a non-concurrence.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Sixtieth amendment:

In line six hundred and ninety-nine strike out the words "ten thousand eight hundred," and insert in lieu thereof the words "eleven thousand six hundred and fifty," so as to make the clause read:

For compensation of the chief of the Bureau of Ordnance and Hydrography, and the clerks and messenger in his office, $11,650.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The committee recommend a non-concurrence in that amendment.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Sixty-first amendment:

In line seven hundred and six strike out the words "thirteen thousand seven hundred," and insert in lieu thereof the words "fourteen thousand eight hundred and fifty," so as to make the clause read:

For compensation of the chief of the Bureau of Navy Yards and Dock, and of the civil engineer, clerks, and messenger, in his office, $14,850.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The committee recommend a non-concurrence in that amendment.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Sixty-second amendment:

In page thirty, line seven hundred and fifteen, strike out the words "twenty thousand eight hundred," and insert the words "twenty-two thousand five hundred and fifty."

The clause, as amended, reads:

For compensation of the Chief of the Bureau of Construction, Equipment, and Repairs, and of the chief naval constructor, engineer-in-chief, and the clerks and messenger, in his office, $22,550.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a non-concurrence in that amendment. I will state to the committee that quite a number of these small amendments were made by the Senate, to conform this bill to that for the increased compensation, passed some time ago. The Committee of Ways and Means have a proposition to put them all into the one clause. That is the reason why they recommend non-concurrence in this.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Sixty-third amendment:

Page thirty, line seven hundred and twenty-two, strike out the words "seven thousand three hundred," and insert in lieu thereof the words "eight thousand one hundred and fifty."

The clause, as amended, reads:

For compensation of the clerks and messenger in the Bureau of Provisions and Clothing, $8,150.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a non-concurrence.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Sixty-fourth amendment:

Page thirty, line seven hundred and twenty-eight, strike out "7,900," and insert in lieu thereof "8,350."

The clause, as amended, reads:

For compensation of the Chief of the Bureau of Medicine and Surgery, and the clerks and messenger in his office, $8,350.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a non-concurrence.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Sixty-fifth amendment:

Strike out the following clause:
"For printing and paper for the Navy Department, $2,000."

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

Sixty-sixth amendment:

For additional for disbursing clerk and superintendent of Executive Building, provided in the third section of the act of the 3d of March, 1853, entitled "An act making appropriations for the civil and diplomatic expenses of Government for the year ending the 30th of June, 1854," for the Navy Department, $200.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a non-concurrence in that amendment.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Sixty-seventh amendment:

Page thirty-one, line seven hundred and forty-eight, after the word "thousand," add the words "four hundred."

The clause, as amended, reads:

For compensation of four watchmen of the southwest Executive Building, $2,400.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a concurrence in that amendment.

The amendment was concurred in.

Sixty-eighth amendment:

Page thirty-two, line seven hundred and sixty, strike out "$1,450," and insert in lieu thereof the following words, "and messengers of said Department, $150,150."

The clause, as amended, reads:

For compensation of temporary clerks necessarily employed from the 9th of May, 1853, to the 30th of June, 1854, and messengers of said Department, $150,150.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a non-concurrence in that amendment.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Sixty-ninth amendment:

For compensation of temporary clerks necessarily employed from the month of May, 1853, to the 30th of June, 1854, $1,450 98.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a non-concurrence in that amendment.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Seventieth amendment:

For additional for disbursing clerk and superintendent of Executive Building provided in the third section of the act of the third of March, 1853, entitled "An act making appropriations for the civil and diplomatic expenses of Government for the year ending the 30th of June, 1854," for the Post Office Department, $200.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a non-concurrence.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Seventy-first amendment:

For compensation of three watchmen for the Post Office Building, $1,800.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a non-concurrence in that amendment.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Seventy-second amendment:

Page thirty-three, line seven hundred and eighty-three, strike out "for printing and paper for Post Office Department, $1,000," and insert in lieu thereof:

For paper and printing for the Executive Department, including paper, printing, and binding the annual "Statement of Commerce and Navigation," and paper and printing the annual "Estimates of Appropriations," $30,800.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a concurrence in that amendment.

The amendment was concurred in.

Seventy-third and seventy-fourth amendments:

Page thirty-three, line seven hundred and ninety-eight, insert the words "assistant melter and refiner," and in line seven hundred and ninety-nine strike out "$33,400," and insert in lieu thereof "$34,900," so as to make the clause read:

For salaries of the director, treasurer, assayer, melter, and refiner, chief coiner, and engraver, assistant surveyor, assistant melter, and refiner, and seven clerks, $34,900.

Mr. HAVEN. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a non-concurrence in those amendments.

The amendments were severally non-concurred in.

Seventy-fifth amendment:

Insert after the appropriations for the Mint at New Orleans, the following:

For rebuilding portions of walls and complete repairs of the building of the branch Mint at New Orleans, $55,000.

Mr. HOUSTON. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend that the House concur in that amendment with an amendment. The committee propose to strike out "$55,000," and insert in lieu thereof "$37,000."

The amendment of the committee was agreed to.

The amendment of the Senate, as thus amended, was then concurred in.

Seventy-sixth amendment:

Page thirty-six, line eight hundred and seventy-one, under the head of "Territory of Oregon," strike out "twenty," and insert in lieu thereof "thirty," so as to make it read:

THE CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE.

THE OFFICIAL PROCEEDINGS OF CONGRESS, PUBLISHED BY JOHN C. RIVES, WASHINGTON, D. C.

33D CONGRESS, 1st Session.

TUESDAY, AUGUST 1, 1854.

NEW SERIES...No. 128.

For compensation and mileage of the members of the Legislative Assembly, officers, clerks, and contingent expenses of the Assembly, $30,000.

Mr. HAVEN. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a concurrence in that amendment.

The amendment was concurred in.

Seventy-seventh amendment:

Page thirty-six, line eight hundred and seventy-six, in the appropriation for the contingent expenses of the Territory of New Mexico, strike out "$1,000," and insert in lieu thereof, "including the compensation of the person employed by the Governor as a translator, $1,500;" so as to make the clause read:

For contingent expenses of said Territory, including the compensation of the person employed by the Governor as a translator, $1,500.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a concurrence.

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky. I propose an amendment to that clause, by adding at the end of it the following:

And the Clerk of the House of Representatives shall pay to William Carr Lane, out of the contingent fund thereof, mileage and per diem to the day when the contest for the seat as a Delegate from the Territory of New Mexico was decided.

Mr. LETCHER. Is that amendment in order?

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. It is irrelevant.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair decides the point of order well taken, and rules the amendment out of order.

Mr. STANTON. There is certainly a law authorizing the appointment of a Delegate from that Territory to this Congress.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The question is not debatable.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair rules the amendment out of order, upon the ground that it is not germane to the Senate amendment.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. If the gentleman from Kentucky will look forward to line eight hundred and eighty-nine, he will see where his amendment will be germane.

The question was then taken on the Senate amendment, and it was concurred in.

Seventy-eighth amendment:

Page thirty-six, line eight hundred and eighty-one, among the appropriations for the Territory of New Mexico, insert, "including the compensation of the person employed by the Governor to revise and correct the laws of New Mexico, and the expense of printing the same," so as to make the clause read:

For compensation and mileage of the members of the Legislative Assembly, officers, clerks, and contingent expenses of the Assembly, including the compensation of the person employed by the Governor to revise and correct the laws of New Mexico, and the expense of printing the same, $20,000.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

Seventy-ninth amendment:

To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to pay for the preservation of the archives of the Territory from May 5th to September 9th, 1852, $420.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend an agreement to the amendment.

The amendment was concurred in.

Eightieth amendment:

For the payment of Richard H. Weightman for mileage and per diem compensation for the second session, Thirty-First Congress, as an agent claiming to be a Senator elect from New Mexico, $2,460.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a non-concurrence in that amendment.

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky. I propose to amend that amendment by adding at the end the following:

And the Clerk of the House of Representatives shall pay to William Carr Lane, out of the contingent fund thereof, mileage and per diem to the day when the contest for a seat as Delegate from the said Territory of New Mexico was decided.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I submit a question of order in reference to this amendment. It is not in order, because there is no law authorizing the appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair decides that the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky is not in order, upon the ground that it is not germane to the section under consideration, and for the further reason, that there is no provision of law authorizing it. It is true that the amendment provides for a claim similar to that set up for Mr. Weightman; but there is no connection whatever between the two cases, and none can be made to exist legitimately.

Mr. STANTON. I ask the Chair whether, if this section inserted by the Senate be rejected, it will then be in order to offer mine as an independent section?

The CHAIRMAN. It will not.

Mr. STANTON. Then I must appeal from the decision of the Chair; and I ask for tellers upon the appeal.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. KERR, and ELLIOTT, of Kentucky, were appointed.

Mr. McMULLIN. I ask the Chair to state the question.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has ruled the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky not to be in order, upon the ground, among others, that it is not germane to the amendment of the Senate under consideration. That is a sufficient reason for his decision, and the question, therefore, is, "Shall the decision of the Chair remain as the judgment of the committee?"

Mr. MILLSON. If the committee should reverse the decision of the Chair, I desire to ask if it will then be in order to object to the amendment for another reason than that now stated?

The CHAIRMAN. Should the committee reverse the decision of the Chair, he will then rule the amendment to be in order.

Mr. MILLSON. Then I desire to state another reason why the amendment is not in order.

Mr. KERR. I object.

Mr. MILLSON. Have I not the right to state reasons why the amendment is not in order?

The CHAIRMAN. One question of order is already pending, and it is not in order to raise another while that is pending.

Mr. MILLSON. But I desire to state additional reasons why the amendment is not in order.

[Cries of "Order!" "Order!"]

Mr. MILLSON. I ask the Chair if it is competent for the Senate to vote upon a proposition to pay money out of the contingent fund of this House.

Mr. HUNT. I rise to a question of order. The gentleman from Virginia is out of order. He is making an argument.

The question was then taken on the appeal; and the decision of the Chair was sustained; the tellers having reported—ayes 73, noes 51.

Mr. LANE, of Oregon. I offer the following amendment:

That the widow of Samuel K. Thurston, late Delegate from Oregon, be allowed the difference between the mileage her late husband received as such Delegate, and that allowed the present Delegate.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I ask the Chair if that amendment is in order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair rules the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oregon out of order, upon the same ground that he ruled the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky out of order.

Mr. JONES. The committee recommend a non-concurrence in the eightieth amendment.

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky. I move to strike out the name of "Roger H. Weightman," and insert in lieu thereof "William Carr Lane;" and also to strike out the word "Senator," and insert in lieu thereof the word "Delegate."

The CHAIRMAN. The same objection would apply to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky, as to the amendments that have been already offered and ruled out of order. The proposition is to make a complete change of the existing text.

Mr. STANTON. I cannot see the distinction which the Chairman draws. The amendment I offer is to pay a Delegate sent by the people of New Mexico to this Congress. I propose to substitute the name of William Carr Lane in the place of that of Roger H. Weightman; but, according to the decision of the Chair, the amendment cannot be made.

The question was taken; and the amendment of the Senate was non-concurred in.

Eighty-first amendment:

Strike out in the nine hundred and thirty-fifth and nine hundred and thirty-sixth lines "$10,500," and insert in lieu thereof "$11,500;" it being hereby provided that the respective salaries of the Governor and superintendent of Indian affairs be increased to $2,000 per annum; so as to make the clause read as follows:

For salaries of Governor, superintendent of Indian affairs, three judges, and secretary, $11,500; it being hereby provided that the respective salaries of the Governor and superintendent of Indian affairs be increased to $2,000 per annum.

Mr. JONES. The committee recommend a non-concurrence in the amendment.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Eighty-second amendment:

To reimburse the fund appropriated to defray the pay and mileage of members of the Legislative Assembly and the contingent expenses thereof, the amount fraudulently taken from said fund by Henry V. Colter, and to relieve Charles H. Mason, Secretary of said Territory, from his liability therefor, $2,000.

Mr. JONES. The committee recommend a concurrence in that amendment.

The amendment was concurred in.

Eighty-third amendment:

For compensation and expenses of commission to frame a code of laws for the Territory, $2,500.

Mr. JONES. The committee recommend a non-concurrence in the amendment.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

The committee here rose informally; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, a message in writing was received from the President of the United States, by SIDNEY WEBSTER, Esq., his Private Secretary.

ENROLLED BILLS.

Mr. GREEN, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills reported as correctly enrolled the following bills and joint resolutions; which thereupon received the signature of the Speaker:

Joint resolution for the relief of John A. Bryant;

An act for the relief of William G. Smith;

An act for the settlement of the claims of W. P. Buckner and Pierce Crosby, passed midshipmen in the United States Navy; passed assistant surgeon in the United States Navy;

An act for the relief of Henry La Reintree; and
An act to authorize the payment of invalid pensions to the heirs of Lieutenant Robert White and others.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to take from the Speaker's table the message which has just been received from the President of the United States, in order that it may be referred and printed.

The SPEAKER. Is it the pleasure of the House that the message should be presented?

[Cries of "Yes!" "Yes!"]

The SPEAKER accordingly laid before the House a message from the President of the United States, in answer to a resolution of the House of Representatives of the 28th instant, requesting information in regard to the destruction of San Juan del Norte, inclosing therewith reports from the Secretary of State and the Secretary of the Navy, with accompanying documents.

Mr. BAYLY. I move that the message and accompanying papers be referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, and be printed.

No objection being made, it was so ordered.

Mr. PECKHAM. Is it proper to move that the papers be read now.

[Cries of "Read!" "Read!"]

Mr. WHEELER. I call for the reading of the papers.

The SPEAKER. The call for the reading comes too late, the papers having already been referred.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. It has never been customary to read the documents accompanying a message, and it has never been done.

Mr. WHEELER. It is time it was done then.

Mr. PECKHAM. I do not insist upon it.

CIVIL AND DIPLOMATIC BILL—AGAIN.

The committee then resumed its session, and proceeded with the consideration of Senate amendment number eighty-three, in reference to compensation for codifying the laws of the Territory of Washington.

Mr. LANCASTER. The Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Washington convened in the latter part of the month of February, and immediately appointed a commission for the codification of its laws. They appointed the chief justice of the Territory, one of the associate justices, and one of the late justices of the Territory of Oregon, as such commission. By the labors of these commissioners a code of laws, and a full code, as I understand from my correspondents, was drawn up, and the time of the sitting of the legislative body was very much diminished by the aid of the labors of that commission. They have performed their duties as commissioners, and the Legislative Assembly has adjourned; and it was supposed, from the course pursued by Congress in such cases, that they were entitled to compensation for their services. I believe it will be admitted that in almost every Territory of the United States, commissioners have been appointed to aid the Legislature in drafting the laws, and they have been paid in every case where they have been so appointed. Acting upon such precedents, the Senate placed this amendment in the bill.

I believe I have set forth all the facts connected with the case; that they were appointed by the Legislature; that they sat as a board of commissioners; that they drafted a code of laws and submitted it to the Legislature; that the code was adopted; and that thereupon the Legislature adjourned. The amount placed in this bill is intended for the payment of those commissioners.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee, obtained the floor.

Mr. LANE, of Oregon. If the gentleman will allow me, I desire to propose an amendment.

Mr. JONES. I wish first to speak in opposition to the amendment already pending. I cannot see the necessity of codifying the laws of the Territory of Washington so early after its organization. But if it were necessary and proper that it should be done, it would have been right for them to have obtained an appropriation before they directed the service to be performed. It is not right that we should recognize the acts of a Territorial Legislature, which creates liabilities upon the Treasury of the United States, when those acts are passed without the authority of Congress.

If they pass laws incurring liabilities without first obtaining that authority, they should look to their own people, and raise the amount necessary by taxation.

Sir, this is setting a bad precedent. It will be a very bad practice if followed out. The Territorial Legislatures will then become appropriating powers, as well as the Congress of the United States, out of the national Treasury. The whole thing, I think, is wrong. Even if it were necessary to have this service performed, they should not have directed it to be done until Congress had made an appropriation to defray the expenses. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a non-concurrence in the amendment.

Mr. LANCASTER. I will not detain the committee but a moment.

The CHAIRMAN. There is no proposition before the committee that is debatable.

Mr. LANCASTER. I move to increase the appropriation to $3,000.

Mr. Chairman, I cannot see the difference of principle between Congress appropriating a certain sum of money beforehand and commissioners acting after the appropriation is made, and the principle of their acting before that appropriation is made, if they acted properly and like honest men. This, sir, is the most remote Territory belonging to this Government. It is, for the most part, a wilderness. But, sir, it was organized by the direction of Congress; and when that organization took place, it became necessary for that legislative body to enact laws for the purpose of giving validity to the business of the Territory; and it also became necessary for them to call in the aid of the most able men in the Territory to frame a code of laws. The Legislative Assembly accordingly employed the best talent that the Territory afforded, and the best that could then be obtained, and a code of laws was framed. Yet now the objection is raised that they acted before an appropriation was made.

Sir, in Oregon a board of commissioners was appointed for the same purpose; and the same thing has been done, I believe, in several, if not all, of the other Territories, for the purpose of framing a proper code of laws for the government of the Territory.

But the gentleman from Tennessee complains that this board of commissioners acted before authority was given them by Congress. Sir, it was necessary that these laws should be enacted at once, and it was necessary that they should be framed into a proper code. These commissioners performed that duty, and now ask as compensation for their labors, $2,500.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I will ask the gentleman if the judges of the Territory were appointed to perform this service?

Mr. LANCASTER. I will tell the gentleman who they were. Chief Justice Lander, of Washington Territory, one of the associate justices of Washington Territory, and ex-Judge Strong, of Oregon. These were the three persons who constituted that commission.

Mr. JONES. I suppose they had nothing else to do?

Mr. LANCASTER. This was not any part of their duties as judges. They were appointed at a certain salary to perform certain duties, and they were not bound to perform others without extra compensation.

Mr. PECKHAM. Do I understand the gentleman to say that these commissioners were then officers of the Government?

Mr. LANCASTER. They were then sitting as judges.

I will say now, in conclusion, not desiring further to consume the valuable time of the committee, that the Territory was without laws, and it does seem to me that we should not object to the Legislature employing the best legal minds within their reach for this purpose.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I suppose that there was a Legislature then to make laws.

Mr. LANCASTER. The appointment of this commission for the purpose, was the cause of the saving of a great deal of time and money. The Legislature, to accomplish the same purpose, would have been compelled to remain long in session, and at a very heavy expense.

Mr. LANCASTER, by unanimous consent, withdrew his amendment.

Mr. LANE, of Oregon. I move to amend the Senate's amendment by substituting for it the following:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be authorized to settle and pay the commission to frame a code of laws for the Territory of Washington, at the same rate per diem as has been allowed a similar board in Oregon.

Mr. Chairman, if the Senate amendment be adopted, I desire that the amendment which I have just offered may be made to it. It is the just principle for the payment of these commissioners, and I presume that the gentleman from Washington will not object to it.

Now, I will state why I offered the amendment. The Territory of Washington, by law, provided that the commissioners for the framing of its code of law should be paid ten dollars per day. We did not ask that amount for the commissioners who framed the code for Oregon. We only asked half that price. I think that we had better not discriminate between these Territories. They lay side by side. If the committee at all provide for the payment of these commissioners, let them be paid as those for Oregon were, at five dollars per day.

The question was taken; and the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The question was then put on the amendment of the Senate, as amended; and, on a division, there were—ayes sixty—

Mr. LETCHER. I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. HARRIS, of Alabama, and PARKER, were appointed.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The Committee of Ways and Means have recommended a non-concurrence in the Senate amendment.

The question was taken; and the tellers reported—ayes seventy-one; noes not counted.

So the Senate amendment, as amended, was concurred in.

Eighty-fourth amendment:

For the completion of the geological reconnaissance of the Territory of Washington, and to make detailed examinations in the coal and mineral regions thereof, $10,000.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The committee recommend a non-concurrence in the amendment.

Mr. LANCASTER. I move to increase the amount $100. Some time ago, I do not recollect how long since, geologists were appointed to make a geological survey of the Pacific coast. Their field of labor was in Oregon Territory. The division of the Territory of Oregon leaves the Territory of Washington without a geological survey, and there has not been an extended geological reconnaissance upon the coast itself. The Pacific coast is supposed to contain an immense amount of coal. The coal now necessary to supply the United States marine is taken to that part of the country from the East. It is highly desirable that these coal fields, which are supposed to lie upon the coast, should be examined by geologists, and this amendment of the Senate makes an appropriation of $10,000 to carry out that object.

It appears to me highly important and necessary that the Government should make this survey, and open the veins of these coal-fields for the use of our steam marine. We ought not to seek our coal-fields in Japan, in China, and other countries of the East. It is expected by this appropriation to develop and bring out the resources of these fields. How much is expected to be attained by this examination I am not able to say, but the discovery of coal-beds alone, is sufficient of itself to warrant the appropriation contained in the amendment of the Senate. I hope the appropriation may be granted, and that geologists may go to that wilderness country, make an examination of that coast, and show to the world, if there is any truth in the statements which have been circulated, that there is an abundance of coal upon that coast. Let the survey and examination be made by officers of the Government, in whose statements the country will place implicit reliance. I hope the committee will agree to the amendment of the Senate, and grant us this appropriation for making that survey. Geological surveys are, by no means, of recent date, or of unusual occurrence. Several of the States have made them, as they had the power to do so, by acts of their own legislation. Such surveys have been made in some of the Territories, and is it unreasonable, situated as we are, that we should ask for an examination of the Pacific coast to be made at the expense of this Government, in order to ascertain whether we cannot come in competition with foreigners in supplying our own marine with coal?

Mr. LANE. The gentleman from Washington Territory [Mr. LANCASTER] has called the attention of the committee to the fact that a geological survey had been commenced on the Pacific, in the Territories of Washington and Oregon, or rather in the territory which was all at that time Oregon, without the authority of law, and without an appropriation having been previously made to carry it on. I will explain how that was. A geologist in the service of the United States Government was ordered in that direction. He made explorations for some time, and the expenses incurred by him amounted to the sum of $72,000. At the last session of Congress—I desire the committee to recollect—that gentleman was in Washington. He said, "if you can procure a law to pay the amount of the debt already contracted, and give me a certain further amount, I will complete the whole survey of that country." The operations which he was then carrying on were in what is now Washington Territory. He spoke of the extensive coal beds there; and at his solicitation I said to the House, "Give the gentleman all that he asks now. He has commenced this work, and has discovered a field of coal in Washington Territory; and by making this appropriation he will complete it." Congress promptly gave him the amount required; and he said it was sufficient—amply sufficient for him. Now, I am willing to say to the committee, that so far as the labors of this gentleman in Oregon are concerned, there is not a gentleman in that Territory who believes that the survey was worth one cent to the country. If I had known then what I have known since in respect to this survey, I would not have asked an appropriation to complete it. But, at all events, this gentleman, during the last Congress, received all that he himself said would be necessary to make a thorough examination of Washington Territory. He certainly made a reconnaissance of the coal beds on the Pacific coast. I only mention this that the truth of history may be made known.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. The gentleman from Oregon was not, as I understood him, speaking in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington, [Mr. LANCASTER.] I move to amend by striking out—

The CHAIRMAN, (interrupting.) The question is first on the amendment of the gentlemen from Washington Territory.

Mr. LANCASTER. I propose, by unanimous consent, to withdraw it.

There being no objection, the amendment was withdrawn.

Mr. SMITH. I now move to amend the amendment, by reducing the appropriation to one dollar. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that everybody connected with this Government conceives that he has a perfect right to incur liabilities to any amount without permission or authority. Here we are going on in this way, with a perfect looseness, and a general tendency to extravagance which is bringing us into a most extraordinary condition of things. The truth is we cannot employ an officer to perform a certain duty, we cannot give him a specific direction to act upon, nor can he get instructions from any of the Departments, that he does not believe himself at perfect liberty to incur liabilities to almost any amount. If I understood the gentleman from Oregon, [Mr. LANE,] he himself says that this officer was detailed by the Government here to make geological surveys and explorations out in that Territory. He was detailed by the geologist of Iowa, to go into Oregon and make an exploration, and under that authority to carry out some particular prescribed duty. He went on at large, holding himself at liberty to charge the Treasury of the United States at will. Many of the old States of this Union have not yet felt themselves impelled to make a geological survey of their territory, but the Territories which have just come into being, just received an existence, have gone on, without authority of law, and entered into geological examinations of their Territory, and in doing so, have undertaken to charge the public Treasury. Now, sir, I put it to the gentleman from Oregon if he thinks this thing is right?

Mr. LANE. I will say to the gentleman from Virginia, that last year I did ask Congress to make an appropriation to cover the expense, and an additional appropriation was granted by Congress to prosecute the survey to completion. The surveyor said that the appropriation which was then made would be all that he should want, and that it would complete the reconnaissance which he wanted to make of the Pacific coast.

Mr. SMITH. That being the case, and he having then obtained all that was necessary at that time, it is perfectly evident that he did not care at all for the limitation placed upon him by our action in Congress, and he goes on and increases the expenses at his mere pleasure.

Now, I am disposed to be liberal towards the Territories; but they are setting up for themselves too rapidly, and are becoming regardless of the obligations which we recognize; and we are told by a gentleman, in whom we ought to have more confidence, that the survey of Oregon was not worth a baubee, and we are asked to appropriate $10,000 for perfecting the survey in Washington. He asks, what is the appropriation of $10,000 for a survey, compared with the benefits we shall derive from it? I consider it but an attempt to keep certain gentlemen on pay. That is the whole secret of the matter.

In California a man goes out to prospect—that is, to hunt for gold; and he does it at his own expense; and if he finds a mine, he makes his pile. But these Territories get the Government to prospect for them; and if they find a spot of wealth, they enjoy the benefits of that success.

I think this amendment ought not to prevail.

Mr. LANCASTER. I wish to correct the gentleman's misconception. I do not know what ground the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. LANE] has for saying that the geological survey of Oregon Territory is useless. I know nothing of it; but I do know that this surveyor has reported extensive fields of coal existing upon the coast of Washington Territory. The Legislature of that Territory memorialized Congress to continue that survey, and to appropriate $10,000, not to go through the survey of the whole Territory, but to test it. This memorial came from the Legislative body, and I submitted it to the departments at Washington. It was a fair, open-handed, manly transaction, as far as the Delegate from Washington is concerned; a fair, open proposition for exploring the coal fields known to exist upon the Washington coast, and brought to light by the geologists in the employ of the Government of the United States.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I would ask the gentleman if this appropriation is intended to test these coal fields, or have they been already tested?

Mr. LANCASTER. We have information from the geologist that they exist. We wish to know whether they do exist. We desire that an appropriation of $10,000 shall be made to accomplish that object. Our Territorial Legislature has recommended it. The Department has recommended it. The Senate has voted the appropriation into this bill; and I, as the Delegate of the Territory, urge it upon this floor.

Sir, it is very difficult to believe the statements that are made in reference to this remote Territory by those who have visited it. People believe the facts are misrepresented. Although reports were made by officers of the Government, under oath, you would still not believe half that can be told of that Territory. You would not comprehend its timber, its fertile soil, its mineral wealth, its inland seas, its resources, which no one can appreciate who has not seen the Territory, nor calculate the value their development will prove to the country. Its mineral lands will supply your steam marine with coal, instead of bringing it thousands of miles, as you now do.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. SMITH, by unanimous consent, withdrew his amendment.

The question then recurred upon the amendment of the Senate.

Mr. CARPENTER demanded tellers.

Tellers were not ordered.

The amendment was then non-concurred in.

Eighty-fifth amendment:

For the erection of public buildings in the Territories of Kansas and Nebraska, to be expended under the direction of the Governors thereof, respectively, $25,000 for each of said Territories; and so much of the act for the organization of said Territories as located the seat of government of Kansas at Fort Leavenworth, is hereby repealed.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The Committee of Ways and Means recommended a non-concurrence in that amendment.

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky. I have an amendment which I desire to propose to that amendment.

Mr. PHELPS. I desire to offer a few remarks upon the Senate amendment itself, if the gentleman from Kentucky will allow me.

The CHAIRMAN. No debate is in order, unless the gentleman proposes an amendment.

Mr. PHELPS. Then I move to increase the appropriation to $30,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky has the floor to offer an amendment.

Mr. STANTON. My amendment will be soon disposed of. I move to add the following to the Senate amendment:

Provided, That Thomas Johnson shall be allowed and paid out of the said fund appropriated for Kansas, mileage and per diem according to the usual rate, for the present session of Congress, he having been elected, under authority of the provisional government of Nebraska, as a Delegate from said Territory to Congress.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I rise to a question of order. I submit that there was no such Territory at the time this gentleman was elected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the amendment is not in order.

Mr. STANTON. The case is precisely the same as that of California. Senators and Representatives were elected from California when it was not a State, precisely as this Delegate was elected from Nebraska when it was not a Territory.

The CHAIRMAN. This gentleman has never been recognized as a Delegate by the House.

Mr. PHELPS. I move to increase the appropriation to $35,000.

Mr. Chairman, I have offered this amendment for the purpose of calling the attention of the committee to the necessity for passing the amendment which has been adopted by the Senate. You have organized the Territories of Kansas and Nebraska, and provided for the election of their respective Legislatures; but you have failed to make provision for a building in which the Nebraska Legislature is to hold its sessions. No place whatever is provided for that Legislature. In the bill you did make provision for the Territory of Kansas by providing that the seat of government should be at Fort Leavenworth. But even when that Legislature convenes at Fort Leavenworth, there is no building there which it may occupy. That is a military reservation, and the Secretary of War declares that there is no building there which he can, consistently with the public interest, spare for the purposes of the Legislature. I would refer to the letter addressed by the Secretary of War to the Governor of Kansas Territory.

I am of opinion that provision should be now made for temporary buildings for the use of the Legislatures, and that we should wait until the Territorial Legislature shall provide by law the permanent seats of government in the Territories. I will be willing to accept a less amount than that contained in the amendment; but if temporary buildings were to be erected, there need not, and I presume there will not, be the whole of this money expended.

Now, I would ask gentlemen whether they will have the Legislatures convened out of doors? Where, then, will they convene? They will be in session during the ensuing winter. I do not know what time the Governors may be enabled to have the enumeration made, as provided in the act for the organization of the two Territories. I do not know at what time the Governors of Nebraska and Kansas may direct the election for the members of the Legislature to be held; nor do I know where they may, by proclamation, determine the meeting of the Legislatures. The presumption is, that all these things will take place as soon as possible; for, at this moment, the people of the Territories have no municipal law for their government. No courts of justice are established, and there is no provision for the prosecution and punishment of crime which may be committed within their limits—not even for the prosecution and punishment of crimes committed against the laws of the United States. Prior to the organization of these two Territories, the Indian countries lying west of Missouri and Arkansas were attached to the districts of those States, so far as the criminal law of the United States was concerned. It was of frequent occurrence that when crimes were committed on the Santa Fé trail, or the Oregon trail, that persons were arrested and taken to the State of Missouri, to be tried before the district or circuit court of the United States held there, or to the district or circuit court of the United States of Arkansas.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HAVEN. Mr. Chairman, I hope this committee will agree with the Committee of Ways and Means, and non-concur in the Senate's amendment. I think this committee will act wisely in so doing. I do not know that it is necessary for me to argue the question as to whether there is any occasion for this appropriation to be made at this particular time? The total want of population in these Territories to be governed; the fact that no officers have ventured out there yet, and that emigrants going there with the intention to settle are having to fight their way in, and the lateness of the season now; all seem to concur in showing that this appropriation is wholly gratuitous at this time, and uncalled for.

But there is another question lying back of this. For one, I am desirous of knowing distinctly whether gentlemen here, upon the other side of the House, are anxious to commence tinkering with the Kansas and Nebraska act already. Do they start the proposition to repeal it in whole, or in any of its parts. Here is, in this amendment of the Senate, most certainly, a provision to repeal a part of it; and the gentleman from Missouri has asked us to concur in that provision to repeal a portion of it. I hope this committee will do no such thing; but will, on the contrary, at once, and without further debate, non-concur.

Sir, if the wishes of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. PHELPS] are complied with, a door will be opened here into that Kansas and Nebraska act at which some other gentlemen will like to enter. If this is to be an open question, I and others will desire to take a hand in it. I remember when that memorable act was upon its passage here but a short time ago, that I begged, and other gentlemen here urged, the House to allow us to offer some amendments to that bill. We advised the friends of the measure that, in our opinion, it was unwise, hasty, and very indiscreet legislation, to say the very least of it. I think the whole House will remember that, and some other facts connected with its passage. I doubt whether it can be forgotten. Are the friends of that bill sick of it already; or is the bill so weakly that it needs doctoring now? Has so brief a period as two months convinced gentlemen of their fatal error, and brought round a state of things that makes it, in their judgment, desirable to repeal a part of that act? Sir, they must remember that there is another part of that act to which we are as averse, which is as offensive to us as the provision they seek to repeal is to them. But if they insist upon the repeal of this portion which the Senate has asked us to repeal, I feel it my duty to inquire of the Chairman if it is in order for me to move to insert after the words "Fort Leavenworth" the following:

And also so much thereof as declares the Missouri compromise superseded, inoperative, and void; so that it will then read, "and so much of the act for the organization of the said Territories as located the seat of government of Kansas at Fort Leavenworth; and also so much thereof as declares the Missouri compromise superseded, inoperative, and void, is hereby repealed."
